Whereupon he ſpeaketh in the perſon of Jeremy, ſaying; Behold I am in your hands, do with me as you ſee good, &c. Where note (ſaith he) that when any Duke or Prince is taken priſoner for his ſubjects, he is not let go, before he pay ſome great ſum of money for his ranſome. Even ſo neither we ought to let Chriſt go out of our hands being our priſoner and captive, except he grant unto us remiſſion of our ſins and his heavenly Kingdome. The Prieſt therefore lifteth up the body of Chriſt upon the Altar, as though he ſaid thus; Behold him whom the whole world is not able to comprehend, he is holden here our captive, wherefore let us hold him faſt, and not let him go before we obtaine of him our requeſts, &c.

Chriſt made a captive and a priſoner in the Popes Church.

Notes.

The Church of Rome examined.

Is not here good Catholike ſtuffe (Chriſtian Reader) trow you? Conferre I beſeech you this doctrine with the doctrine of the Apoſtles, which teach us that we are fully compleat in Chriſt, and I will referre me to no better Judge then to your own conſcience. And now therefore, if any man have been in doubt in times paſt of the doctrine and proceeding of the Church of Rome, whether it be rightly charged with blinde errours, with blaſphemy intollerable, and Idolatry abominable or not, here now may he be fully certified and reſolved. For where was ever idolatry or blaſphemy to be found, if it be not here in this Mattins and Pſalter of our Lady? If Idolatry be to make an Idoll to be worſhipped as God, which is no god, what do we here but make an Idoll of our Lady (as we call her) to be worſhipped with no leſſe dignity, glory, authority, reverence, and ſervice, then is the Lord God himſelf? And as he is called our Lord, ſo ſhe is called our Lady. And if he be King, yet ſhe is the Queen of Heaven. And though he have the name of God, yet ſhe beareth ſo the title of the Mother of God; that as mothers have authority over their children, ſo ſhe is willed to ſhew her ſelf to be his Mother, to cauſe him to grant our petitions. Finally, if he be our Patron, yet ſhe is our Patroneſſe. The Commandement ſaith; Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. And what worſhip or ſervice can we give to God, more then we do aſcribe unto her? Or what benefit is to be aſked at the hands of Chriſt our Saviour, which is not equally aſked of her? To ſave our ſoules, to give us peace, to grant grace, to comfort the deſperate, to looſe our captivitie, to releaſe our ſinnes, to deliver from the Fiend, to bring to Heaven, &c. To her we pray, we cry, we weep, we ſigh, we groane, we knock and kneele, to her we truſt, and if we beleeve not alſo in our Lady, we be Hereticks ipſo facto.

The Church of Rome convicted of manifeſt Idolatry.

Our Ladie made equall with God in the Church of Rome.

The doctrine of the Romiſh Church directly againſt the firſt Commandement of God.

To truſt and beleeve in our Lady.

Furthermore, as Chriſt our only Lord and Saviour hath his Church and Congregation which profeſſe his name, of whom we are called Chriſtians; ſo neither is ſhe likewiſe without her Chappels, her Cloyſters, her Chapters, Fraternities, and Brotherhoods, which profeſſing her name in like ſort, are called our Ladies brethren, or white Friers, beſides an innumerable ſort of other patrons of Churches, of whom every one hath his peculiar Church and Religion by himſelf, yet all theſe together be included under the generall devotion of our Lady their ſupreme Patroneſſe and Governeſſe.

Now to proceed further to the other part of the Commandement, which ſaith; Him only ſhalt thou ſerve. What ſervice hath the Lord in all the Church, but our Lady alſo joyntly with him hath the like? Her Maſſe, her Mattins, her Evenſong, her Houres and Complin, her Roſaries, her Anthems, her Collects, her Primer, her Pſalter, her Holy-daies likewiſe, yea five to one. Finally, as the Lord hath his prayer called the Lords Prayer, ſo hath ſhe her Ave Maries, yea ten Aves to one Pater noſter; yea, and reade further in the ſaid Bonaventure, and ye ſhall ſee her alſo to have her Te Deum, her Benedictus, her Magnificat, and alſo her Quicunque vult.

Our Lady hath her Church as well as Chriſt.

Ten Aves to one Pater noſter.

If the Lord our God had not expreſſed unto us his own will by plain words, limiting unto us by expreſſe injunction what to beleeve, what to follow, and how to worſhip and ſerve him, and how to receive from him our ſalvation, but had left us to the imagination of our own inventions, every man to ſhift for himſelf after his own policie, then peradventure this way taken by the Popes Church, to make friends and mediators between God and us, for reconciliation, remiſſion, and ſalvation, might have ſome rime or reaſon; but now Gods Word doth binde us, doth preſcribe and limit us preciſely in every point touching ſalvation, what to beleeve, and what to do, ſhewing us plainly that we cannot be ſaved, but by the blood of his Sonne only, neither can be juſtified but by faith only in the ſame Chriſt his Son: Wherefore not to beleeve that which he hath promiſed is infidelitie, and to follow any other beliefe then he hath ſet us, is plaine Idolatry. The which two ſpeciall errours moſt commonly do follow the doctrine of the Romiſh Church, as not only in this Primer and Pſalter of our Lady aforeſaid, but alſo in all their proceedings, teachings, and preachings beſides may well appear. For where the Scripture perfectly doth promiſe and pronounce us to be juſtified through our Faith in Chriſt, and willeth us to ſeek our ſalvation no where elſe, but only in the merits of Jeſus: the inſtitution of the Church of Rome, neither will receive that God hath freely given, (wherein ſtandeth infidelity) neither yet will ſeek the ſame there where as they ſhould, but in the merits and prayers of our Ladie, of S. John Baptiſt, S. Peter and Paul, S. Andrew, S. Nicolas, S. Thomas of Canterbury, and by the worthineſſe of the materiall Croſſe, and ſuch other unlawfull meanes, wherein ſtandeth plaine Idolatry. And yet ſuch bookes as theſe can be ſuffered among the Catholikes to be currant, as good, wholeſome, and lawfull bookes, whereas the other, which leade us the true way from infidelity and blinde idolatry to true Chriſtianitie, in no wiſe can be ſufferable. But of this to complaine it is vaine. Wherefore to paſſe from this Proclamation, let us proceed (God willing) in the courſe of our hiſtory.

Infidelity. Idolatry.

The Church of Rome charged with infidelity and idolatry.

The Church of Rome neither taketh that which God doth give, neither doth ſeek for that which they would have by lawfull meanes.

The ſtory of Thomas Oſmond, William Bamford, and Thomas Osborne, Martyrs.

Tho. Oſmond, William Bamford, Thomas Osborne, martyrs. Reade before.

MEntion was made before in the ſtorie of Thomas Haukes, of ſix priſoners beſides, which were ſent down with him to Eſſex the ſame time as he went to execution. Of which ſix priſoners, thrée were ſent to be burned, the other thrée to recant, and to doe penance: Of whom it followeth next in ſtorie now to intreat. The names of which ſix were theſe; Thomas Oſmond Fuller, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weaver, Thomas Osborne Fuller, Nicholas Chamberlaine Weaver, Thomas Brodehill Weaver, Richard Web Weaver, being all of the towne of Coxehall. All which ſixe Coxehall men, next after the examinations of Thomas Haukes, and Thomas Wats, were ſent up to Boner to be examined, by the Earle of Oxford and Sir Philip Paris Knight, with a letter with them alſo ſent, the copie whereof here followeth.

A Letter ſent from the Earle of Oxford to Boner Biſhop of London.

A letter from the Earle of Oxford to biſhop Boner.

AFter our hearty commendations unto your good Lordſhip, this ſhall be to advertiſe the ſame, that the Conſtables of Coxehall within your Dioceſſe, have brought before us this day ſix perſons dwelling in the Towne of Coxehall aforeſaid, whoſe names hereafter doe follow, videlicet, Nicholas Chamberlaine Weaver, John Wallet Fuller, Thomas Brodehill Weaver, Richard Web Weaver, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weaver, and Thomas Osborne Fuller, for that they at the feaſt of Eaſter now laſt, have not obeyed to the order of the holy Catholike Church in receiving of the Sacraments; but obſtinately refuſing the ſame, beſides of holding of divers other opinions, contrary to the faith of the ſaid Church. Wherefore we have thought it good to ſend the ſame perſons unto your good Lordſhip further to be ordered, as in ſuch caſe ſhall appertaine. Thus we commit your good Lordſhip to the kéeping of Almighty God. From Hedingham the firſt of May, Anno 1555.

Sixe priſoners ſent by the Earle of Oxford to Boner.

Your Lordſhips aſſuredly, Oxford,
Philip Paris.

Oſmond, Chamberlaine, and their fellowes brought before biſhop Boner.

Thus the ſaid priſoners being ſent up the firſt day of May, were brought before the ſaid Biſhop the 17. of the ſaid Moneth to be examined, upon divers and ſundry Articles miniſtred and objected againſt them; whereunto they were compelled to anſwer, and to put their hands to the ſame: the Copie of which their Articles and anſwers, being all one in forme and effect (if the Regiſter ſay true) here followeth.

The Copy of the Articles objected againſt Thomas Oſmond, William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlaine of Coxehall.

Articles miniſtred unto them by the biſhop.

1 FIrſt, that thou Thomas Oſmond Fuller, waſt and art of the Pariſh of Coxehall, within the Dioceſſe of London, and thou haſt not beléeved nor doſt beléeve, that there is here in the earth one Catholike and Univerſall whole Church, which doth hold and beléeve all the Faith and religion of Chriſt, and all the neceſſary Articles and Sacraments of the ſame.

The Popes Church falſly termed by the name of the univerſall Church.

2 Item, that thou haſt not beléeved nor doſt beléeve, that thou art neceſſarily bounden under the paine of damnation of thy ſoule, to give full Faith and credence unto the ſaid Catholike and Univerſall Church, and to the Faith and religion of the ſame in all neceſſary points of the ſaid Faith and religion, without doubting or wavering in the ſaid Faith and religion, or in any part thereof.

Queen Mary.

The Faith of the Romiſh Church not to be beleeved.

3 Item, that thou haſt not beléeved that the Faith and religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spaine, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being true members and parts of the ſaid Catholike and Univerſall Church, do beléeve and teach, is both agréeing with the Faith and religion of Chriſt, and alſo is the very true faith and religion which all Chriſtian people ought to beléeve, obſerve, follow, and kéep: but contrariwiſe, thou haſt beléeved and doſt beléeve, that that Faith and religion, which the ſaid Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforeſaid, have heretofore beléeved, and do beléeve, is falſe, erroneous, and naught, and in no wiſe ought to be beléeved, obſerved, kept, and followed of any Chriſtian perſon.

Note how this geare is penned to the worſt.

4 Item, that albeit it be true, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is in ſubſtance the very Body and Bloud of our Saviour Chriſt under the formes of Bread and Wine; and albeit that it be ſo beléeved, taught, and preached undoubtedly in the ſaid Church of Rome, and all other Churches aforeſaid, yet thou haſt not ſo beléeved, nor doſt ſo beléeve, but contrariwiſe thou haſt beléeved, and doſt beléeve firmely and ſtedfaſtly, that there is not in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, under the ſaid formes of Bread and Wine, the very ſubſtance of Chriſts Body and Bloud, but that there is only the ſubſtance of materiall and common Bread and Wine, with the formes thereof, and that the ſaid materiall and common Bread and Wine are only the ſignes and tokens of Chriſts Body and Bloud, and are by Faith to be received only for a remembrance of Chriſts paſſion and death, without any ſuch ſubſtance of Chriſts Body and Bloud at all.

This Article not ſo put down as they meant it.

5 Item, that thou haſt beléeved and taught, and haſt openly ſpoken and defended, and ſo doſt beléeve, think, maintain, and defend, that the very true receiving and eating of Chriſts Body and Bloud, is only to take materiall and common Bread, and to break it, and diſtribute it among the people, remembring thereby the paſſion and death of Chriſt only.

The Maſſe not of Chriſts inſtitution.

6 Item, that thou haſt likewiſe beléeved, thought, and ſpoken, that the Maſſe, now uſed in the Realme of England, and other the Churches aforeſaid, is abominable and naught, and full of Idolatry, and is of the ordinance of the Pope, and not of the inſtitution of Chriſt, and hath no goodneſſe in it, ſaving the Gloria in Excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpel, and therefore thou haſt not, nor will not come and be preſent at Maſſe, nor receive the Sacrament of the Altar, nor any other ſacrament of the Church, as they are now uſed in the Realme of England, &c.

Againſt auricular confeſſion and Church Service.

7 Item, that thou haſt in times paſt beléeved, and yet doſt now beléeve, that auricular confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made unto the Prieſt, but is a thing ſuperfluous, voide, and naught, only to be made to God, and to none other perſon. And likewiſe thou haſt condemned as ſuperfluous, vaine, and unprofitable, all the ceremonies of the Church, and the Service of the ſame, and haſt ſaid that no Service in the Church ought to be ſaid but in the Engliſh tongue, and if it be otherwiſe, it is unlawfull and naught.

The Earle of Oxford, Maſter Philip Paris.

8 Item, that thou being notoriouſly and openly ſuſpected for an Hereticke, and a perſon culpable in the premiſſes, waſt of late called and convented before the Earle of Oxford, and Maſter Philip Paris, and there waſt charged with the ſaid hereſies, eſpecially againſt the Sacrament of the Altar. And becauſe thou didſt maintaine and ſtand to thy ſaid hereſies, and wouldſt not come to the Church and be confeſſed, and receive the ſaid Sacrament as other Chriſtian people did, but utterly didſt refuſe to do the ſame, thou waſt by the ſaid Earl of Oxford, and maſter Philip Paris ſent up by a Conſtable unto me Biſhop of London, and waſt by them denounced, detected, and put up to me as an heretick and misbeleeving perſon.

9 Item, that thou haſt known and beleeved, thou doſt know and beleeve, or at leaſt thou haſt credibly heard reported, ſpoken and ſaid, that all and all manner of perſons, which do teach, preach, or hold any thing concerning the Sacraments of the Church, or any the Articles of the Faith, otherwiſe than is found already diſcuſſed and determined by the mother of the holy Church, or doth call into doubt or queſtion that thing which is already decided or determined by the Church, or that willingly and wittingly do utter, openly or privily, any ſlanderous or blaſphemous words concerning the ſaid Sacraments or any of them, or that do preach, teach, or keep any ſect or kinde of hereſie againſt the wholeſome Doctrine of the Church, and do wittingly, willingly, or obſtinately defend the ſaid ſect or kinde of hereſie, are by the Canons of the whole and Univerſall Catholick Church, and alſo by the Eccleſiaſticall Laws of this Church of England, by their ſo doing, accurſed with that curſe, which doth ſeparate them from the entry into the Church, from the receiving of the Sacraments, and from the company of faithfull people, and are (in continuing in this ſaid ſect and hereſie) to be pronounced, declared, and taken for hereticks, and to be delivered to the ſecular power, and by the Laws temporall of this Realm of England, and the cuſtome of the ſame, to be by the ſaid ſecular power put to death and burnt for this ſaid ſect and hereſie.

10 Item, that thou by reaſon of the premiſſes waſt and art to be pronounced, taken, had, reputed, and judged for a manifeſt and open, wilfull and obſtinate heretike, for a wicked and curſed perſon, and to be puniſhed accordingly for the ſame, according to the ſaid Canon Laws, uſages, and cuſtomes.

The anſwers which the ſaid Thomas Oſmond, William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlain ſeverally made unto theſe Articles.

The anſwer of the 3. priſoners, to the Articles, agreeing all in one.

TO the firſt they anſwered and confeſſed the ſame to be true, except that they do beleeve that there is here in the earth one Catholike and whole Church, and that the ſame Church doth hold and beleeve, as is contained in this article.

To the ſecond they anſwer, and beleeve the ſaid Article not to be true; for they ſay that they have and do beleeve that they are neceſſarily bounden, under pain of damnation of their ſoul, to give full faith and credence unto the ſaid Catholick Church, and to the faith and religion of the ſame, in all neceſſary points of the ſame faith and religion, without wavering or doubting in any part thereof.

The Church of Rome not to be beleeved.

To the third they anſwer, that the Church of Rome, and other Churches mentioned in this Article, be not true members and parts (as they be uſed in faith and religion) of the Catholick Church of Chriſt, and that the faith and religion uſed in the ſaid Churches, is not agreeable with the Church of Chriſt, but are falſe and erronious.

To the fourth they anſwer and ſay, that howſoever the ſaid Churches of Rome and others of Chriſtendom have and do beleeve touching the Sacrament of the Altar, yet they do beleeve that in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood, but that there is onely the ſubſtance of materiall Bread and Wine, and that the ſame materiall Bread and Wine be onely the ſigns and tokens of Chriſts body and blood, and are to be received onely for a remembrance of Chriſts paſſion and death, without any ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood at all.

The true eating of Chriſts body.

To the fift Article they anſwer, that the true receiving and eating of Chriſts body, according to Chriſts inſtitution, is to take, diſtribute, and eate materiall Bread, and thereby to remember the paſſion and death of Chriſt, and ſo receive by faith (as they beleeve) Chriſts body and blood, and not otherwiſe.

To the ſixt they anſwer, the ſame to be true in every part thereof, except that over and beſides the Gloria in excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpel, which they beleeve to be good, they beleeve the Pater noſter, and Creed uſed in the Maſſe, be alſo good.

Auricular confeſſion not neceſſary. Ceremonies idle in the Church.

To the ſeventh they anſwer and confeſſe, that Auricular confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made to the Prieſt; nevertheleſſe they think that it is neceſſary to go to ſuch a Prieſt, as is able to give good councell: And that for councell onely, and not otherwiſe. And as concerning the Ceremonies of the Church, they anſwer the ſame to be vain and unprofitable. No Service in the Church ought to be ſaid, but onely in the Engliſh tongue.

To the eight they anſwer and beleeve the ſame to be true in every part thereof, except that they do not beleeve that they be hereticks, or ſuſpected of hereſie.

To the ninth Oſmond and Bamford anſwered, that they referred themſelves to the ſaid Laws, mentioned in that Article, but Chamberlain made no anſwer at all to this Article.

To the tenth, the ſaid Oſmond and Bamford anſwered and ſaid, that by reaſon of their belief before by them confeſſed, they are not to be reputed, taken or judged for wilfull and obſtinate hereticks, nor to be puniſhed therfore, as is declared in that article. The other anſwered nothing.

Scholies upon the foreſaid Articles.

Notes of Scholies upon the Articles uſed to be miniſtred to the poor Chriſtians by the Popes Church.

THeſe Articles in the ſame form and manner of words are commonly objected to all other that follow after, with the ſame anſwers alſo thereto annexed. In which Articles thou maiſt note (Reader) the crafty and ſubtile handling of theſe Lawyers and Regiſters, who ſo deceitfully frame their articles and poſitions, that unleſſe a man do adviſedly conſider them, it is hard for a ſimple man to anſwer to them, but he ſhall be ſnared and intangled. So they paint their Church with ſuch a viſage of Univerſall, whole, holy, Catholick, as who ſhould ſay; He that denieth Rome, denieth the holy Church of Chriſt here in earth. Likewiſe in examining them, and ſpecially the ſimple ſort in the matter of the Sacrament, to the materiall Bread in the Sacrament they put their word (onely) very captiouſly and fraudulently, to take them at the worſt advantage, making the people beleeve that they take the holy Sacrament to be no better than onely common Bread: when they do not ſo, but make a difference between the ſame, both in the uſe, honour aud name thereof.

The crafty and captious dealing of the Papiſts in propounding the Articles.

Again, when the Examinates hold but onely againſt the erroneous points of Romiſh Religion, theſe Biſhops in their Interrogatories give out the matter ſo generally, as though the ſaid Examinates in generall ſpake againſt all the Articles of Faith taught in Rome, Spain, England, France, Scotland, &c.

Moreover, concerning Latine Service, in ſuch crafty form of words, they propound their Article, that it might appear to the people, theſe men do deny any Service to be lawfull in any place, country or language, but onely in Engliſh.

And as theſe Articles are craftily, captiouſly, and deceitfully in form of words deviſed by the Biſhops and their Notaries: ſo the anſwers again to the ſame, be no leſſe ſubtilely framed, and after the moſt odious manner put down in the name of the Examinates, which being read unto them, thus without further advice they were conſtrained upon a ſudden, to ſubſcribe the ſame with their hands. Whereby, if any word eſcaped their hand, peradventure not conſiderately ſubſcribed; there the Papiſts take their advantage againſt them, to defame them, and to bring them into hatred with the people.

Theſe Articles thus propounded and anſwered, they were untill the afternoon diſmiſſed. At what time they did again appear, and there were examined and travelled with by fair and flattering ſpeeches, as well of the Biſhop as of others his aſſiſtants, to recant and revoke their opinions, who notwithſtanding remained conſtant and firm, and therefore, after the common uſage of their Eccleſiaſticall laws, were ſent away again untill the next day being Saturday, and the 18. day of May. Then in the forenoon the Biſhop uſing his accuſtomed manner of proceeding, which he had uſed before as well with them as with others, did likewiſe diſmiſſe them, and at laſt in the afternoon condemned them as Hereticks, and ſo delivered them to the Sheriffs, in whoſe cuſtody they remained untill they were delivered to the Sheriff of Eſſex, and by him were executed, Chamberlain at Colcheſter, the 14. of June, Thomas Oſmond at Maningtree, the 15. of June, and William Bamford, alias Butler, at Harwich, the ſame 15. day in the month of June.

The Hiſtory of the worthy Martyr and ſervant of God,

Mr. JOHN BRADFORD;

With his life, acts, and ſundry conflicts with his adverſaries, and Martyrdom at length moſt conſtantly ſuffered for the Teſtimony of Chriſt and his Truth.

July 1.
The hiſtory of Maſter John Bradford, Martyr.

As touching the firſt country and education of John Bradford, he was born at Mancheſter in Lancaſterſhire. His parents did bring him up in Learning from his infancy, untill he attained ſuch knowledge in the Latine tongue, and skill in writing, that he was able to gain his own living in ſome honeſt condition. Then he became ſervant to Sir John Harrington, Knight, who in the great affairs of King Henry the eight, and King Edward the ſixth, which he had in hand when he was Treaſurer of the Kings Camps and buildings, at divers times in Bullonois, had ſuch experience of Bradfords activity in writing, his expertneſſe in the Art of Auditors, as alſo of his faithfull truſtineſſe, that not onely in thoſe affairs, but in many other of his private buſineſſe he truſted Bradford in ſuch ſort, that above all other he uſed his faithfull ſervice.

Sir John Harrington, knight.

The truſty ſervice of John Bradford under M. Harrington.

Thus continued Bradford certain yéers in a right honeſt and good trade of life, after the courſe of this world, like to come forward (as they ſay) if his minde could have ſo liked, or had béen given to the world as many other be. But the Lord which had elected him unto a better function, and preordained him to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, in that hour of grace, which in his ſecret councell he had appointed, called this his choſen childe to the underſtanding and partaking of the ſame Goſpel of life. In which call he was ſo truly taught, that forthwith his effectuall call was perceived by the fruits. For then Bradford did forſake his worldly affairs and forwardneſſe in worldly wealth, and, after the juſt account given to his Maſter of all his doings, he departed from him, and with marvellous favour to further the Kingdom of God by the Miniſtery of his holy Word, he gave himſelf wholly to the ſtudy of the holy Scriptures. The which his purpoſe to accompliſh the better, he departed from the Temple at London, where the temporall Law is ſtudied, and went to the Univerſity of Cambridge, to learn by Gods Law how to further the building of the Lords Temple. In Cambridge his diligence in ſtudy, his profiting in knowledge, and godly converſation ſo pleaſed all men, that within one whole yéer after that he had béen there, the Univerſity did give him a degrée of a Maſter of Art.

Bradford called to the Goſpel.

Bradford giveth himſelf to the ſtudy of Scripture.

Immediately after the Maſter and Fellows of Pembroke Hall did give him a Fellowſhip in their Colleage with them: yea that man of God, Martin Bucer, ſo liked him, that he had him not onely moſt dear unto him, but alſo oftentimes exhorted him to beſtow his talent in Preaching. Unto which Bradford anſwered alwayes, that he was unable to ſerve in that office, through want of Learning. To the which Bucer was wont to reply, ſaying; If thou have not fine Manchet bread, yet give the poor people Barley bread, or whatſoever elſe the Lord hath committed unto thée. And whiles Bradford was thus perſwaded to enter into the Miniſtery, Doctor Ridley that worthy Biſhop of London, and glorious Martyr of Chriſt, according to the order that then was in the Church of England, called him to take the degrée of a Deacon. Which order, becauſe it was not without ſome ſuch abuſe, as to the which Bradford would not conſent, the Biſhop yet perceiving that Bradford was willing to enter into the Miniſtery, was content to order him Deacon without any abuſe, even as he deſired. This being done, he obtained for him a Licence to preach, and did give him a Prebend in his Cathedrall Church of Saint Pauls.

Bradford Maſter of Art, and fellow of Pembroke Hall.

M. Bucers ſaying.

John Bradford made Deacon by Biſh. Ridley without any ſuperſtitious abuſe therein.
John Bradford made Prebendary in Pauls and licenſed to preach.

In this preaching office by the ſpace of thrée yéers, how faithfully Bradford walked, how diligently he laboured, many parts of England can teſtifie. Sharply he opened and reproved ſin, ſwéetly he preached Chriſt crucified, pithily he impugned hereſies and errours, earneſtly he perſwaded to godly life. After the death of bleſſed yong King Edward the ſixth, when Quéen Mary had gotten the Crown, ſtill continued Bradford diligent in preaching, untill he was unjuſtly deprived both of his office and liberty by the Quéen and her Councell. To the doing whereof, becauſe they had no juſt cauſe, they took occaſion to do this injury for ſuch an act, as among Turks and Infidels would have béen with thankfulneſſe rewarded, and with great favour accepted, as indéed it did no leſſe deſerve.

Bradford unjuſtly deprived of his living and preaching.

The fact was this. The 13. of Auguſt, in the firſt yéer of the raign of Q. Mary, maſter Bourn, then Biſhop of Bathe, made a ſeditious Sermon at Pauls Croſſe in London, as partly is declared before, to ſet Popery abroad, in ſuch ſort that it moved the people to no ſmall indignation, being almoſt ready to pull him out of the pulpit. Neither could the reverence of the place, nor the preſence of Biſhop Bonner, who then was his maſter, nor yet the commandment of the Maior of London, whom the people ought to have obeyed, ſtay their rage: but the more they ſpake, the more the people were incenſed. At length Bourn ſéeing the people in ſuch a mood, and himſelf in ſuch peril (whereof he was ſufficiently warned by the hurling of a drawn Dagger at him as he ſtood in the Pulpit) and that he was put from ending his Sermon, fearing leſt (againſt his will) he ſhould there end his wretched life, deſired Bradford, who ſtood in the Pulpit behinde him, to come forth, and to ſtand in his place and ſpeak to the people. Good Bradford at his requeſt was content, and there ſpake to the people of godly and quiet obedience. Whom as ſoon as the people ſaw to begin to ſpeak unto him, ſo glad they were to hear him, that they cryed with a great ſhout; Bradford, Bradford, God ſave thy life Bradford: well declaring not onely what affection they bare unto him, but alſo what regard they gave unto his words. For after that he had entred a little to preach unto them, and to exhort them to quiet and patience, eftſoons all the raging ceaſed, and they in the end quietly departed each man to his houſe. Yet in the mean ſeaſon (for it was a long time before that ſo great a multitude could all depart) Bourn thought (and truly) himſelf not yet full ſure of his life till he were ſafely houſed, notwithſtanding that the Major and Sheriffs of London were there at hand to help them. Wherefore he deſired Bradford not to depart from him, till he were in ſafety: which Bradford according to his promiſe, performed. For while the Major and Sheriffs did leade Bourn to the School-maſters houſe, which is next to the Pulpit, Bradford went at his back, ſhadowing him from the people with his gown, and ſo to ſet him ſafe.

Bourns Sermon at Pauls Croſſe.

Bradford appeaſeth the rage of the people, and guardeth the Papiſtical preacher.

The reverent regard and affection of the people to M. Bradford.

M. Bradford procureth M. Bourns ſafety.

Let the Reader now conſider the perill of Bourn, the charity of Bradford, and the headyneſſe of the multitude, and alſo the grudging mindes of certain, which yet ſtill there remained behinde, grieved not a little in their mindes, to ſee that ſo good a man ſhould ſave the life of ſuch a Popiſh Prieſt, ſo impudently and openly rayling againſt King Edward. Among whom, one Gentleman ſaid theſe words: Ah Bradford, Bradford, thou ſaveſt him that will help to burn thee. I give thee his life, if it were not for thee, I would (I aſſure thee) run him through with my ſword. Thus Bourn for that time, through Bradfords means, eſcaped bodily death: but God hath his judgement to be ſhewed in the time appointed.

Bradford rebuketh the people for the tumult at Pauls croſs.

The ſame Sunday in the afternoon Bradford preached at the Bow Church in Cheapſide, and reproved the people ſharply for their ſeditious miſdemeanour. After this he did abide ſtill in London with an innocent conſcience, to try what ſhould become of his juſt doing.

Bradford charged with ſedition for ſaving the Preacher.

Bradford committed to the Tower moſt unjuſtly.

Bradford in the Kings Bench. Bradford in the Counter.

Bradford preacheth and miniſtreth the Sacrament in priſon.

Within three dayes after, he was ſent for to the Tower of London, where the Queen then was, to appear there before the Councell. There was he charged with this act of ſaving of Bourn, which act they there called ſeditious, and alſo objected againſt him for preaching, and ſo by them he was committed firſt to the Tower, then unto other priſons, out of which neither his innocencie, godlineſſe, nor charitable dealing could purchaſe to him liberty of body, till by death (which he ſuffered for Chriſts cauſe) he obtained the heavenly liberty, of which neither Pope nor Papiſt ſhall ever deprive him. From the Tower he came to the Kings Bench in Southwark: and after his condemnation, he was ſent to the Counter in the Poultry in London: in which two places, for the time he did remain priſoner, he preached twice a day continually, unleſſe ſickneſſe hindered him: where alſo the Sacrament was often miniſtred, and through his means (the Keepers ſo well did bear with him) ſuch reſort of good folks was daily to his Lecture, and to the miniſtration of the Sacrament, that commonly his chamber was well nigh filled therewith. Preaching, reading and praying was all his whole life. He did not eate above one meal a day; which was but very little when he took it: and his continuall ſtudy was upon his knees. In the midſt of dinner he uſed often to muſe with himſelf, having his Hat over his eyes, from whence came commonly plenty of tears dropping on his trencher. Very gentle he was to man and childe, and in ſo good credit with his Keeper, that at his deſire in an evening (being priſoner in the Kings Bench in Southwark) he had licence upon his promiſe to return again that night, to go into London without any Keeper, to viſit one that was ſick, lying by the Still-yard. Neither did he fail his promiſe, but returned to his priſon again, rather preventing his hour, than breaking his fidelity: ſo conſtant was he in word and in deed.

Bradford came into London without his Keeper, and returned that night to priſon again.

The deſcription of Bradford.

Bradford content with a little ſleep.

Bradfords recreation.

The holy life of Bradford.

Of perſonage he was ſomewhat tall and ſlender, ſpare of body, of a faint Sanguine colour, with an Awburn beard. He ſlept not commonly above four hours in the night: and in his bed till ſleep came, his book went not out of his hand. His chief recreation was in no gaming or other paſtime, but onely in honeſt company, and comely talk, wherein he would ſpend a little time after Dinner at the board, and ſo to prayer and his Book again. He counted that hour not well ſpent, wherein he did not ſome good, either with his pen, ſtudy, or in exhorting of others, &c. He was no niggard of his purſe, but would liberally participate that he had to his fellow-priſoners. And commonly once a week he viſited the theeves, pick-purſes, and ſuch others that were with him in priſon where he lay on the other ſide, unto whom he would give godly exhortation, to learn the amendment of their lives by their troubles, and, after that ſo done, diſtribute among them ſome portion of money to their comfort.

Bradford viſited the theeves pick-purſes, &c.

By the way, this I thought not to conceal. While he was in the Kings Bench, and maſter Saunders in the Marſhalſey, both priſoners, on the backſide of thoſe two priſons they met many times, and conferred together when they would: ſo mercifully did the Lord work for them, even in the midſt of their troubles: and the ſaid Bradford was ſo truſted with his Keeper, and had ſuch liberty in the backſide, that there was no day, but that he might have eaſily eſcaped away, if he would, but that the Lord had another work to do for him. In the Summer time, while he was in the ſaid Kings Bench, he had liberty of his Keeper to ride into Oxfordſhire, to a Merchants houſe of his acquaintance, and horſe and all things prepared for him for that journey, and the party in a readineſſe that ſhould ride with him: but God prevented him by ſickneſſe that he went not at all.

The meeting and conference between Laurence Saunders and John Bradford.

Bradford refuſeth to ſcape out of priſon though he might.

One of his old friends and acquaintance came unto him whileſt he was priſoner, and asked him, If he ſued to get him out, what then he would do, or whither he would go? Unto whom he made anſwer, as not caring whether he went out or no: but if he did, he ſaid he would marry, and abide ſtill in England ſecretly, teaching the people as the time would ſuffer him, and occupy himſelf that way. He was had in ſo great reverence and admiration with all good men, that a multitude, which never knew him but by fame, greatly lamented his death: yea, and a number alſo of the Papiſts themſelves wiſhed heartily his life. There were few dayes in which he was thought not to ſpend ſome tears before he went to bed, neither was there ever any priſoner with him, but by his company he greatly profited, as all they will yet witneſſe, and have confeſſed of him no leſſe, to the glory of God, whoſe ſociety he frequented, as among many, one ſpeciall thing I thought to note, which is this.

Bradford would not fly out of England though he might.

withall of the Papiſts in the end of Lent, to receive the Sacrament at Eaſter in one kinde, who after much perſwading yeelded to them, and promiſed ſo to do. Then (ſo it hapned by Gods providence) the Eaſter Even, the day before he ſhould have done it, was Bradford brought to the Kings Bench priſoner, where the Lord making him his inſtrument, Bradford onely was the mean that the ſaid Biſhop Farrar revoked his promiſe and word, and would never after yeeld to be ſpotted with that Papiſticall pitch; ſo effectually the Lord wrought by this worthy ſervant of his. Such an inſtrument was he in Gods Church, that few or none there were that knew him, but eſteemed him as a precious Jewell and Gods true meſſenger.

Bradford dreameth of his burning according as it came to paſſe.

The night before he was had to Newgate, which was the Saturday night, he was ſore troubled divers times in his ſleep by dreams, how the chain for his burning was brought to the Counter-gate, and how the next day being Sunday, he ſhould be had to Newgate, and on the Munday after burned in Smithfield, as indeed it came to paſſe accordingly, which hereafter ſhall be ſhewed. Now he being vexed ſo oftentimes in this ſort with theſe dreams, about three of the clock in the morning he waked him that lay with him, and told him his unquiet ſleep, and what he was troubled withall. Then after a little talk, Maſter Bradford roſe out of the bed, and gave himſelf to his old exerciſe of reading and prayer, as alwayes he had uſed before: and at dinner according to his accuſtomed manner he did eate his meat, and was very merry, no body being with him from morning to night, but he that lay with him, with whom he had many times on that day communication of death, of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of the ripeneſſe of ſin in that time.

Bradford hath word of his burning.

In the afternoon they two walking together in the Keepers chamber, ſuddenly the Keepers wife came up, as one half amazed, and ſeeming much troubled, being almoſt windleſſe, ſaid: Oh Maſter Bradford, I come to bring you heavie news. What is that, ſaid he? Marry, quoth ſhe, to morrow you muſt be burned; and your chain is now a buying, and ſoon you muſt go to Newgate. With that Maſter Bradford put off his cap, and lifting up his eyes to heaven, ſaid; I thank God for it; I have looked for the ſame a long time, and therefore it cometh not now to me ſuddenly, but as a thing waited for every day and hour, the Lord make me worthy thereof: and ſo thanking her for her gentleneſſe, departed up into his chamber, and called his friend with him, who when he came thither, he went ſecretly himſelf alone a long time, and prayed. Which done, he came again to him that was in his chamber, and took him divers writings and papers, and ſhewed him his minde in thoſe things what he would have done, and after they had ſpent the afternoon till night in many and ſundry ſuch things, at laſt came to him half a dozen of his friends more, with whom all the evening he ſpent the time in prayer and other good exerciſes, ſo wonderfully, that it was marvellous to hear and ſee his doings.

Bradford maketh his praier, taking his farewell at the Counter.

A little before he went out of the Counter, he made a notable prayer of his farewell, with ſuch plenty of tears, and abundant ſpirit of prayer, that it raviſhed the mindes of the hearers. Alſo when he ſhifted himſelf with a clean ſhirt that was made for his burning (by one Maſter Walter Marlars wife, who was a good nurſe unto him, and his very good friend) he made ſuch a prayer of the wedding garment, that ſome of thoſe that were preſent were in ſuch great admiration, that their eyes were as throughly occupied in looking on him, as their ears gave place to hear his prayer. At his departing out of the chamber, he made likewiſe a prayer, and gave money to every ſervant and officer of the houſe, with exhortation to them to feare and ſerve God, continually labouring to eſchew all manner of evill. That done, he turned him to the wall and prayed vehemently, that his words might not be ſpoken in vaine, but that the Lord would work the ſame in them effectually, for his Chriſts ſake. Then being beneath in the court, all the priſoners cryed out to him and bid him farewell, as the reſt of the houſe had done before with weeping tears.

The priſoners take their leave of Bradford with tears.

Bradford carried to Newgate at midnight.

The people in Cheapſide bade Bradford farewell.

The time they carried him to Newgate, was about xi. or xii. a clock in the night, when it was thought none would be ſtirring abroad: and yet, contrary to their expectation in that behalf, was there in Cheapſide and other places (between the Counter and Newgate) a great multitude of people that came to ſee him, which moſt gently bade him farewell, praying for him with moſt lamentable and pitifull tears, and he again as gently bade them farewell, praying moſt heartily for them and their welfare. Now whether it were a commandment from the Queen and her Councell, or from Boner and his adherents, or whether it were merrily deviſed of the Lord Maior, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London, or no, I cannot tell; but a great noiſe there was over night about the city by divers, that Bradford ſhould be burnt the next day in Smithfield, by four of the clock in the morning, before it ſhould be greatly known to any. In which rumour, many heads had divers mindes; ſome thinking the fear of the people to be the cauſe thereof: other thought nay, that it was rather becauſe the Papiſts judged his death would convert many to the truth, and give a great overthrow to their Kingdom. So ſome thought one thing, and ſome another, that no juſt conſecture of the cauſe could be known that ever I heard yet. But this was certain, the people prevented the device ſuſpected, for the next day, at the ſaid hour of four a clock in the morning, there was in Smithfield ſuch a multitude of men and women, that many being in admiration thereof, thought it was not poſſible that they could have warning of his death, being ſo great a number in ſuch ſhort time, unleſſe it were by the ſingular providence of Almighty God.

A noiſe of Bradfords early burning.

A multitude in Smithfield by 4. a clock.

Bradford going to Smithfield.

Well, this took not effect as the people thought; for that morning it was nine a clock of the day, before Maſter Bradford was brought into Smithfield: which, in going through Newgate thitherward, ſpyed a friend of his whom he loved, ſtanding on the one ſide the way to the Keepers houſeward, unto whom he reached his hand over the people, and pluckt him to him, and delivered to him from his head his velvet night-cap, and alſo his handkerchief, with other things beſides. And after a little ſecret talk with him, and each of them parting from other, immediately came to him a brother in law of his, called Roger Beſwike, which as ſoon as he had taken the ſaid Bradford by the hand, one of the Sheriffs of London called Woodroſe, came with his ſtaffe, and brake the ſaid Rogers head, that the blood ran about his ſhoulders. Which ſight Bradford beholding with grief, bade his brother farewell, willing him to commend him to his mother, and the reſt of his friends, and to get him to ſome Surgeon betimes; ſo they departing, had little or no talk at all together. Then was he led forth to Smithfield with a great company of weaponed men, to conduct him thither, as the like was not ſeen at any mans burning: for in every corner of Smithfield there were ſome, beſides thoſe that ſtood about the ſtake. Bradford then being come to the place fell flat to the ground, ſecretly making his prayers to Almighty God. Then riſing again, and putting off his clothes unto his ſhirt, he went to the ſtake, and there ſuffered with a yong man of twenty yeers of age, joyfully and conſtantly, whoſe name was John Leaf. Touching the order and manner of whoſe burning, more ſhall be ſaid (God willing) hereafter. In the mean time, we will now ſhew forth the ſundry examinations, conflicts, and conferences between him and other his adverſaries during the time of his impriſonment, which was in all two yeers lacking one month and a half. Which Examinations here follow to be declared.

M. Bradford two yeeres lacking a moneth and a halfe in priſon.

It was before a little above declared, that John Bradford, within three dayes after the Sermon of Maſter Bourn, who by the Councell committed to the Tower, where he remained from the month of Auguſt, Anno 1553. to the 22. day of January, Anno 1555. upon which day he was called out to examination before Steven Wincheſter and other of the Commiſſioners. The effect of which examination and communication which paſſed between him and them, proceeded in manner as followeth.

The effect of the communication between Iohn Bradford and the Lord Chancellor and others in Commiſſion with him, the two and twenty day of Ianuary, Anno 1555.

Talk between M. Bradford and Steven Wincheſter.

After the Lord Chancellor, and the reſidue of the Queens Councell in Commiſſion with him, had ended their talk with Maſter Farrar late Biſhop of Saint Davids, the Under-marſhall of the Kings Bench was commanded to bring in John Bradford: who, being come into the preſence of the Councell ſitting at a Table, kneeled down on his knee, but immediatly by the Lord Chancellor was bidden to ſtand up, and ſo he did.

Wincheſter overfaced.

When he was riſen, the Lord Chancellor earneſtly looked upon him, to have (belike) overfaced him: but he gave no place, that is, he ceaſed not in like manner to look on the Lord Chancellor ſtill continually, ſave that once he caſt up his eyes to heaven-ward, ſighed for Gods grace, and ſo overfaced him.

The words of the Biſhop of Wincheſter to John Bradford

L. Chan. Then the Lord Chancellor as it were amazed, and ſomething troubled, ſpake thus to him in effect; That of long time he had been impriſoned juſtly for his ſeditious behaviour at Pauls Croſſe, the thirteenth of Auguſt, in the yeer One thouſand five hundred fifty three, for his falſe preaching and arrogancie, taking upon him to preach without authority. But now (quoth he) the time of mercie is come, and therefore the Queens Highneſſe, minding to offer unto you mercie, hath by us ſent for you, to declare and give the ſame, if ſo be ye will with us return: and if you will do as we have done, you ſhall finde as we have found, I warrant you. This was the ſum of his words, and in manner the ſame words which he ſpake.

Bradfords anſwer again to Wincheſter.

Brad. To theſe words John Bradford ſpake (after reverent obeyſance made) in this manner: My Lord and Lords all, I confeſſe that I have been long impriſoned, and (with humble reverence be it ſpoken) unjuſtly, for that I did nothing ſeditiouſly, falſely, or arrogantly, in word or fact, by preaching or otherwiſe, but rather ſought truth, peace, and all godly quietneſſe, as an obedient and faithfull ſubject, both in going about to ſave the Biſhop of Bathe now, then M. Bourn, the Preacher at the Croſſe, and in preaching for quietneſſe accordingly.

Bradfords fact in ſaving of Bourn counted for ſeditious.

L. Chan. At theſe words, or rather before he had fully finiſhed, the ſaid Lord Chencellor ſomething ſnuffed, and ſpake with an admiration, that there was a loud lye: for (quoth he) the fact was ſeditious, as you my Lord of London can bear witneſſe.

Boner witneſſeth with Wincheſter againſt Bradford.

Boner. You ſay true my Lord; I ſaw him with mine own eyes, when he took upon him to rule and leade the people malepertly, thereby declaring that he was the author of the ſedition.

Brad. My Lords, notwithſtanding my Lord Biſhops ſeeing and ſaying, yet the truth I have told, as one day my Lord God Almighty ſhall reveal to all the world, when we ſhall all come and appear before him: In the mean ſeaſon, becauſe I cannot be beleeved of you, I muſt and am ready to ſuffer, as now your ſayings be, whatſoever God ſhall licenſe you to do unto me.

This talke of Bradford firſt in the Tower, came not to our hands.

L. Chan. I know thou haſt a glorious tongue, and goodly ſhews thou makeſt: but all is lyes thou ſpeakeſt. And again, I have not forgot how ſtubborn thou waſt when thou waſt before us in the Tower, whereupon thou waſt committed to priſon concerning Religion: I have not forgotten thy behaviour and talk, wherethrough worthily thou haſt been kept in priſon, as one that would have done more hurt than I will ſpeak of.

Brad. My Lord, as I ſaid I ſay again, that I ſtand as before you, ſo before God, and one day we ſhall all ſtand before him: the truth then will be the truth, though now ye will not ſo take it. Yea my Lord, I dare ſay, that my Lord of Bath, M. Bourn will witneſſe with me, that I ſought his ſafegard with the perill of mine own life, I thank God therefore.

Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe againſt thy neighbour. Commandement the ninth.

Boner. That is not true: for I my ſelf did ſee thee take upon thee too much.

Bradford deſired of Maſter Bourn to help him, and yet is now ſhent for his labour.

Brad. No, I took nothing upon me undeſired, and that of Maſter Bourn himſelf, as if he were here preſent, I dare ſay he would affirm. For he deſired me both to help him to pacifie the people, and alſo not to leave him till he was in ſafety. And as for my behaviour in the Tower, and talk before your Honours, if I did or ſaid any thing that did not beſeem me, if your Lordſhips would tell me wherein it was, I ſhould and would ſhortly make you anſwer.

Chan. Well, to leave this matter: how ſayeſt thou now? Wilt thou return again, and do as we have done, and thou ſhalt receive the Queens mercie and pardon?

Mans mercy with Gods wrath refuſed.

Brad. My Lord, I deſire mercie with Gods mercie, but mercie with Gods wrath, God keep me from: Although (I thank God therefore) my conſcience doth not accuſe me, that I did ſpeak any thing wherefore I ſhould need to receive the Queens mercie or pardon. For all that ever I did or ſpake, was both agreeable to Gods Laws, and the Laws of the Realm at that preſent, and did make much to quietneſſe.

Chan. Well, if thou make this babbling, rolling in thy eloquent tongue, and yet being altogether ignorant and vain-glorious, and wilt not receive mercie offered to thee, know for truth, that the Queen is minded to make a “ purgation of all ſuch as thou art.

“ That is the worſt you and your Pope can do, and the beſt argument you have.

The Lords mercy is better then life to Bradford.

Brad. The Lord before whom I ſtand, as well as before you, knoweth what vain-glory I have ſought, and ſeek in this behalf: his mercie I deſire, and alſo would be glad of the Queens favour, to live as a ſubject without a clog of conſcience. But otherwiſe the Lords mercie is better to me than life. And I know to whom I have committed my life, even into his hands which will keep it, ſo that no man may take it away before it be his pleaſure. There are twelve hours in the day, and as long as they laſt, ſo long ſhall no man have power thereon. Therefore his good will be done; life in his diſpleaſure is worſe than death, and death with his true favour, is true life.

Bradford ready to confirm his Doctrine with his life.

Chan. I know well enough, that we ſhall have glorious talk enough of thee: be ſure therefore that as thou haſt deceived the people with falſe and devilliſh Doctrine, ſo ſhalt thou receive.

Brad. I have not deceived the people, nor taught any other Doctrine, than by Gods grace I am, and hope ſhall be ready to confirm with my life. And as for the devilliſhneſſe and falſeneſſe in the Doctrine, I would be ſorry you could ſo prove it.

Duresme. Why, tell me, what ſay you by the miniſtration of the Communion, as now you know it is?

Bradford asketh a queſtion before he anſwereth any interrogatory.

Brad. My Lord, here I muſt deſire of your Lordſhip and of all your Honours a queſtion, before I dare make you an anſwer to any Interrogatory or queſtion, wherewith you now begin. I have been ſix times ſworn that I ſhall in no caſe conſent to the practiſing of any juriſdiction, or any authority on the Biſhop of Romes behalf within this Realm of England. Now, before God, I humbly pray your Honors to tell me whether you ask me this queſtion by his authority, or no? If you do, I dare not, nor may anſwer you any thing in his authority, which you ſhall demand of me, except I would be forſworn, which God forbid.

Secretary Bourn ſpeaks. Bradford ſix times ſworn againſt the pope.

Sec. Bourn. Haſt thou been ſworn ſix times? what office haſt thou born?

Brad. Forſooth I was thrice ſworn in Cambridge, when I was admitted Maſter of Art, when I was admitted Fellow of Pembroke Hall, and when I was there, the Viſitors came thither, and ſware the Univerſity. Again, I was ſworn when I entred into the Miniſtery, when I had a Prebend given me, and when I was ſworn to ſerve the King a little before his death.

Herods oath, quoth Wincheſter.

Chan. Tuſh, Herods oathes a man ſhould make no conſcience at.

Brad. But my Lord, theſe were no Herods oathes, no unlawfull oathes, but oathes according to Gods word, as you your ſelf have well affirmed in your book De vera obedientia.

Wincheſt. de vera obedientia.

M. Rocheſter ſpeaketh.

M. Roch. My Lords (quoth another of the Councell that ſtood by the table, Maſter Rocheſter I ween) I never knew wherefore this man was in priſon before now: but I ſee well that it had not been good that this man had been abroad: what the cauſe was that he was put in priſon, I know not; but I now well know that not without a cauſe he was and is to be kept in priſon.

The Earl of Derbies complaint againſt Bradford. This Letter was written to his mother, brethren and ſiſters, and followeth hereafter.

Bourn. Yea, it was reported this Parliament time by the Earl of Derby, that he hath done more hurt by letters, and exhorting thoſe that have come to him, in religion, than ever he did when he was abroad by preaching. In his letters he curſeth all that teach any falſe Doctrine (for ſo he calleth that which is not according to that he taught) and moſt heartily exhorteth them to whom he writeth to continue ſtill in that they have received by him, and ſuch like as he is. All which words divers of the Councell affirmed. Whereunto the ſaid M. Bourn added, ſaying; How ſay you Sir, have you not thus ſeditiouſly written and exhorted the people?

M. Bradford falſly charged with ſedition.

Brad. I have not written, nor ſpoken any thing ſeditiouſly, neither (I thank God therefore) have I admitted any ſeditious cogitation, nor I truſt ever ſhall do.

Bourn. Yea, thou haſt written letters.

Chan. Why ſpeakeſt thou not? Haſt thou not written as he ſaith?

Brad. That I have written, I have written.

Rich. Southwell ſpeaketh.

South. Lord God, what an arrogant and ſtubborn boy is this, that thus ſtoutly and dallyingly behaveth himſelf before the Queens Councell? Whereat one looked upon another with diſdainfull countenances.

Brad. My Lords and Maſters, the Lord God, which is, and will be Judge to us all, knoweth, that as I am certain I ſtand now before his Majeſty; ſo with reverence in his ſight I ſtand before you, and unto you accordingly in words and geſture I deſire to behave my ſelf. If you otherwiſe take it, I doubt not but God in his time will reveal it. In the mean ſeaſon, I ſhall ſuffer with all due obedience your ſayings and doings too, I hope.

All is lyes that pleaſeth not Wincheſter.

Chan. Theſe be gay glorious words of reverence: but as in all other things, ſo herein alſo thou doeſt nothing but lye.

Brad. Well, I would God the Author of truth, and abhorrer of lyes, would pull my tongue out of my head before you all, and ſhew a terrible judgement on me here preſent, if I have purpoſed or do purpoſe to lye before you, whatſoever you ſhall ask me.

Wincheſter holden at a bay.

Chan. Why then doeſt thou not anſwer? Haſt thou written ſuch Letters as here is objected againſt thee?

Brad. As I ſaid, my Lord, that I have written, I have written, I ſtand now before you, which either can lay my Letters to my charge, or no: if you lay any thing to my charge that I have written, if I deny it, I am then a lyer.

Chan. We ſhall never have done with thee, I perceive now; be ſhort, be ſhort, Wilt thou have mercie?

Brad. I pray God give me his mercie, and if therewith you will extend yours, I will not refuſe it, but otherwiſe I will none.

Here now was much ado, one ſpeaking this, and another that of his arrogancie, in refuſing the Queens pardon, which ſhe ſo lovingly did offer unto him; whereto Bradford anſwered thus:

M. Bradford deſireth to live, that he may have life without clog of conſcience.

Brad. My Lords, if I may live as a quiet ſubject without clog of conſcience, I ſhall heartily thank you for your pardon; if otherwiſe I behave my ſelf, then I am in danger of the Law: in the mean ſeaſon I ask no more, but the benefit of a Subject, till I be convinced of tranſgreſſion. If I cannot have this, as hitherto I have not had, Gods good will be done.

Wincheſter ſpeaketh againſt the Doctrine taught in King Edwards time.

Chan. Upon theſe words my Lord Chancellor began a long proceſſe of the falſe Doctrine wherewith the people were deceived in the dayes of King Edward, and ſo turned the end of his talk to Bradford, ſaying: How ſayeſt thou?

M. Bradford ſtandeth in defence of the Doctrine taught in King Edwards time.

Brad. My Lord, the Doctrine taught in K. Edwards dayes was Gods pure Religion: the which as I then beleeved, ſo do I now more beleeve it than ever I did, and therin I am more confirmed, and ready to declare it by Gods grace even as he will, to the world, than I was when I firſt came into priſon.

Dureſ. What Religion mean you in K. Edwards dayes? What yeer of his raign?

Brad. Forſooth even the ſame yeer my Lord, that the King died, and I was a Preacher. Here wrote Secretary Bourn I wote not what.

The reaſon of Wincheſter wherewith he diſproveth the Doctrine of K. Edwards daies.

Chan. Now after a little pauſing, my Lord Chancellor beginneth again to declare, that the Doctrine taught in King Edwards dayes was hereſie, uſing for probation and demonſtration therof, no Scripture nor reaſon, but this: that it ended with treaſon and rebellion, ſo that (quoth he) the very end were enough to prove that Doctrine to be naught.

Brad. Ah my Lord, that you could enter into Gods Sanctuary, and mark the end of this preſent Doctrine that you now ſo magnifie.

Chan. What meaneſt thou by that? I ween we ſhall have a ſnatch of rebellion even now.

Brad. My Lord, I mean no ſuch end as you would gather: I mean an end which no man ſeeth, but ſuch as enter into Gods Sanctuary. If a man look on preſent things, he will ſoon deceive himſelf.

The Queens mercie again offered to M. Bradford.

Here now did my L. Chancellor offer again mercie, and Bradford anſwered, as before: Mercie with Gods mercie, ſhould be welcome, but otherwiſe he would none. Whereupon the L. Chancellor did ring a little Bell, belike to call in ſome body: for there was preſent none in manner, but onely thoſe before named, and the biſhop of Worceſter. Now when one was come in; it is beſt, quoth Maſt. Secretary Bourn, that you give the Keeper a charge of this fellow. So was the under-marſhall called in.

M. Bradford returned again into priſon.

Chan. Ye ſhall take this man to you, and keep him cloſe without conference with any man, but by your knowledge, and ſuffer him not to write any Letters, &c. for he is of another manner of charge unto you now, than he was before. And ſo they departed, Bradford looking as cheerfully as any man could do, declaring thereby even a deſire to give his life for confirmation of that he had taught and written.

The effect of the ſecond examination of Iohn Bradford in S. Mary Overies Church, before the L. Chancellor, and divers other Biſhops, the 29. of Ianuary, Anno 1555.

The ſecond examination of M. Bradford before the biſh. of Wincheſter and others.

AFter the excommunication of John Rogers, John Bradford was called in, and ſtanding before the L. Chancellor and other biſhops ſet with him, the ſaid L. Chancellor ſpake thus in effect.

L. Chan. Where before the 22. of January, the ſaid Bradford was called before them (ſaid he) and they offered unto him the Queens pardon, although he had contemned the ſame, and further ſaid, that he would ſtiffly and ſtoutly maintain, and defend the erroneous Doctrine taught in the dayes of K. Edward the 6, yet in conſideration that the Queens Highneſs was wonderfull mercifull, they thought good eftſoons to offer the ſame mercie again, before it were too late: therefore adviſe you well, ſaid he, there is yet ſpace and grace before we ſo proceed, that you be committed to the ſecular power, as we muſt do and will do, if you will not follow the example of M. Barlow, and M. Cardmaker, whom he there commended, adding oratoriouſly amplifications to move the ſaid Bradford to yeeld to the religion preſently ſet forth.

Example of M. Barlow and Cardmaker laid againſt Bradford.

Brad. After the L. Chancellors long talk, Bradford began on this ſort to ſpeak; My Lord, and my Lords all, as now I ſtand in your ſight before you, ſo I humbly beſeech your Honors to conſider, that you ſit in the ſeat of the Lord, who (as David doth witneſſe) is in the congregation of Judges, and ſitteth in the midſt of them judging: and as you would your place to be now of us taken as Gods place, ſo demonſtrate your ſelves to follow him in your ſitting, that is, ſeek no guiltleſſe blood, nor hunt not by queſtions to bring into the ſnare, them which are out of the ſame. At this preſent I ſtand before you guilty or guiltleſſe, then proceed and give ſentence accordingly: if guiltleſſe, then give me the benefit of a ſubject, which hitherto I could not have.

Si illum objurges, vitæ qui auxilium tulit; quid facies illi qui dederit damnum aut malum?

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor replyed, and ſaid, that the ſaid Bradford began with a true ſentence, Deus ſtetit in Synagoga, &c. But quoth he, this and all thy geſture declareth but hypocriſie and vain-glory. And further he made much ado to purge himſelf, that he ſought not guiltleſſe blood, and ſo began a long proceſſe how that Bradfords fact at Pauls Croſſe, was preſumptuous, arrogant, and declared a taking upon him to leade the people, which could not but turn to much diſquietnes, in that thou (ſpeaking to Bradford) was ſo prefract and ſtout in religion at that preſent. For the which, as thou waſt then committed to priſon, ſo hitherto thou haſt been kept in priſon, where thou haſt written Letters to no little hurt to the Queens people, as by report of the Earl of Derby in the Parliament houſe was credibly declared. And to this he added, that the ſaid Bradford did ſtubbornly behave himſelf the laſt time he was before them: and therefore not for any other thing now I demand of thee, quoth he, but of and for thy doctrine and religion.

The witneſſe of the Earl of Derby laid againſt M. Bradford.

Brad. My Lord, where you accuſe me of hypocriſie and vain-glory, I muſt and will leave it to the Lords declaration, which one day will open yours and my truth, and hearty meanings: in the mean ſeaſon, I will content my ſelf with the teſtimony of mine own conſcience, which if it yeeld to hypocriſie, could not but have God to be my foe allo; and ſo both God and man were againſt me. And as for my fact at Pauls Croſſe, and behaviour before you at the Tower, I doubt not but God will reveal it to my comfort. For if ever I did thing, which God uſed to publike benefit, I think that my deed was one, and yet for it I have been and am kept of long time in priſon. And as for Letters and Religion, I anſwer, as I did the laſt time I was before you.

M. Bradford defendeth his fact at Pauls Croſſe.

Chan. There didſt thou ſay ſtubbornly and malapertly, that thou wouldeſt manly maintain the erroneous doctrine in K. Edwards dayes.

The words of M. Bradford miſreported.

Brad. My Lord, I ſaid the laſt time I was before you, that I had ſix times taken an oath, that I ſhould never conſent to the practiſing of any juriſdiction on the Biſhop of Romes behalf, and therefore durſt I not anſwer to any thing that ſhould be demanded ſo, leſt I ſhould be forſworn, which God forbid. Howbeit, ſaving mine oath, I ſaid that I was more confirmed in the Doctrine, ſet forth publikely in the dayes of K. Edward, than ever I was before I was put in priſon: and ſo I thought I ſhould be, and think yet ſtill I ſhall be found more ready to give my life as God will, for the confirmation of the ſame.

M. Bradford more confirmed in his Doctrine after his impriſonment than before.

Chan. I remember well that thou madeſt much ado about needleſſe matter, as though the oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome were ſo great a matter. So others have done before thee, but yet not in ſuch ſort as thou haſt done: for thou pretendeſt a conſcience in it, which is nothing elſe but meer hypocriſie.

Wincheſter maketh but a ſmall matter of an oath.

Brad. My conſcience is known to the Lord: and whether I deal herein hypocritically, or no, he knoweth. As I ſaid therfore then my Lord, ſo I ſay again now, That for fear leſt I ſhould be perjured, I dare not make anſwer to any thing you ſhall demand of me, if my anſwering ſhould conſent to the confirming or practiſing of any juriſdiction for the Biſhop of Rome here in England.

L. Chan. Why didſt thou begin to tell that we are Dii, and ſit in Gods place, and now wilt thou not make us an anſwer?

Brad. My Lord, I ſaid, you would have your place taken of us now as Gods place: and therefore I brought forth that piece of Scripture, that ye might the more be admoniſhed to follow God and his wayes at this preſent, who ſeeth us all, and well perceiveth, whether of conſcience I pretend this matter of the oath, or no.

Bradford ſtandeth ſtill to his oath.

L. Chan. No, all men may well ſee thine hypocriſie: for if for thine oathes ſake thou didſt not anſwer, then wouldeſt thou not have ſpoken as thou didſt, and have anſwered me at the firſt: but now men well perceive, that this is but a ſtarting hole to hide thy ſelf in, becauſe thou dareſt not anſwer, and ſo wouldeſt eſcape, blinding the ſimple peoples eyes, as though of conſcience you did all you do.

The cauſe why Bradford anſwereth not to Wincheſter. Popiſh interrogatories.

Brad. That which I ſpake at the firſt, was not a replication or an anſwer to that you ſpake to me: and therefore I needed not to lay for me mine oath. For I thought you would have more weighed what I did ſpeak, than you did: but when I perceived you did not conſider it, but came to ask matter, whereto by anſwering I ſhould conſent to the practiſing of juriſdiction on the Biſhop of Romes behalf here in England, and ſo be forſworn; then of conſcience and ſimplicity I ſpake as I do yet again ſpeak, that I dare not for conſcience ſake anſwer you. And therefore I ſeek no ſtarting holes, nor go about to blinde the people, as God knoweth. For if you of your Honors ſhall tell me, that you do not ask me any thing, whereby mine anſwering ſhould conſent to the practiſing of the Biſhop of Romes juriſdiction, ask me wherein you will, and you ſhall hear that I will anſwer you as flatly as ever any did that came before you. I am not afraid of death, I thank God: for I look, and have looked for nothing elſe at your hands of long time: but I am afraid, when death cometh, I ſhould have matter to trouble my conſcience, by the guiltineſſe of perjury, and therefore do I anſwer as I do.

L.Chan. These be gay glorious words, full of hypocriſie and vain-glory, and yet doeſt thou not know that I ſit here as Biſhop of Wincheſter in mine own Dioceſſe, and therfore may do this which I do, and more too?

Bradford ready to anſwer under proteſtation

Brad. My Lord, give me leave to ask you this queſtion, that my conſcience may be out of doubt in this matter. Tell me here Coram Deo, before God, all this audience being witneſſe, that you demand of me nothing whereby mine anſwering ſhould conſent to and confirm the practiſe of juriſdiction for the Biſhop of Rome here in England, and yet your Honour ſhall hear me give you as flat and as plain anſwers briefly, to whatſoever you ſhall demand me, as ever any did.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was wonderfully offended, and ſpake much how that the biſhop of Romes authority needed no confirmation of Bradfords anſwering, nor no ſuch as he was, and turned his talk to the people, how that Bradford followed crafty covetous Merchants, which becauſe they would lend no mony to their neighbours when they were in need, would ſay that they had ſworn oft, that they would never lend any more money, becauſe their Debters had ſo oft deceived them. Even ſo thou, quoth he to Bradford, doeſt at this preſent, to caſt a miſt in the peoples eyes, to blear them with an hereſie (which is greater, and more hurtfull to the Common-wealth than the other is) pretend thine oath, whereby the people might make a conſcience, whereas they ſhould not. Why ſpeakeſt thou not?

Difference of oathes: ſome with faith and charity, ſome againſt it.

Brad. My Lord, as I ſaid, I ſay again; I dare not anſwer you for fear of perjury, from which God defend me: or elſe I could tell you that there is a difference between oathes. Some be according to faith and charity, as the oath againſt the biſhop of Rome: ſome be againſt faith and charity; as this, to deny by oath, my help to my brother in his need.

L. Chan. Here my L. Chancellor again was much offended, ſtill ſaying that Bradford durſt not anſwer, and further made much ado to prove that the oath againſt the biſhop of Rome was againſt charity.

Brad. But Bradford anſwered, that howſoever his Honour took him, yet he was aſſured of his meaning, that no fear but the fear of perjury made him unwilling to anſwer: For, as for my death, my Lord (quoth he) as I know there are 12. hours in the day, ſo with the Lord my time is appointed. And when it ſhall be his good time, then I ſhall depart hence: but in the mean ſeaſon I am ſafe enough, though all the people had ſworn my death. Into his hands have I committed it, and do, his good will be done. And ſaving mine oath, I will anſwer you in this behalf, that the oath againſt the B. of Rome was not, nor is againſt charity.

L.Chan. How prove you that?

Brad. Forſooth I prove it thus:

Argument.

The oath againſt the biſh. of Rome is not againſt charity.

Fe. Nothing is againſt charity, which is with Gods word, and not againſt it.
ſti- The oath againſt the Biſhop of Romes authority in England, is with Gods word, and is not againſt it:
no. Ergo, The oath againſt the Biſhop of Romes authority in England, is not againſt charity.

A King, how he may be taken for ſupreme head of the Church in his own dominion.

L.Chan. Is it againſt Gods word, that a man ſhould take a King to be ſupreme head of the Church in his Realm?

Brad. No, ſaving ſtill mine oath, it is not againſt Gods word, but with it, being taken in ſuch ſenſe as it may well be taken: that is, attributing to the Kings power, the ſoveraignty in all his dominion.

L. Chan. I pray you where finde you that?

Rom. 13. Biſhops, Prophets and Apoſtles ſubject to temporall Magiſtrates.

Brad. I finde it in many places, but ſpecially in the 13. to the Romans, where S. Paul writeth, Every ſoul to be ſubject to the ſuperiour power: but what power? Quæ gladium geſtat, The power verily which beareth the ſword; which is not the ſpirituall, but the temporall power. As Chryſoſtom full well noteth upon the ſame place, which your Honour knoweth better than I. He (Chryſoſtom I mean) there plainly ſheweth that Biſhops, Prophets, and Apoſtles are obedient to the temporall Magiſtrates.

L. Chan. Here yet more the Lord Chancellor was ſtirred, and ſaid, how that Bradford went about to deny all obedience to the Queen for his oath: and ſo (quoth he) this man would make Gods word a warrant of diſobedience: for he will anſwer the Queen on this ſort, that when ſhe ſaith, Now ſwear to the Biſhop of Rome, or obey his authority: No (will he ſay) for I ſhould be forſworn, and ſo he makes the Queen no Queen.

Refuſing of the Popes obedience being ſworn againſt him, is no denying of obedience to the Q.

Brad. No, I go not about to deny all obedience to the Queens Highneſſe, but denying obedience in this part, if he ſhould demand it. For I was ſworn to K. Edward, not ſimply, that is, not onely concerning his own perſon, but alſo concerning his ſucceſſors, and therfore in denying to do the Queens requeſt herein, I deny not her authority, nor become diſobedient.

The prepoſterous judgment of Wincheſter, to care ſo little for an oath to God, and ſo much for his vow to the Pope.

L. Chan. Yes that thou doeſt: and ſo he began to tell a long tale, how if a man ſhould make an oath to pay to me an hundred pounds by ſuch a day, and the man to whom it was due would forget the debt, the debtor ſhould ſay, No, you cannot do it: for I am forſworn then.

Brad. Here Bradford deſired my L. Chancellor not to trifle it, ſaying, that he wondred his Honour would make ſolemn oathes made to God, trifles in that ſort; and make ſo great a matter concerning vows (as they call it) made to the Biſhop for marriage of Prieſts.

Chan. At theſe words the L. Chancellor was much offended, and ſaid, he did not trifle: but quoth he, thou goeſt about to deny obedience to the Queen, which now requireth obedience to the biſhop of Rome.

Argument. Ad ſpeciem ad genus negative non valet.

Brad. No my Lord, I do not deny obedience to the Queen, if you would diſcern between Genus and Species. Becauſe I may not obey in this; Ergo, I may not obey in the other, is no good reaſon. As if a man let or ſell a peece of his Inheritance, yet this notwithſtanding all his inheritance is not let or ſold: and ſo in this caſe, all obedience I deny not, becauſe I deny obedience in this branch.

Chan. I will none of theſe ſimilitudes.

Brad. I would not uſe them, if that you went not about to perſwade the people, that I meant that which I never meant: for I my ſelf not onely mean obedience, but will give enſample of all moſt humble obedience to the Queens Highneſſe, ſo long as ſhe requireth not obedience againſt God.

Chan. No, no, all men may ſee your meaning well enough. There is no man, though he be ſworn to the King, that doth therefore break his oath, if he afterwards be ſworn to the French King and to the Emperor.

Brad. It is true my Lord, but the caſes be not like. For here is an exception; Thou ſhalt not ſwear to the Biſhop of Rome at any time. If we in like manner were ſworn; Thou ſhalt not ſerve the Emperor, &c. you ſee there were ſome alteration and more doubt. But I beſeech your Honour remember what ye your ſelf have written, anſwering the Objections here againſt in your Book De vera obedientia. Vincat modo divini verbi veritas, i. Let Gods Word, and the reaſon thereof, bear the bell away.

Wincheſter pretendeth as though Bradford for fear durſt not anſwer.

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was thorowly moved, and ſaid ſtill, how that Bradford had written ſeditious letters, and perverted the people thereby, and did ſtoutly ſtand, as though he would defend the erroneous Doctrine in King Edwards time, againſt all men: and now, quoth he, he ſaith, he dare not anſwer.

Bradford ready to tender a reaſon of his faith.

Brad. I have written no ſeditious Letters, I have not perverted the people: but that which I have written and ſpoken, that will I never deny, by Gods grace. And where your Lordſhip ſaith, that I dare not anſwer you: that all men may know that I am not afraid, ſaving mine oath, aſk me what you will, and I will plainly make you anſwer, by Gods grace, although I now ſee my life lieth thereon. But O Lord, into thy hands I commit it, come what come will: onely ſanctifie thy Name in me, as in an inſtrument of thy grace, Amen. Now aſk what you will, and you ſhall ſee I am not afraid, by Gods grace, flatly to anſwer.

Chriſts preſent corporally in the Sacrament to faith.

L. Chan. Well then, how ſay you to the bleſſed Sacrament? Do you not beleeve there Chriſt to be preſent concerning his naturall body?

Brad. My Lord, I do not beleeve that Chriſt is corporally preſent at and in the due adminiſtration of the Sacrament. By this word (corporally) I mean that Chriſt is there preſent corporally unto faith.

L.Chan. Unto faith? we muſt have many moe words to make it plain.

Brad. You ſhall ſo: but firſt give me leave to ſpeak two words.

L.Chan. Speak on.

Note well the Popes way to bring men to faith.

The Popes judging and condemning men for their faith, reproved by Bernard.

Brad. I have been now a yeer and almoſt three quarters in priſon, and of all this time you never queſtioned with me hereabout, when I might have ſpoken my conſcience frankly without perill: but now have you a Law to hang up and put to death, if a man anſwer freely, and not to your appetite, and ſo now you come to demand this queſtion. Ah my Lord, Chriſt uſed not this way to bring men to faith. No more did the Prophets or Apoſtles. Remember what Bern. writeth to Eugenius the Pope; Apoſtolos lego ſtetiſſe judicandos, ſediſſe judicantes non lego. Hoc erit, illud fuit, &c. That is, I reade, that the Apoſtles ſtood to be judged, but I reade not, that they ſate to judge. This ſhall be, that was, &c.

Wincheſter blamed without a cauſe as he ſaith.

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was appalled, as it ſeemed, and ſaid moſt gently that he uſed not this means. It was not my doing, quoth he, although ſome there be that think this to be the beſt way. For, I for my part have been challenged for being too gentle oftentimes. Which thing the Biſhop of London confirmed, and ſo did almoſt all the audience, that he had been ever too milde and too gentle.

Brad. At which words Bradford ſpake thus: My Lord, I pray you ſtretch out your gentlenes, that I may feel it, for hitherto I never felt it.

Chan. As ſoon as ever he had ſpoken thus, the Lord Chancellor belike thinking that Bradford would have had mercie and pardon, ſaid, that with all his heart, not onely he, but the Queens Highneſſe would ſtretch out mercie, if with them he would return.

Bradford three quarters of a yeer in the tower kept from pen and ink.

M. Bradford impriſoned, not for matter they had, but for matter they would have againſt him.

Brad. Return, my Lord? God ſave me from that going back: I mean it not ſo, but I mean, that I was three quarters of a yeer in the Tower, you forbade me paper, pen and ink, and never in all that time, nor ſithence did I feel any gentleneſſe from you. I have rather hitherto found, as I looked for, extremity. And I thank God that I perceive now ye have kept me in priſon thus long, not for any matter ye had, but for matter ye would have. Gods good will be done.

Bradford kept in the veſtry till dark night.

Here now were divers telling my Lord it was dinner time. And ſo he roſe up, leaving Bradford ſpeaking, and ſaying that in the afternoon they would ſpeak more with him. And ſo was he had into the Veſtry, and was there all that day till dark night, and ſo was conveyed again to priſon.

Tho. Huſſey cometh to Bradford.

In the mean time, about four of the clock the ſame afternoon, a Gentleman called Maſter Thomas Huſſey of Lincolnſhire, which was once an officer in the Duke of Northfolks houſe, did come into the Reveſtry to inquire for one Stoning: and when it was anſwered him by the undermarſhals officers of the Kings Bench, that there was none ſuch, he entred into the houſe, and took acquaintance of John Bradford, ſaying, that he would commune and ſpeak with him the next morning for old acquaintance.

Counſell of M. Huſſey given to M. Bradford.

M. Bradford refuſeth to require reſpit.

The next morning about ſeven of the clock, this Gentleman came into the chamber wherein John Bradford did lye, and being with him, he began a long Oration, how that of love and old acquaintance he came unto him to ſpeak that which he would further utter. You did (ſaid he) ſo wonderfully behave your ſelf before the L. Chancellor, and other Biſhops yeſterday, that even the verieſt enemies you have, did ſee that they have no matter againſt you: and therefore adviſe you (ſpeaking as though it came of his own good will, without making any other man privie, or any other procuring him, as he ſaid) this day (for anon you ſhall be called before them again) to deſire a time, and men to confer withall, ſo ſhall all men think a wonderfull wiſdom, gravity, and godlineſſe in you: and by this means you ſhall eſcape preſent danger, which elſe is neerer than you be ware of. To this John Bradford anſwered, I neither can nor will make ſuch requeſt. For then ſhall I give occaſion to the people and to all other to think that I doubt of the Doctrine which I confeſſe; the which thing I do not: for thereof I am moſt aſſured, and therefore I will give no ſuch offence.

D. Seton cometh to M. Bradford.

Huſſey taken with a lye.

As they were thus talking, the chamber door was unlocked, and D. Seton came in, who when he ſaw Maſter Huſſey, What Sir, quoth he, are you come before me? O Lord, ſaid Bradford in his heart to God, goeth the matter thus? This man told me, no man knew of his coming: Lord give me grace to remember thy leſſon, Cavete ab hominibus illis, Beware of thoſe men, &c. Caſt not your pearls before dogs: for I ſee theſe men be come to hunt for matter, that the one may bear witneſſe with the other.

Councell of D. Seton given to M. Bradford.

Seton. D. Seton, after ſome by-talk of Bradfords age, of his country and ſuch like, began a gay and long Sermon of my Lord of Canterbury, Maſt. Latimer, and Maſt. Ridley, and how they at Oxford were not able to anſwer any thing at all; and that therefore my Lord of Canterbury deſired to confer with the biſhop of Dureſm and others: all which talk tended to this end, that John Bradford ſhould make the like ſuit, being in nothing to be compared in learning to my Lord of Canterbury.

Brad. To this John Bradford briefly anſwered as he did before to M. Huſſey.

The flattering commendation of D. Seton to M. Bradford.

Seton. With this anſwer neither the Doctor nor Gentleman being contented, after many perſwaſions, Maſter Doctor ſaid; I have heard much good talk of you, and even yeſternight a Gentleman made report of you at the Lord Chancellors table, that ye were able to perſwade as much as any that he knew. And I (though I never heard you preach, and to my knowledge never did ſee you before yeſterday) yet me thought your modeſty was ſuch, your behaviour and talk ſo without malice and impatience, that I would be ſorry you ſhould do worſe than my ſelf. And I tell you further, I do perceive my L. Chancellor hath a fantaſie towards you: wherfore be not ſo obſtinate, but deſire reſpite and ſome learned man to confer withall, &c.

M. Bradford refuſeth to ask reſpite to confer upon his Doctrine.

Brad. But John Bradford kept ſtill one anſwer: I cannot, nor I will not ſo offend the people. I doubt not, but I am moſt certain of the Doctrine I have taught.

Seton. Here maſter Doctor waxed hot, and called Bradford arrogant, proud, vain-glorious, and ſpake like a Prelate.

Brad. But Bradford anſwered, Beware of judging, leſt you condemn your ſelf. But ſtill M. Doctor Seton urged him, ſhewing him how mercifull my L. Chancellor was, and how charitably they entertained him.

Little juſtice, leſſe love appeareth in the b. of Wincheſt.

Brad. I never ſaw any juſtice, much leſſe love, I ſpeak for my part, quoth Bradford, in my Lord Chancellor. Long have I been unjuſtly impriſoned, and handled in the ſame uncharitably: and now my Lord hath no juſt matter againſt me.

This talk ſerved not the Doctors purpoſe: wherfore he went from matter to matter, from this point to that point. Bradford ſtill gave him the hearing, and anſwered not: for he perceived that they both did come but to fiſh for ſome things which might make a ſhew that my L. Chancellor had juſtly kept him in priſon.

When all their talk took no ſuch effect as they would or looked for, Maſt. Huſſey asked Bradford, will ye not admit conference, if my L. Chancellor ſhould offer it publikely?

M. Bradford refuſeth to admit conference but upon conditions.

Brad. Conference, if it had been offered before the law had been made, or if it were offered ſo that I might be at liberty to confer, and as ſure as he with whom I ſhould confer, then it were ſomething: but elſe I ſee not to what other purpoſe conference ſhould be offered, but to defer that which will come at the length, and the lingring may give more offence than do good. Howbeit, if my Lord ſhall make ſuch an offer of his own motion, I will not refuſe to confer with whomſoever he ſhall appoint.

D. Seton raileth againſt M. Bradford.

Maſter Doctor hearing this, called Bradford arrogant, proud, and whatſoever it pleaſed him.

Then Bradford perceiving by them that he ſhould ſhortly be called for, beſought them both to give him leave to talk with God, and to beg wiſdom and grace of him: for, quoth he, otherwiſe I am helples: and ſo they with much ado departed. Then Bradford went to God and made his praiers, which the Lord of his goodneſſe did graciouſly accept in his need, praiſed therfore be his holy name. Shortly after they were gone, Bradford was led to the foreſaid Church, and there tarried uncalled for, till eleven of the clock, that is, till M. Saunders was excommunicated.

The effect and ſum of the laſt Examination of Iohn Bradford, in the Church of S. Maries Overies.

The laſt examination of M. Bradford.

The effect of Wincheſters talk with M. Bradford.

After the excommunication of Laurence Saunders, John Bradford was called in, and being brought in before the L. Chancellor and other the biſhops there ſitting, the L. Chancellor began to ſpeak thus in effect: that if Bradford being now eftſoons come before them, would anſwer with modeſty and humility, and conform himſelf to the Catholike Church with them, he yet might finde mercie, becauſe they would be loath to uſe extremitie. Therefore he concluded with an exhortation, that Bradford would recant his Doctrine.

M. Bradfords anſwer to Wincheſter.

After the Lord Chancellor had ended his long Oration, Bradford began to ſpeak thus: As yeſterday I beſought your Honours to ſet in your ſight the Majeſty and preſence of God to follow him, which ſeeketh not to ſubvert the ſimple by ſubtile queſtions: ſo I humbly beſeech every one of you to do this day; for that you know well enough, that guiltleſſe blood will cry for vengeance. And this I pray not your Lordſhips to do, as one that taketh upon me to condemn you utterly herein, but that ye might be more admoniſhed to do that, which none doth ſo much as he ſhould do: For our nature is ſo much corrupt, that we are very oblivious and forgetfull of God. Again, as yeſterday I pretended mine oath and oathes againſt the Biſhop of Rome, that I ſhould never conſent to the practiſing of any juriſdiction for him, or on his behalf in the Realm of England: ſo do I again this day, leſt I ſhould be perjured. And laſt of all, as yeſterday the anſwers I made, were by proteſtation and ſaving mine oath, ſo I would your Honors ſhould know that mine anſwers ſhall be this day: and this I do, that when death (which I look for at your hands) ſhall come, I may not be troubled with the guiltineſs of perjury.

Wincheſter replyeth again to Bradford with a lye.

L. Chan. At which words the L. Chancellor was wroth, and ſaid, That they had given him reſpite to deliberate till this day, whether he would recant his errors of the bleſſed Sacrament, which yeſterday (quoth he) before us you uttered.

Brad. My Lord, you gave me no time of any ſuch deliberation, neither did I ſpeak any thing of the Sacrament which you did diſallow. For when I had declared a preſence of Chriſt to be there to faith, you went from that matter to purge your ſelf, that you were not cruell, and ſo went to dinner.

The oath againſt the biſh. of Rome, whether it be lawfull or unlawfull.

L. Chan. What? I perceive we muſt begin all again with thee. Did not I yeſterday tell thee plainly, that thou madeſt a conſcience where none ſhould be? Did not I make it plain, that the oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome, was an unlawfull oath?

Brad. No indeed my Lord: You ſaid ſo, but you proved it not yet, nor ever can do.

Wincheſters ſimilitude in no point like.

L. Chan. O Lord God, what a fellow art thou? Thou wouldeſt go about to bring into the peoples heads, that we, all the Lords of the Parliament houſe, the Knights and Burgeſſes, and all the whole Realm be perjured. O what an heretike is this? here good people, you may ſee what a ſenſleſſe heretike this fellow is. If I ſhould make an oath I would never help my brother, nor lend him money in his need, were this a good anſwer to tell my neighbour deſiring my help, that I had made an oath to the contrary? or that I could not do it?

Wincheſters ſimilitude refuted.

Brad. O my Lord, diſcern betwixt oathes that be againſt charity and faith, and oathes that be according to faith and charity, as this is againſt the Biſhop of Rome.

Chan. Here the Lord Chancellour made much ado, and a long time was ſpent about oathes, which were good, and which were evill, he captiouſly asking often of Bradford a direct anſwer concerning oathes: which Bradford would not give ſimply, but with a diſtinction. Whereat the Chancellor was much offended: but Bradford ſtill kept him at the bay, that the oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome, was a lawfull oath, uſing thereto the Lord Chancellors own book, de vera Obedientia, for confirmation.

Gods Word judge onely of oathes, whether they be made lawfully againſt the ſupremacie of the Pope or no. Wincheſter leaveth his hold.

At the length they came to this iſſue, who ſhould be judge of the lawfulneſſe of the oath; and Bradford ſaid the Word of God, according to Chriſts word, John 12. My word ſhall judge; and according to the teſtimony of Eſay, and Micah, That Gods Word coming out of Jeruſalem, ſhall give ſentence among the Gentiles. By this Word, quoth Bradford, my Lord, I will prove the oath againſt the Biſhop of Romes authority, to be a good, a godly and a lawfull oath. So that the Lord Chancellor left his hold, and as the other day he pretended a deniall of the Queens authority and obedience to Her Highneſſe, ſo did he now.

“ One ſpeciall cauſe of obedience denied by conſcience, maketh no general deniall of obedience in cauſes lawfull.

But Bradford, as the day before, proved that obedience in this point to the Queens Highneſs, if ſhe ſhould demand an oath to the B. of Rome, being denied, was not “a generall deniall of her authority, and of obedience to her; no more, quoth he, than the ſale, gift or leaſe of a peece of a mans inheritance, proveth it a ſale, gift or leaſe, of the whole inheritance.

Wincheſter ſtumbling at vows made to man, and leaping over ſolemn oathes made to God.

And thus much ado was made about this matter: the Lord Chancellor talking much, and uſing many examples of debt, of going out of the Town to morrow by oath, and yet tarrying till Friday, and ſuch like. Which trifling talk Bradford did touch, ſaying, That it was a wonder his Honour weighed conſcience no more in this, and would be ſo earneſt in vows of Prieſts marriages made to Biſhops, and be careleſſe for ſolemn oathes made to God, and to Princes. Summa, this was the end. The Lord Chancellor ſaid, the Queen might diſpenſe with it, and did ſo to all the whole Realm. But Bradford ſaid, that the Queens Highneſſe could do no more but remit her right, as for the oath made to God, ſhe could never remit, for as much as it was made unto God.

Wincheſter in a pelting chafe.

L.Chan. At which words the L. Chancellor chafed wonderfully, and ſaid, that in plain ſenſe I ſlandered the Realm of perjury: and therefore, (quoth he to the people) you may ſee how this fellow taketh upon him, to have more knowledge and conſcience, than all the wiſe men of England, and yet he hath no conſcience at all.

M. Bradford impriſoned without a cauſe

Brad. Well, my Lord, let all the ſtanders by ſee who hath conſcience: I have been a yeer and a half in priſon: Now before all this people, declare wherefore I was impriſoned, or what cauſe you had to puniſh me. You ſaid the other day in your own houſe, my Lord of London witneſſing with you, that I took upon me to ſpeak to the people undeſired. There he ſitteth by you, I mean my Lord of Bathe, which deſired me himſelf for the paſſion of Chriſt, I would ſpeak to the people. Upon whoſe words, I coming into the Pulpit, had like to have been ſlain with a dagger (which was hurled at him, I think) for it touched my ſleeve. He then prayed me, I would not leave him, and I promiſed him, as long as I lived, I would take hurt before him that day, and ſo went out of the Pulpit, and intreated with the people, and at length brought him my ſelf into an houſe.

M. Bradford neer ſlain in the pulpit, with a dagger, thrown againſt M. Bourn.

M. Bradford jeoparded his life for Maſter Bourn.

Beſides this, in the afternoon I preached at Bow Church, and there going up into the pulpit, one willed me not to reprove the people: for quoth he, you ſhall never come down alive, if you do it. And yet notwithſtanding I did in that Sermon reprove their fact, and called it ſedition at the leaſt twenty times. For all which my doing, I have received this recompence, priſon for a yeer and a half and more, and death now which you go about. Let all men be judge where conſcience is.

In ſpeaking of theſe words, there was endeavour to have letted it: but Bradford ſtill ſpake on, and gave no place till he had made an end, ſpeak what they would. And then the Lord Chancellor ſaid, that for all that fair tale, his fact at the Croſſe was naught.

Wincheſter proved double in his own words.

Brad. No, my fact was good, as you your ſelf did bear witneſſe with me. For when I was at the firſt before you in the Tower, you your ſelf did ſay, that my fact was good, but (quoth you) thy minde was evill. Well, quoth I; then my Lord, in that you allow the fact, and condemn my minde, for ſo much as otherwiſe I cannot declare my minde to man, but by ſaying and doing. God one day, I truſt, will open it to my comfort, what my minde was, and yours is.

Wincheſter driven to eate his own words.

L. Chan. Here the Lord Chancellor was offended, and ſaid, that he never ſaid ſo. I, quoth he, had not ſo little wit I trow, as not to diſcern betwixt meaning and doing: and ſo brought forth, little to the purpoſe, many examples to prove that men conſtrue things by the meaning of men, and not by their doings. But when this would not ſerve, then cometh he to another matter, and ſaid that Bradford was put in priſon at the firſt, becauſe he would not yeeld, nor be conformable to the Queens Religion.

Brad. Why my Lord, your Honour knoweth that you would not then reaſon with me in religion, but ſaid a time ſhould afterwards be found out, when I ſhould be talked withall. But if it were as your Lordſhip ſaith, that I was put in priſon for religion, in that my religion was then authoriſed by publike Laws of the Realm, could conſcience puniſh me, or caſt me in priſon therefore? Wherefore let all men be judges, in whom conſcience wanteth.

M. Chamberlain of Woodſtock againſt M. Bradford.

M.Cham. Here came forth M. Chamberlain of Woodſtock, and ſpake to my L. Chancellor, how that Bradford had been a Serving-man, and was with M. Harrington.

L. Chan. True, and did deceive his Maſter of ſeven ſcore li. and becauſe of this, he went to a Goſpeller and a Preacher (good people) and yet you ſee how he pretendeth conſcience.

Brad. My Lord, I ſet my foot by his, whoſoever he be, that can come forth, and juſtly vouch to my face, that ever I deceived my Maſter. And as you are chief Juſticer by office in England, I deſire juſtice upon them that ſo ſlander me, becauſe they cannot prove it.

Wincheſter again driven from his hold.

L.Chan. Here my L. Chancellor and M. Chamberlain were ſmitten blank, and ſaid they heard it. But, quoth my Lord Chancellor, we have another manner of matter than this againſt you: for you are an heretike.

Boner again cometh in with another untruth.

London. Yea, quoth the Biſhop of London, he did write Letters to M. Pendleton, which knoweth his hand as well as his own, your Honour did ſee the Letters.

Brad. That is not true, I never did write to Pendleton ſithence I came to priſon, and therefore I am not juſtly ſpoken of.

Lond. Yea, but you indited it.

Brad. I did not, nor know not what you mean, and this I offer to prove.

Here came in another, I trow they call him

A Clerk of the councel thought to be M. Allen.

Maſter Allen, one of the Clerks of the Councell, putting the Lord Chancellor in remembrance of Letters written into Lancaſhire.

L. Chan. You ſay true: for we have his hand to ſhew.

Brad. I deny that you have my hand to ſhew of Letters ſent into Lancaſhire, otherwiſe than before you all I will ſtand to, and prove them to be good and lawfull.

Here was all anſwered, and then the L. Chancellor began a new matter. Sir (quoth he) in my houſe the other day you did moſt contemptuouſly contemn the Queens mercie, and further ſaid, that you would maintain the erroneous Doctrine in K. Edwards dayes againſt all men, and this you do moſt ſtoutly.

Wincheſter brought to a plaine foile.

Wincheſters captious quarrell anſwered.

Brad. Well, I am glad that all men ſee now you have had no matter to impriſon me afore that day juſtly. Now ſay I, that I did not contemptuouſly contemn the Queens mercie, but would have had it (though if juſtice might take place, I need it not) ſo that I might have had it with Gods mercie, that is, without doing or ſaying any thing againſt God and his truth. And as for maintenance of Doctrine, becauſe I cannot tell how you will ſtretch this word maintenance, I will repeat again that which I ſpake. I ſaid I was more confirmed in the Religion ſet forth in King Edwards dayes, than ever I was: and if God ſo would, I truſt I ſhould declare it by giving my life for the confirmation and teſtification thereof. So I ſaid then, and ſo I ſay now. As for otherwiſe to maintain it, than pertaining to a private perſon by confeſſion, I thought not, nor think not.

Another untruth in Wincheſter.

L. Chan. Well, yeſterday thou didſt maintain falſe hereſie concerning the bleſſed Sacrament, and therefore we gave thee reſpite till this day to deliberate.

Brad. My Lord, as I ſaid at the firſt, I ſpake nothing of the Sacrament, but that which you allowed, and therefore reproved it not, nor gave me any thing to deliberate.

L.Chan. Why? didſt thou not deny Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament?

Brad. No, I never denied nor taught, but that to faith, whole Chriſt, body and blood was as preſent as the bread and wine to the due receiver.

L. Chan. Yea, but doeſt thou not beleeve that Chriſts body naturally and really is there, under the forms of bread and wine?

Brad. My Lord, I beleeve Chriſt is preſent there to the faith of the due receiver: as for tranſubſtantion, I plainly and flatly tell you I beleeve it not.

Bleſſed are you when they ſhall revile you, and ſpeak all that is naught againſt you for my names ſake. Matth. 5.

Here was Bradford called Diabolus, a ſlanderer: for we ask no queſtion (quoth my L. Chancellor) of tranſubſtantiation, but of Chriſts preſence.

Brad. I deny not his preſence to the faith of the receiver, but deny that he is included in the bread, or that the bread is tranſubſtantiate.

B.Worceſt. If he be not included, how is he then preſent?

Brad. Forſooth though my faith can tell how, yet my tongue cannot expreſſe it, nor you otherwiſe than by faith hear it, or underſtand it.

Chriſts body preſent to faith.

Tranſubſtantiation denied

Here was much ado, now one Doctor ſtanding up and ſpeaking thus, and others ſpeaking that, and the L. Chancellor talking much of Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, but ſtill Bradford kept him at that point, that Chriſt is preſent to faith; and that there is no tranſubſtantiation nor including of Chriſt in the bread: but all this would not ſerve them.

Therefore another Biſhop asked this queſtion, whether the wicked man received Chriſts very body or no? And Bradford anſwered plainly, No. Whereat the Lord Chancellor made a long oration, how that it could not be that Chriſt was preſent, except that the evill man received it. But Bradford put away all his Oration in few words, that grace was at that time offered to his Lordſhip, although he received it not: ſo that (quoth he) the receiving maketh not the preſence, as your Lordſhip would infer: but Gods grace, truth, and power is the cauſe of the preſence, which grace the wicked that lack faith, cannot receive. And here Bradford prayed my Lord, not to divorce that which God had coupled together. He hath coupled all theſe together; Take, eat, this is my body: He ſaith not, See, peep, this is my body; but, Take, eat. So that it appeareth this is a promiſe depending upon condition, If we take and eat.

The wicked receive not the body of Chriſt.

Receiving maketh not the preſence of the body, but grace.

The Popes Church divorceth that the Lord in the ſacrament hath coupled.

L.Chan. Here the Lord Chancellor and other Biſhops made a great ado, that Bradford had found out a toy that no man elſe ever did, of the condition, and the Lord Chancellor made many words to the people thereabout.

The ſacrament hath both a commandement and a promiſe, and how.

Brad. But Bradford ſaid thus; My Lord, are not theſe words, Take, eate, a Commandement? And are not theſe words, This is my body, a promiſe? If you will challenge the promiſe, and do not the Commandement, may you not deceive your ſelf?

L.Chan. Here the L. Chancellor denied Chriſt to have commanded the Sacrament, and the uſe of it.

M. Bradford teacheth Wincheſter his Grammer.

Brad. Why my Lord, I pray you tell the people what mood Accipite, Manducate, is; Is it not plain to children, that Chriſt in ſo ſaying, commandeth?

Wincheſter denieth theſe words, Take, eate, to be a commandement.

L. Chan. At theſe words the Lord Chancellor made a great toying and trifling at the Imperative mood, and fell to parſing or examining, as he ſhould teach a childe, and ſo concluded that it was no commandment, but ſuch a phraſe as this, I pray you give me drink, which quoth he, is no comandement, I trow.

Brad. But Bradford prayed him to leave toying and trifling, and ſaid thus: My Lord, if it be not a commandement of Chriſt to take and eate the Sacrament, why dare any take upon them to command and make that of neceſſity, which God leaveth free? as you do in making it a neceſſary commandement, once a yeer for all that be of diſcretion, to receive the Sacrament.

“ Diabolus, is as much to ſay in Greek, as a ſlanderer, or caviller.

L.Chan. Here the L. Chancellor called him again “ Diabolus or Calumniator, and began out of theſe words; Let a man prove himſelf, and ſo eate of the bread (yea bread quoth Bradford) and drink of the cup, to prove that it was no commandment to receive the Sacrament: for then (quoth he) if it were a commandement, it ſhould binde all men, in all places, and at all times.

Diſtinction between commandements.

Brad. O my Lord, diſcern between commandements: ſome be generall, as the Ten Commandements, that they binde alwayes, in all places, and all perſons: ſome be not ſo generall; as this of the Supper, the Sacrament of Baptiſme, of the thrice appearing before the Lord yeerly at Jeruſalem, of Abraham offering of Iſaac, &c.

Here my L. Chancellor denied the cup to be commanded of Chriſt: for then quoth he, we ſhould have eleven Commandements.

Brad. Indeed I think you think as you ſpeak: for elſe would you not take the cup from the people, in that Chriſt ſaith, Drink ye all of it. But how ſay you my Lords? Chriſt ſaith to you Biſhops eſpecially, Ite, prædicate Evangelium: Go, and preach the Goſpel: Feed Chriſts flock, &c. Is this a commandement, or no?

Wincheſter in a chafe.

L.Chan. Here was my L. Chancellor in a chafe, and ſaid as pleaſed him.

B. Conſtals queſtion

Dureſ. Another, the Biſhop of Dureſme I ween, asked Bradford when Chriſt began to be preſent in the Sacrament? whether before the receiver received it, or no?

As the Cup is the Teſtament, ſo bread is the body. Chryſoſt. in Mat. Hom. 83.

Brad. Bradford anſwered, that the queſtion was curious, and not neceſſary; and further ſaid, that as the cup was the New Teſtament, ſo the bread was Chriſts Bodie to him that received it duely, but yet ſo that the Bread is Bread. For, quoth he, in all the Scripture ye ſhall not finde this propoſition, Non eſt panis, There is no Bread. And ſo he brought forth Chryſoſtome; Si in corpore eſſemus, Hom. in 83. Mat. 34. Summa. Much ado was hereabouts, they calling Bradford Heretick, and he deſiring them to proceed on in Gods Name, he looked for that which God appointed for them to doe.

L. Chan. This fellow is now in another hereſie of fatall neceſſitie, as though all things were ſo tyed together, that of meere neceſſity all muſt come to paſſe.

To God nothing is by fortune, to man it may ſometimes ſo ſeeme to be. Acts 4.

Brad. But Bradford prayed him to take things as they be ſpoken, and not wreſt them into a contrary ſenſe. Your Lordſhip, quoth he, doth diſcerne betwixt God and man. Things are not by fortune to God at any time, though to man they ſeeme ſo ſometimes. I ſpeak but as the Apoſtles ſaid; Lord (quoth he) ſee how Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Prelates, are gathered together againſt thy Chriſt, to do that which thy hand and counſell hath before ordained for them to do.

Wincheſter readeth the ſentence of the curſe againſt M. Bradford.

L. Chan. Here began the Lord Chancellor to reade the excommunication. And in the excommunication, when he came to the name of John Bradford Laicus, Lay man: Why (quoth he) art thou no Prieſt?

Brad. No, nor never was, either Prieſt, either beneficed, either married, either any Preacher, afore publike authoritie had eſtabliſhed religion, or Preacher after publike authoritie had altred religion, and yet I am thus handled at your hand: but God I doubt not will give his bleſſing where you curſe. And ſo he fell down on his knees, and heartily thanked God, that he counted him worthy to ſuffer for his names ſake. And ſo praying God to give him repentance, and a good minde, after the excommunication was read, he was delivered to the Sheriff of London, and ſo had to the Clink, and afterward to the Counter in the Poultry, in the ſame Citie of London, this being purpoſed of his murtherers, that he ſhould be delivered from thence to the Earl of Derby, to be conveyed into Lancaſhire, and there to be burned in the Town of Mancheſter, where he was borne: but their purpoſe concerning the place was afterward altered; for they burned him in London.

M. Bradford delivered to the Sheriff.
M. Bradford ſent to the Counter in the Poultry.

After the condemnation of Maſter Bradford, which was the laſt day of Januarie, Maſt. Bradford being ſent into priſon, did there remaine untill the firſt day of July, during all which time, divers other conferences and conflicts he ſuſtained with ſundrie adverſaries, which repaired unto him in the priſon. Of whom firſt Biſhop Boner, coming to the Counter to degrade Doctor Taylor the fourth day of Februarie, entred talk with the ſaid Maſter Bradford; the effect whereof here enſueth.

Private talk had with John Bradford, by ſuch as the Prelates ſent unto him, after the time of condemnation, by his own writing.

B. Boners talk with Bradford.

UPon the fourth of Februarie, that is, the ſame day Maſter Rogers was burned. Boner Biſhop of London came to the Counter in the Poultry, to degrade M. Doctor Taylor, about one of the clock at afternoon. But before he ſpake to M. Taylor, he called for John Bradford which was priſoner there, whom when he ſaw, he put off his cap, and gave him his hand, ſaying: Becauſe I perceive that ye are deſirous to conferre with ſome learned men, therefore I have brought Maſter Archdeacon Harpsfield to you. And I tell you, you do like a wiſe man. But I pray you go roundly to work, for the time is but ſhort.

Brad. My Lord, as roundly as I can I will go to work with you: I never deſired to conferre with any man, nor yet do. Howbeit if ye will have one to talk with me, I am readie.

Bradford deſireth to conferre with none, and yet is ready to talk with any.

Boner. What (quoth the Biſhop in a fume to the Keeper) did you not tell me that this man deſired conference?

Keeper. No my Lord, I told you that he would not refuſe to conferre with any; but I did not ſay that it is his deſire.

Bon. Well, M. Bradford, you are welbeloved, I pray you conſider your ſelf, and refuſe not charity when it is offered.

Brad. Indeed my Lord this is ſmall charitie, to condemne a man as you have condemned me, which never brake your lawes. In Turkie a man may have charitie, but in England I could not yet finde it. I was condemned for my Faith, ſo ſoone as I uttered it at your requeſts, before I had committed any thing againſt the lawes. And as for conference, I am not afraid to talk with whom ye will. But to ſay that I deſire to conferre, that do I not.

More charitie amongſt the Turks, then amongſt the perſecuting Papiſts.

Boner. Well, well. And ſo he called for Maſter Taylor, and Bradford went his way.

Another private matter of talk between Maſter Bradford and Willerton, Creſwell, Harding, Harpsfield, and other more.

Talk between M. Bradford and Willerton, Chapleine to biſhop Boner.

UPon another day of February, one Maſt. Willerton, Chapleine of the Biſhop of London, did come to conferre with Bradford, but when he perceived that Bradford deſired not his coming, and therefore wiſhed rather his departing then abiding: Well, Maſter Bradford, quoth he, yet I pray you let us conferre a little, perchance you may do me good, if I can do you none. Upon which words Bradford was content, and ſo they began to talk. Willerton ſpak much of the Doctors, the Fathers, of the bread in the ſixth of John, &c. labouring to prove tranſubſtantiation, and that wicked men do receive Chriſt.

Willerton ſendeth his writing to Bradford to prove tranſubſtantiation.

But Bradford on the contrary part improved his authorities, ſo that they came to this iſſue, that Willerton ſhould draw out of the Scriptures and Doctors his reaſons, and Bradford would peruſe them; and if he could not anſwer them then he would give place. Likewiſe alſo ſhould Bradford draw out his reaſons out of the Scriptures and Doctors, to which Willerton ſhould anſwer if he could: and ſo for that day they departed.

The next day following in the morning, Willerton ſent halfe a ſheete of paper written on both ſides, containing no reaſons how he gathered his doctrine, but only bare ſentences: Panis quem ego dabo, &c. The bread which I will give is my fleſh. And the places in the 26. of Matthew, the 14. of Mark, the 22. of Luke, and the 10. and 11. to the Corinthians, with ſome ſentences of the Doctors, all which made as much againſt him as with him.

Willerton cometh again to Bradford.

In the afternoone he came himſelf, and there they had a long talke to little effect. At the length Willerton began to talk of the Church, ſaying that Bradford ſwerved from the Church.

Brad. No that I do not, but ye do. For the Church is Chriſts Spouſe, and Chriſts obedient Spouſe, which your Church is not, which robbeth the people of the Lords cup, and of Service in the Engliſh tongue.

Willer. Why? It is not profitable to have the Service in Engliſh; for it is written, Labia Sacerdotis cuſtodiunt legem; The lips of the Prieſt ſhould keep the law, and out of his mouth man muſt look for knowledge.

Brad. Should not the people then have the Scriptures? Wherefore ſerveth this ſaying of Chriſt, Search the Scriptures.

Willer. This was not ſpoken to the people, but to the Scribes and learned men.

Brad. Then the people muſt not have the Scriptures.

Argument. Erunt docti à Deo: Ergo the people muſt not have the Scriptures.

Willer. No, for it is written, Erunt docti a Deo; They ſhall be all taught of God.

Brad. And muſt we learn all at the Prieſts?

Willer. Yea.

Brad. Then I ſee you would bring the people to hang up Chriſt, and let Barabbas goe, as the Prieſts did then perſwade the people. At which words M. Willerton was ſo offended, that he had no luſt to talk any more. In the end Bradford gave him the reaſons which he had gathered againſt tranſubſtantiation, and prayed him to frame his into the forme of reaſons, and then quoth Bradford, I will anſwer them.

M. Bradfords reaſons againſt tranſubſtantiation not anſwered.

Willer. Well, I will do ſo. But firſt I will anſwer yours. The which thing untill this day he hath not done.

The Earle of Derbies ſervant.

Upon the 12. of February, there came one of the Earle of Derbies ſervants to Bradford, ſaying; My Lord hath ſent me to you, he willeth you to tender your ſelf, and he would be a good Lord unto you.

Brad. I thank his Lordſhip for his good will towards me: but in this caſe I cannot tender my ſelf more then Gods honour.

Servant. Ah M. Bradford, conſider your mother, ſiſters, friends, kinsfolk, and countrie, what a great diſcomfort will it be unto them to ſee you die as an Heretick?

M. Bradford preferreth Chriſt before all his kin and kinred.

Brad. I have learned to forſake father, mother, brother, ſiſter, friend, and all that ever I have, yea, even mine own ſelf, for elſe I cannot be Chriſts Diſciple.

Serv. If my Lord ſhould obtain for you that ye might depart the Realme, would you not be content to be at the Queens appointment, where ſhe would appoint you beyond the Sea?

Bradford contented to be burned in England, rather then to be ſent over the Sea to Popiſh places.

Brad. No, I had rather be burned in England, then be burned beyond the Seas. For I know that if ſhe ſhould ſend me to Paris, Lovain, or ſome ſuch place, forthwith they would burn me.

Talk between Maſter Bradford and one Percivall Creſwell, and after that with Doctor Harding.

Percival Creſwell talketh with Bradford.

Upon the fourteenth of February, Percivall Creſwell, an old acquaintance of Bradfords, came to him, bringing with him a Kinſman of Maſter Fecknams, who after many words ſaid:

Creſ. I pray you let me make labour for you.

Brad. You may do what ye will.

Creſwell offereth to make ſute for Bradford.

Creſw. But tell me what ſute I ſhould make for you.

Brad. Forſooth that ye will do, do it not at my requeſt, for I deſire nothing at your hands. If the Queen will give me life, I will thank her. If ſhe will baniſh me, I will thank her. If ſhe will burn me, I will thank her. If ſhe will condemne me to perpetuall priſonment, I will thank her.

Mores book brought to Bradford.

Hereupon Creſwell went away, and about 11. of the clock he and the other man came again, and brought a book of Mores making, deſiring Bradford to reade it over.

Bradford taking the book, ſaid; Good Percivall, I am ſetled for being moved in this Article.

Creſw. Oh if ever ye loved me, do one thing for me.

Brad. What is it?

Creſw. Deſire and name what learned man or men ye will have to come unto you. My Lord of York, my Lord of Lincoln, my Lord of Bathe, and others will gladly come unto you.

Brad. No, never will I deſire them or any other to come to conferre with me; for I am as certain of my doctrine as I am of any thing. But for your pleaſure, and alſo that all men may know I am not aſhamed to have my Faith ſifted and tried, bring whom ye will, and I will talke with them. So they went their way.

D. Harding cometh to M. Bradford.

About three of the clock in the afternoon, Maſter Doctor Harding, who was then the Biſhop of Lincolnes Chaplaine, came to Bradford, and after a great and ſolemne proteſtation, ſhewing how that he had prayed to God before he came, to turn his talk to Bradfords good, he began to tell of the good opinion he had of Bradford, and ſpent the time in ſuch tatling, ſo that their talk was to little purpoſe: ſave that Bradford prayed him to conſider from whence he was falne, and not to follow the world, nor to love it: For the love of God is not where the world is.

Harding. But Harding counted Bradford in a damnable eſtate, as one being out of the Church, and therefore willed him to take heed of his ſoule, and not to die in ſuch an opinion.

Brad. What Maſter Harding, quoth Bradford? I have heard you with theſe eares maintain this that I ſtand in.

D. Harding inveigheth againſt Peter Martyr, Bucer, and Luther.

Harding. I grant that I have taught that the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation was a ſubtile doctrine, but otherwiſe I never taught it. And ſo he inveighing againſt marriages of Prieſts, and namely againſt Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Luther, and ſuch, which for breaking their vowes were juſtly given up into hereſies (as he ſaid.) Bradford ſeeing him altogether given up to Popery, after admoniſhment thereof, bade him farewell.

Talk between Doctor Harpsfield Archdeacon, and Maſter Bradford.

D. Harpsfield talketh with M. Bradford.

Upon the 25. of Februarie, Percivall Creſwell came with Maſter Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and a ſervant waiting upon him. After formall ſalutations, he made a long Oration, of which this is a ſhort ſum; That all men, even the Infidels, Turks, Jews, Anabaptiſts, and Libertines deſire felicitie as well as the Chriſtians, and how that every one thinketh they ſhall attaine to it by their religion. To which Bradford anſwered briefly, that he ſpak not farre amiſſe.

Felicitie coveted of all men, but the way to felicitie not known to all men.

Harpſ. Then ſaid Harpsfield, but the way thither is not all alike. For the Infidels by Iupiter, Iuno, the Turk by his Alcoran, the Jew by his Thalmud, do beleeve to come to heaven. For ſo may I ſpeak of ſuch as beleeve the immortalitie of the ſoule.

Brad. You ſpeak truly.

Harpſ. Well, then here is the matter, to know the way to this heaven.

The true way to felicitie.

Bradford. We may not invent any manner of wayes. There is but one way, and that is Jeſus Chriſt, as he himſelf doth witneſſe; I am the way.

Harpſ. It is true that you ſay, and falſe alſo. I ſuppoſe that you mean by Chriſt, beleeving in Chriſt.

Brad. I have learned to diſcerne betwixt Faith and Chriſt. Albeit I confeſſe, that whoſo beleeveth in Chriſt, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.

Harpſ. No not at all that beleeve in Chriſt; for ſome ſhall ſay Lord, Lord, have not we caſt out divels, &c. But Chriſt will anſwer in the day of Iudgement to theſe, Depart from me, I know you not.

Note the difference betweene beleeving and ſaying I beleeve.

Brad. You muſt make difference betwixt beleeving, and ſaying I beleeve; as for example, If one ſhould ſay and ſweare he loveth you, for all his ſaying ye will not beleeve him when you ſee he goeth about to utter and do all the evill againſt you that he can.

Harpſ. Well, this is not much materiall. There is but one way Chriſt. How come we to know him? Where ſhall we ſeeke to finde him?

The way to come to Chriſt is by the word: for by the word cometh Faith, by Faith we come to Chriſt. Baptiſme an outward ſeale, whereby we are known to be Chriſtians. Children which die without baptiſme.

Brad. Forſooth, we muſt ſeeke him by his word, and in his word, and after his word.

Harpſ. Very good: but tell me now how firſt we came into the company of them that could tell us this, but by Baptiſme.

Brad. Baptiſme is the Sacrament, by the which outwardly we are engraffed into Chriſt: I ſay outwardly, becauſe I dare not exclude from Chriſt all that die without Baptiſme. I will not tie God, where he is not bound. Some infants die, whoſe parents deſire baptiſme for them, and cannot have it.

Harpſ. To theſe we may think perchance that God will ſhew mercie.

Brad. Yea, the children whoſe parents do contemne baptiſme will not I condemne, becauſe the childe ſhall not beare the fathers offence.

The Church is our mother.

Harpſ. Well, we agree, that by baptiſme then we are brought, and (as a man would ſay) begotten to Chriſt. For Chriſt is our Father, and the Church his ſpouſe is our mother. As all men naturally have Adam for their father, and Eve for their mother; ſo all ſpirituall men have Chriſt for their Father, and the Church for their mother: and as Eve was taken out of Adams ſide, ſo was the Church taken out of Chriſts ſide; whereout flowed bloud for the ſatisfaction and purgation of our ſins.

Brad. All this is truly ſpoken.

Deſcent of the Church.

Harpſ. Now then tell me whether this Church of Chriſt hath not been alwayes?

Brad. Yea, ſince the creation of man, and ſhall be for ever.

Harpſ. Very good. But yet tell me whether this Church is a viſible Church, or no?

The Church of Chriſt is viſible, even as Chriſt was, that is, not by exteriour pompe or ſhew, but by the inward eye.

Brad. It is no otherwiſe viſible, then Chriſt was here on earth: that is, by no exteriour pompe or ſhew that ſetteth her forth commonly, and therefore to ſee her we muſt put on ſuch eyes, as good men put on to ſee and know Chriſt when he walked here on earth: for as Eve was of the ſame ſubſtance that Adam was of, ſo was the Church of the ſame ſubſtance that Chriſt was of, fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones, as Paul ſaith, Epheſ. 5. Looke therefore how Chriſt was viſibly known to be Chriſt when he was on earth, that is, by conſidering him after the Word of God, ſo is the Church known.

Harpſ. I do not come to reaſon at this preſent, and therefore I will go on forward. Is not this Church a multitude?

Multitude is not alwaies the ſureſt marke to know the Church.

Brad. Yes that it is. Howbeit, latet anguis in herba, as the Proverbe is. For in your queſtion is a ſubtiltie. What viſible multitude was there in Helias time, or when Moſes was on the Mount, Aaron and all Iſrael worſhipping the Calfe?

Harpſ. Ye divert from the matter.

D. Harpsfield prevented of his purpoſe.

Brad. No, nothing at all. For I do prevent you, knowing well where-about you go. And therefore fewer words might well ſerve if that you ſo would.

Harpſ. Well, I perceive you have knowledge, and by a little perceive I the more. Tell me yet more, whether this multitude have not the miniſterie or preaching of Gods Word?

Preaching of the Goſpel goeth ever with the Church, unleſſe it be interrupted ſometime by perſecution.

Brad. Sir, ye go about the buſh. If ye underſtand preaching for confeſſing of the Goſpel, I will go with you: for elſe if you will, you may know that perſecution often letteth preaching.

Harpſ. Well, I mean it ſo. Tell me yet more: hath it not the ſacraments adminiſtred?

Adminiſtration of Sacraments is one note, but not the cauſe of the true Church. And yet not ſuch a note, but that it may often be letted by perſecution, and yet the true Church remaine.

Brad. It hath the Sacraments, howbeit the adminiſtration of them is often letted. But I will put you from your purpoſe, becauſe I ſee where about you go. If Heretickes have baptiſme, and do baptize, as they did in Saint Cyprians time, you know this baptiſme is baptiſme, and not to be reiterate. This Bradford did ſpeak, that the ſtanders by might ſee, that though the Papiſts Church have baptiſme which we have received of them, yet therefore it is not the true Church, neither need we to be baptized again.

The Popes Church hath baptiſme and ſacraments adminiſtred: Ergo the Popes Church is the true Church. The argument faileth A cauſa non ſufficiente, vel non cauſa, ut cauſa.

Harpſ. You go far from the matter, and I perceive you have more errors then one.

Brad. So you ſay, but that is not enough till you prove them.

A Popiſh diſtinction of the Church to be a multitude having preaching of the Goſpel, miniſtration of the ſacraments power of juriſdiction, and ſucceſſion of biſhops.

Harpſ. Well, this Church is a multitude. Hath it not the preaching of the Goſpel, and the miniſtration of the ſacraments? And yet more, hath it not the power of Iuriſdiction?

Brad. What juriſdiction is exerciſed in perſecution and affliction.

Harpſ. I mean by juriſdiction admoniſhing one another, and ſo forth.

Brad. Well, go to; what then?

Harpſ. It hath alſo ſucceſſion of biſhops. And here he made much ado to prove that this was an eſſentiall point.

Succeſſion of biſhops is no eſſentiall part of the Church, but rather accidens commune; which being interrupted, yet the Church may ſtand as it did both before Chriſts coming and after at the coming of Antichriſt.

Brad. You ſay as you would have it; for if this part faile you, all the Church that you go about to ſet up will fall down. You ſhall not finde in all the Scripture this your eſſentiall part of ſucceſſion of biſhops. In Chriſts Church Antichriſt will ſit. And Peter telleth us, as it went in the old Church afore Chriſts coming, ſo will it be in the new Church ſince Chriſts coming: that is, as there were falſe Prophets, and ſuch as bare rule were adverſaries to the true Prophets, ſo ſhall there be (ſaith he) falſe teachers, even of ſuch as are biſhops, and beare rule amongſt the people.

Harpſ. You go alwayes out of the matter: but I will prove further the ſucceſſion of biſhops.

Brad. Do ſo.

Apoſtles and biſhops, be ſundry offices.

Harpſ. Tell me, were not the Apoſtles biſhops?

Brad. No, except you will make a new definition of a biſhop: that is, give him no certain place.

Harpſ. Indeed, the Apoſtles office was not the biſhops office; for it was univerſall, but yet Chriſt inſtituted biſhops in his Church as Paul ſaith, he hath given Paſtors, Prophets, &c. So that I trow it be proved by the Scriptures the ſucceſſion of biſhops to be an eſſentiall point.

The miniſtery of Gods Word and Miniſters, be an eſſentiall point of the true Church, but not the locall ſucceſſion of miniſters in one certaine place.

Brad. The miniſterie of Gods Word and miniſters, be an eſſentiall point. But to tranſlate this to the biſhops and their ſucceſſion, is a plaine ſubtiltie: And therefore that it may be plain, I will aske you a queſtion. Tell me, whether that the Scripture knew any difference betweene biſhops and miniſters, which ye called Prieſts?

Harpſ. No.

Brad. Well, then go on forwards, and let us ſee what ye ſhall get now by the ſucceſſion of biſhops: that is, of miniſters, which can be underſtood of ſuch biſhops as miniſter not, but Lord it.

The aſcent and deſcent of ſucceſſion of high Prieſts.

Harpſ. I perceive that you are farre out of the way. By your doctrine you can never ſhew in your Church, a multitude which miniſtreth Gods word and his ſacraments, which hath juriſdiction and ſucceſſion of biſhops, which hath from time to time beléeved as you beléeve, beginning now and ſo going upwards, as I will do of our doctrine, and therefore are ye out of the Church, and ſo cannot be ſaved. Perchance you will bring me downewards a ſhew to bleare peoples eyes; but to go upwards, that you can never do, and this is the true triall.

Brad. Ye muſt and will, I am aſſured, give me leave to follow the Scriptures and examples of good men.

Harpſ. Yea.

Brad. Well then, Stephen was accuſed and condemned as I am, that he had taught new and falſe doctrine, before the fathers of the Church then as they were taken. Stephen for his purgation improveth their accuſation. But how? doth he it by going upwards? no, but by coming downewards, beginning at Abraham, and continuing ſtill till Eſaias time, and the peoples captivitie. From whence he maketh a great leape untill the time he was in, which was (I think) upon 400. yéeres, and called them by their right names helhounds, rather then heaven hounds. On this ſort will I prove my Faith, and that can you never do yours.

The Papiſts challenge to them the true Church, even as the mother of the dead childe challenged the living childe from the true mother. 3 Reg. 3.

Harpſ. Yea Sir, if we did know that you had the holy Ghoſt, then could we beléeve you. Here Bradford would have anſwered, that Stephens enemies would not beléeve he had the holy Ghoſt, and therefore they did as they did: but as he was in ſpeaking, Maſter Harpsfield roſe up, and the Kéeper and others that ſtood by began to talk gently, praying Bradford to take héed to that Maſter Archdeacon ſpake, who ſtill ſaid that Bradford was out of the Church.

Brad. Sir, I am moſt certain that I am in Chriſts Church, and I can ſhew a demonſtration of my religion from time to time continually.

Bradfords prayer.

God our Father, for the name and bloud of his Chriſt be mercifull unto us, and unto all his people, and deliver them from falſe teachers, and blinde guides, through whom (alas) I feare me, much hurt will come to this Realme of England. God our Father bleſſe us, and keep us in his truth and poore Church for ever. Amen.

Then the Archdeacon departed, ſaying, that he would come again the next morning.

The next dayes talk between Doctor Harpsfield, and Maſter Bradford.

Archdeacon Harpsfield returneth again to M. Bradford.

M. Harpsfield again proveth his Church by ſucceſſion of high Prieſts.

Upon the 16. of Februarie in the morning, the Archdeacon and the other two with him came again, and after a few by-words ſpoken, they ſate down.

Harpſ. Maſter Archdeacon began a very long Oration, firſt repeating what they had ſaid, and how farre they had gone overnight, and therewith did begin to prove upwards ſucceſſion of Biſhops here in England for 800. yéers: in France at Lyons for 1200. yéers: in Spaine at Hiſpalen for 800. yéers: in Italy at Millain for 1200. yéers, labouring by this to prove his Church. He uſed all ſucceſſion of Biſhops in the Eaſt Church for the more confirmation of his words, and ſo concluded with an exhortation and an interrogation: the exhortation, that Bradford would obey this Church; the interrogation, whether Bradford could ſhew any ſuch ſucceſſion for the demonſtration of his Church (for ſo he called it) which followed.

Bradfords anſwer to Maſter Harpsfields Oration.

Brad. Unto this his long Oration, Bradford made this ſhort anſwer; My memorie is evill, ſo that I cannot anſwer particularly your Oration.

Therefore I will generally do it, thinking becauſe your Oration is rather to perſwade then to prove, that a ſmall anſwer will ſerve. If Chriſt or his Apoſtles being here on earth had béen required by the Prelates of the Church then; to have made a demonſtration of that Church by ſucceſſion of ſuch high Prieſts as had approved the doctrine which he taught, I think that Chriſt would have done as I do: that is, have alleaged that which upholdeth the Church, even the veritie, the Word of God taught and beléeved, not by the high Prieſts, which of long time had perſecuted it, but by the Prophets and other good ſimple men which perchance were counted for Heretickes of the Church; which Church was not tied to ſucceſſion, but to the Word of God. And this to think S. Peter giveth me occaſion, when he ſaith that as it went in the Church before Chriſts coming, ſo ſhall it go in the Church after his coming: but then the pillars of the Church were perſecutors of the Church; therefore the like we muſt looke for now.

Outward deſcent of miniſters maketh not the true Church: but the truth of Gods Word maketh true miniſters.

The true Church not tyed to ſucceſſion, but to Gods Word.

The true ſucceſſion of Prieſts, and the ſucceſſion of true Prieſts are two things.

Harpſ. I can gather and prove ſucceſſion in Jeruſalem of the high Prieſts from Aarons time.

Brad. I grant, but not ſuch ſucceſſion as allowed the truth.

Harpſ. Why, did they not allow Moſes law?

The Jewes corrupt the law, as the Papiſts do the Scriptures.

A compariſon between the old Phariſees and our new Papiſts.

Brad. Yes, and kéep it, as touching the bookes thereof, as you do the Bible, and holy Scriptures. But the true interpretation and meaning of it they did corrupt, as you have done and do, and therefore the perſecution which they ſtirred up againſt the Prophets and Chriſt, was not for the Law, but for the interpretation of it. For they taught as you do now, that we muſt fetch the interpretation of the Scriptures at your hands. But to make an end, death I looke daily for, yea hourely, and I think my time be but very ſhort. Therefore I had néed to ſpend as much time with God as I can whileſt I have it, for his help and comfort, and therefore I pray you beare with me, that I do not now particularly and in more words anſwer your long talk. If I ſaw death not ſo néer me as it is, I would then weigh every péece of your Oration, if you would give me the ſum of it, and I would anſwer accordingly: but becauſe I dare not, nor I will not leave off looking and preparing for that which is at hand, I ſhall deſire you to hold me excuſed, though I do as I do, and heartily thank you for your gentle good will: I ſhall heartily pray God our Father to give you the ſame light and life I do wiſh to my ſelf; and ſo Bradford began to ariſe up.

Bold confidence and hope of Gods Word and promiſe, ſeemeth ſtrange among them which are not exerciſed in mortification.

Harpſ. But then began Maſter Archdeacon to tell him he was in very perillous caſe, and that he was ſorrie to ſée him ſo ſetled. As for death, whether it be nigh or farre off I know not, neither forceth it, ſo that you did die well.

Brad. I doubt not in this caſe but that I ſhall dye well: for as I hope and am certaine my death ſhall pleaſe the Lord, ſo I truſt I ſhall dye chéerefully to the comfort of his children.

Harpſ. But what if you be deceived?

Brad. What if you ſhould ſay the Sun did not ſhine now? (and the Sun did ſhine through the window where they ſate.)

Harpſ. Well I am ſorrie to ſée you ſo ſecure and careleſſe.

Brad. Indéed I am more carnally ſecure and careleſſe then I ſhould be: God make me more vigilant. But in this caſe I cannot be ſo ſecure, for I am moſt aſſured I am in the truth.

Harpſ. That ye are not, for you are out of the Catholike Church.

Brad. No, though you have excommunicate me out of your Church, yet am I in the Catholike Church of Chriſt, and am, and by Gods grace ſhall be a childe and an obedient childe of it for ever. I hope Chriſt will have no leſſe care for me, then he had for the blinde man excommunicated of the Synagogue: and further, I am ſure that the neceſſarie Articles of the Faith, I mean

Free to beleeve or not to beleeve tranſubſtantiation many hundreth yeeres after Chriſt.

the twelve Articles of the Creede, I confeſſe and beleeve with that which you call the holy Church, ſo that even your Church hath taken too much upon her to excommunicate me for that, which by the teſtimonie of my Lord of Dureſme, in the Book of the Sacrament lately put forth, was free many an hundred yeer after Chriſt, to beleeve or not beleeve.

Harpſ. What is that?

Brad. Tranſubſtantiation.

Harpſ. Why: ye are not condemned therefore only.

Brad. For that, and becauſe I deny that wicked men do receive Chriſts body.

Harpſ. You agree not with us in the preſence, nor in any thing elſe.

Chriſt not included really in the ſacrament.

Brad. How you beleeve you know: for my part I confeſſe a preſence of whole Chriſt God and man, to the faith of the receiver.

Harpſ. Nay, you muſt beleeve a reall preſence in the Sacrament.

Chriſts body preſent to the Faith of the receiver.

Brad. In the Sacrament? Nay, I will not ſhut him in, nor tie him to it otherwiſe then Faith ſeeth and perceiveth. If I ſhould include Chriſt really preſent in the Sacrament, or tie him to it otherwiſe then to the faith of the receiver, then the wicked men ſhould receive him, which I do not, nor will by Gods grace beleeve.

Harpſ. More pitie: But a man may eaſily perceive, you make no preſence at all, and therefore you agree not therein with us.

Brad. I confeſſe a preſence, and a true preſence, but to the Faith of the receiver.

What (quoth one that ſtood by) of Chriſts very Bodie which died for us.

Brad. Yea, even of whole Chriſt God and man, to feede the faith of him that receiveth it.

Harpſ. Why? this is nothing elſe but to exclude the omnipotency of God, and all kinde of miracle in the Sacrament.

None denieth omnipotency more then the Papiſts, which ſay, that Chriſts body cannot be in the ſacrament, unleſſe the ſubſtance of bread be away.

Brad. I doe not exclude his omnipotencie, but you do it rather: for I beleeve that Chriſt can accompliſh his promiſe, the ſubſtance of bread and wine being there, as well as the accidents, which you beleeve not. When we come to the ſacrament, we come not to feede our bodies, and therefore we have but a little peece of bread; but we come to feede our ſoules with Chriſt by Faith, which the wicked do want, and therefore they receive nothing but panem Domini, as Iudas did, and not panem Dominum, as the other Apoſtles did.

Harpſ. The wicked do receive the very body of Chriſt, but not the grace of his bodie.

Argument, who ſo receive the body of Chriſt do receive the fruit and grace of life: no wicked men do receive the fruit and grace of life: Ergo no wicked men receive the body of Chriſt.

Brad. They receive not the bodie. For Chriſts bodie is no dead carkaſſe: he that receiveth it, receiveth the ſpirit, which is not without grace I trowe.

Harpſ. Well, you have many errours. You count the Maſſe for abomination, and yet Saint Ambroſe ſaid Maſſe, and ſo he read out of a book written a ſentence of S. Ambroſe to prove it.

Maſſe in St. Ambroſe time.

Brad. Why Sir? the Maſſe as it is now, was nothing ſo in S. Ambroſe time. Was not the moſt part of the Canon made ſince by Gregorie and Scholaſticus?

That is falſe, for Scholaſticus was not before Ambroſe time.

Harpſ. Indeed a great peece of it was made (as ye ſay) by Gregorie: but Scholaſticus was before S. Ambroſe time.

Brad. I weene not: howbeit I will not contend. Saint Gregorie ſaith, that the Apoſtles ſaid Maſſe without the Canon, only with the Lords Prayer.

The chief parts of the Popiſh Maſſe.

Harpſ. You ſay true: for the Canon is not the greateſt part of the Maſſe, the greateſt part is the ſacrifice, elevation, tranſubſtantiation, and adoration.

Brad. I can away with none of thoſe.

Harpſ. No, I think the ſame: but yet Hoc facite, telleth plainly the ſacrifice of the Church.

Sacrifice of the Church. Sacrifice for the Church.

Brad. You confound ſacrifices, not diſcerning betwixt the ſacrifice of the Church, and for the Church. The ſacrifice of the Church is no propitiatorie ſacrifice, but a gratulatorie ſacrifice. And as for Hoc facite, is not referred to any ſacrificing, but to the whole action of taking, eating, &c.

Note this doctrine good Reader.

Harpſ. You ſpeak not learnedly now: for Chriſt made his Super only to the twelve Apoſtles, not admitting his mother or any of the ſeventie Diſciples to it. Now the Apoſtles do ſignifie the Prieſts.

Brad. I think that you ſpeak as you would men ſhould underſtand it: for elſe you would not keep the cup away from the Laitie. We have great cauſe to thank you, that you will give us of your bread. For I perceive you order the matter ſo, as though Chriſt had not commanded it to his whole Church.

Harpſ. Then Harpsfield would have proved elevation by a place of Baſilius.

Elevation was not brought in indeed before the time of Pope Honorius.

Brad. I have read the place, which ſeemeth to make nothing for elevation: but be it as it is, this is no time for me to ſcan the doubtfull places of the Doctors with you. I have been in priſon long without bookes and all neceſſaries for ſtudie, and now death draweth nigh, and I by your leave muſt now leave off, to prepare for him.

Harpſ. If I could do you good, I would be right glad, either in ſoule or bodie. For you are in a perillous caſe both wayes.

Brad. Sir, I thank you for your good will. My caſe is as it is. I thank God it was never ſo well with me; for death to me ſhall be life.

Creſwell. It were beſt for you to deſire Maſter Archdeacon that he would make ſute for you, that you might have a time to conferre.

Harpſ. I will do the beſt I can: for I pitie his caſe.

Brad. Sir, I will not deſire any bodie to ſue for time for me. I am not wavering, neither would I that any bodie ſhould think I were ſo. But if you have the charitie and love you pretend towards me, and thereto do think that I am in an errour, I think the ſame ſhould move you to do as you would be done to. As ye think of me, ſo do of you, that you are farre out of the way, and I do not only think it, but alſo am thereof moſt aſſured. And in this and ſuch like gentle talk they departed.

The talk of Doctor Heth Archbiſhop of Yorke, and Day Biſhop of Chicheſter, with Maſter Bradford.

Talk between the biſhops and Bradford.

THe three and twentieth of the ſame moneth, the Archbiſhop of York, and the Biſhop of Chicheſter came to the Counter to ſpeak with Bradford. When he was come before them, they both, and ſpecially the biſhop of Yorke, uſed him very gently: they would have him to ſit downe, and becauſe he would not, they alſo would not ſit. So they all ſtood, and whether he would or not, they would needs he ſhould put on, not only his night cap, but his upper cap alſo, ſaying unto him, that obedience was better then ſacrifice.

Now thus ſtanding together, my Lord of York began to tell Bradford how that they were not ſent to him, but of love and charitie they came to him: and he, for that acquaintance alſo which he had with Bradford, more then the Biſhop of Chicheſter had: then after commending Bradfords godly life, he concluded with this queſtion; How he was certain of ſalvation and of his religion.

Bradford. After thankes for their good will, Bradford anſwered; by the Word of God, even by the Scriptures I am certain of ſalvation and religion, Certain Biſhops talking with Mr. Bradford in priſon.

York. Very well ſaid; but how do ye know the Word of God and the Scriptures, but by the Church?

Brad. Indeed my Lord, the Church was and is a mean to bring a man more ſpeedily to know the Scriptures and the Word of God, as was the woman of Samaria a mean that the Samaritans knew Chriſt: but as when they had heard him ſpeak, they ſaid, Now we know that he is Chriſt, not becauſe of thy words, but becauſe we our ſelves have heard him; ſo after we come to the hearing and reading of the Scriptures ſhewed unto us, and diſcerned by the Church, we do beleeve them, and know them as Chriſts ſheep, not becauſe the Church ſaith they are the Scriptures, but becauſe they be ſo, being thereof aſſured by the ſame ſpirit which wrote and ſpake them.

York. You know, in the Apoſtles time at the firſt the word was not written.

Brad. True, if you mean it for ſome bookes of the New Teſtament: but elſe for the Old Teſtament Peter telleth us, Firmiorem ſermonem propheticum habemus; We have a more ſure word of prophecie: not that it is ſimply ſo, but in reſpect of the Apoſtles, which being alive and compaſſed with infirmitie, attributed to the word written more firmitie, as wherewith no fault could be found, whereas for the infirmitie of their perſons men perchance might have found ſome fault at their preaching; albeit in very deed no leſſe obedience and faith ought to have been given to the one, then to the other; for all proceedeth forth of one ſpirit of truth.

Although in the Apoſtles time certain bookes of the New Teſtament were not written, yet the Apoſtles ſend us ad firmiorem ſermonem propheticum.

York. That place of Peter is not ſo to be underſtood of the word written.

Brad. Yea ſir, that it is, and of none other.

Chicheſter. Yea, indeed Maſter Bradford doth tell you truly in that point.

York. Well, you know that Irenæus and others doe magnifie much, and alledge the Church againſt the Heretickes, and not the Scripture.

Brad. True, for they had to do with ſuch Hereticks as did deny the Scriptures, and yet did magnifie the Apoſtles, ſo that they were inforced to uſe the authoritie of thoſe Churches wherein the Apoſtles had taught, & which had ſtill retained the ſame doctrine.

The authoritie of the Church alledged againſt heretickes, and wherefore.

Chicheſt. You ſpeak the very truth; for the Hereticks did refuſe all Scriptures, except it were a peece of Lukes Goſpel.

Brad. Then the alledging of the Church cannot be principally uſed againſt me, which am ſo farre from denying of the Scriptures, that I appeale unto them utterly, as to the only Judge.

York. A pretie matter, that you will take upon you to judge the Church, I pray you where hath your Church been hitherto? For the Church of Chriſt is Catholike and viſible hitherto.

Brad. My Lord, I do not judge the Church, when I diſcerne it from that congregation, and thoſe which be not the Church, and I never denied the Church to be Catholike and viſible, although at ſometimes it is more viſible then at ſome.

To judge the Church. The Church is Catholike and viſible, but yet ſometimes more Catholike and viſible then at ſome.

Chicheſt. I pray you tell me where the Church which allowed your doctrine, was theſe foure hundred yeers?

Brad. I will tell you my Lord, or rather you ſhall tell your ſelf, if you will tell me this one thing where the Church was in Helias his time, when Helias ſaid that he was left alone?

Chicheſt. That is no anſwer.

Brad. I am ſorrie that you ſay ſo: but this will I tell your Lordſhip, that if you had the ſame eies wherewith a man might have eſpyed the Church then, you would not ſay it were no anſwer. The fault why the Church is not ſeene of you, is not becauſe the Church is not viſible, but becauſe your eyes are not cleere enough to ſee it.

The true Church is viſible and ever hath been: but every man hath not eies to ſee it.

Chich. You are much deceived, in making this collation betwixt the Church then and now.

York. Very well ſpoken my Lord; for Chriſt ſaid, Edificabo Eccleſiam, I will build my Church, and not I do, or have built it, but I will build it.

The biſhops driven to an inconvenience.

Brad. My Lords, Peter teacheth me to make this collation, ſaying; as in the people there were falſe Prophets, which were moſt in eſtimation afore Chriſts coming, ſo ſhall there be falſe teachers amongſt the people after Chriſts coming, and very many ſhall follow them. And as for your future tenſe, I hope your grace will not thereby conclude Chriſts Church not to have been before, but rather that there is no building in the Church but by Chriſts work only; for Paul and Apollo be but waterers.

Chich. In good faith I am ſorrie to ſee you ſo light in judging the Church.

York. He taketh upon him, as they all do, to judge the Church. A man ſhall never come to certainty that doth as they do.

Bradford condemned without juſt cauſe, but as was gathered at his judgement againſt him.

Brad. My Lords, I ſpeak ſimply what I think, and deſire reaſon to anſwer my objections. Your affections and ſorrowes cannot be my rules. If that you conſider the order and caſe of my condemnation, I cannot think but that it ſhould ſomething move your honours. You know it well enough (for you heard it) no matter was laid againſt me, but what was gathered upon mine own confeſſion. Becauſe I did deny tranſubſtantiation and the wicked to receive Chriſts bodie in the ſacrament, therefore I was condemned and excommunicate, but not of the Church, although the pillars of the Church (as they be taken) did it.

Chich. No, I heard ſay the cauſe of your impriſonment was, for that you exhorted the people to take the ſword in the one hand, and the mattock in the other.

Falſe ſurmiſe againſt Bradford.

Brad. My Lord, I never meant any ſuch thing, nor ſpake any thing in that ſort.

York. Yea, and you behaved your ſelfe before the Councell ſo ſtoutly at the firſt, that you would defend the religion then; and therefore worthily were you priſoned.

Bradford impriſoned for that, for which he had the lawes on his ſide.

Brad. Your grace did heare me anſwer my Lord Chancellor to that point. But put caſe I had been ſo ſtout as they and your grace make it: were not the lawes of the Realme on my ſide then? Wherefore unjuſtly was I priſoned: only that which my Lord Chancellor propounded, was my confeſſion of Chriſts truth againſt Tranſubſtantiation, and of that which the wicked do receive, as I ſaid.

York. You deny the preſence.

The preſence of Chriſts body to the faith of the worthy receiver.

Brad. I do not, to the faith of the worthy receivers.

York. Why? what is that to ſay other, then that Chriſt lieth not on the altar?

Brad. My Lord, I beleeve no ſuch preſence.

Chich. It ſeemeth that you have not read Chryſoſtome: for he proveth it.

Hyperbolicall phraſe of Chryſoſtome.

Brad. Hitherto I have been kept well enough without bookes; howbeit this I do remember of Chryſoſtome, that he ſaith that Chriſt lyeth upon the altar, as the Seraphins with their tongues touch our lips with the coales of the Altar in heaven, which is an hyperbolicall locution, of which you know Chryſoſtome is full.

York. It is evident that you are too far gone: but let us come then to the Church, out of the which ye are excommunicate.

Bradford excommunicated with the poore blinde man, John 9.

Brad. I am not excommunicate out of Chriſts Church my Lord, although they which ſeeme to be in the Church, and of the Church, have excommunicated me, as the poore blinde man was, John 9. I am ſure Chriſt receiveth me.

York. You do deceive your ſelfe.

Here, after much talke of excommunication, at length Bradford ſaid,

Brad. Aſſuredly, as I think you did well to depart from the Romiſh Church, ſo I think ye have done wickedly to couple your ſelves to it againe; for you can never prove that, which you call the mother Church, to be Chriſts Church.

Chich. Ah Maſter Bradford, you were but a childe when this matter began. I was a young man, and then coming from the Univerſitie, I went with the world, but I tell you it was alwaies againſt my conſcience.

The Pope proved to be Antichriſt by Scripture.

Brad. I was but a childe then, howbeit as I told you, I think you have done evill. For ye are come and have brought others to that wicked man which ſitteth in the Temple of God, that is, in the Church: for it cannot be underſtood of Mahomet, or any out of the Church, but of ſuch as beare rule in the Church.

York. See how you build your faith upon ſuch places of Scripture as are moſt obſcure, to deceive your ſelf, as though ye were in the Church where you are not.

What B. Tonſtal writeth of Tranſubſtantiation.

Brad. Well, my Lord, though I might by fruits judge of you and others: yet will I not utterly exclude you out of the Church. And if I were in your caſe, I would not condemne him utterly that is of my faith in the ſacrament; knowing as you know, that at the leaſt eight hundred yeeres after Chriſt, as my Lord of Dureſme writeth, it was free to beleeve or not to beleeve Tranſubſtantiation.

York. This is a toy that you have found out of your own braine; as though a man not beleeving as the Church doth, that is, Tranſubſtantiation, were of the Church.

Note how theſe biſhops themſelves do grant that the time was when Tranſubſtantiation was not defined by the Church, Tonſtal ſaith that it was more then 800. yeers after Chriſt.

Chich. He is an Heretick, and ſo none of the Church, that doth hold any doctrine againſt the definition of the Church; as a man to hold againſt Tranſubſtantiation. Cyprian was no Hereticke, though he beleeved rebaptizing of them which were baptized of Heretickes, becauſe he held it before the Church had defined it, whereas if he had holden it after, then had he been an Heretick.

Brad. Oh my Lord, will ye condemne to the Divell any man that beleeveth truly the 12. Articles of the faith (wherein I take the unitie of Chriſts Church to conſiſt) although in ſome points he beleeve not the definition of that which ye call the Church? I doubt not but that he which holdeth firmly the Articles of our Belief, though in other things he diſſent from your definitions, yet he ſhall be ſaved.

York. Chich. Yea, ſaid both the Biſhops: this is your Divinitie.

Brad. No, it is Pauls, which ſaith, that if they hold the foundation Chriſt, though they build upon him ſtraw and ſtubble, yet they ſhall be ſaved.

York. Lord God, how you delight to leane to ſo hard and dark places of the Scriptures.

Chich. I will ſhew you how that Luther did excommunicate Zuinglius for this matter, and ſo he read a place of Luther making for his purpoſe.

M. Bradford hangeth not of Luther, Zuinglius, or Oecolampadius, and yet he accounteth them good men.

Brad. My Lord, what Luther writeth, as you much paſſe not, no more do I in this caſe. My faith is not builded on Luther, Zuinglius, or Oecolampadius in this point: and indeed to tell you truly, I never reade any of their workes in this matter. As for them, I do think aſſuredly that they were, and are Gods children, and Saints with him.

York. Well, you are out of the communion of the Church.

Brad. I am not, for it conſiſteth, and is in faith.

York. Lo, how you make your Church inviſible: for you would have the communion of it to conſiſt in faith.

Communion of the Church conſiſteth in faith, and not in viſible ceremonies.
Diſagreeing in rites breaketh no agreement in faith.
Ireneus.

Brad. For to have communion with the Church needeth no viſibleneſſe of it; for communion conſiſteth, as I ſaid, in faith, and not in exteriour ceremonies, as appeareth both by Paul, which would have one faith, and by Irenæus to Victor, for the obſervation of Eaſter, ſaying that diſagreeing of faſting ſhould not break the agreeing of faith.

Chich. The ſame place hath often even wounded my conſcience, becauſe we diſſevered our ſelves from the See of Rome.

Brad. Well, God forgive you; for you have done evill to bring England thither again.

Aug. contra Epiſt. fundamenta.
Conſent of people.
Authoritie confirmed with miracles, nouriſhed with hope, increaſed with charitie, eſtabliſhed with antiquity.
Succeſſion of Prieſts.
The name Catholike.
All this might be objected againſt Chriſt and his Apoſtles, by the Scribes and Phariſes.

York. Here my Lord of Yorke tooke a book of paper of common places, and read a peece of Saint Auguſtine contra Epiſtolam Fundamenti, how that there were many things that did hold S. Auſtin in the boſome of the Church; conſent of people and nations, authority confirmed with miracles, nouriſhed with hope, increaſed with charity, eſtabliſhed with antiquity: beſides this, there holdeth me in the Church, ſaid S. Auguſtine, the ſucceſſion of Prieſts from Peters ſeat untill this preſent Biſhop. Laſt of all, the very name of Catholike did hold me, &c. Lo (quoth he) how ſay you to this of S. Auguſtine? Paint me out your Church thus.

Brad. My Lord, theſe words of Saint Auſtine make as much for me as for you: although I might anſwer, that all this, if they had been ſo firme as you make them, might have been alledged againſt Chriſt and his Apoſtles. For there was the law and the ceremonies conſented on by the whole people, confirmed with miracles, antiquitie, and continuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops from Aarons time untill that preſent.

Chich. In good faith, Maſter Bradford, you make too much of the ſtate of the Church before Chriſts coming.

Brad. Therein I do but as Peter teacheth, 2 Pet. 2. and Paul very often. You would gladly have your Church here very glorious, and as a moſt pleaſant Ladie. But as Chriſt ſaith, Beatus eſt quicunque non fuerit offenſus per me; ſo may his Church ſay, Bleſſed are they that are not offended at me.

York. Yea, you think that none is of the Church, but ſuch as ſuffer perſecution.

The Church commonly not glorious in this world, but poor and perſecuted.

Brad. What I think, God knoweth: I pray your grace judge me by my words and ſpeaking, and mark that Paul ſaith, Omnes qui, &c. All that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus muſt ſuffer perſecution. Sometimes Chriſts Church hath reſt here; but commonly it is not ſo, and ſpecially towards the end her forme will be more unſeemely.

York. But what ſay you to S. Auſtin? where is your Church that hath the conſent of people and nations?

Conſent of the godly.

Brad. Even all people and nations that be Gods people have conſented with me, and I with them in the doctrine of faith.

York. Lo, ye go about to ſhift off all things.

Brad. No, my Lord; I mean ſimply, and ſo ſpeak, God knoweth.

Succeſſion from Peter.

York. Saint Auguſtine doth here talk of ſucceſſion, even from Peters ſeate.

Brad. Yea, that ſeate then was nothing ſo much corrupt as it is now.

York. Well, you alwayes judge the Church.

Chriſts people may diſcerne the Church, though they judge not the Church.

Brad. No, my Lord, Chriſts ſheep diſcerne Chriſts voice, but they judge it not; ſo they diſcerne the Church, but judge her not.

York. Yes, that they do.

Brad. No, and it like your grace: and yet full well may one not only doubt, but judge alſo of the Romiſh Church; for ſhe obeyeth not Chriſts voice, as Chriſts true Church doth.

The Church of Rome ſwarveth from the voice of Chriſt, and wherein.

York. Wherein?

Brad. In Latin Service, and robbing the Laitie of Chriſts cup in the ſacrament, and in many other things, in which it committeth moſt horrible ſacriledge.

Chich. Why? Latin Service was in England when the Pope was gone.

Brad. True; the time was in England when the Pope was away, but not all Popery; as in King Henries daies.

Latin Service defended.

York. Latin Service was appointed to be ſung and had in the Quire, where only were Clerici, that is, ſuch as underſtood Latin, the people ſitting in the bodie of the Church praying their own private prayers; and this may well be yet ſeen by making of the Chancell and Quire, ſo as the people could not come in, or heare them.

Againſt Latin Service.

Brad. Yea, but in Chryſoſtomes time, and alſo in the Latin Church in S. Jeromes time, all the Church (ſaith he) reboat, Amen: that is, anſwereth again mightily, Amen. Whereby we may ſee that the prayers were made ſo, that both the people heard them and underſtood them.

Chich. Ye are too blame, to ſay that the Church robbeth the people of the cup.

The people robbed of the cup.

Brad. Well, my Lord, terme it as it pleaſe you: all men know that the Laitie hath none of it.

Chich. Indeed I would wiſh the Church would define again, that they might have it, for my part.

Brad. If God make it free, who can define to make it bond?

York. Well, Maſter Bradford, we leeſe our labour; for ye ſeek to put away all things which are told you to your good: your Church no man can know.

Brad. Yes, that ye may well.

York. I pray you whereby?

The Church known only by the Scriptures.

Brad. Forſooth Chryſoſtome ſaith, Tantummodo per Scripturas, alonely by the Scriptures; and this ſpeaketh he very oftentimes, as ye well know.

Chryſ. in opere imperfect.

York. Indeed that is of Chryſoſtome in opere imperfecto, which may be doubted of. The thing whereby the Church may be known beſt, is ſucceſſion of Biſhops.

Lyra ſupra Mat.

Bradford. No, my Lord, Lyra full well writeth upon Matthew, that Eccleſia non conſiſtit in hominibus ratione poteſtatis ſecularis aut Eccleſiaſticæ, ſed in hominibus in quibus eſt notitia vera, & confeſſio fidei & veritatis: that is, The Church conſiſteth not in men by reaſon either of ſecular or temporall power, but in men indued with true knowledge, and confeſſion of faith, and of veritie.

Hilarius ad Auxentium.

And in Hilarius time, you know he writeth to Auxentius, that the Church did rather deliteſcere in cavernis, then eminere in primariis ſedibus: that is, was hidden rather in caves and holes, then did gliſter and ſhine in thrones of preheminence.

Then came one of the ſervants and told them, that my Lord of Dureſme tarried for them at Maſter Yorkes houſe; and this was after that they had tarried three houres with Bradford. And after that their man was come, they put up their written bookes of common places, and ſaid that they lamented his caſe: they willed him to reade over a book which did D. Crome good; and ſo wiſhing him good in words, they went their way, and poore Bradford to his priſon.

The coming of two Spaniſh Friars to Maſter Bradford.

After this communication with the Biſhops ended, within two dayes following came into the Counter two Spaniſh Friars to talk with Maſter Bradford, ſent (as they ſaid) by the Earl of Derby; of whom the one was the Kings Confeſſor, the other was Alphonſus, who had before written a Popiſh booke againſt hereſies, the effect of which their reaſoning here likewiſe followeth.

Talk between Maſter Bradford and two Spaniſh Friers.

The talk between certain Friers and M. Bradford.

Upon the five and twentieth day of February, about eight of the clock in the morning, two Spaniſh Friers came to the Counter where Bradford was priſoner; to whom Bradford was called. Then the one Frier, which was the the Kings Confeſſor, asked in Latin (for all their talk was in Latin) of Bradford, whether he had not ſeen nor heard of one Alphonſus that had written againſt hereſies?

Brad. I do not know him.

This Alphonſus had written a book before in Latine againſt hereſies.

Confeſ. Well, this man (pointing to Alphonſus) is he. We are come to you of love and charitie, by the meanes of the Earl of Derby, becauſe you deſired to conferre with us.

Brad. I never deſired your coming, nor to confer with you, or any other. But ſeeing you are come of charitie, as you ſay, I cannot but thank you: and as touching conference, though I deſire it not, yet I will not refuſe to talk with you if you will.

Alphon. It were requiſite that you did pray unto God, that ye might follow the direction of Gods ſpirit, that he would inſpire you, ſo that ye be not addict to your own ſelf will or wit.

Bradford willed to pray, maketh his praier.

Brad. Whereupon Bradford made a prayer, and beſought God to direct all their wils, words, and workes, as the wils, words, and workes of his children for ever.

Alph. Yea, you muſt pray with your heart. For if you ſpeak but with tongue only, God will not give you his grace.

Brad. Sir, do not judge, leſt ye be judged. You have heard my words, now charitie would have you leave the judgement of the heart to God.

Alph. You muſt be as it were a neuter, and not wedded to your ſelf, but as one ſtanding in doubt: pray and be ready to receive what God ſhall inſpire; for in vaine laboureth our tongue to ſpeak elſe.

No man ought to be in doubt of his religion.

Brad. Sir, my ſentence, if you mean it for religion, muſt not be in a doubting or uncertain, as I thank God I am certain in that for which I am condemned: I have no cauſe to doubt of it, but rather to be moſt certain of it; and therefore I pray God to confirme me more in it. For it is his truth, and becauſe it is ſo certaine and true that it may abide the light, I dare be bold to have it looked on, and conferre it with you, or any man; in reſpect whereof I am both glad of your coming, and thank you for it.

Alph. What is the matter whereof you were condemned? we know not.

The cauſe why M. Bradford was condemned.

Brad. Sir, I have been in priſon almoſt two yeers: I never tranſgreſſed any of their lawes wherefore I might juſtly be priſoned, and now am I condemned only becauſe I frankly confeſſed, whereof I repent not, my faith concerning the ſacrament, when I was demanded in theſe two points: one that there is no tranſubſtantiation; the other, that the wicked do not receive Chriſts body.

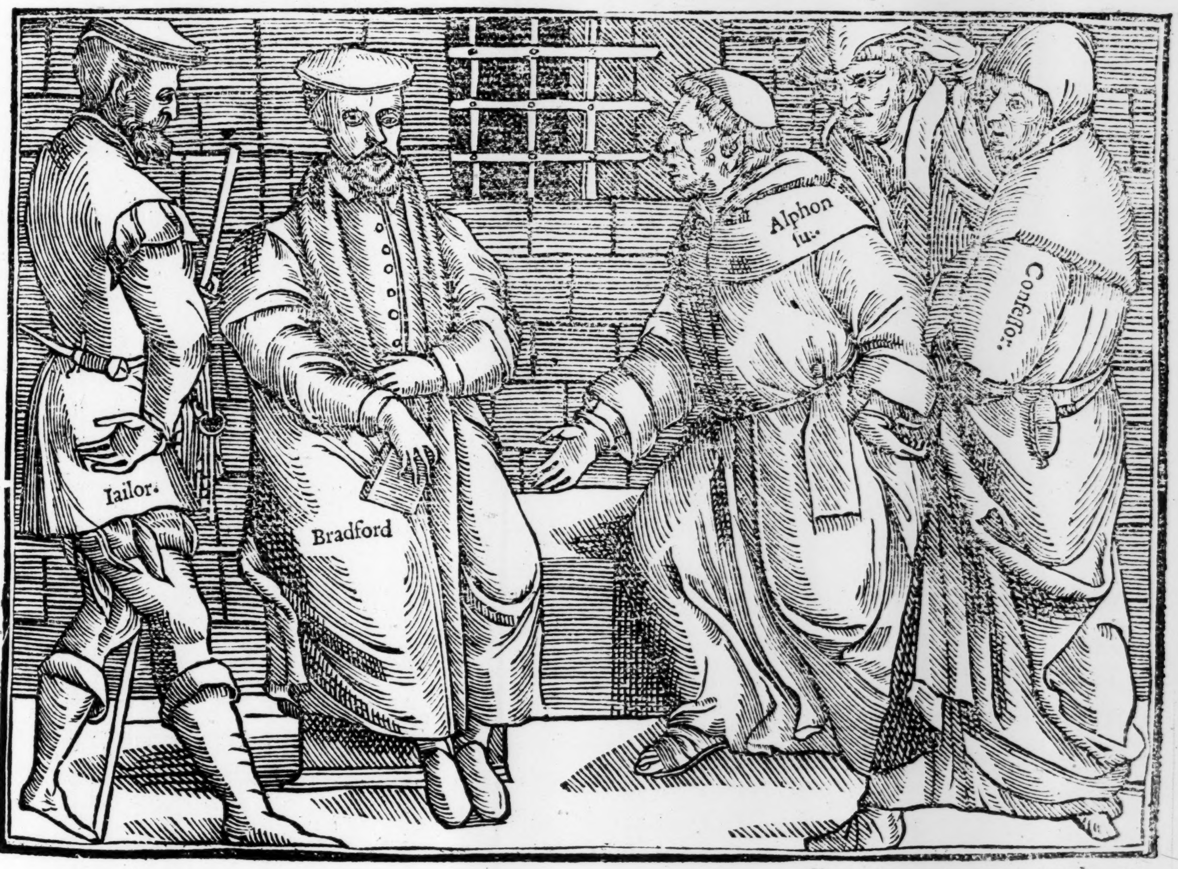
Alph. Let us looke a little on the firſt. Do you not beleeve that Chriſt is preſent really, and corporally in the forme of bread?

Chriſt preſent to the faith of the worthy receiver.

Brad. No, I do beleeve that Chriſt is preſent to the faith of the worthy receiver, as there is preſent bread and wine to the ſenſes and outward man: as for any ſuch preſence of including and placing Chriſt, I beleeve not, nor dare beleeve.

Alph. I am ſure you beleeve Chriſts naturall bodie is circumſcriptible. And here he made

The talk between Maſter Bradford and two Spaniſh Friers.



A Spaniſh argument. Chriſts body is circumſcriptible in heauen: Ergo, Chriſts body is circumſcriptible in the bread.

much ado of the two natures of Chriſt, how that the one is euery where, and the other is in his proper place, demanding ſuch queſtions as no wiſe man would haue ſpent any time about. At length becauſe the Frier had forgotten to conclude, Bradford put him in minde of it, and thus then at length he concluded: how that becauſe Chriſts bodie was circumſcriptible, concerning the humane nature in heauen, therefore it was ſo in the bread.

Brad. How hangeth this together? Euen as if you ſhould ſay; becauſe you are here, Ergo, it muſt needs follow that you are at Rome. For thus you reaſon; Becauſe Chriſts bodie is in heauen: Ergo, it is in the Sacrament under the forme of bread: which no wiſe man will grant.

Alph. Why? will you beleeue nothing but that which is expreſly ſpoken in the Scriptures?

Brad. Yes ſir, I will beleeue whatſoeuer you ſhall by demonſtration out of the Scriptures declare unto me.

Chriſt is able to do it: Ergo, he doth it.

Alph. He is obſtinate, quoth Alphonſus to his fellow: and then turning to Bradford, ſaid, Is not God able to do it?

Brad. Yes, but here the queſtion is of Gods will, and not of his power.

Alph. Why? doth he not ſay plainly, This is my bodie?

Brad. Yes, and I deny not but that it is ſo, to the faith of the worthy receiuer.

Alph. To the faith? how is that?

Brad. Forſooth ſir, as I haue no tongue to expreſſe it: ſo I know ye haue no eares to heare and underſtand it. For faith is more then man can utter.

Alph. But I can tell all that I beleeue.

Brad. You beleeue not much then. For if you beleeue the ioyes of heauen, and beleeue no more thereof then you can tell, you will not yet deſire to come thither. For as the minde is more capable and receiueable then the mouth; ſo it conceiueth more then tongue can expreſſe.

Hoc eſt corpus meum.

Alph. Chriſt ſaith it is his bodie.

Brad. And ſo ſay I, after a certaine manner.

Alph. After a certaine manner? that is, after another manner then it is in heauen.

Quodam modo Auguſtinus Epiſtola ad Bonifacium.

Brad. Saint Auguſtine telleth it more plainly, that it is Chriſts bodie after the ſame manner as Circumciſion was the couenant of God, and the Sacrament of faith is faith; or to make it more plaine, as baptiſme and the water of baptiſme is regeneration.

Argument. As grace is in the water of baptiſme, ſo is the body in the ſacrament. But grace is in the water by ſignification: Ergo, ſo is the body in the ſacrament.

Alph. Very well ſaid, baptiſme and the water thereof is a ſacrament of Gods grace and ſpirit in the water cleanſing the baptized.

Brad. No ſir, away with your encloſing: but this I grant, that after the ſame ſort Chriſts body is in the bread, on which ſort the grace and ſpirit of God is in the water.

Alph. In water is Gods grace by ſignification.

Brad, So is the bodie in the bread in the Sacrament.

A Popiſh diſtinction of ſacraments.

Alph. You are much deceiued, in that you make no difference between the Sacraments that be ſtanders, and the Sacraments that are tranſitorie and paſſers by. As for example, the Sacrament of Orders, which you deny, though Saint Auguſtine affirme it, it is a ſtander, although the ceremonie be paſt. But in baptiſme ſo ſoone as the bodie is waſhed, the water ceaſeth to be a Sacrament.

Brad. Very good, and ſo it is in the Supper of the Lord: no longer then it is in uſe, is it Chriſts Sacrament.

The Frier in a chafe.

Here was the Frier in a wonderfull rage, and ſpake ſo high (as often he had done before) that the whole houſe rang againe, chafing with om and cho. He hath a great name of learning, but ſurely he hath little patience. For if Bradford had been any thing hote, one houſe could not haue held them. At the length he cometh to this point, that Bradford could not finde in the Scripture baptiſme and the Lords ſupper to beare any ſimilitude together. And here he triumphed before the conqueſt, ſaying, that theſe men would receiue nothing but Scripture, and yet were able to proue nothing by the Scripture.

The ſacrament of the Lords table compared with baptiſme in the Scripture.

Brad. Be patient, and you ſhall ſee that by the Scripture I will finde baptiſme and the Lords ſupper coupled together.

Alph. No, that canſt thou neuer do. Let me ſee a text of it.

1 Cor. 12.

Brad. Paul ſaith; That as we are baptized into one Bodie, ſo were we potati in uno ſpiritu, i. we haue drunk of one Spirit, meaning of the Cup in the Lords ſupper.

Alph. Paul hath no ſuch words.

Brad. Yes that he hath.

Confeſ. I trow he hath not.

Brad. Giue me a Teſtament, and I will ſhew you.

The Frier proued a lyar in his own Teſtament.

So a Prieſt that ſate by them gaue him his Teſtament, and he ſhewed them the plain text. Then they looked one upon another. In fine the Frier found this ſimple ſhift, that Paul ſpake not of the ſacrament.

Brad. Well, the text is plaine enough, and there are of the Fathers which do ſo underſtand the place: For Chryſoſtome doth expound it ſo.

Alph. Alphonſus which had the Teſtament in his hand, deſirous to ſuppreſſe this foile, turned the leaues of the book from leafe to leafe, till he came to the place, 1 Cor. 11. and there he read how that he was guiltie, which made no difference of the Lords bodie.

1 Cor. 10.

Brad. Yea, but therewith he ſaith, He that eateth of the bread: calling it bread ſtill, and that after conſecration (as ye call it) as in the tenth of the Corinthians he ſaith; The bread which we break, &c.

Conuerſion is mentioned in turning Moſes rod, ſo it is not in the ſacrament.

Alph. Oh how ignorant are ye, which know not that things after their conuerſion do retaine the ſame names which they had before, as Moſes rod: and calling for a Bible, after he had found the place, he began to triumph: But Bradford cooled him quickly, ſaying:

Moſes rod was ſeene to be turned, ſo is not the ſacrament.

Brad. Sir, there is mention made of the conuerſion, as well as that the ſame appeared to the ſenſe. But here ye cannot finde it ſo. Finde me one word how the bread is conuerted, and I will then ſay, ye bring ſome matter that maketh for you.

Alph. At theſe words the Frier was troubled, and at length he ſaid, how that Bradford hanged on his owne ſenſe.

Brad. No, that do I not; for I will bring you forth the Fathers of the Church 800. yeers after Chriſt, to confirme this which I ſpeak.

Alph. No, you haue the Church againſt you.

Brad. I haue not Chriſts Church againſt me.

Alph. Yes that you haue. What is the Church?

Brad. Chriſts wife, the chaire and ſeate of verity.

Alph. Is ſhe viſible?

The Church is viſible, but to them that haue ſpirituall eies.

Brad. Yea that ſhe is to them that will put on the ſpectacles of Gods word to look on her.

Alph. This Church hath defined the contrary, and that I will proue by all the good Fathers from Chriſts Aſcenſion, euen for 800. yeers at the leaſt continually.

Brad. What will you ſo proue? Tranſubſtantiation?

Alph. Yea, that the bread is turned into Chriſts bodie.

Brad. You ſpeak more then you can do.

Alph. That do I not.

Brad. Then will I give place.

Alph. Will you beleeve?

Brad. Beliefe is Gods gift; therefore cannot I promiſe: but I tell you that I will give place; and I hope I ſhall beleeve his truth alwayes, ſo good is he to me in Chriſt my Saviour.

Alph. Here the Friar found a great fault with Bradford, that he made no difference betwixt Habitus and Actus; as though Actus, which he called credulitie, had been in our power. But this he let paſſe, and came again asking Bradford if he could prove it as he ſaid, whether he would give place?

The Papiſts hold that the act of beleeving is in mans power.

Brad. Yea that I will. Then called he for paper, pen, and inke, to write, and then ſaid I: What and if that I prove by the teſtimonie of the Fathers, that continually for 800. yeers after Chriſt, at the leaſt, they did beleeve that the ſubſtance of bread doth remaine in the Sacrament? what will ye do?

Alph. I will give place.

Brad. Then write you here that you will give place if I ſo prove, and I will write that I will give place if you ſo prove: becauſe ye are the ancient, ye ſhall have the preheminence.

Here the Friar fumed marvellouſly, and ſaid; I came not to learne at thee: Are not here witneſſes? (meaning the Prieſts) be not they ſufficient? But the man was ſo chafed, that if Bradford had not paſſed over this matter of writing, the Friar would have falne to plaine ſcolding.

The Friar refuſeth to abide tryall with Bradford.

Confeſ. At the length the Kings Confeſſor asked Bradford what the ſecond queſtion was?

Brad. That wicked men receive not Chriſts bodie in the ſacrament, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of Judas, that he received Panem Domini, but not Panem Dominum.

Alph. Saint Auguſtine ſaith not ſo.

Brad. Yes that doth he. So they aroſe and talked no more of the matter. Thus went they away, without bidding Bradford farewell.

The Friar againe proved a lyar.

The Friars depart in a heate from Maſter Bradford.

A Prieſt. After they were gone, one of the Prieſts came, and willed Bradford not to be ſo obſtinate.

Brad. Sir be not you ſo wavering; in all the Scripture cannot you finde me, non eſt panis.

Prieſt. Yes that I can in five places.

Brad. Then I will eate your book. So the book was opened, but no place found; and he went his way ſmiling. God help us.

A Prieſt put to a foile.

Talk between Maſter Bradford and Doctor Weſton, and others.

IT followed after this, upon the twenty one of the moneth of March, that by meanes of one of the Earl of Derbies men, there came to the Counter to dinner one M. Collier, once Warden of Mancheſter, and the ſaid ſervant of the Earl of Derby, of whom M. Bradford learned that Doctor Weſton Dean of Weſtminſter would be with him in the afternoon about two of the clock. At dinner time, when the ſaid Warden did diſcommend King Edward, and went about to ſet forth the authoritie of the Pope, which Bradford withſtood, defending the Kings faith, that it was Catholike, and that the authoritie of the Biſhop of Romes ſupremacie was uſurped, bringing forth the teſtimonie of Gregorie, which affirmeth the name of ſupreme head, to be a title of the forerunner to Antichriſt. A woman priſoner was brought in, whereupon the ſaid Bradford tooke occaſion to riſe from the table, and ſo went to his priſon-chamber to beg of God grace, and help therein, continuing there ſtill untill he was called down to ſpeak with Maſter Weſton, which was then come in.

The name of ſupreme head is the fore-runner to Antichriſt. Gregor.

Maſter Bradford then being called downe, ſo ſoone as he was entred into the Hall, Maſter Weſton very gently tooke him by the hand, and asked how he did, with ſuch other talk. At length he willed avoidance of the chamber: So they all went out, ſave Maſter Weſton himſelf, Maſter Collier, the Earl of Derbies ſervant, the Subdeane of Weſtminſter, the Keeper, Maſter Clayden, and the Parſon of the Church where the Counter is.

D. Weſton commeth to M. Bradford.

Now when he began with Maſter Bradford, to tell how that he was often minded to have come unto him, being thereto deſired of the Earl of Derby: and (quoth he) after that I perceived by this man, that you could be contented rather to ſpeak with me, then any others; I could not but come to do you good, if I can; for hurt you be ſure I will not.

Conference between Maſter Bradford and D. Weſton.

Brad. Sir, quoth Maſter Bradford, when I perceived by the report of my Lords ſervant, that you did beare me good will: more (as he ſaid) then any other of your ſort, I told him then, that therefore I could be better content and more willing to talk with you, if you ſhould come unto me. This did I ſay, quoth he, otherwiſe I deſired not your coming.

Weſt. Well, quoth he; now I am come to talk with you: but before we ſhall enter into any talk, certain principles we muſt agree upon, which ſhall be this daies work.

First, quoth he, I ſhall deſire you to put away all vaine-glorie, and not hold any thing for the praiſe of the world.

D. Weſtons leſſons, ſuch as he did never follow himſelf. Vain glory.

Brad. Sir, S. Auguſtine maketh that indeed a peece of the definition of an Heretick; which if I cannot put away clean (for I think there will a ſpice of it remain in us, as long as this fleſh liveth) yet I promiſe you by the grace of God, that I purpoſe not to yeeld to it. God I hope will never ſuffer it to beare rule in them that ſtrive there againſt, and deſire all the dregs of it utterly to be driven out of us.

Weſt. I am glad to heare you ſay ſo, although indeed I think you do not ſo much eſteeme it as others do.

Secondly, I would deſire you that you will put away ſingularitie in your judgement and opinions.

Singularitie.

Brad. Sir, God forbid that I ſhould ſtick to my ſingularitie or private judgement in Gods religion. Hitherto I have not deſired it, neither do, nor minde at any time to hold any other doctrine then is publike and Catholike, underſtanding Catholike as good men do; according to Gods Word.

Weſt. Very well, this is a good daies work, I hope to do you good: and therefore now thirdly I ſhall pray you to write me Capita of thoſe things whereupon you ſtand in the ſacrament, and to ſend them to me betwixt this and Wedneſday next: untill which time, yea, untill I come to you again, be aſſured that you are without all perill of death. Of my fidelitie, I warrant you, therefore away with all dubitations, &c.

Weſton willeth M. Bradford to put down in writing the chief grounds of his faith.

Brad. Sir, I will write to you the grounds I leane to in this matter. As for death, if it come, welcome be it; this which you require of me, ſhall be no great let to me therein.

Weſt. You know that Saint Auguſtine was a Manichean, yet was he converted at the length; ſo have I good hope of you.

Brad. Sir, becauſe I will not flatter you, I would you ſhould flatly know, that I am even ſetled in the religion, wherefore I am condemned.

Weſt. Yea, but if it be not the truth, and you ſee evident matter to the contrarie, will you not then give place?

Brad. God forbid but that I ſhould alwaies give place to the truth.

Weſt. I would have you to pray ſo.

Brad. So I do, and that he will more and more confirme me in it, as I thank God he hath done and doth.

Weſt. Yea but pray with a condition, if you be in it.

Brad. No ſir, I cannot pray ſo, becauſe I am ſetled and aſſured of his truth.

Weſt. Well, quoth Weſton, as the learned Biſhop anſwered S. Auſtins mother, that though he was obſtinate, yet the teares of ſuch a mother could not but win her ſonne: ſo, quoth he, I hope your prayers (for then Bradfords eyes did ſhew that he had wept in prayer) cannot but be heard of God, though not as you would, yet as beſt ſhall pleaſe God. Do ye not, quoth he, remember the hiſtorie thereof?

Brad. Yea ſir, quoth Bradford, I think it be of St. Ambroſe.

Weſt. No, that it is not. And here Weſton would have laid a wager, and began to triumph, ſaying to Bradford; as you are overſeene herein, ſo are you in other things.

Brad. Well ſir, I will not contend with you for the name. This (I remember) St. Auguſtine writeth in his Confeſſions.

M. Bradford wrongfully charged with ſedition.

After this talk Weſton began to tell Maſter Bradford, how the people were by him procured to withſtand the Queen.

Whereunto Bradford anſwering again, bade him hang him up as a traytor and a theef, if ever he encouraged any to rebellion: which thing his Keeper, and others that were there of the Prieſts, affirmed on his behalf. So, much talk there was to little purpoſe at that time. Doctor Weſton declared moreover how he had ſaved men going in the cart to be hanged, and ſuch like.

The end was this, that Bradford ſhould ſend unto him, Capita doctrinæ of the ſupper, and after Wedneſday he would come unto him again, and thus departed he, after that he had drunk to him in beere and wine. I omit here talk of Oxford, of bookes of Germany writers, of the feare of death, and ſuch other talke, which are to no purpoſe.

Another diſputation or talk between Maſter Bradford and Doctor Pendleton, Another diſputation or talk between M. Bradford and D. Pendleton.

IN the mean time, when Maſter Bradford had written his reaſons and arguments, and had ſent them to Doctor Weſton, in ſhort ſpace after, about the 28. of March, there came to the Counter Doctor Pendleton, and with him the foreſaid Maſter Collier, ſometime Warden of Mancheſter, and Stephen Bech. After ſalutations Maſter Pendleton began to ſpeak to Bradford, that he was ſorrie for his trouble. And further (quoth he) after that I did know you could be content to talk with me, I made the more ſpeed, being as ready to do you good, and pleaſure you what I can, as ye would wiſh.

Brad. Sir, the manner how I was content to ſpeak with you, was on this ſort: Maſter Bech was often in hand with me whom he ſhould bring unto me, and named you amongſt other: and I ſaid that I had rather ſpeak with you then with any of all the other. Now the cauſe why I ſo would, I will briefly tell you. I remember that once you were (as far as a man might judge) of the religion that I am of at this preſent, and I remember that you have ſet forth the ſame earneſtly. Gladly therefore would I learne of you what thing it was that moved your conſcience to alter, and gladly would I ſee what thing it is that you have ſeene ſince, which you ſaw not before.

Pendleton once of the ſame religion with Maſter Bradford.

Pendleton. Maſter Bradford, I do not know wherefore you are condemned.

Brad. Tranſubſtantiation is the cauſe wherefore I am condemned, and becauſe I deny that wicked men do receive Chriſts bodie: wherein I would deſire you to ſhew me what reaſons, which before you knew not, did move your conſcience now to alter. For once (as I ſaid) you were as I am in religion.

Here Maſter Pendleton half amazed, began to excuſe himſelf if it would have been, as though he had not denied fully tranſubſtantiation indeed, although I ſaid, quoth he, that the word was not in Scripture, and ſo he made an endleſſe tale of the thing that moved him to alter: but (ſaid he) I will gather to you the places which moved me, and ſend you them. And here he deſired Bradford that he might have a copie of that which he had ſent to Maſter Weſton; the which Bradford did promiſe him.

Pendleton belike would ſtudie out the reaſons that moved him to alter: for he had none ready to ſhew.

Evill men receive not Chriſts body.

Some reaſoning alſo they had, whether evill men did receive Chriſts bodie, Bradford denying, and Pendleton affirming. Bradford ſaid that they received not the ſpirit: Ergo, not the bodie; for it is no dead carkaſſe. Hereto Bradford brought alſo Saint Auguſtine, how Judas received Panem Domini, and not Panem Dominum, and how that he muſt be in Chriſts bodie, which muſt receive the bodie of Chriſt. But Pendleton went about to put it away with idem, and not ad idem, and how that in Corpore Chriſti was to be underſtood of all that be in the viſible Church with Gods elect. Bradford denied this to be Saint Auguſtines meaning, and ſaid alſo that the allegation of idem, and not ad idem, could not make for that purpoſe. They talked more of tranſubſtantiation, Pendleton bringing forth Cyprian; Panis natura mutatur, &c. And Bradford ſaid, that in that place natura did not ſignifie ſubſtance. As the nature of an herbe is not the ſubſtance of it; ſo the bread changed in nature is not to be taken for changed in ſubſtance: For now it is ordained not for the food of the bodie ſimply, but rather for the ſoule. Here alſo Bradford alleaged the ſentence of Gelaſius. Pendleton ſaid, that he was a Pope. Yea, ſaid Bradford, but his faith is my faith in the ſacrament, if ye would receive it.

He muſt be in Chriſts body, that muſt receive Chriſts body.

The place of S. Cyprian expounded how the nature of bread is changed.

Cyprian expounded by Gelaſius.

They reaſoned alſo whether accidentia were res, or no. If they be properly res, ſaid Bradford then are they ſubſtances; and if they be ſubſtances, they are earthly, and then are there earthly ſubſtances in the Sacrament, as Irenæus ſaith, which muſt needs be bread. But Pendleton ſaid that the colour was the earthly thing, and called it an accidentall ſubſtance.

Pendleton driven to ſay that accidents be ſubſtances.

I omit the talk they had of my Lord of Canterburie, of Peter Martyrs book, of Pendletons letter laid to Bradfords charge when he was condemned, with other talk more of the Church; whether Dic Eccleſiæ was ſpoken of the Univerſall Church, or of a particular (which Pendleton at the length granted to be ſpoken of a particular Church) alſo of vaine-glorie, which he willed Bradford to beware of, and ſuch like talk. A little before his departing Bradford ſaid thus, Maſter Doctor, as I ſaid to Maſter Weſton the laſt day, ſo ſay I unto you again, that I am the ſame man in religion againſt Tranſubſtantiation ſtill, which I was when I came into priſon; for hitherto I have ſeene nothing in any point to infirme me. At which words Pendleton was ſomething moved, and ſaid that it was no Catholike doctrine. Yes, quoth Bradford, and that will I prove even by the teſtimonie of the Catholike Fathers untill Concilium Lateranenſe, or thereabout. Thus Pendleton went his way, ſaying that he would come oftener to Bradford. God our Father be with us all, and give us the Spirit of his truth for ever. Amen.

Bradford could heare no reaſon of the Papiſts to infirme his opinion againſt tranſubſtantiation.

The ſame day in the afternoon, about five of the clock, came M. Weſton to Bradford; and after gentle ſalutations, he deſired the company every man to depart, and ſo they two ſate down. And after that he had thanked Bradford for his writing unto him, he pulled out of his boſome the ſame writing which Bradford had ſent him. The writing is this that followeth.

Certain reaſons againſt Tranſubſtantiation, gathered by Iohn Bradford, and given to D. Weſton and others.

Tranſubſtantiation not brought into the Church before the yeer 1215. by Pope Innocentius 3.

THat which is former (ſaith Tertullian) is true; that which is latter is falſe. But the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is a late doctrine: for it was not defined generally afore the Councell of Lateran, about 1215. yeers after Chriſts coming, under Pope Innocentius the third of that name. For before that time it was free for all men to beleeve it, or not beleeve it, as the Biſhop of Dureſme doth witneſſe in his book of the preſence of Chriſt in his Supper, lately put forth: Ergo, The doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is falſe.

Three reaſons proving the words of the Lords Supper to be figurative. 1. Circumſtances of Scripture. 2. Proportion of Sacraments. 3. Teſtimony of old Doctors.

2 That the words of Chriſts Supper be figurative, the circumſtances of the Scripture, the Analogy or proportion of the Sacraments, and the ſentences of all the holy fathers, which were and did write for the ſpace of 1000. yeers after Chriſts Aſcenſion, do teach: whereupon it followeth, that there was no Tranſubſtantiation.

3 That the Lord gave to his Diſciples bread, and called it his Body, the Scriptures do witneſſe. For, he gave that, and called it his Body, which he took in his hands, whereon he gave thanks, which alſo he brake, and gave to his Diſciples, that is to ſay, Bread; as the Fathers, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Auguſtine, and all the reſidue which are of Antiquity, do affirm: but in as much as the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine is another thing than the ſubſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, it plainly appeareth that there is no Tranſubſtantiation.

The wine is not tranſubſtantiate: Ergo, neither the bread.

4 The Bread is no more tranſubſtantiate than the Wine: but that the Wine is not tranſubſtantiate, Saint Matthew and Saint Mark do teach us: for they witneſſe, that Chriſt ſaid that he would drink no more of the fruit of the Vine, which was not Blood, but Wine: and therefore it followeth, that there is no Tranſubſtantiation. Chryſoſtome upon Matthew, and Saint Cyprian, do affirm this reaſon.

The ſame Spirit which ſaith, This is my body, ſaith alſo, We many are one bread, and one body, &c.

5 As the Bread in the Lords Supper is Chriſts naturall Body, ſo it is his myſticall Body: for the ſame Spirit that ſpake of it, This is my Body; did ſay alſo, For we many are one Bread, one Body, &c. but now it is not the myſticall Body by Tranſubſtantiation, and therefore it is not his naturall Body by Tranſubſtantiation.

The words do not tranſubſtantiate the Cup into the new Teſtament, Ergo, neither the bread into the body.

6 The words ſpoken over the Cup in Saint Luke and Paul, are not ſo mighty and effectuall, as to tranſubſtantiate it: For then it, or that which is in it, ſhould be tranſubſtantiate into the new Teſtament: therefore the words ſpoken over the Bread, are not ſo mighty as to make Tranſubſtantiation.

7 All that doctrine which agreeth with thoſe Churches which be Apoſtolike, mother Churches, or originall Churches, is to be counted for truth, in that it holdeth that which theſe Churches received of the Apoſtles, the Apoſtles of Chriſt, Chriſt of GOD. But it is manifeſt, that the doctrine taught at this preſent of the Church of Rome, concerning Tranſubſtantiation, doth not agree with the Apoſtolike and mother Churches in Greece, of Corinthus, of Philippos, Coloſſia, Theſſalonica, Epheſus, which never taught Tranſubſtantiation; yea it agreeth not with the doctrine of the Church of Rome taught in times paſt. For Gelaſius the Pope, ſetting forth the doctrine which that See did then hold, doth manifeſtly confute the errour of Tranſubſtantiation, and reproveth them of ſacrileage, which divide the myſtery, and keep from the Laity the Cup, therefore the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation agreeth not with the truth.

The doctrine of the Church of Rome for tranſubſtantiation agreeth not with the Apoſtles Church, nor with the Greek Churches, nor with the old Roman Church.

This was the writing which Weſton pulled out of his boſome: and yet before he began to reade it, he ſhewed Bradford that he asked of his converſation at Cambridge ſithence his laſt being with him: and, quoth he, Maſter Bradford, becauſe you are a man not given to the glory of the world, I will ſpeak it before your face: Your life I have learned was ſuch there alwayes, as all men, even the greateſt enemies you have, cannot but praiſe it, and therefore I love you much better than ever I did: but now I will reade over your arguments, and ſo we will confer them. Such they are, that a man may well perceive you ſtand on conſcience, and therefore I am the more ready and glad to pity you. So he began to reade the firſt; to the which he ſaid, that though the word Tranſubſtantiation began but lately, yet the thing alwayes was, and hath been ſithence Chriſts inſtitution.

Brad. I do not contend, or hang upon the word onely, but upon the thing which is as new as the word.

The words of Auſten guilefully wreſted by Weſton.

Weſt. Then went he to the ſecond, and there brought out Saint Auguſtin, how that if an evill man going to the Devill, did make his Will, his ſon and heir would not ſay his father did lye in it, or ſpeak tropically: much more Chriſt, going to God, did never lye, or uſe any figurative ſpeech in his laſt Will and Teſtament. Do you not remember this place of Saint Auguſtine, ſaid he?

Brad. Yea Sir, but I remember not that S. Auguſtine hath thoſe words, tropicé or figurativè, as you rehearſe them: for any man may ſpeak a thing figuratively, and not lye: and ſo Chriſt did in his laſt Supper.

Weſt. After this he went to the third, and brought forth Cyprian, how that the nature of bread is turned into fleſh. Here (ſaith he) my Lord of Canterbury expoundeth nature for quality, by Gelaſius. The which interpretation ſerveth for the anſwer of your argument, that Chriſt called bread his body: that is, the quality, form, and appearance of bread. And further the Scripture is wont to call things by the ſame names which they had before, as Symon the Leper; he was not ſo preſently, but becauſe he had been ſo.

Symon though he were called the Leper, yet he was ſeen to be no Leper. But bread is ſeen ſtill to be bread: and therefore hath his name not of that it was, but of that it is.

Cyprian expounded by Gelaſius.

Brad. Cyprian wrote before Gelaſius: therefore Cyprian muſt not expound Gelaſius, but Gelaſius Cyprian: and ſo they both teach, that bread remaineth ſtill. As for things having ſtill the names they had, is no anſwer, except you could ſhew that this now were not bread, as eaſily as a man might have known and ſeen then Symon to have been healed and cleer from his Leproſie.

Weſt. After this he went to the fourth, of the Cup, the which he did not fully reade, but digreſſed into a long talk of Cyprians Epiſtle De Aquatiis: alſo of S. Auguſtine, expounding the breaking of bread by Chriſt to his two Diſciples going to Emmaus, to be the Sacrament, with ſuch other talk to no certain purpoſe: and therefore Bradford prayed him, that in as much as he had written the reaſons that ſtabliſhed his faith againſt Tranſubſtantiation, ſo he would likewiſe do to him, that is, anſwer him by writing, and ſhew him more reaſons in writing to confirm Tranſubſtantiation. Which Doctor Weſton promiſed to do, and ſaid that he would ſend or bring it to Maſter Bradford again within three dayes.

Grimoald ſubſcribed.

Thus when he had over-read the arguments, and here and there ſpoken little to the purpoſe for the avoiding of them, and Bradford had prayed him to give him in writing his anſwers: then he began to tell Bradford how and what he had done for Grimoald, and how that Bradford needed not to fear any reproach or ſlander he ſhould ſuffer, meaning belike to have Bradford ſecretly to come to them, as Grimoald did, for he ſubſcribed.

M. Bradford plain and firm in confeſſion of the truth.

Brad. Maſter Dean, I would not gladly that you ſhould conceive of me that I paſſe of ſhame of men ſimply in this matter: I rather would have you to think of me, as the very truth is, that hitherto as I have not heard nor ſeen any thing to infirm my faith againſt Tranſubſtantiation, ſo I am no leſſe ſetled in it, than I was at my firſt coming hither. I love to be plain with you, and to tell you at the firſt, as you ſhall finde at the laſt.

Weſt. In good faith, M. Bradford, I love you the better for your plainneſſe: and do not think otherwiſe of me, but that you ſhall finde me plain in all my talk with you.

Here Weſton began to ask Bradford of his impriſonment and condemnation; and ſo Bradford told him altogether, how he had been handled. Whereat Weſton ſeemed to wonder: yea in plain words he ſaid, that Bradford had been handled otherwiſe than he had given cauſe, and ſo ſhewed Bradford how that my Lord of Bath reported that he had deſerved a benefit at the Queens hand, and at all the Councell.

In this kinde of talk they ſpent an hour almoſt, and ſo, as one weary, Bradford roſe up, and Weſton called to the Keeper, and before him he bade Bradford be of good comfort, and ſaid that he was out of all perill of death.

Keeper. Sir, quoth the Keeper, but it is in every mans mouth, that he ſhall dye to morrow.

The vain promiſe of Weſton.

Weſton. Whereat Weſton ſeemed half amazed, and ſaid, he would go ſay Evenſong before the Queen, and ſpeak to Her in his behalf. But it is to be thought that the Queen had almoſt ſupped at that preſent: for it was paſt ſix of the clock.

Brad. Before the Keeper, Bradford told Weſton again that ſtill he was one man: and even as he was at the firſt, and till he ſhould ſee matter to teach his conſcience the contrary, he ſaid he muſt needs ſo continue.

Keep. The Keeper deſired Bradford to hearken to M. Doctors counſell, and prayed M. Doctor to be good unto him: and ſo after they had drunk together, M. Doctor with moſt gentle words took his leave for three dayes.

Now when he was gone, the Keeper told Bradford, that M. Doctor ſpake openly, how that he ſaw no cauſe why they ſhould burn him. Which ſentence, for the ambiguity of the meaning, made him ſomewhat ſorry, leſt he had behaved himſelf in any thing, wherein he had gathered any conformableneſſe to them in their Doctrine, which God knoweth, ſaith Bradford, I never as yet did. God our Father bleſſe us, as his children, and keep us from all evill for ever, Amen.

Another talk or conference between Maſter Bradford and Doctor Weſton.

Another talk or conference between M. Bradford and D. Weſton.

Upon the fifth day of Aprill came Maſter Doctor Weſton to the Counter about two of the clock in the afternoon, who excuſed himſelf for being ſo long abſent; partly by ſickneſſe, partly for that Doctor Pendleton told him that he would come unto him; and partly for that, quoth he, I withſtood certain Monks which would have come again into Weſtminſter; telling him moreover, how that the Pope was dead, and alſo declared unto him, how he had ſpoken to the Queen in his behalf, and how that death was not neer to him.

D. Weſton withſtandeth the Monks coming into Weſtminſter.

Weſton. Laſt of all, he excuſed himſelf for not anſwering his arguments againſt Tranſubſtantiation: becauſe my coming to day, quoth he, was more by fortune, than of purpoſe.

Bradfords arguments not anſwered.

Brad. I would gladly, Maſter Doctor, if it pleaſe you, ſee your anſwers to my arguments.

Weſton. Why? you have remembred ſomething that I ſpake to you, when I was laſt with you.

Brad. No Sir, I never called them in manner to minde, ſithence that time, as well becauſe I hoped you would have written them; as alſo for that they ſeemed not to be ſo materiall.

Weſt. In good faith I cannot ſee any other or better way for you, than to ſubmit your ſelf to the judgement of the Church.

Brad. Marry ſo will I Sir, if ſo be by the Church you underſtand Chriſts Church.

The Papiſts will not have the Church judged.

Weſt. Lo, you take upon you to judge the Church.

Brad. No Sir, that I do not; in taking upon me to diſcern, I do not judge the Church.

Weſt. Yes that you do, and make it inviſible.

Brad. I do neither.

Weſt. Why, who can ſee your Church?

Brad. Thoſe Sir, that have ſpirituall eyes, wherwith they might have diſcerned Chriſts viſible converſation here upon earth.

The Church is viſible but only to ſpirituall eyes.

Weſt. Nay, Chriſts Church hath three tokens, that all men may look well upon: namely, Unity, Antiquity, and Conſent.

Unity, Antiquity, Conſent.

Unity, Antiquity, Conſent, as well common to the Devils Church, as to Chriſts Church.

Brad. Theſe three may be as well in evill as in good, as well in ſin as in vertue, as well in the Devils Church, as in Gods Church: As for an example, Idolatry amongſt the Iſraelites had all thoſe three. Chryſoſtome telleth plainly, as you well know, that the Church is well known, Tantummodo per Scripturas, Alonely by the Scriptures.

Weſt. In good faith, you make your Church inviſible, when you will have it known alonely by the Scriptures.

Brad. No Sir, the Scriptures do plainly ſet forth to us the Church, that all men may well enough thereby know her, if they liſt to look.

Weſt. The Church is like a Tower or Town that all men may ſee.

Why the Church is not ſeen.

Brad. True Sir, all men that be not blinde. Viſible enough is the Church, but mens blindeneſſe is great. Impute not therfore to the Church, that which is to be imputed to mens blindeneſſe.

Weſt. Where was your Church forty yeers ago? or where is it now? except in a corner of Germany?

Weſton cometh in again with his antiquity.

The Church is tied to no place but to the word

Brad. Forſooth Sir, the Church of God is diſperſed, and not tyed to this or that place, but to the word of God; ſo that where it is, there is Gods Church, if it be truly taught.

Weſt. Lo, is not this to make the Church inviſible? point me out a Realm a hundred yeers paſt, which maintained your Doctrine?

The Church is not alwayes to be pointed out by Realms and Countries.

The Church in Helias time was not pointable.

Brad. Sir, if you will, or would well mark the ſtate of the Church before Chriſts coming, with it now (as Saint Paul and Peter willeth us) I think you would not look for ſuch ſhews of the Church to be made, as to point it by Realms. You know that in Helias time, both in Iſrael, and elſewhere, Gods Church was not pointable:

pointable; and therefore cryed he out, that he was left alone.

Weſt. No marry, did not God ſay that there was 7000. which had not bowed their knees to Baal? Lo then 7000. ſhew me 7000. a hundred yeers ago of your religion.

Brad. Sir, theſe 7000. were not known to men: for then Helias would not have ſaid, that he had been left alone. And it is plain enough by that which the Text hath, namely that God ſaith, Reliqui mihi, I have reſerved to me ſeven thouſand. Mark that it ſaith, God hath reſerved to himſelf, to his own knowledge, as I doubt not but a hundred yeers ago, God had his ſeven thouſand in his proper places, though men knew not thereof.

God ſaw the Church in Helias time, although Helias himſelf did not ſee it: and ſo is it now.

Weſton. Well, M. Bradford, I will not make your caſe worſe, than for Tranſubſtantiation: although I know that we agree not in other matters. And I pray you make you it your ſelf not worſe. If I can do you good, I will: hurt you I will not. I am no Prince, and therefore I cannot promiſe you life, except you will ſubmit your ſelf to the definition of the Church.

Brad. Sir, ſo that you will define me your Church, that under it you bring not in a falſe Church, you ſhall not ſee but that we ſhall ſoon be at a point.

Weſt. In good faith Maſter Bradford, I ſee no good will be done, and therefore I will wiſh you as much good as I can, and hereafter I will perchance come or ſend to you again: and ſo he ſent for Maſt. Weal, and departed.

Now after his departing, came the Keeper, M. Claydon, and Stephen Bech, and they were very hot with Bradford, and ſpake unto him in ſuch ſort that he ſhould not look but to have them utter enemies unto him, notwithſtanding the friendſhip they both had hitherto pretended. God be with us, and what matter is it who be againſt thee?

Among divers which came to M. Bradford in priſon, ſome to diſpute and confer, ſome to give counſell, ſome to take comfort, and ſome to viſit him, there was a certain Gentlewomans ſervant, which Gentlewoman had been cruelly afflicted, and miſerably handled by her father and mother and all her kindred, in her fathers houſe, for not coming to the Maſſe, and like at length to have been purſued to death, had not the Lord delivered her out of her fathers houſe, being put from all that ever ſhe had. This Gentlewomans ſervant therefore, being ſent to M. Bradford with commendations, had this talk with him, which I thought here not to over-ſlip.

This Gentlewoman is yet alive, to whom M. Bradford wrote a letter which hereafter followeth.

A Colloquie between Maſter Bradford, and a Gentlewomans ſervant, being ſent to viſit him in priſon.

Talk between Bradford and a certain Gentlewomans ſervant.

This ſervant or meſſenger of the foreſaid Gentlewoman coming to M. Bradford, and taking him by the hand, ſaid, God be thanked for you. How do you?

Brad. Maſt. Bradford anſwered, Well I thank God. For as men in ſayling, which be neer to the ſhore or haven where they would be, would be neerer; even ſo the neerer I am to God, the neerer I would be.

Serv. Sir, I have never ſeen you ſo ſtrong and healthſome of body, as me think you be now, God be thanked for it.

Brad. Why, quoth he, I have given over all care and ſtudy, and only do I covet to be talking with him, whom I have alwayes ſtudied to be withall.

Ser. Well, God hath done much for you ſince the time, that I firſt knew you, and hath wrought wonderouſly in you to his glory.

Brad. Truth it is, for he hath dealt favourably with me, in that he hath not puniſhed me according to my ſins, but hath ſuffered me to live, that I might ſeek repentance.

Serv. Truly, we hear ſay, there is a rod made ſo grievous, out of the which I think no man ſhall pluck his head.

Brad. Well, let all that be of Chriſts flock, arm themſelves to ſuffer: for I think verily, God will not have one of his to eſcape untouched, if he love him, let them ſeek what means or wayes they can.

Serv. Well Sir, there goeth talk of a Frier that ſhould preach before the King, and ſhould tell him, that he ſhould be guilty of the innocent blood that hath been ſhed of late.

By this Frier he meaneth Alphonſus mentioned before.

Brad. Verily, quoth Bradford, I had a book within theſe two dayes of his writing, and therein he ſaith, that it is not meet nor convenient that the heretikes ſhould live: and therefore I do marvell how that talk ſhould riſe: for I have heard of it alſo, and I have alſo talked with this Frier (he is named Frier Fonſe) and with divers other, and I praiſe God they have confirmed me: for they have nothing to ſay but that which is moſt vain.

Alphonſus, otherwiſe called in the vulgar ſpeech Frier Fonſe.

Serv. Sir, Father Cardmaker hath him commended unto you.

Brad. How doth he, how doth he?

Serv. Well, God be thanked.

Brad. I am very glad thereof: for indeed my L. Chancellor did caſt him in my teeth, but as David ſaith, God hath diſappointed him.

Serv. Forſooth, Gods name be praiſed, he is very ſtrong.

Brad. And I truſt, ſo are we. What elſe? our quarrell is moſt juſt: therefore let us not be afraid.

Serv. My Miſtreſſe hath her recommended unto you.

Brad. How doth ſhe?

Serv. Well, God be praiſed, but ſhe hath been ſorer afflicted with her own father and mother, than ever you were with your impriſonment, and yet God hath preſerved her, I truſt, to his glory.

A ſtory of a faithfull woman and martyr in the primitive Church, called Juleddo. Ex Baſilio.

Brad. I pray you tell her, I read this day a godly hiſtory, written by Baſilius Magnus, of a vertuous woman which was a widow, and was named Juleddo. She had great lands and many children, and nigh her dwelled a Cormorant, which for her vertuouſneſſe and godly living, had great indignation at her, and of very malice he took away her lands, ſo that ſhe was conſtrained to go to the Law with him: and in concluſion, the matter came to the tryall before the Judge, who demanded of this Tyrant why he wrongfully withheld theſe lands from this woman? He made anſwer and ſaid, he might ſo do: for (ſaith he) this woman is diſobedient to the Kings proceedings; for ſhe will in no wiſe worſhip his gods, nor offer ſacrifice unto them. Then the Judge hearing that, ſaid unto her; Woman, if this be true, thou art not onely like to loſe thy land, but alſo thy life, unleſſe that thou worſhip our gods, and do ſacrifice unto them. This godly woman hearing that, ſtept forth to the Judge, and ſaid, Is there no remedy but either to worſhip your falſe gods, or elſe to loſe my lands and life? Then farewell ſuit, farewell lands, farewell children, farewell friends, yea, and farewell life too: and in reſpect of the true honour of the everliving God, farewell all. And with that ſaying did the Judge commit her to priſon, and afterward ſhe ſuffered moſt cruell death: and being brought to the place of execution, ſhe exhorted all women to be ſtrong and conſtant. For, ſaith ſhe, ye were redeemed with as deer a price as men. For although ye were made of the rib of the man, yet be you all of his fleſh: ſo that alſo, in the caſe and tryall of your faith towards God, ye ought to be as ſtrong. And thus died ſhe conſtantly, not fearing death, I pray you tell your Miſtreſſe of this hiſtory.

Serv. That ſhall I Sir by Gods grace: for ſhe told me that ſhe was with you and M. Saunders, and received your gentle counſell.

M. Bradford nothing afraid of death.

Brad. We never gave her other counſell but the truth, and in witneſſe therof, we have and will ſeal it with our bloods. For I thought this night that I had been ſent for, becauſe at II. of the clock there was ſuch rapping at the door.

Then anſwered a maid, and ſaid, Why then I perceive you were afraid.

Brad. Ye ſhall hear how fearfull I was. For I conſidered that I had not ſlept, and I thought to take a nap before I went: and after I was aſleep, theſe men came into the next chamber, and ſang, as it was told me, and yet for all my fearfulneſſe, I heard them not: therfore belike I was not afraid, that ſlept ſo faſt.

Serv. Do you lack any thing towards your neceſſity?

Brad. Nothing but your prayers, and I truſt I have them, and you mine.

Serv. I ſaw a Prieſt come to you to day in the morning.

Brad. Yea, he brought me a letter from a Frier, and I am writing an anſwer.

Serv. Then we let you, therefore the living God be with you.

Brad. And with you alſo, and bleſſe you.

Serv. Amen, ſaid we, and gave him thanks, and departed.

M. Bradford had from the Counter to Newgate by night.

Thus ſtill in priſon continued Bradford, untill the month of July, in ſuch labours and ſufferings as he before alwayes had ſuſtained in priſon. But when the time of his determined death was come, he was ſuddenly conveighed out of the Counter where he was priſoner, in the night ſeaſon to Newgate, as afore is declared, and from thence he was carried the next morning to Smithfield, where he conſtantly abiding in the ſame truth of God, which before he had confeſſed, earneſtly exhorting the people to repent, and to return to Chriſt, and ſweetly comforting the godly yong ſpringall of nineteen or twenty yeers old, which was burned with him, cheerfully he ended his painfull life, to live with Chriſt.

Iohn Leaf burnt with Bradford.

John Leaf fellow-martyr with Maſter Bradford.

John Leaf of the Pariſh of Chriſts-church, by the Alderman of that Ward committed to priſon.

With whom was burnt one John Leaf an apprentice to Humfrey Gawdy, Tallow-Chandler, of the Pariſh of Chriſts Church in London, of the age of nineteen yeers and above, born at Kirkely Moreſide, in the County of York: who upon the Friday next before Palm-Sunday, was committed to the Counter in Breadſtreet, by an Alderman of London, who had rule and charge of that Ward, or part of the City, where the ſaid Leaf did dwell. After, he coming to examination before Boner, gave a firm and chriſtian teſtimony of his doctrine and profeſſion, anſwering to ſuch Articles as were objected to him by the ſaid Biſhop.

John Leaf examined before biſh. Boner.

The anſwer of John Leaf concerning his faith in the Sacrament.

Firſt, as touching his belief and faith in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, he anſwered, that after the words of Conſecration, ſpoken by the Prieſt over the Bread and Wine, there was not the very true and naturall Body and Blood of Chriſt in ſubſtance; and further did hold and beleeve, that the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, as it is now called, uſed, and beleeved in this Realm of England, is Idolatrous and abominable; and alſo ſaid further, that he beleeved, that after the words of Conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt over the materiall bread and wine, there is not the ſelf ſame ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood there contained; but bread and wine, as it was before: and further ſaid, that he beleeved, that when the Prieſt delivereth the ſaid materiall bread and wine to the communicants, he delivereth but onely " materiall bread and wine; and the communicants do receive the ſame in remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, and ſpiritually in faith they receive Chriſts body and blood, but not under the forms of bread and wine; and alſo affirmed that he beleeved Auricular confeſſion not to be neceſſary to be made unto a Prieſt: for it is no point of ſoul health, neither that the Prieſt hath any authority given him by the Scripture to abſolve and remit any ſin.

" Only as touching the ſubſtance, but not as concerning the effect thereof.

Auricular confeſſion.

He meaneth after the popiſh maner of remitting, &c.

Upon theſe his anſwers, and teſtimony of his faith, he at that time being diſmiſſed, was bid the Munday next, being the tenth of June, to appear again in the ſaid place, there and then to hear the ſentence of his condemnation; who ſo did. At what time the foreſaid Biſhop propounding the ſaid articles again to him, as before, aſſaying by all manner of wayes to revooke him to his own trade, that is, from truth to errour, notwithſtanding all his perſwaſions, threats, and promiſes, found him the ſame man ſtill, ſo planted upon the ſure rock of truth, that no words nor deeds of men could remove him.

John Leaf Maſt. Rogers ſcholler.

Then the Biſhop after many words to and fro, at laſt asked him, if he had been Maſter Rogers ſcholler? To whom the foreſaid John Leaf anſwered again, granting him ſo to be, and that he the ſame John did beleeve in the doctrine of the ſaid Rogers, and in the doctrine of B. Hooper, Cardmaker, and others of their opinion, which of late were burned for the teſtimony of Chriſt, and that he would dye in that doctrine that they dyed for: And after other replications again of the Biſhop, moving him to return to the unity of the Church, he with a great courage of ſpirit, anſwered again in theſe words: My Lord, quoth he, you call mine opinion hereſie, it is the true light of the word of God: and again repeating the ſame, he profeſſed that he would never forſake his ſtayed and well grounded opinion, while the breath ſhould be in his body. Whereupon the Biſhop being too weak, either to refute his ſentence, or to remove his conſtancie, proceeded conſequently to reade the Popiſh ſentence of cruell condemnation; whereby this godly and conſtant yong man, being committed to the ſecular power of the Sheriffs there preſent, was then adjudged, and not long after ſuffered the ſame day with Maſt. Bradford, confirming with his death, that which he had ſpoken and profeſſed in his life.

Sentence read againſt J. Leaf.

It is reported of the ſaid John Leaf, by one that was in the Counter the ſame time, and ſaw the thing, that after his examinations before the Biſhop, when two bills were ſent unto him in the Counter in Breadſtreet, the one containing a recantation, the other his confeſſions, to know to which of them he would put his hand, firſt hearing the Bill of recantation read unto him (becauſe he could not reade nor write himſelf) that he refuſed. And when the other was read unto him, which he well liked of, in ſtead of a pen he took a pin, and ſo pricking his hand, ſprinkled the blood upon the ſaid bill, willing the Reader thereof to ſhew the Biſhop, that he had ſealed the ſame Bill with his blood already.

John Leaf ſealed the bill of his confeſſions with his blood.

The Behaviour of M. Bradford Preacher, and the yong man that ſuffered with him in Smithfield, named Iohn Leaf, a Prentice, which both ſuffered for the teſtimony of Chriſt.

Bradford and John Leaf at the ſtake how they behaved themſelves.

FIrſt, when they came to the ſtake in Smithfield to be burned, M. Bradford lying proſtrate on the one ſide of the ſtake, and the yong man John Leaf on the other ſide, they lay flat on their faces, praying to themſelves the ſpace of a minute of an hour. Then one of the Sheriffs ſaid to M. Bradford; Ariſe, and make an end: for the preaſſe of the people is great.

At that word they both ſtood up upon their feet, and then Maſter Bradford took a Fagot in his hand, and kiſſed it, and ſo likewiſe the ſtake. And when he had ſo done, he deſired of the Sheriffs, that his ſervant might have his raiment. For (ſaid he) I have nothing elſe to give him: and beſides that, he is a poor man. And the Sheriff ſaid, he ſhould have it. And ſo forthwith Maſter Bradford did put off his rayment, and went to the ſtake: and holding up his hands, and caſting his countenance to heaven, he ſaid thus; O England, England, repent thee of thy ſins, repent thee of thy ſins. Beware of Idolatry, beware of falſe Antichriſts, take heed they do not deceive you. And as he was ſpeaking theſe words, the Sheriff bade tye his hands, if he would not be quiet. O Maſter Sheriff (ſaid Maſter Bradford) I am quiet: God forgive you this, Maſter Sheriff. And one of the officers which made the fire, hearing Maſter Bradford ſo ſpeaking to the Sheriff, ſaid: if you have no better learning than that, you are but a fool, and were beſt hold your peace. To the which words Maſter Bradford gave no anſwer: but asked all the world forgiveneſſe, and forgave all the world, and prayed the people to pray for him, and turned his head unto the yong man that ſuffered with him, and ſaid; Be of good comfort brother: for we ſhall have a merry ſupper with the Lord this night: and ſo ſpake no more words that any man did hear, but imbracing the Reeds, ſaid thus; Strait is the way, and narrow is the gate that leadeth to eternall ſalvation, and few there be that finde it.

Anno 1555.

The ſaying of M. Bradford at his death.

And thus they both ended their mortall lives, moſt like two Lambs, without any alteration of their countenance, being void of all fear, hoping to obtain the price of the game that they had long run at; to the which I beſeech Almighty God happily to conduct us, through the merits of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour, Amen.

TOuching Maſter Woodrofe the Sheriff, mention is made a little before, how churliſhly here he anſwered Maſter Bradford at the ſtake, not ſuffering him to ſpeak, but commanding his hands to be tyed, &c. The like extremity or worſe, he uſed alſo before to M. Rogers, whereof ye have heard before.

The ſaid Woodrofe Sheriff, above mentioned, was joyned in office with another, called Sir William Cheſter, for the yeer 1555. Between theſe two Sheriffs ſuch difference there was of judgement and religion, that the one, that is, M. Woodrofe, was wont commonly to laugh, the other to ſhed tears at the death of Chriſts people. And whereas the other was wont to reſtrain, and to beat the people, which were deſirous to take them by the hands that ſhould be burned; the other Sheriff contrariwiſe again with much

Furthermore, here by the way to note the ſevere puniſhment of Gods hand againſt the ſaid Woodroſe, as againſt all ſuch cruell perſecutors, ſo it happned, that within half a yeer after the burning of this bleſſed Martyr, the ſaid Sheriff was ſo ſtricken on the right ſide with ſuch a paulſie, or ſtroke of Gods hand whatſoever it was, that for the ſpace of eight yeers after, till his dying day, he was not able to turn himſelf in his bed, but as two men with a ſheet were fain to ſtir him; and withall ſuch an inſatiable devouring came upon him, that it was monſtrous to ſee. And thus continued he the ſpace of eight yeers together.

The letters of M. Bradford.

This godly Bradford and heavenly Martyr, during the time of his impriſonment, wrote ſundry comfortable Treatiſes, and many godly letters, of which, ſome he wrote to the City of London, Cambridge, Walden, to Lancaſhire and Cheſhire, and divers to his other private friends. By the which foreſaid Letters, to the intent it may appear how godly this man occupied his time being priſoner, what ſpeciall zeal he bare to the ſtate of Chriſts Church, what care he had to perform his office, how earneſtly he admoniſhed all men, how tenderly he comforted the heavie hearted, how fruitfully he confirmed them whom he had taught, I thought here good to place the ſame: and although to exhibite here all the letters that he wrote (being in number ſo many, that they are able to fill a book) it cannot well be compaſſed, yet neverthleſſe we minde to excerpt the principall of them, referring the Reader for the reſidue to the book of Letters of the Martyrs, where they may be found.

The copy of M. Bradfords letter, whereof the Earl of Derby complained in the Parliament.

And firſt, forſomuch as ye heard in the ſtory before, how the Earl of Derby complained in the Parliament houſe, of certain Letters written of John Bradford out of priſon, to Lancaſhire, and alſo how he was charged both of the biſhop of Wincheſter, and of Maſter Allen with ſome Letters; to the intent the Reader more perfectly may underſtand what Letters they were, being written indeed to his mother, brethren, and ſiſters, out of the Tower, before his condemnation, we will begin firſt with the ſame Letters: the copy, with the contents whereof, is this, as followeth.

A comfortable Letter of M. Bradford to his mother, a godly Matron, dwelling in Mancheſter, and to his brethren and ſiſters, and other of his friends there.

A Letter of M. Bradford to his mother, brethren, & ſiſters.

Our deer and ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe priſoner at this preſent (praiſed be his Name therefore) I am, preſerve and keep you my good mother, with my brothers and ſiſters, my father John Traves, Thomas Sorrocold, Laurence and James Bradſhaw, with their wives and families, &c. now and for ever, Amen.

I am at this preſent in priſon ſure enough for ſtarting, to confirm that I have preached unto you: as I am ready (I thank God) with my life and blood to ſeal the ſame, if God vouchſafe me worthy of that honour. For, good mother and brethren, it is a moſt ſpeciall benefit of God, to ſuffer for his Names ſake and Goſpel, as now I do: I heartily thank God for it, and am ſure that with him I ſhall be partaker of his glory, as Paul ſaith, If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall raign with him. Therefore be not faint hearted, but rather rejoyce, at the leaſt for my ſake which now am in the right and high way to heaven: for by many afflictions we muſt enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Now will God make known his children. When the wind doth not blow, then cannot a man know the wheat from the chaff: but when the blaſt cometh, then flyeth away the chaff, but the wheat remaineth, and is ſo far from being hurt, that by the wind it is more cleanſed from the chaff, and known to be wheat. Gold when it is caſt into the fire, is the more precious: ſo are Gods children by the croſſe of affliction. Alwayes God beginneth his judgement at his houſe. Chriſt and the Apoſtles were in moſt miſery in the land of Jewry, but yet the whole land ſmarted for it after: ſo now Gods children are firſt chaſtiſed in this world, that they ſhould not be damned with the world: for ſurely, great plagues of God hang over this Realm.

Acts 14.

God beginneth his judgement with his own houſe.

Complaint of the carnall and wicked life among Goſpellers.

Ye all know there was never more knowledge of God, and leſſe godly living, and true ſerving of God. It was counted a fooliſh thing to ſerve God truly, and earneſt prayer was not paſt upon. Preaching was but a paſtime. The Communion was counted too common. Faſting to ſubdue the fleſh, was far out of uſe. Alms was almoſt nothing. Malice, covetouſneſſe, and uncleanneſſe, was common every where, with ſwearing, drunkenneſſe, and idleneſſe. God therefore now is come, and you have heard me preach, and becauſe he will not damn us with the world, he beginneth to puniſh us: as me for carnall living. For, as for my preaching, I am moſt certain it is and was Gods truth, and I truſt to give my life for it by Gods grace: but becauſe I loved not the Goſpel truly, but outwardly; therefore doth he thus puniſh me; nay rather in puniſhing bleſſeth me. And indeed I thank him more of this priſon, than of any Parlour, yea, than of any pleaſure that ever I had: for in it I finde God my moſt ſweet good God alwaies. The fleſh is puniſhed, firſt to admoniſh us now heartily to live as we profeſſe, ſecondly to certifie the wicked of their juſt damnation, if they repent not.

The cauſe why God firſt puniſheth his in this world.

Perchance you are weakned in that which I have preached, becauſe God doth not defend it, as you think, but ſuffereth the Popiſh doctrine to come again and prevail: but you muſt know, good mother, that God by this doth prove and try his children and people, whether they will unfainedly and ſimply hang on him and his word. So did he with the Iſraelites, bringing them into a deſert, after their coming out of Egypt, where (I mean the wilderneſſe) was want of all things, in compariſon of that which they had in Egypt. Chriſt, when he came into this world, brought no worldly wealth, nor quietneſſe with him, but rather war. The world (ſaith he) ſhall rejoyce, but ye ſhall mourn and weep, but your weeping ſhall be turned into joy: and therefore happy are they that mourn and weep: for they ſhall be comforted. They are marked then with Gods mark in their foreheads, and not with the beaſts mark, I mean the Popes ſhaven crown, who now with his ſhavelings rejoyce: but woe unto them; for they ſhall be caſt down, they ſhall weep and mourn. The rich glutton had here his joy, and Lazarus ſorrow, but afterwards the time was changed. The end of carnall joy is ſorrow. Now let the whoremonger joy with the drunkard, ſwearer, covetous, malicious, and blinde buzzard ſir John: for the Maſſe will not bite them, neither make them to bluſh, as preaching would. Now may they do what they will, come divels to the Church, and go divels home, for no man muſt finde fault. And they are glad of this; now they have their hearts deſire, as the Sodomites had when Lot was gone, but what followed? Forſooth when they cried peace, all ſhall be well, then came Gods vengeance, fire and brimſtone from heaven, and burnt up every mothers childe; even ſo (deare mother) will it do to our Papiſts.

God uſeth to prove and try his children.

The beſt death of all deaths, is to die for Gods ſake.

Wherefore feare God, ſtick to his Word though all the world ſwarve from it. Die you muſt once, and when or how can you not tell. Die therefore with Chriſt, ſuffer for ſerving him truly and after his Word: for ſure may we be, that of all deaths it is moſt to be deſired to die for Gods ſake. This is the moſt ſafe kinde of dying, we cannot doubt but that we ſhall go to Heaven, if we die for his names ſake. And that you ſhall die for his names ſake, Gods Word will warrant you, if you ſtick to that which God by me hath taught you. You ſhall ſee that I ſpeak as I think; for by Gods grace I will drink before you of this cup, if I be put to it.

I doubt not but God will give me his grace, and ſtrengthen me thereunto: pray that he would, and that I refuſe it not. I am at a point, even when my Lord God will, to come to him. Death nor life, priſon nor pleaſure, I truſt in God, ſhall be able to ſeparate me from my Lord God and his Goſpel. In peace, when no perſecution was, then were you content and glad to heare me, then did you beleeve me, and will ye not do ſo now, ſeeing I ſpeak that which I truſt by Gods grace, if neede be to verifie with my life? Good Mother, I write before God to you, as I have preached before him.

The Maſſe is a poyſon to the Church.

It is Gods truth I have taught: It is that ſame infallible word whereof his ſaid, Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe, but my word ſhall not paſſe. The Maſſe and ſuch baggage as the falſe worſhippers of God and enemies of Chriſts Croſſe (the Papiſts I ſay) have brought in again, to poyſon the Church of God withall, diſpleaſeth God highly, and is abominable in his ſight. Happy may be he which of conſcience ſuffereth loſſe of life or goods in diſallowing it. Come not at it. If God be God, follow him: If the Maſſe be God, let them that will ſee it, heare, or be preſent at it, and go to the Divell with it. What is there as God ordained? His ſupper was ordained to be received of us in the memoriall of his death, for the confirmation of our faith, that his bodie was broken for us, and his bloud ſhed for pardon of our ſins; but in the Maſſe there is no receiving, but the Prieſt keepeth all to himſelf alone. Chriſt ſaith, Take, eate. No, ſaith the Prieſt; Gape, peepe. There is a ſacrificing, yea killing of Chriſt again as much as they may. There is Idolatry in worſhipping the outward ſigne of bread and wine; there is all in Latine, you cannot tell what he ſaith. To conclude, there is nothing as God ordained. Wherefore (my good mother) come not at it.

Compariſon between the Lords Supper and the Maſſe.

Doubts and objections anſwered. Math. 19.

Oh, will ſome ſay, it will hinder you, if you refuſe to come to Maſſe and to do as other do. But God will further you (be you aſſured) as you ſhall one day finde: who hath promiſed to them that ſuffer hinderance or loſſe of any thing in this world, his great bleſſing here, and in the world to come life everlaſting.

You ſhall be counted an Heretick: but not of others then of Heretickes, whoſe praiſe is a diſpraiſe.

You are not able to reaſon againſt the Prieſts, but God will that all they ſhall not be able to withſtand you. No bodie will do ſo but you only. Indeed no matter, for few enter into the narrow gate which bringeth to ſalvation. Howbeit, you ſhall have with you (I doubt not) Father Traves and other my brothers and ſiſters, to go with you therein: but if they will not, I your ſonne in God, I truſt, ſhall not leave you an inch, but go before you: pray that I may, and give thankes for me. Rejoyce in my ſuffering, for it is for your ſakes to confirme the truth I have taught. Howſoever you do, beware this letter come not abroad, but into father Traves his hands: for if it ſhould be known that I have pen and inke in the priſon, then would it be worſe with me. Therefore to your ſelves keep this letter, commending me to God and his mercy in Chriſt Jeſus, who make me worthy for his names ſake, to give my life for his Goſpel and Church ſake. Out of the Tower of London, the ſixth day of October, 1553.

For all this caveat, yet this letter came to the Earl of Derbies knowledge.

My name I write not for cauſes, you know it well enough: Like the Letter never the worſe. Commend me to all our good brethren and ſiſters in the Lord. Howſoever you do, be obedient to the higher powers, that is, in no point either in hand or tongue rebell, but rather if they command that which with good conſcience you cannot obey, lay your head on the block, and ſuffer whatſoever they ſhall do or ſay. By patience poſſeſſe your ſoules.

After the time that Maſter Bradford was condemned, and ſent to the Counter, it was purpoſed of his adverſaries (as ye heard before) that he ſhould be had to Mancheſter where he was borne, and there be burned. Whereupon he writeth to the Citie of London, thinking to take his laſt Vale of them in this Letter.

To the Citie of London.

A fruitfull letter of Maſter Bradford to the Citie of London.

TO all that profeſſe the Goſpel and true doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in the Citie of London, John Bradford a moſt unworthy ſervant of the Lord, now not only in priſon, but alſo excommunicated and condemned to be burned for the ſame true doctrine, wiſheth mercy, grace, and peace, with increaſe of all godly knowledge and pietie from God the Father of mercie, through the merits of our alone and omniſufficient Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, by the operation of the holy ſpirit for ever, Amen.

My dearly beloved brethren in our Saviour Chriſt, although the time I have to live is very little (for hourely I looke when I ſhould be had hence to be conveied into Lancaſhire, there to be burned, and to render my life by the providence of God, where I firſt received it by the ſame providence) and although the charge is great to keepe me from all things whereby I might ſignifie any thing to the world of my ſtate: yet having, as now I have pen and inke, through Gods working, maugre the head of Satan and his ſouldiers, I thought good to write a ſhort confeſſion of my faith, and thereto joyne a little exhortation unto you all, to live according to your profeſſion.

Firſt, for my faith, I do confeſſe and pray all the whole congregation of Chriſt to beare witneſſe with me of the ſame, that I beleeve conſtantly, through the gift and goodneſſe of GOD, (for Faith is Gods only gift) all the twelve Articles of the Symbole or Creede, commonly attributed to the collection of the Apoſtles. This my faith I would gladly particularly declare and expound, to the confirmation and comfort of the ſimple; but alas by ſtarts and ſtealth I write in manner that I write, and therefore I ſhall deſire you all to take this brevitie in good part. And this faith I hold, not becauſe of the Creede it ſelf, but becauſe of the Word of God, the which teacheth and confirmeth every article accordingly. This Word of God Written by the Prophets and Apoſtles, left and contained in the Canonicall Bookes of the whole Bible, I do beleeve to contain plentifully all things neceſſarie to ſalvation, ſo that nothing (as neceſſary to ſalvation) ought to be added thereto, and therefore the Church of Chriſt, nor none of his Congregation ought to be burdened with any other doctrine, then which hereout hath his foundation and ground. In teſtimony of this faith I render and give my life, being condemned as well for not acknowledging the Antichriſt of Rome to be Chriſts Vicar generall and ſupreme head of his Catholike and Univerſall Church here or elſewhere upon earth; as for denying the horrible and idolatrous doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and Chriſts reall, corporall, and carnall preſence in his Supper, under the formes and accidents of bread and wine.

Antichriſt of Rome not to be Chriſts generall Vicar.
Tranſubſtantiation a doctrine of Idolatry.

To beleeve Chriſt our Saviour to be the head of his Church, and Kings in their Realmes to be the ſupreme powers, to whom every ſoule oweth obedience, and to beleeve that in the Supper of Chriſt (which the ſacrament of the Altar, as the Papiſts call it, and uſe it, doth utterly overthrow) is a true and very preſence of whole Chriſt God and man to the faith of the receiver, but not to the ſtander by and looker upon, as it is a true and verie preſence of bread and wine to the ſenſes of men: to beleeve this (I ſay) will not ſerve, and therefore as an Heretick I am condemned, and ſhall be burned; whereof I aske God heartily mercie that I do no more rejoyce then I do, having ſo great cauſe, as to be an inſtrument wherein it may pleaſe my deare Lord God and Saviour to ſuffer.

The ſacrament of the altar quite overthroweth the Lords Supper.
Chriſt wholly preſent to the faith of the receiver.

For albeit my manifold ſinnes, even ſince I came into priſon, have deſerved at the hands of God, not only this temporall, but alſo eternall fire in hell, much more then my former ſinfull life, which the Lord pardon for his Chriſts ſake, as I know he of his mercie hath done, and never will lay mine iniquities to my charge, to condemnation, ſo great is his goodneſſe (praiſed therefore be his holy name) although (I ſay) my manifold and grievous late ſinnes have deſerved moſt juſtly all the tyrannie that man or Divel can do unto me; and therefore I confeſſe that the Lord is juſt, and that his judgements be true and deſerved on my behalf: yet the Biſhops and Prelates do not perſecute them in me, but Chriſt himſelf, his word, his truth, and religion. And therefore I have great cauſe, yea moſt great cauſe to rejoyce that ever I was born, and hitherto kept of the Lord; that by my death, which is deſerved for my ſinnes, it pleaſeth the heavenly Father to glorifie his name, to teſtifie his truth, to confirme his veritie, to repugne his adverſaries. Oh good God and mercifull Father, forgive my great unthankfulneſſe, eſpecially herein.

God puniſheth his people for one thing: but men perſecute them for another.

Bradford ſorry that he doth not more rejoyce dying in ſo good a quarrell.

And you my dearly beloved, for the Lord Jeſus Chriſts ſake, I humbly and heartily in his bowels and bloud do now, for my laſt Vale and farewell in this preſent life, beſeech you and every of you, that you will conſider this work of the Lord accordingly: Firſt by me be admoniſhed to beware of hypocriſie and carnall ſecuritie; profeſſe not the Goſpel with tongue and lips only, but in heart and veritie; frame and faſhion your lives accordingly; beware Gods name be not evill ſpoken of, and the Goſpel leſſe regarded by your converſation. God forgive me that I have not ſo heartily profeſſed it as I ſhould have done, but have ſought much my ſelf therein. The Goſpel is a new doctrine to the old man; it is new wine; and therefore cannot be put in old bottels, without more great hurt then good to the bottels. If we will talk with the Lord, we muſt put off our ſhooes and carnall affections; if we will heare the voice of the Lord, we muſt waſh our garments and be holy; if we will be Chriſts Diſciples, we muſt denie our ſelves, take up our croſſe and follow Chriſt; we cannot ſerve two Maſters. If we ſeek Chriſts Kingdome, we muſt ſeek for the righteouſneſſe thereof. To this petition (Let thy Kingdome come) we muſt joyn, Thy will be done, done on earth as it is in Heaven. If we will not be doers of the word, but hearers of it only, we ſore deceive our ſelves. If we heare the Goſpel, and love it not, we declare our ſelves to be but fooles, and builders upon the ſand. The Lords Spirit hateth faining; deceitfulneſſe the Lord abhorreth; if we come to him we muſt beware that we come not with a double heart; for then may chance that God will anſwer us according to the block which is in our heart, and ſo we ſhall deceive our ſelves and others.

A leſſon againſt carnall ſecurity.

The Goſpel is a new doctrine to the old man.

Chriſtian profeſsion requireth Chriſtian converſation.

To Faith ſee that we couple a good conſcience, leſt we make a ſhipwrack. To the Lord we muſt come with feare and reverence. If we will be Goſpellers, we muſt be Chriſts; if we be Chriſts, we muſt crucifie our fleſh with the luſts and concupiſcences thereof; if we will be under grace, ſin muſt not beare rule in us. We may not come to the Lord, and draw nigh to him with our lips, and leave our hearts elſewhere, leſt the Lords wrath waxe hot, and he take from us the good remaining. In no caſe can the Kingdome of Chriſt approach to them that repent not. Therefore my dearly beloved, let us repent and be heartily ſorrie that we have ſo carnally, ſo hypocritically, ſo covetouſly, ſo vaine-gloriouſly profeſſed the Goſpel. For all theſe I confeſſe my ſelf to the glory of God, that he may cover mine offences in the day of Judgement. Let the anger and plagues of God moſt juſtly falne upon us, be applied to every one of our deſerts, that from the bottome of our hearts, every of us may ſay; It is I Lord that have ſinned againſt thee: it is my hypocriſie, my vaine-glory, my covetouſneſſe, uncleanneſſe, carnalitie, ſecuritie, idleneſſe, unthankfulneſſe, ſelf-love, and ſuch like, which have deſerved the taking away of our good King, of thy word and true religion, of thy good Miniſters by exile, priſonment, and death; it is my wickedneſſe that cauſeth ſucceſſe and increaſe of authoritie and peace to thine enemies. Oh be mercifull, be mercifull unto us. Turn to us again, O Lord of hoſts, and turn us unto thee; correct us, but not in thy fury, leſt we be conſumed in thine anger; chaſtiſe us not in thy wrathfull diſpleaſure; reprove us not, but in the midſt of thine anger remember thy mercy. For if thou mark what is done amiſſe, who ſhall be able to abide it? But with thee is mercifulneſſe, that thou mighteſt be worſhipped. Oh then be mercifull unto us, that we might truly worſhip thee. Help us, for the glory of thy name: be mercifull unto our ſins, for they are great: O heale us, and help us for thine honour. Let not the wicked people ſay, Where is their God, &c.

Faith would be coupled ever with a good conſcience.

He exhorteth to repentance.

Our ſins provoke perſecution.

He exhorteth to pray, and how to pray with repentance.

On this ſort my right dearely beloved, let us heartily bewaile our ſinnes, repent us of our former evill life, heartily and earneſtly purpoſe to amend our lives in all things, continually watch in prayer, diligently and reverently attend, heare, and reade the holy Scriptures, labour after our vocation to amend our brethren. Let us reprove the works of darkneſſe. Let us flee from all Idolatrie. Let us abhorre the Antichriſtian and Romiſh rotten ſervice, deteſt the Popiſh Maſſe, abrenounce their Romiſh god, prepare our ſelves to the Croſſe, be obedient to all that be in authoritie in all things that be not againſt God and his Word, for then anſwer with the Apoſtles; It is more meete to obey God then man. Howbeit never for any thing reſiſt, or riſe againſt the Magiſtrates. Avenge not your ſelves, but commit your cauſe to the Lord, to whom vengeance pertaineth, and he in his time will reward it. If you feele in your ſelves an hope and truſt in God, that he will never tempt you above that he will make you able to beare, be aſſured the Lord will be true to you; and you ſhall be able to beare all brunts. But if you want this hope, flee and get you hence rather then by your tarrying Gods name ſhould be diſhonoured.

We ought to depend upon Gods providence alwayes.

All our hope is only in Chriſt, and for his ſake to be received.

In ſumme, caſt your care on the Lord, knowing for moſt certain, that he is carefull for you; with him are all the haires of your head numbred, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh without his good pleaſure and will: much more then, nothing ſhall happen to our bodies, which ſhall not be profitable, howſoever for a time it ſeeme otherwiſe to your ſenſes. Hang on the providence of God, not only when you have means to help you, but alſo when you have no means, yea when all means be againſt you. Give him this honour, which of all other things he moſt chiefly requireth at your hands: namely, beleeve that you are his children through Chriſt, that he is your Father and God through him, that he loveth you, pardoneth you all your offences, he is with you in trouble, and will be with you for ever. When you fall, he will put under his hand, you ſhall not lie ſtill: before you call upon him he heareth you, out of evill he will finally bring you, and deliver you to his eternall joy. Doubt not my dearely beloved herein, doubt not (I ſay) this will God your Father do for you, not in reſpect of your ſelves, but in reſpect of Chriſt your Captain, your Paſtor, your Keeper, out of whoſe hands none ſhall be able to catch you, in him be quiet, and often conſider your dignitie: namely, how that ye be Gods children, the Saints of God, Citizens of heaven, Temples of the holy Ghoſt, the Thrones of God, members of Chriſt, and Lords over all.

To beare the Croſſe.

Mortification.

Therefore be aſhamed to think, ſpeak, or do any thing that ſhould be unſeemely for Gods children, Gods Saints, Chriſts members, &c. Marvaile not though the Divell and the world hate you, though ye be perſecuted here, for the ſervant is not above his Maſter. Covet not earthly riches, feare not the power of man, love not this world, nor things that be in this world; but long for the Lord Ieſus his coming, at which time your bodies ſhall be made like unto his glorious bodie, when he appeareth you ſhall be like unto him; when your life ſhall thus be revealed, then ſhall ye appeare with him in glory.

We muſt live in the faith of Chriſt.
The propertie of faith.

In the mean ſeaſon live in hope hereof. Let the life you leade be in the faith of the Sonne of God: For the juſt doth live by faith, which faith fleeth from all evill, and followeth the Word of God as a Lanterne to her feet, and a light to her ſteps; her eyes be above where Chriſt is, ſhe beholdeth not the things preſent, but rather things to come; ſhe glorieth in affliction, ſhe knoweth that the afflictions of this life are not like to be compared to the glorie which God will reveale to us, and in us. Of this glory God grant us here a lively taſte; then ſhall we runne after the ſent it ſendeth forth. It will make us valiant men to take to us the Kingdome of God; whether the Lord of mercy bring us in his good time through Chriſt our Lord, to whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God, be all honour and glory, world without end, Amen.

My dearly beloved, I would gladly have given here my body to have been burned for the confirmation of the true doctrine I have taught here unto you. But that my Country muſt have. Therefore I pray you take in good part this ſignification of my good will towards every of you. Impute the want herein to time and trouble. Pardon me mine offenſive and negligent behavior when I was amongſt you. With me repent, and labour to amend. Continue in the truth which I have truly taught unto you by preaching in all places where I have come, Gods name therefore be praiſed. Confeſſe Chriſt when you be called, whatſoever cometh thereof, and the God of peace be with us all, Amen. This 11. of February, Anno 1555.

Your brother in bonds for the Lords ſake;
John Bradford.

To the Univerſitie and Town of Cambridge.

Another letter of M. Bradford to the Univerſity of Cambridge.

TO all that love the Lord Ieſus and his true doctrine, being in the Univerſitie and Town of Cambridge, John Bradford a moſt unworthy ſervant of the Lord, now not only priſoned, but alſo condemned for the ſame true doctrine, wiſheth grace, peace, and mercy, with increaſe of all godlineſſe from God the Father of all mercy, through the bloudy paſſion of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, by the lively working of the holy Spirit for ever. Amen.

The Martyr is perſecuted of the Prelates not for their ſins, but only for Chriſt.
The cauſe of his condemnation declared.

Although I looke hourely when I ſhould be had to the ſtake (my right dearly beloved in the Lord) and although the charge over me is great and ſtraight; yet having by the providence of God ſecretly pen and inke, I could not but ſomething ſignifie unto you my ſolicitude which I have for you and every of you in the Lord, though not as I would, yet as I may. You have often and openly heard the truth (ſpecially in this matter wherein I am condemned) diſputed and preached, that it is needleſſe to do any more but only to put you in remembrance of the ſame: but hitherto have you not heard it confirmed, and as it were ſealed up, as now you do and ſhall heare by me, that is, by my death and burning. For albeit I have deſerved (through my uncleanneſſe, hypocriſie, avarice, vainglory, idleneſſe, unthankfulneſſe, and carnalitie, whereof I accuſe my ſelf, to my confuſion before the world, that before God through Chriſt I might, as my aſſured hope is I ſhall, finde mercie) eternall death, and hell fire, much more then this affliction and fire prepared for me: yet my dearly beloved, it is not theſe, or any of theſe things, wherefore the Prelats do perſecute me, but Gods veritie and truth; yea even Chriſt himſelf is the only cauſe and thing wherefore I am now condemned, and ſhall be burned as an Heretick, becauſe I will not grant the Antichriſt of Rome to be Chriſts Vicar generall and ſupreme head of his Church here, and every where upon earth, by Gods ordinance, and becauſe I will not grant ſuch corporall, reall, and carnall preſence of Chriſts bodie and bloud in the Sacrament, as doth tranſubſtantiate the ſubſtance of bread and wine, and is received of the wicked, yea of Dogs and Miſe. Alſo I am excommunicated, and counted as a dead member of Chriſts Church, as a rotten branch, and therefore ſhall be caſt into the fire.

Therefore ye ought heartily to rejoyce with me, and to give thankes for me, that God the eternall father hath vouchedſafe our mother to bring up any childe in whom it would pleaſe him to magnifie his holy name as he doth, and I hope for his mercie and truths ſake, will do in me, and by me. Oh, what ſuch benefit upon earth can it be, as that I, which deſerved death by reaſon of my ſinnes, ſhould be delivered to a demonſtration, a teſtification, and confirmation of Gods veritie and truth? Thou my mother the Univerſitie haſt not only had the truth of Gods Word plainly manifeſted unto thee by reading, diſputing and preaching publikely and privately; but now to make thee altogether excuſeleſſe, and as it were, almoſt to ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, if thou put to thy helping hand with the Romiſh rout to ſuppreſſe the veritie, and ſet out the contrarie, thou haſt my life and bloud as a ſeale to confirme thee, if thou wilt be confirmed, or elſe to confound thee, and beare witneſſe againſt thee, if thou wilt take part with the Prelates and Clergie, which now fill up the meaſure of their fathers which ſlew the Prophets and Apoſtles, that all the righteous bloud from Abel to Bradford, ſhed upon earth, may be required at their hands.

A great mercy of God to turn the death of his ſaints juſtly deſerved to ſerve for a confirmation of his own glory.

Cantabrigienſes bene moniti.

Of this therefore I thought good before my death, as time and libertie would ſuffer me (for love and duetie I beare unto thee) to admoniſh thee good Mother, and my ſiſter the Town, that you would call to minde from whence you are falne, and ſtudie to do the firſt workes. You know (if you will) theſe matters of the * Romiſh ſupremacie, and the Antichriſtian Tranſubſtantiation, whereby Chriſts Supper is overthrown, his Prieſthood evacuate, his ſacrifice fruſtrate, the Miniſterie of his word unplaced, repentance repelled, faith fainted, godlineſſe extinguiſhed, the maſſe maintained, idolatrie ſupported, and all impietie cheriſhed: you know I ſay (if you will) that theſe opinions are not only beſides Gods Word, but even directly againſt it, and therefore to take part with them, is to take part againſt God, againſt whom you cannot prevaile.

* Read before the letter of Cambridge to King Henry 8.

Therefore for the tender mercie of Chriſt, in his bowels and bloud I beſeech you, to take Chriſts collyrium and eye ſalve to annoint your eyes, that you may ſee what you do and have done in admitting (as I heare you have admitted, yea, alas authoriſed, and by conſent confirmed) the Romiſh rotten rags, which once you utterly expelled. O be not Canis reverſus ad vomitum. Be not * Sus lota reverſa ad volutabrum cœni. Beware leſt the Satan enter in with ſeven other ſpirits, and then poſtrema ſhall be worſe then the firſt. It had been better yee had never known the truth, then after knowledge to run from it. Ah, woe to this world and the things therein, which hath now ſo wrought with you. Oh that ever this dirt of the Divell ſhould daube up the eye of the Realm. For thou O mother art as the eye of the Realm. If thou be light and give ſhine, all the bodie ſhall fare the better: But if thou the light be darkneſſe, alas how great will the darkneſſe be? What is man whoſe breath is in his noſtrels, that thou ſhould thus be affraid of him?

* The dog returned to his own vomit. The Sow that was waſhed returned to her wallowing in the mire. 2 Pet. 2.

Oh what is honour and life here? Bubbles. What is glorie in this world, but ſhame? Why art thou affraid to carry Chriſts Croſſe? Wilt thou come into his Kingdome, and not drink of his cup? Doſt thou not know Rome to be Babylon? Doſt thou not know that as the old Babylon had the children of Judah in captivitie, ſo hath this Rome the true Judah, that is, the confeſſors of Chriſt? Doſt thou not know that as deſtruction hapned unto it, ſo ſhall it do unto this? And troweſt thou that God will not deliver his people now when the time is come, as he did then? Hath not God commanded his people to come out from her? and wilt thou give enſample to the whole Realme to run unto her? Haſt thou forgotten the wo that Chriſt threatneth to offence givers? Wilt thou not remember that it were better that a milſtone were hanged about thy neck, and thou thrown into the Sea, then that thou ſhouldeſt offend the little ones?

The glory of this world is a vaine thing.

Babylon hath Juda in captivitie.

And alas, how haſt thou offended? Yea, and how doſt thou ſtill offend? Wilt thou conſider things according to the outward ſhew? Was not the Synagogue more ſeemely and like to be the true Church, then the ſimple flock of Chriſts Diſciples? Hath not the whore of Babylon more coſtly aray, and rich apparrell externally to ſet forth her ſelf, then the homely houſewife of Chriſt? Where is the beauty of the Kings daughter the Church of Chriſt? Without or within? Doth not David ſay, within? O remember that as they are happy which are not offended at Chriſt, ſo are they happy which are not offended at his poore Church. Can the Pope and his Prelates mean honeſtly, which make ſo much of the wife and ſo little of the husband? The Church they magnifie, but Chriſt they contemne. If this Church were an honeſt woman (that is, Chriſts wife) except they would make much of her husband, Chriſt and his Word, ſhe would not be made much of them.

The Church ſtandeth not in the outward ſhew.

When Chriſt and his Apoſtles were upon earth, who was more like to be the true Church, they or the Prelates, Biſhops, and Synagogue? If a man ſhould have followed cuſtome, unitie, antiquitie, or the more part, ſhould not Chriſt and his company have been caſt out of the doores? Therefore bade Chriſt, Search the Scriptures. And good mother, ſhall the ſervant be above his Maſter? Shall we look for other entertainment at the hands of the World, then Chriſt and his deare Diſciples found? Who was taken in Noes time for the Church? Poore Noe and his familie, or others? Who was taken for Gods Church in Sodome? Lot, or others? And doth not Chriſt ſay; As it was then, ſo ſhall it go now towards the coming of the Sonne of man? What meaneth Chriſt when he ſaith; Iniquitie ſhall have the upper hand? Doth not he tell, that charitie ſhall waxe cold? And who ſeeth not a wonderfull great lack of charitie in thoſe, which would now be taken for Chriſts Church? All that feare God in this Realme truely can tell more of this then I can write.

Cuſtome, Unitie, Antiquitie, Conſent of multitude are markes deceiveable.

Therefore deare mother, receive ſome admonition of one of thy poore children, now going to be burned for the teſtimony of Jeſus. Come againe to Gods truth; come out of Babylon; confeſſe Chriſt and his true doctrine; repent that which is paſt; make amends by declaring thy repentance by the fruits. Remember the readings and preachings of Gods Prophet the true Preacher Martin Bucer. Call to minde the threatnings of God, now ſomething ſeen by thy children Leaver and others. Let the exile of Leaver, Pilkington, Grindall, Haddon, Horne, Scorie, Ponet, &c. ſomething awake thee. Let the impriſonment of thy deare Sonnes, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer move thee. Conſider the Martyrdome of thy Chickens, Rogers, Saunders, Taylor. And now caſt not away the poore admonition of me going to be burned alſo, and to receive the like Crown of glorie with my fellows. Take to heart Gods calling by us. Be not as Pharaoh was: for then will it happen unto thee as it did unto him. What is that? hardneſſe of heart. And what then? Deſtruction eternally both of bodie and ſoule. Ah therefore good mother awake, awake, repent, repent, buskle thy ſelfe, and make haſte to turn to the Lord. For elſe it ſhall be more eaſie for Sodome and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for thee. O harden not your hearts; O ſtop not your ears to day in hearing Gods voyce, though it be by a moſt unworthy meſſenger. O fear the Lord: for his anger is begun to kindle. Even now the axe is laid to the root of the tree.

Bradford propheſies before the ſweat time what would follow of carnall Goſpelling, if repentance did not come.

You know I prophecied truly to you before the Sweat came, what would come, if you repented not your carnall Goſpelling. And now I tell you before I depart hence, that the ears of men will tingle to hear the vengeance of God that will fall upon you all, both Town and Univerſity, if you repent not, if you leave not your idolatry, if you turn not ſpeedily to the Lord, if you ſtill be aſhamed of Chriſts truth which you know.

Perne, Thomſon. He teacheth Cambridge to pray.

Oh Perne repent, Oh Thomſon repent, Oh you Doctors, Batchelors, and Maſters repent: Oh Maior, Aldermen, and Towne-dwellers repent, repent, repent, that you may eſcape the neer vengeance of the Lord. Rent your hearts, and come apace, calling on the Lord. Let us all ſay, Peccavimus, we have all ſinned, we have done wickedly, we have not hearkened to thy voyce, O Lord. Deale not with us after our deſerts, but be mercifull to our iniquities, for they are great. Oh pardon our offences. In thine anger remember thy mercie. Turn us unto thee, O Lord God of hoſts, for the glorie of thy names ſake. Spare us, and be mercifull unto us. Let not the wicked people ſay; Where is now their God? O for thine own ſake, for thy names ſake, deale mercifully with us. Turn thy ſelf unto us, and us unto thee, and we ſhall praiſe thy name for ever.

Gods mercy promiſed to Cambridge if it repent.

If in this ſort (my dearely beloved) in heart and mouth we come unto our Father, and proſtrate our ſelves before the throne of his grace, then ſurely, ſurely we ſhall finde mercie. Then ſhall the Lord looke merrily upon us, for his mercy ſake in Chriſt: then ſhall we heare him ſpeak peace unto his people. For he is gracious and mercifull of great pitie and compaſſion: he cannot be chiding for ever: his anger cannot laſt long to the penitent. Though we weep in the morning, yet at night we ſhall have our ſorrow to ceaſe. For he is exorable, and hath no pleaſure in the death of a ſinner: he rather would our converſion and turning.

Cambridge threatned if it repented not.

Oh turn ye now and convert yet once again I humbly beſeech you, and then the Kingdome of Heaven ſhall draw nigh. The eye hath not ſeene, the eare hath not heard, nor the heart of man is able to conceive the joyes prepared for us if we repent, amend our lives, and heartily turne to the Lord. But if yee repent not, but be as you were, and go on forwards with the wicked, following the faſhion of the world, the Lord will leade you on with wicked doers, you ſhall periſh in your wickedneſſe, your bloud will be upon your own heads, your part ſhall be with hypocrites, where ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, yee ſhall be caſt from the face of the Lord for ever and ever: eternall ſhame, ſorrow, woe, and miſery, ſhall be both in body and ſoule to you, world without end. Oh therefore, right deare to me in the Lord, turn you, turn you, repent you, repent you, amend, amend your lives, depart from evill, do good, follow peace and purſue it. Come out from Babylon, caſt off the workes of darkneſſe, put on Chriſt, confeſſe his truth, be not aſhamed of his Goſpel, prepare your ſelves to the Croſſe, drink of Gods Cup before it come to the dregs, and then ſhall I with you and for you, rejoyce in the day of judgement, which is at hand, and therefore prepare your ſelves thereto, I heartily beſeech you. And thus I take my Vale in æternum, with you in this preſent life, mine own deare hearts in the Lord. The Lord of mercie be with us all, and give us a joyfull and ſure meeting in his Kingdome, Amen, Amen. Out of priſon the eleventh of February, Anno 1555.

Your own in the Lord for ever,
Iohn Bradford.

To Lancaſhire and Cheſhire.

Another letter of M. Bradford to Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and ſpecially to Mancheſter.

TO all thoſe that profeſſe the name and true religion of our Saviour Chriſt in Lancaſhire and Cheſhire, and ſpecially abiding in Mancheſter and thereabout, John Bradford a moſt unworthy ſervant of the Lord, now not only in bonds, but alſo condemned for the ſame true religion, wiſheth mercie and grace, peace, and increaſe of all godlineſſe from God the Father of all pitie, through the deſerts of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by the working of the moſt mighty and lively ſpirit the comforter for ever, Amen.

I heard it reported credibly, my dearely beloved in the Lord, that my Heavenly Father hath thought it good to provide, that as I have preached his true doctrine and Goſpel amongſt you by word, ſo I ſhall teſtifie and confirme the ſame by deed, that is, I ſhall with you leave my life, which by his providence I firſt received there (for in Mancheſter was I borne) for a ſeale to the doctrine I have taught with you, and amongſt you: ſo that if from henceforth you waver in the ſame, you have none excuſe at all. I know the enemies of Chriſt, which exerciſe this crueltie upon me (I ſpeak in reſpect of mine offence which is none to themwards) think by killing of me amongſt you to affray you and others, leſt they ſhould attempt to teach Chriſt truely, or beleeve his doctrine hereafter. But I doubt not but my heavenly Father will by my death, more confirme you in his truth for ever. And therefore I greatly rejoyce to ſee Satan and his ſouldiers ſupplanted in their own ſapience, which is plain fooliſhneſſe amongſt the wiſe indeed, that is, amongſt ſuch as have heard Gods Word, and do follow it: for they only are counted wiſe of the wiſedome of God our Saviour.

He confeſſeth his ſinnes before God.

Indeed if I ſhould ſimply conſider my life with that which it ought to have been, and as God in his Law requireth, then could I not but cry as I do, Iuſtus es Domine, & omnia judicia tua vera. i. e. Righteous art thou, O Lord, and all thy judgements are true. For I have much grieved thee, and tranſgreſſed thy holy precepts, not only before my profeſſing the Goſpel, but ſithence alſo: yea, ſithence my coming into priſon I do not excuſe, but accuſe my ſelf before God and all his Church, that I have grievouſly offended my Lord God, I have not loved his Goſpel as I ſhould have done, I have ſought my ſelf, and not ſimply and only his glorie and my brethrens commoditie, I have been too unthankfull, ſecure, carnall, hypocriticall, vaine-glorious, &c. All which my evills, the Lord of mercie pardon me for his Chriſts ſake, as I hope and certainly beleeve he hath done for his great mercie in Chriſt our Redeemer.

The Papiſts condemne not Bradford but Chriſt.

But when I conſider the cauſe of my condemnation, I cannot but lament, that I do no more rejoyce then I do. For it is Gods veritie and truth; So that the condemnation is not a condemnation of Bradford ſimply, but rather a condemnation of Chriſt and of his truth. Bradford is nothing elſe but an inſtrument in whom Chriſt and his doctrine is condemned. And therefore my dearely beloved, rejoyce, rejoyce and give thankes with me and for me, that ever God did vouchſafe ſo great a benefit to our countrey, as to chooſe the moſt unworthy (I meane my ſelfe) to be one, in whom it would pleaſe him to ſuffer any kinde of affliction: much more this violent kinde of death, which I perceive is prepared for me with you for his ſake. All glorie and praiſe be given unto God our Father, for his great and exceeding mercie towards me, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

D. Pendleton recanted firſt in K. Edwards time, and now again in Q. Maries time.

But perchance you will ſay unto me; what is the cauſe for the which you are condemned? We heare ſay, that yee deny all preſence of Chriſt in his holy Supper, and ſo make it a bare ſigne and common bread, and nothing elſe. My dearely beloved, what is ſaid of me, and what will be, I cannot tell. It is told me that Pendleton is gone down to preach with you, not as he once recanted (for you all know he hath preached contrary to that he was wont to preach afore I came amongſt you) but to recant that which he hath recanted. How he will ſpeak of me, and report before I come, when I am come, and when I am burned, I much paſſe not: for he that is ſo uncertain, and will ſpeak ſo often againſt himſelf, I cannot think he will ſpeak well of me, except it make for his purpoſe and profit: but of this enough.

The cauſe why M. Brad. was condemned.

Tranſubſtantiation the divels darling, and daughter of Antichriſt.

Indeed the chief thing which I am condemned for, as an heretick, is becauſe I deny in the Sacrament of the altar (which is not Chriſts ſupper, but a plain perverting of it, being uſed as the Papiſts now uſe it) to be a reall, naturall, and corporall preſence of Chriſts bodie and bloud, under the formes and accidents of bread and wine, that is, becauſe I deny Tranſubſtantiation, which is the darling of the Divell, and daughter and heire to Antichriſts religion, whereby the Maſſe is maintained, Chriſts ſupper perverted, his ſacrifice and croſſe imperfected, his Prieſthood deſtroyed, the miniſtery taken away, repentance repelled, and all true godlineſſe abandoned. In the Supper of our Lord, or Sacrament of Chriſts body and bloud, I confeſſe and beleeve that there is a true, and very preſence of the whole Chriſt, God and man, to the faith of the receiver (but not of the ſtander by and looker on) as there is a very true preſence of bread and wine to the ſenſes of him that is partaker thereof. This faith, this doctrine, which conſenteth with the Word of God, and with the true teſtimonie of Chriſts Church, (which the Popiſh Church doth perſecute) will I not forſake, and therefore am I condemned as an heretick, and ſhall be burned. But my dearely beloved, this truth (which I have taught, and you have received, I beleeved, and do beleeve, and therein give my life) I hope in God ſhall never be burned, bound, nor overcome: but ſhall triumph, have victorie, and be at libertie, maugre the head of all Gods adverſaries. For there is no counſeil againſt the Lord, nor can any device of man be able to defeat the veritie in any other then ſuch as be children of unbeleefe, which have no love to the truth, and therefore are given up to beleeve lies. From which plague the Lord of mercie deliver you and all the Realme, my deare hearts in the Lord, I humbly beſeech his mercie, Amen.

M. Bradfords farewell to the countrey of Lancaſhire.

And to the end you might be delivered from this plague, (right deare to me in the Lord) I ſhall for my farewell with you for ever in this preſent life, heartily deſire you all in the bowels and bloud of our moſt mercifull Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to attend unto theſe things which I now ſhall ſhortly write unto you out of the holy Scriptures of the Lord.

Gods manifold plagues upon England in Q. Maries dayes.

You know an heavie plague (or rather plagues) of God is falne upon us, in taking away our good King, and true Religion, Gods true Prophets and Miniſters, &c. And ſetting over us, ſuch as ſeek not the Lord after knowledge: whoſe endevours God proſpereth wonderfully to the tryall of many, that his people may both better know themſelves, and be known. Now the cauſe hereof is our iniquities and grievous ſinnes. We did not know the time of our viſitation: we were unthankfull unto God: we contemned the Goſpel, and carnally abuſed it, to ſerve our hypocriſie, our vaine glory, our viciouſneſſe, avarice, idleneſſe, ſecuritie, &c. Long did the Lord linger, and tarry to have ſhewed mercie upon us, but we were ever the longer the worſe. Therefore moſt juſtly hath God dealt with us, and dealeth with us: yea, yet we may ſee that his juſtice is tempered with much mercie, whereto let us attribute that we are not utterly conſumed. For if the Lord ſhould deale with us after our deſerts, alas, how could we abide it? In his anger therefore, ſeeing he doth remember his mercie undeſerved (yea undeſired on our behalf) let us take occaſion the more ſpeedily to go out to meete him, not with force of armes (for we are not ſo able to withſtand him, much leſſe to prevaile againſt him) but to beſeech him to be mercifull unto us, and according to his wonted mercie to deale with us.

The cauſe of Gods plagues is our iniquities, and not knowing the time of Gods viſitation.

Riſing with David.

Suing with the Centurion.

Repenting with the Publican.

Returning with the loſt Sonne.

Let us ariſe with David, and ſay, Ne intres in judicium cum ſervo tuo, &c. i. e. Enter not into judgement with thy ſervant O Lord: for in thy ſight no fleſh living ſhall be juſtified. Let us ſend Embaſſadors with the Centurion, and ſay, Lord, we are not worthy to come our ſelves unto thee, Speak the word, and we ſhall have peace. Let us penitently with the Publican looke down on the earth, knock our hard hearts to burſt them, and cry out, O God be mercifull unto us wretched ſinners. Let us with the loſt Sonne return and ſay, O Father, we have ſinned againſt heaven and earth, and before thee; we are unworthy to be called thy children. Let us I ſay do on this ſort, that is heartily repent us of our former evill life, and unthankefull Goſpelling paſt, convert and turn to God with our whole hearts, hoping in his great mercie through Chriſt, and heartily calling upon his holy name, and then undoubtedly we ſhall finde and feele otherwiſe then yet we feele, both inwardly and outwardly. Inwardly we ſhall feele peace of conſcience between God and us, which peace paſſeth all underſtanding, and outwardly we ſhall feele much mitigation of theſe miſeries, if not an utter taking of them away.

Bradfords ultimum vale.

Therefore my dearly beloved in the Lord, I your pooreſt brother now departing to the Lord, for my Vale in æternum, for this preſent life, pray you, beſeech you, and even from the very bottome of my heart, for all the mercies of God in Chriſt ſhewed unto you, moſt earneſtly beg and crave of you out of priſon (as often out of your Pulpits I have done) that you will repent you, leave your wicked and evill life, be ſorrie for your offences, and turn to the Lord, whoſe armes are wide open to receive and imbrace you, whoſe ſtretched out hand to ſtrike to death ſtayeth that he may ſhew mercie upon you. For he is the Lord of mercie, and God of all comfort, he will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that yee ſhould return, convert, and amend. He hath no pleaſure in the deſtruction of men; his long ſuffering draweth to repentance before the time of vengeance, and the day of wrath which is at hand, doth come.

The day of Gods wrath at hand.

Now is the axe laid to the roote of the tree utterly to deſtroy the impenitent. Now is the fire gone out before the face of the Lord, and who is able to quench it? Oh therefore repent you, repent you. It is enough to have lived as we have done. It is enough to have played the wanton Goſpellers, the proud Proteſtants, hypocriticall and falſe Chriſtians, as alas, we have done. Now the Lord ſpeaketh to us in mercie and grace; Oh turn before he ſpeaketh in wrath. Yet is there mercie with the Lord, and plenteous redemption: yet he hath not forgotten to ſhew mercie to them that call upon him. Oh then call upon him while he may be found. For he is rich in mercie, and plentifull to all them that call upon him. So that he that calleth on the Name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved. If your ſins be as red as ſcarlet, the Lord ſaith, he will make them as white as ſnow. He hath ſworn, and never will repent him thereof, that he will never remember our iniquities: but as he is good, faithfull, and true, ſo will he be our God, and we ſhall be his people; his law will he write in our hearts, and ingraff in our mindes, and never will he have in minde our unrighteouſneſſe.

Wanton Goſpellers. Proud Proteſtants. Falſe Chriſtians.

Bradford propheſied of theſe plagues before.

Therefore my dear hearts in the Lord, turn you, turn you to the Lord your father, to the Lord your Saviour, to the Lord your Comforter. Oh why do you ſtop your ears, and harden your hearts to day, when you hear his voice by me your pooreſt brother? Oh forget not how that the Lord hath ſhewed himſelf true, and me his true Preacher, by bringing to paſſe theſe plagues which at my mouth you oft heard before they came to paſſe, ſpecially when I intreated of Noahs flood, and when I preached of the twenty two chapter of S. Matthews Goſpel, on S. Stevens day the laſt time that I was with you. And now by me the Lord ſendeth you word (dear countrymen) that if you will go on forward in your impenitencie, carnality, hypocriſie, idolatry, covetouſneſſe, ſwearing, gluttony, drunkenneſſe, whoredom, &c. (wherewith alas, alas our country floweth:) if (I ſay) you will not turn and leave off ſeeing me now burned amongſt you, to aſſure you on all ſides how God ſeeketh you, and is ſorry to do you hurt, to plague you, to deſtroy you, to take vengeance upon you; Oh your blood will be upon your own heads: you have been warned, and warned again, by me in preaching, by me in burning.

Deſtruction threatned to them that repent not.

Precepts of life.

As I ſaid therefore, I ſay again, my dear hearts and dearlings in the Lord, turn you, turn you, repent you, ceaſe from doing evill, ſtudy to do well, away with Idolatry, flye the Romiſh God and ſervice, leave off from ſwearing, cut off carnality, abandon avarice, drive away drunkenneſſe, flye from fornication and flattery, murther and malice, deſtroy deceitfulneſſe, and caſt away all the works of darkneſſe. Put on pity and godlineſſe, ſerve God after his word, and not after cuſtome, uſe your tongues to glorifie God by prayer, thankſgiving, and confeſſion of his truth, &c. be ſpirituall, and by the ſpirit mortifie carnall affections, be ſober, holy, true, loving, gentle, mercifull, and then ſhall the Lords wrath ceaſe, not for this our doings ſake, but for his mercies ſake. Go to therefore (good countrymen) take this counſell of the Lord, by me now ſent unto you, as the Lords counſell, and not as mine, that in the day of judgement I may rejoyce with you, and for you; the which thing I heartily deſire, and not to be a witneſſe againſt you. My blood will cry for vengeance, as againſt the Papiſts Gods enemies (whom I beſeech God, if it be his will, heartily to forgive, yea, even them which put me to death, and are the cauſers thereof, for they know not what they do) ſo will my blood cry for vengeance againſt you (my dearly beloved in the Lord) if ye repent not, amend not, and turn unto the Lord.

Good counſell given.

Bradfords blood will cry againſt the refuſers of his counſell.

Turn unto the Lord yet once more, I heartily beſeech thee thou Mancheſter, thou Aſhton-underline, thou Bolton, Bury, Wigine, Lierpool, Motrine, Steppor, Winſley, Eccles, Prieſtwich, Middleton, Radclief, and thou City of Weſtcheſter, where I have truly taught and preached the word of God. Turn I ſay unto you all, and to all the inhabitants thereabouts, unto the Lord our God, and he will turn unto you, he will ſay unto his Angel, It is enough, put up the ſword. The which thing that he will do, I humbly beſeech his goodneſſe, for the precious bloods ſake of his dear Son, our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Ah good brethren, take in good part theſe my laſt words unto every one of you. Pardon me mine offences and negligences in behaviour amongſt you. The Lord of mercie pardon us all our offences, for our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts ſake, Amen. Out of priſon, ready to come to you, the eleventh of February, Anno 1555.

To the Town of Walden.

Another letter of M. Bradford to the town of Walden.

To the faithfull, and ſuch as profeſſe the true doctrine of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, dwelling at Walden and thereabouts, John Bradford a moſt unworthy ſervant of the Lord, now in bands and condemned for the ſame true doctrine, wiſheth grace, mercie, and peace, with the increaſe of all godlineſſe in knowledge and living, from God the Father of all comfort, through the deſerts of our alone and full Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, by the mighty working of the moſt holy ſpirit, the comforter for ever, Amen.

When I remember, how that by the providence and grace of God I have been a man, by whom it hath pleaſed him through my miniſtery to call you to repentance and amendment of life, ſomething effectually, as it ſeemed, and to ſow amongſt you his true doctrine and religion, leſt that by my affliction, and ſtorms now ariſen to try the faithfull, and to conform them like to the Image of the Son of God, into whoſe company we are called, you might be faint-hearted; I could not but out of priſon ſecretly (for my Keepers may not know that I have pen and ink) write unto you a ſignification of the deſire I have, that you ſhould not onely be more confirmed in the doctrine I have taught amongſt you, which I take on my death, as I ſhall anſwer at the day of doom, I am perſwaded to be Gods aſſured, infallible, and plain truth; but alſo ſhould after your vocation avow the ſame by confeſſion, profeſſion, and living. I have not taught you my dearly beloved in the Lord) fables, tales, or untruths, but I have taught you the verity, as now by my blood, gladly (praiſed be God therefore) I do ſeal the ſame.

M. Bradford anſwereth with his blood for his doctrine.

M. Bradford accuſeth againſt his own life.

Indeed to confeſſe the truth unto you, and to all the Church of Chriſt, I do not think of my ſelf, but that I have moſt juſtly deſerved, not onely this kinde, but alſo all kindes of death, and that eternally, for mine hypocriſie, vaine-glorie, uncleanneſſe, ſelf-love, covetouſneſſe, idleneſſe, unthankfulneſſe, and carnall profeſſing of Gods holy Goſpel, living therein not ſo purely, lovingly, and painfully as I ſhould have done. The Lord of mercie for the bloud ſake of Chriſt pardon me, as I hope, yea, I certainly believe he hath done for his holy names ſake through Chriſt. But my dearely beloved, you and all the whole world may ſee, and eaſily perceive, that the Prelates perſecute in me another thing then mine iniquities, even Chriſt himſelf, Chriſts veritie and truth, because I cannot, dare not, nor will not confeſſe Tranſubſtantiation, and how that wicked men, yea Mice and Dogs eating the Sacrament, which they term of the Altar, thereby overthrowing Chriſts holy Supper utterly, do eate Chriſts naturall and reall body born of the Virgin Mary;

Chriſt himſelf perſecuted in his Martyrs.

To beleeve and confeſſe as Gods word teacheth, the primitive Church beleeved, and all the Catholike and good holy fathers taught 500. yeers at the leaſt after Chriſt, that in the Supper of the Lord (which the Maſſe overthroweth, as it doth Chriſts Prieſthood, ſacrifice, death, and paſſion, the miniſtery of his word, true faith, repentance, and all godlineſſe) whole Chriſt, God and man, is preſent by grace to the faith of the receivers, but not of the ſtanders by and lookers on, as bread and wine is to their ſenſes, will not ſerve: and therefore I am condemned and ſhall be burned out of hand as an Heretike. Wherefore I heartily thank my Lord God, that will and doth vouch me worthy to be an inſtrument, in whom he himſelf doth ſuffer. For you ſee my affliction and death is not ſimply, becauſe I have deſerved no leſſe, but much more at his hands and juſtice: but rather becauſe I confeſſe his verity and truth, and am not afraid through his gift that to do, that you alſo might be confirmed in his truth. Therefore my dearly beloved, I heartily do pray you, and ſo many as unfainedly love me in God, to give with me and for me moſt hearty thanks to our heavenly Father, through our ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, for this his exceeding great mercie towards me and you alſo, that your faith waver not from the doctrine I have taught, and ye have received. For what can you deſire more, to aſſure your conſciences of the verity taught by your Preachers, than their own lives?

M. Bradford perſecuted for confeſsing the truth.

Go to therefore my dear hearts in the Lord, waver not in Chriſts religion truly taught you, and ſet forth in King Edwards dayes. Never ſhall the enemies be able to burn it, and priſon it, and keep it in bonds. As they may priſon, they may binde and burn as they do, and will do, ſo long as ſhall pleaſe the Lord: but our cauſe, religion, and doctrine which we confeſſe, they ſhall never be able to vanquiſh and put away. Their Idolatry and Popiſh religion ſhall never be built in the conſciences of men that love Gods truth. As for thoſe that love not Gods truth, that have no pleaſure to walk in the wayes of the Lord, in thoſe I ſay the Devill ſhall prevail: For God will give them ſtrong illuſion to beleeve lyes. Therefore, dear brethren, and ſiſters in the Lord, I humbly beſeech you, and pray you in the bowels and blood of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, now going to the death, for the teſtimony of Jeſus, as oftentimes I have done before this preſent out of your Pulpit, that you would love the Lords truth; love (I ſay) to love it, and frame your lives thereafter. Alas, you know the cauſe of all theſe plagues fallen upon us, and of the ſucceſſe which Gods adverſaries have daily, is for our not loving Gods word.

Gods truth can never be kept under by the adverſaries.

He exhorteth them to love Gods truth, and to live thereafter.

You know how that we were but Goſpellers in lips, and not in life. We were carnall, concupiſcentious, idle, unthankfull, unclean, covetous, arrogant, diſſemblers, crafty, ſubtile, malicious, falſe, backbiters, &c. and even glutted with Gods word, yea, we loathed it, as did the Iſraelites the Manna in the wilderneſſe; and therefore as to them the Lords wrath waxed hot, ſo doth it unto us. So that there is no remedy, but that (for it is better late to turn, than never to turn) we confeſſe our faults even from the bottome of our hearts, and with hearty repentance (which God work in us all for his mercies ſake) we run unto the Lord our God, which is exorable, mercifull, and ſorry for the evill poured out upon us, and cry out unto him with Daniel, ſaying; We have ſinned, we have ſinned grievouſly, Oh Lord God, againſt thy majeſty, we have heaped iniquity upon iniquity; the meaſure of our tranſgreſſions floweth over, ſo that juſtly is thy vengeance and wrath fallen upon us. For we are very miſerable, we have contemned thy long ſuffering, we have not hearkned to thy voyce. When thou haſt called us by Preachers, we hardned our hearts, and therefore now deſerve that thou ſend thy curſe hereupon to harden our hearts alſo, that we ſhould henceforth have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not, hearts and underſtand not, leſt we ſhould convert and be ſaved. Oh be mercifull unto us; ſpare us good Lord, and all thy people, whom thou haſt dearly bought. Let not thine enemies triumph altogether, and alwayes againſt thee, for then will they be puft up. Look down and behold the pitifull complaints of the poor; let the ſorrowfull ſighing of the ſimple come in thy ſight, and be not angry with us for ever. Turn us O Lord God of hoſts unto thee, and turn thee unto us, that thou maiſt be juſtified in thy ſweet ſentences, and overcome when thou art judged, as now thou art of our adverſaries. For they ſay, Where is their God? Can God deliver them now? Can their Goſpel ſerve them? Oh Lord how long? for the glory of thy name, and for thy honours ſake, in the bowels and blood of Jeſus Chriſt, we humbly beſeech thee, come and help us, for we are very miſerable.

Gods Goſpel abuſed.

Gods Goſpel loathed.

He exhorteth to repentance and prayer, and to bewail our ſins before the Lord our God.

On this ſort I ſay dearly beloved, let us publikely and privately bewail our ſins; but ſo that hereto we joyn ceaſing from wilfulneſſe and ſin of purpoſe, for elſe the Lord heareth not our prayers, as David ſaith. And in S. John it is written; The impenitent ſinners God heareth not. Now, impenitent are they which purpoſe not to amend their lives: As for example, not onely ſuch which follow ſtill their pleaſures, uncleanneſſe, carnality; but thoſe alſo which for fear or favour of men, do againſt their conſcience conſent to the Romiſh rags, and reſort to the rotten religion, communicating in ſervice and ceremonies with the Papiſts, thereby declaring themſelves to love more the world than God, to fear man more than Chriſt, to dread more the loſſe of temporall things than ſpirituall; in whom it is evident that the love of God abideth not. For he that loveth the world, hath not Gods word abiding in him, ſaith S. John: therefore my dear hearts, and dear again in the Lord, remember what you have profeſſed, Chriſts religion and name, and the renouncing of the devil, ſin, and the world.

The prayers of ſinners be not heard.

Romiſh rags and rotten religion.

Remember that before ye learned A. B. C. your leſſon was Chriſts Croſſe. Forget not that Chriſt will have no Diſciples, but ſuch as will promiſe to deny themſelves, and take up their Croſſe (mark, take it up) and follow him, and not the multitude, cuſtome, &c. Conſider for Gods ſake, that if we gather not with Chriſt, we ſcatter abroad. What ſhould it profit a man to win the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? We muſt not forget that this life is a Wilderneſſe, and not a Paradiſe: here is not our home, we are now in warfare: we muſt needs fight, or elſe be taken priſoners. Of all things we have in this life, we ſhall carry nothing with us. If Chriſt be our Captain, we muſt follow him as ſouldiers. If we keep company with him in affliction, we ſhall be ſure of his ſociety in glory. If we forſake not him, he will never forſake us. If we confeſſe him, he will confeſſe us; but if we deny him, he will deny us. If we be aſhamed of him, he will be aſhamed of us. Wherefore, as he forſook his Father, and Heaven, and all things to come to us, ſo let us forſake all things and come to him, being ſure and moſt certain that we ſhall not loſe thereby. Your children ſhall finde and feel it double, yea treble, whatſoever you loſe for the Lords ſake; and you ſhall finde and feel peace of conſcience, and friendſhip with God, which is more worth than all the goods of the world.

The A.B.C. of the Chriſtians beginneth with Chriſts Croſſe.

They never loſe that follow Chriſt.

He exhorteth to amendment in religion and converſation.

My dearly beloved, therefore for the Lords ſake, conſider theſe things which I now write unto you of love, for my vale, and laſt farewell for ever in this preſent life. Turn to the Lord, repent you of your evill and unthankfull life, declare repentance by the fruits; take time while ye have it; come to the Lord whiles he calleth you; run into his lap, whiles his arms be open to imbrace you; ſeek him whiles he may be found; call upon him whiles time is convenient; forſake and flye from all evill, both in religion, and in the reſt of your life and converſation. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and praiſe God in the day of his viſitation. Oh come again, come again you ſtrange children, and I will receive you, ſaith the Lord. Convert and turn to me, and I will turn unto you. Why, will ye needs periſh? As ſure as I live (ſweareth the Lord) I will not your death; turn therefore unto me. Can a woman forget the childe of her womb? if ſhe ſhould, yet I will not forget you, ſaith the Lord your God. I am he, I am he which put away your ſins for mine own ſake.

The Lord watcheth to perform his word double wiſe.

Oh then dear friends, turn I ſay unto your deareſt Father. Caſt not theſe ſweet and loving words to the ground, and at your tail; for the Lord watcheth on his word to perform it: which is in two ſorts; to them that lay it up in their hearts, and beleeve it, will he pay all, and eternall joy and comfort. But to them that caſt it at their backs, and will forget it, to them (I ſay) will he pour out indignation and eternall ſhame. Wherefore I heartily yet once more beſeech and pray you, and every of you, not to contemn this poor and ſimple exhortation, which now out of priſon I make unto you, or rather the Lord by me. Loath would I be a witneſſe againſt you in the laſt day; as of truth I muſt be if ye repent not, if ye love not Gods Goſpel, yea, if ye love it not.

Bradford muſt be a witneſſe in the laſt day to them that reject his counſel.

Therefore (to conclude) repent, love Gods Goſpel, live in it all your converſation, ſo ſhall Gods name be praiſed, his plagues be mitigated, his people comforted, and his enemies aſhamed. Grant all this, thou gracious Lord God, to every one of us for thy dear Sons ſake, our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: To whom with thee and the holy Ghoſt be eternall glory for ever and ever, Amen. The 12. of February, Anno 1555.

By the Bondman of our Lord, and your afflicted poor brother,
Iohn Bradford.

To my loving brethren, B.C. &c. their wives and whole families, I. Bradford.

Another letter of M. Bradford to certain friends of his, whom for danger of that time he would not name.

I Beſeech the everliving God to grant you all, my good brethren and ſiſters, the comfort of the holy Spirit, and the continuall ſenſe of his mercie in Chriſt our Lord, now and for ever, Amen.

Gods anger and mercy both together upon his Church.

The world (my brethren) ſeemeth to have the upper hand, iniquity overfloweth, the truth and verity ſeemeth to be oppreſſed, and they which take part therewith, are unjuſtly intreated; as they which love the truth, lament to ſee and hear, as they do. The cauſe of all this, is Gods anger, and mercie: his anger, becauſe we have grievouſly ſinned againſt him; his mercie, becauſe he here puniſheth us, and as a farther nurtureth us. We have been unthankfull for his word; We have contemned his kindeneſſe; We have been negligent in prayer; We have been ſo carnall, covetous, licentious, &c. We have not haſtned to heaven-ward, but rather to hell-ward. We were fallen almoſt into an open contempt of God, and all his good ordinances; ſo that of his juſtice he could no longer forbear, but make us feel his anger, as now he hath done, in taking his word and true ſervice from us, and permitting Satan to ſerve us with Antichriſtian religion, and that in ſuch ſort, that if we will not yeeld to it, and ſeem to allow it in deed and outward fact, our bodies are like to be laid in priſon, and our goods given we cannot tell to whom.

The contempt of God and his Goſpel puniſhed.

Exhortation to repentance and amendment.

This ſhould we look upon as a ſign of Gods anger procured by our ſins; which my good brethren, every of us ſhould now call to our memories oftentimes, ſo particularly as we can, that we might heartily lament them, repent them, hate them, ask earneſtly mercie for them, and ſubmit our ſelves to bear in this life any kinde of puniſhment, which God will lay upon us for them. This ſhould we do in conſideration of Gods anger in this time. Now his mercie in this time of wrath is ſeen, and ſhould be ſeen in us my dearly beloved, in this, that God doth vouchſafe to puniſh us in this preſent life. If he ſhould not have puniſhed us, do not you think that we would have continued in the evils we were in? Yes verily, we would have been worſe, and have gone forwards in hardning our hearts by impenitencie, and negligence of God and true godlineſſe. And then if death had come, ſhould not we have periſhed both ſoul and body in eternall fire in perdition? Alas, what miſery ſhould we have fallen into, if God ſhould have ſuffered us to have gone on forward in our evils? No greater ſign of danmation there is, than to lye in evill and ſin unpuniſhed of God, as now the Papiſts (my dearly beloved) are caſt into Jeſabels bed of ſecurity, which of all plagnes is the grievouſeſt plague that can be. They are baſtards and not ſons, for they are not under Gods rod of correction.

Gods mercie the cauſe why we are puniſhed here.

The end wherfore Gods Saints be afflicted in this world.

A great mercie it is therefore, that God doth puniſh us: For if he loved us not, he would not puniſh us. Now doth he chaſtiſe us, that we ſhould not be damned with the world. Now doth he nurture us, becauſe he favoureth us. Now may we think our ſelves Gods houſe and children, becauſe he beginneth his chaſtiſing at us: Now calleth he us to remember our ſins paſt. Wherefore? That we might repent, and ask mercie. And why? That he might forgive us, pardon us, juſtifie us, and make us his children, and ſo begin to make us here like unto Chriſt, that we might be like unto him elſewhere, even in heaven, where already we are ſet by faith with Chriſt; and at his coming in very deed we ſhall then moſt joyfully enjoy, when our ſinfull and vile bodies ſhall be made like to Chriſts glorious body, according to the power whereby he is able to make all things ſubject to himſelf.

For if we ſuffer, we ſhall raign, if we confeſſe him before men, he will confeſſe us before his Father in heaven; if we be not aſhamed of his Goſpel now, he will not be aſhamed of us in the laſt day, but will be glorified in us, crowning us with crowns of glory and endleſſe felicity: For, bleſſed are they that ſuffer perſecution for Righteouſneſſe ſake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven: Be glad (ſaith Peter) for the ſpirit of God reſteth upon you. After that you are a little afflicted, God will comfort, ſtrengthen and confirm you. And therefore my good brethren be not diſcouraged for croſſe, for priſon, or loſſe of goods, for confeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel and truth which ye have beleeved, and lively was taught amongſt you in the dayes of our late good King, and moſt holy Prince, King Edward. A ſtrait way.

I truſt you all, my dearly beloved, will conſider this gear with your ſelves, and in the Croſſe ſee Gods mercie, which is more ſweet, and to be ſet by, than life it ſelf, much more than any muck or pelf of this world. This mercie of God ſhould make you merry and cheerfull: for the afflictions of this life, are not to be compared to the joys of the life prepared for you. You know the way to Heaven is not the wide way of the world, which windeth to the Devill, but it is a ſtraight way which few walk in. For few live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, few regard the life to come, few remember the day of Judgement, few remember how Chriſt will deny them before his Father, that do deny him here, few conſider that Chriſt will be aſhamed of them in the laſt day, which are aſhamed of his truth and true ſervice, few caſt their accounts, what will be laid to their charge in the day of vengeance, few regard the condemnation of their own conſciences, in doing that which inwardly they diſallow, few love God better than their goods.

And of this I would ye were all certain, that all the hairs of your heads are numbred, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh, neither ſhall any man or Devill be able to attempt any thing, much leſſe to do any thing to you, or any of you, before your heavenly Father, which loveth you moſt tenderly, ſhall give them leave; and when he hath given them leave, they ſhall go no further than he will, nor keep you in trouble any longer than he will. Therefore caſt on him all your care, for he is carefull for you. Onely ſtudy to pleaſe him, and to keep your conſciences clean, and your bodies pure from the Idolatrous ſervice, which now every where is uſed, and God will marvellouſly and mercifully defend and comfort you; which thing he do for his holy names ſake in Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

To his dearly beloved in Chriſt, Erkinalde Rawlins, and his wife.

Another letter of M. Bradford unto a godly couple, to the ſame effect as the other before.

GOD our dear and moſt mercifull Father through Chriſt, be with you my good brother and ſiſter, as with his children for ever, and in all things ſo guide you with his holy Spirit, the leader of his people, as may be to his glory, and your own everlaſting joy and comfort in him, Amen. Becauſe I have oftentimes received from either of you comfort corporall (for the which I beſeech the Lord, as to make me thankfull, ſo to recompence you both now and eternally) I cannot but go about (Lord help hereto for thy mercies ſake) to write ſomething for your comfort ſpiritually.

Dales of affliction to the godly are joyfull: to the unrepenting ſinners be dolefull dayes.

Cleanſing dayes.

Gods phyſick not to be refuſed.

My dearly beloved, look not upon theſe dayes and the afflictions of the ſame here with us, ſimply as they ſeem unto you, that is, as diſmall dayes, and dayes of Gods vengeance, but rather as lucky dayes, and dayes of Gods fatherly kindeneſſe towards you, and ſuch as you be, that is, toward ſuch as repent their ſins and evill life paſt, and earneſtly purpoſe to amend, walking not after the will of the world, and moſt part of men, for the preſervation of their pelf, which will they, nill they, they ſhall leave ſooner or later, and to whom or how it ſhall be uſed, they know not. Indeed to ſuch as walk in their wickedneſſe, and winde on with the world, this time is a time of wrath and vengeance, and their beginning of ſorrow is but now, becauſe they contemn the phyſick of their Father, which by this purging time and cleanſing dayes would work their weal, which they will not: and becauſe they will not have Gods bleſſing, which both wayes he hath offered unto them by proſperity and adverſity; therefore it ſhall be kept far enough from them. As when the ſick man will no kinde of phyſick at the hands of the Phyſician, he is left alone, and ſo the malady increaſeth, and deſtroyeth him at the length. To ſuch men indeed theſe dayes are and ſhould be dolefull dayes, and dayes of woe and weeping, becauſe their damnation draweth nigh.

Gods chaſtiſement to be received with comfort.

God puniſheth not twice for one thing.

But unto ſuch as be penitent, and are deſirous to live after the Lords will (among whom I do not onely count you, but as far as a man may judge, I know ye are) unto ſuch I ſay this time is and ſhould be comfortable. For firſt, now your Father chaſtiſeth you and me for our ſins; for the which if he would have deſtroyed us, then would he have letten us alone, and left us to our ſelves, in nothing to take to heart his fatherly viſitation, which here it pleaſeth them to work preſently, becauſe elſewhere he will not remember our tranſgreſſions, as Paul writeth; he chaſtiſeth us in this world, leſt with the world we ſhould periſh. Therefore (my dear hearts) call to minde your ſins to lament them, and to ask mercie for them in his ſight, and withall undoubtedly beleeve to obtain pardon and aſſured forgiveneſſe of the ſame, for twice the Lord puniſheth not for one thing.

Difference between baſtards and children.

So that I ſay, firſt we have cauſe to rejoyce for theſe dayes, becauſe our Father ſuffereth us not to lye in Jeſabels bed, ſleeping in our own ſins and ſecurity, but as mindefull of us, doth correct us as his children. Whereby we may be certain, that we be no baſtards, but children; for he chaſtiſeth every childe whom he receiveth. So that they which are not partakers of his chaſtiſing, or that contemn it, declare themſelves to be baſtards, and not children, as I know ye are, which as ye are chaſtiſed, ſo do ye take it to heart accordingly. And therefore be glad my dear hearts and folks, knowing certainly even by theſe viſitations of the Lord, that ye are his dear elect children, whoſe faults your Father doth viſit with the rod of correction, but his mercie will he never take away from us, Amen.

Secondly, ye have cauſe to rejoyce for theſe dayes, becauſe they are dayes of tryall, wherein not onely ye your ſelves, but alſo the world ſhall know that ye be none of his, but the Lords dearlings. Before theſe dayes came, Lord God, how many thought of themſelves, they had been in Trouble trieth who be of God, and who be not.

Gods boſome, and ſo were taken, and would be taken of the world? But now we ſee whoſe they are. For to whom we obey, his ſervants we are. If we obey the world (which God forbid, and hitherto ye have not done it) then are we the worlds; but if we obey God, then are we Gods. Which thing (I mean that ye are Gods) theſe dayes have declared both to you, to me, and to all other that know you, better than ever we knew it. Therefore ye have no cauſe to ſorrow, but rather to ſing, in ſeeing your ſelves to be Gods babes, and in ſeeing that all Gods children do ſo count you.

The Devill never entreth into his own hogs.

What though the world repine thereat? What though he kick? What though he ſeek to trouble and moleſt you? My dear hearts, he doth but his kinde: he cannot love the Lord, which liveth not in the Lord: he cannot brook the childe, that hateth the father: he cannot minde the ſervant, that careth not for the maſter. If ye were of the world, the world would love you, ye ſhould dwell quietly, there would be no grief, no moleſtation. If the Devill dwelt in you (which the Lord forbid) he would not ſtir up his Knights to beſiege your houſe, to ſnatch your goods, or ſuffer his fiends to enter into your Hogs. But becauſe Chriſt dwelleth in you (as he doth by faith) therefore ſtirreth he up his firſt-begotten ſon, the world, to ſeek how to diſquiet you, to rob you, to ſpoil you, to deſtroy you: and perchance your dear Father, to try and to make known unto you, and to the world, that ye are deſtinate to another dwelling than here on earth, to another Citie than mans eyes have ſeen at any time, hath given or will give power to Satan, and to the world, to take from you the things which he hath lent you, and by taking them away, to try your fidelity, obedience, and love towards him (for ye may not love them above him) as by giving that ye have, and keeping it, he hath declared his love towards you.

The Lord giveth power to Satan ſometimes over his ſervants, and to what end God uſeth to try his.

Satan perchance telleth God) as he did of Job) that ye love God for your goods ſake. What now then, if the Lord to try you with Job, ſhall give him power on your goods and body accordingly, ſhould ye be diſmayed? ſhould ye diſpair? ſhould ye be faint-hearted? ſhould ye not rather rejoyce, as did the Apoſtles, that they were counted worthy to ſuffer any thing for the Lords ſake? Oh forget not the end that hapned to Job: for as it hapned to him, ſo ſhall it happen unto you. For God is the ſame God, and cannot long forget to ſhew mercie to them that look and long for it, as I know ye do, and I pray you ſo to do ſtill. For the Lord loveth you, and never can nor will forget to ſhew and pour out his mercie upon you. After a little while that he hath afflicted and tryed you (ſaith Peter) he will viſit, comfort, and confirm you. As to Jacob wraſtling with the Angel, at the length morning came, and the Sun aroſe; ſo dear hearts, doubtleſſe it will happen unto you. Howbeit, do ye as Job and Jacob did, that is, order and diſpoſe your things that God hath lent you, as ye may, and whiles ye have time. Who knoweth whether God hath given you power this long, even to that end.

Jacob muſt teach us to wraſtle.

This Erkinald and his wife following this counſell, did flie both beyond ſea.

Go to therefore, diſpoſe your goods, prepare your ſelves to triall, that either ye may ſtand to it like Gods Champions, or elſe if ye feel ſuch infirmity in your ſelves that ye be not able, give place to violence, and go where you may with free and ſafe conſcience ſerve the Lord. Think not this counſell to come by chance, or fortune, but to come from the Lord. Other Oracles we may not look for now. As God told Joſeph in a dream by an Angel, that he ſhould flye; ſo if you feel ſuch infirmity in your ſelves, as ſhould turn to Gods diſhonour, and your own deſtruction withall, know that at this preſent I am as Gods Angel, to admoniſh you to take time whiles ye have it, and to ſee that in no caſe Gods name by you might be diſhonoured. Joſeph might have objected the omiſſion of his vocation, as perchance ye will do. But (dear hearts) let vocations and all things elſe give place to Gods name, and the ſanctifying thereof.

This I ſpeak, not as though I would not have you rather to tarry, and to ſtand to it: but I ſpeak it in reſpect of your infirmity, which if you feel to be ſo great in you, that you are not certain of this hope, that God will never tempt you above your ability; flye and get you hence, and know that thereby God will have you tryed to your ſelves and to others. For by it you ſhall know how to take this world, and that your home here is no home, but that ye look for another, and ſo give occaſion to others leſſe to love this world, and perchance to ſome to doubt of their religion. Wherein though they be earneſt, yet would they not leeſe ſo much as ye do for your religion, which ye do confirm to me and others, by your giving place to violence.

Tribulation doth conform us to the image of Chriſt.

Laſt of all, ye have cauſe to rejoyce over theſe our dayes, becauſe they be the dayes of confirmation, in the which, and by which, God our heavenly Father maketh us like unto Chriſts image here, that we may be like unto him elſewhere. For if that we ſuffer with him, then we ſhall raign alſo with him; if we be buried with him, then we ſhall riſe with him again: if that we company with him in all troubles and afflictions, then we ſhall rejoyce with him in glory: if we now ſow with him in tears, we ſhall reap with him in gladneſſe: if we confeſſe him before men, he will confeſſe us before his Father in Heaven: if we take his part, he will take ours: if we leeſe ought for his names ſake, he will give us all things for his truths ſake. So that we ought to rejoyce and be glad; for it is not given to every one to ſuffer loſſe of country, life, goods, houſe, &c. for the Lords ſake. What can God the Father do more unto us, than to call us into the Camp with his Son? What may Chriſt our Saviour do more for us, than to make us his Warriours? What can the holy Ghoſt do to us above this, to mark us with the cognizance of the Lord of hoſts?

The Lords cognizance ſtandeth not in forked caps, &c. but in ſuffering for the Lords ſake.

This cognizance of the Lord ſtandeth not in forked caps, tippets, ſhaven crowns, or ſuch other baggage and Antichriſtian pelf, but in ſuffering for the Lords ſake. The world ſhall hate you, ſaith Chriſt. Lo, there is the cognizance and badge of Gods children; The world ſhall hate you. Rejoyce therefore (my dearly beloved) rejoyce, that God doth thus vouchſafe to begin to conform you, and to make you like to Chriſt. By the tryall of theſe dayes ye are occaſioned more to repent, more to pray, more to contemn this world, more to deſire life everlaſting, more to be holy (for holy is the end wherefore God doth afflict us) and ſo to come to Gods company. Which thing becauſe we cannot do, as long as this body is as it is, therefore by the door of death we muſt enter with Chriſt into eternall life, and immortality of ſoul and body; which God of his mercie ſend ſhortly for our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts ſake, Amen.

To Miſtreſſe A. Warcup.

THe everlaſting peace of Chriſt be more and more lively felt in our hearts, by the operation of the holy Ghoſt, now and for ever, Amen.

Although I know it be more than needeth to write any thing unto you (good ſiſter) being, as I doubt not you be, diligently exerciſed in reading of the Scriptures, in meditating of the ſame, and in hearty prayer to God for the help of his

his holy ſpirit, to have the ſenſe and feeling, eſpecially of the comforts you reade in Gods ſweet Book: yet having ſuch opportunity, and knowing not whether hereafter I ſhall ever have the like (as this bringer can declare) I thought good in few words to take up my farewell in writing, becauſe otherwiſe I cannot. And now me thinks I have done it. For what elſe can I, or ſhould I ſay unto you (my dearly beloved in the Lord) but farewell? Farewell, dear ſiſter, farewell; howbeit in the Lord, our Lord (I ſay) farewell. In him ſhall you fare well, and ſo much the better, by how much in your ſelf you fare evill, and ſhall fare evill.

When I ſpeak of your ſelf, I mean alſo this world, this life, and all things properly pertaining to this life. In them as you look not for your welfare, ſo be not diſmayed, when accordingly you ſhall not feel it. To the Lord our God, to the Lamb our Chriſt, which hath born our ſins on his back, and is our Mediatour for ever, do I ſend you. In him look for welfare, and that without all wavering, becauſe of his own goodneſſe and truth, which our evils and untruth cannot take away: Not that therefore I would have you to flatter your ſelf in any evill or unbelief, but that I would comfort you, that they ſhould not diſmay you. Yours is our Chriſt wholly, yours I ſay he is, with all that ever he hath. Is not this welfare, trow you? Mountains ſhall move, and the earth ſhall fall before you finde it otherwiſe, ſay that lyer Satan what he liſt.

Chriſt is wholly ours with all that ever he hath.

Therefore good ſiſter farewell, and be merry in the Lord, be merry I ſay, for you have good cauſe. If your welfare, joy, and ſalvation hanged upon any other thing than onely Gods mercie and truth, then might you well be ſad, heavie, and ſtand in a doubt: but that it hangeth onely upon theſe two, tell Satan he lyeth, when he would leave you to ſtand in a mammering, by cauſing you to caſt your eyes (which onely in this caſe ſhould be ſet on Chriſt your ſweet Saviour) on your ſelf. In ſome part indeed look on your ſelf, on your faith, on your love, obedience, &c. to wake you up from ſecurity, to ſtir you up to diligence, in doing the things appertaining to your vocation: but when you would be at peace with God, and have true conſolation in your conſcience, altogether look upon the goodneſſe of God in Chriſt. Think on this Commandement which precedeth all other, That you muſt have no other Gods but the Lord Jehovah, which is your Lord and God: the which he could not be, if that he did not pardon your ſins in very deed. Remember that Chriſt commandeth you to call him Father for the ſame intent. And hereto call to minde all the benefits of God, hitherto ſhewed upon you: and ſo ſhall you feel in very deed, that which I wiſh unto you now, and pray you to wiſh unto me. Farewell, or welfare in the Lord Jeſus, with whom he grant us ſhortly to meet as his children, for his name and mercies ſake, to our eternall welfare, Amen.

How to anſwer to Satan, when he moveth us to doubt of Gods favour.
How to look upon Chriſt.
How to look upon our ſelves.
In caſe of Juſtification, let no man look upon himſelf, but onely upon the goodneſſe of God in Chriſt.

To mine own dear Brother, Maſter Laurence Saunders, priſoner in the Marſhalſey.

A letter of M. Bradford to M. Saunders.

MY good Brother, I beſeech our good and gracious Father alwayes to continue his gracious favour and love towards us, and by us, as by inſtruments of his grace, to work his glory and the confuſion of his adverſaries. Ex ore infantium & lactentium fundet laudem ad deſtruendum inimicum, &c. Amen. id eſt, Out of the mouth of infants and babes, he will ſhew forth his praiſe to deſtroy the enemy, &c.

I have peruſed your Letters to my ſelf, and have read them to others. For anſwer whereof, if I ſhould write what Doctor Taylor and Maſter Philpot do think, then muſt I ſay that they think, the Salt ſent unto us by your "friend, is unſeaſonable. And indeed I think they both will declare it heartily, if they ſhould come before men. As for me, if you would know what I think (my good and moſt dear brother Laurence) becauſe I am ſo ſinfull and ſo conſpurcate (the Lord knoweth I lye not) with many grievous ſins (which I hope are waſhed away Sanguine Chriſti noſtri) I neither can nor would be conſulted withall, but as a Cipher in Agrime. Howbeit, to tell you how and what I minde, take this for a ſum: I pray God in no caſe I may ſeek my ſelf, and indeed (I thank God therefore) I purpoſe it not.

" This friend moved them to ſubſcribe to the Papiſts articles, with this condition: ſo far as they were not againſt Gods word, being indeed clean contrary to it: and yet ſhortly after he valiantly ſuffered death for refuſing the ſame.

Quod reliquum eſt Domino Deo meo committo, & ſpero in illum, quod ipſe faciet iuxta hoc; Iacta in Dominum curam, &c. Omnis cura veſtra coniecta ſit in illum, &c. Revela Domino viam tuam, & ſpera, &c. Sperantem in Domino miſericordia circundabit: id eſt, That which remaineth, I commit to my Lord God; and I truſt in him, that he will do according to this; Caſt thy care on the Lord, &c. Caſt all your care upon him, &c. Reveal unto the Lord thy way, and truſt, &c. Who that truſteth in the Lord, mercie ſhall compaſſe him about. I did not, nor do not know, but by your Letters, quod cras we ſhall come coram nobis. Mine own heart, ſtick ſtill to dabitur vobis.

Another letter of M. Bradford to the ſaid Saunders.

GOds ſweet peace in Chriſt be with you, my good Brother in the Lord Jeſus, and with all your concaptives, Amen.

I was letted this morning from muſing on that which I was purpoſed to have thought on by reaſon of you, againſt whom I ſaw my ſelf guilty of negligence, even in this point that I would not write, I ſhould ſay, that I had not written unto you as yet: therefore out of hand in manner I prepared my ſelf to purge my ſelf hereof, not that I will go about to excuſe my fault (for that were more to load me) but my asking both God and you pardon, to get it no more laid to my charge. Now when I was thus purpoſing, and partly doing, cometh there one with a Letter from you: for the which as I have cauſe to thank God and you (howbeit not ſo that you ſhould think, I give not the whole to God) ſo I ſee my ſelf more blame-worthy, for this long holding my peace. Howbeit (good brother) in this I have given a demonſtration to you, to behold my negligence in all other things, and eſpecially in praying for you, and for the Church of GOD, which for my ſins and hypocriſie (hypocriſie indeed even in this writing, GOD deliver me from it) have deſerved to be puniſhed. Juſt is God, for we have deſerved all kinde of plagues at his hands: but yet mercifull is he that will on this wiſe chaſtiſe us with this world, Ne cum mundo condemnemur. i. That we ſhould not be condemned with the world. He might otherwiſe have puniſhed us, I mean, he might have for other cauſes caſt us in priſon, me eſpecially, then for his Goſpel and Words ſake. Praiſed therefore be his name, which voucheth us worthy this honour. Ah good God forgive us our ſins, and work by this thy fatherly correction on us, on me eſpecially, effectually to love thee and thy Chriſt; and with joyfulneſſe unto the end to carry thy Croſſe through thick and thin. Alwayes ſet before our eyes, not this gallows on earth, if we will ſtick to thee, but the gallows in Hell, if we deny thee, and ſwerve from that we have profeſſed.

M. Bradford accuſing himſelf of negligence, &c.

Ah good brother, if I could alwayes have God, his Majeſty, Mercie, Heaven, Hell, &c. before mine eyes, then ſhould I Obdurare, as Paul writeth of Moſes, Hebrews 11. Obduravit, inquit. perinde quaſi vidiſſet eum qui eſt inviſibilis. i. He endured (ſaith he) as he that ſaw him which is inviſible. Pray for me, as I know you do, and give thanks alſo: for, In Domino ſpero, non mutabo. Si ambulavero per vallem umbræ mortis, non timebo, quia tu Domine mecum es, &c. Amen. i. In the Lord I truſt, I ſhall not waver. If I walk by the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will not fear, for thou art with me, O Lord. I think we ſhall be ſhortly called forth; for now legem habent, & ſecundum legem, &c. otherwiſe will they not reaſon with us; and I think their ſhoot-ancher will be, to have us to ſubſcribe. The which thing if we do, though with this condition (ſo far as the thing ſubſcribed to, repugneth not againſt Gods word) yet this will be offenſive. Therefore let us vadere planè, and ſo ſanè, I mean, let us all confeſſe that we are no changelings, but reipſa, are the ſame we were in Religion, and therefore cannot ſubſcribe, except we will diſſemble both with God, our ſelves, and the world, Hæc tibi ſcribo frater mi chariſſime in Domino. Iam legam tuam Epiſtolam. i. Theſe things I write to you, dear brother in the Lord. Now I will read your Epiſtle. Ah brother, that I had Practicam tecum ſcientiam in vite illa quam pingis; roga Dominum ut ita verè ſentiam, Amen. i. The practicall underſtanding with you in that vine which you deſcribe. Pray the Lord that I may think ſo indeed. God make me thankfull for you. Salutant te omnes concaptivi, & gratias Domino prò te agunt. Idem tu facias pro nobis, & ores ut, &c. i. All our fellow-priſoners ſalute you, and give thanks to God for you. The ſame do you for us, and pray that, &c.

Your Brother in the Lord Ieſus, to live and dye with you,
Iohn Bradford,

To my dear Fathers, D. Cranmer, D. Ridley, and D. Latimer.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to D. Cranmer, D. Ridley, and D. Latimer.

JEſus Emmanuel. My dear Fathers in the Lord, I beſeech God our ſweet Father through Chriſt, to make perfect the good he hath begun in us all, Amen.

I had thought that every of your ſtaves had ſtood next the door, but now it is otherwiſe perceived. Our dear Brother Rogers hath broken the Ice valiantly, as this day (I think) or to morrow at the uttermoſt, hearty Hooper, ſincere Saunders, and truſty Taylor end their courſe, and receive their crown. The next am I, which hourly look for the Porter to open me the gates after them, to enter into the deſired reſt. God forgive me mine unthankfulneſſe for this exceeding great mercie, that amongſt ſo many thouſands it pleaſeth his mercie to chuſe me to be one, in whom he will ſuffer. For although it be moſt true, that juſtè patior, i. I juſtly ſuffer (for I have been a great hypocrite, and a grievous ſinner, the Lord pardon me, yea he hath done it, he hath done it indeed) yet hic autem quid mali fecit? i. What evill hath he done? Chriſt, whom the Prelates perſecute, his verity which they hate in me, hath done no evill, nor deſerveth death. Therefore ought I moſt heartily to rejoyce of this dignation and tender kindeneſſe of the Lords towards me, which uſeth the remedy for my ſin as a teſtimoniall of his Teſtament, to his glory, to my everlaſting comfort, to the edifying of his Church, and to the overthrowing of Antichriſt and his Kingdom. Oh what am I Lord, that thou ſhouldeſt thus magnifie me ſo vile a man and miſer, as alwayes I have been? Is this thy wont, to ſend for ſuch a wretch and an hypocrite as I have been, in a fiery chariot, as thou diddeſt for Helias? Oh dear Fathers be thankfull for me, and pray for me, that I ſtill may be found worthy in whom the Lord would ſanctifie his holy name. And for your part, make you ready: for we are but your Gentlemen-uſhers. Nuptiæ agni paratæ ſunt, venite ad nuptias. i. The marriage of the Lamb is prepared, come unto the marriage. I now go to leave my fleſh there, where I received it. I ſhall be conveyed thither, as Ignatius was at Rome, Leopardis; by whoſe evill I hope to be made better. God grant, if it be his will that I ask, it may make them better by me, Amen.

This is a ſingular mercie of God, to have death, which is a due puniſhment for ſin, turned into a demonſtration and teſtification of the Lords truth.

4 Reg. 2.

He meaneth that he ſhould be conveyed by the Queens Guard into Lancaſhire to be burnt, as the adverſaries had once determined: like as Ignatius was by a company of ſouldiers conveyed to Rome, and caſt to the Leopards.

For my farewell therefore, I write and ſend this unto you, truſting ſhortly to ſee you where we ſhall never be ſeparated. In the mean ſeaſon I will not ceaſe, as I have done, to commend you to our father of Heaven, and that you would ſo do by me, I moſt heartily pray every one of you: you know now I have moſt need. But Fidelis Deus, qui nunquam ſinet nos tentari ſupra id quod poſſumus. i. Faithfull is God, which will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength. He never did it hitherto, nor now, and I am aſſured he will never, Amen. A dextris eſt mihi, non movebor. Propter hoc lætabitur cor meum, quia non derelinquet animam meam in inferno, nec dabit me, ſanctum ſuum per gratiam in Chriſto, videre corruptionem. E carcere raptim, expectans omni momento carnificem. i. He is on my right hand, therefore I ſhall not fall. Wherefore my heart ſhall rejoyce, for he ſhall not leave my ſoul in hell, neither ſhall ſuffer me his holy one by his grace in Chriſt, to ſee corruption. To the Right Honorable Lord Ruſſell, now Earl of Bedford, being then in trouble for the verity of Gods Goſpell.

A Letter of M. Bradford to the Lord Ruſſel now Earl of Bedford.

THe everlaſting and moſt gracious God and Father of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, bleſſe your good Lordſhip with all manner of heavenly bleſſings in the ſame Chriſt our onely comfort and hope, Amen.

Praiſed be God our Father, which hath vouched you worthy, as of faith in his Chriſt, ſo of his Croſſe for the ſame. Magnified be his holy name, The excellency of faith, and what it worketh.

Faith cometh by hearing the word, and not by hearing Maſſe.

who as he hath delivered you from one croſſe, ſo he hath made you willing (I truſt) and ready to bear another when he ſhall ſee his time to lay it upon you: for theſe are the moſt ſingular gifts of God, given as to few, ſo to none elſe but to theſe few which are moſt dear in his ſight. Faith is reckoned, and worthily, among the greateſt gifts of God, yea it is the greateſt it ſelf that we may enjoy. For by it, as we be juſtified and made Gods children, ſo are we temples and poſſeſſors of the holy ſpirit, yea of Chriſt alſo, Epheſ. 4. And of the Father himſelf, John 14. By faith we drive the Divel away, 1 Pet. 5. We overcome the world, 1 John 5. And are already Citizens of Heaven, and fellows with Gods dear Saints. But who is able to reckon the riches that this faith bringeth with her unto the ſoule ſhe ſitteth upon? No man or Angel. And therefore (as I ſaid) of all Gods gifts ſhe may be ſet in the top, and have the upmoſt ſeat. The which thing if men conſidered (in that ſhe cometh alonely from Gods own mercy ſeat, by the hearing, not of Maſſe or Mattins, Dirges, or ſuch droſſe, but the Word of God in ſuch a tongue as we can and do underſtand) as they would be diligent and take great heed for doing or ſeeing any thing which might caſt her down (for then they fall alſo) ſo would they with no leſſe care read and hear Gods holy Word, joyning thereto moſt earneſt and often prayer, as well for the more and better underſtanding, as for the loving, living, and confeſſing of the ſame, maugre the head of the the Divell, the world, our fleſh, reaſon, goods, poſſeſſions, carnall friends, wife, children, and very life here; if they ſhould pull us back to hearken to their voice and counſell, for more quiet, ſure, and longer uſe of them.

The end of proſperity.

Sapience 5.

Now notwithſtanding this excellency of faith, in that we reade the Apoſtle to match therewith, yea, (as it were) to preferre, ſuffering perſecution for Chriſts ſake, I trow no man will be ſo fond as to think otherwiſe, but that I and all Gods children have cauſe to glorifie and praiſe God, which hath vouched you worthy ſo great a bleſſing. For though the reaſon or wiſedome of the world, think of the Croſſe, according to their reach, and according to their preſent ſenſe, and therefore flieth from it as from a moſt great ignominie and ſhame: Yet Gods Schollers have learned otherwiſe to think of the Croſſe, that is, the frame-houſe in the which God frameth his children like to his Son Chriſt; the fornace that fineth Gods gold; the high way to Heaven; the Sute and Liverie that Gods ſervants are ſerved withall; the earneſt and beginning of all conſolation and glory. For they (I mean Gods Schollers, as your Lordſhip is, I truſt) do enter into Gods ſanctuary, leſt their feet ſlip. They look not as beaſts do, on things preſent only, but on things to come, and ſo have they as preſent to faith the judgement and glorious coming of Chriſt Jeſus, as the wicked have now their worldly wealth wherein they wallow and will wallow, till they tumble headlong into Hell where are torments too terrible and endleſſe. Now they follow the Fiend as the Bear doth the train of Honey, and the Sow the Swillings, till they be brought into the ſlaughter houſe, and then they know that their proſperity hath brought them to perdition. Then cry they wo, wo, we went the wrong way: we counted theſe men (I mean ſuch as you be that ſuffer for Gods ſake, loſſe of goods, friends and life, whom they ſhall ſee endued with rich robes of righteouſneſſe, crownes of moſt pure precious gold, and palmes of conqueſt in the goodly glorious palace of the Lambe, where is eternall joy, felicitie, &c.) We counted (will they then ſay) theſe men but fooles and mad men, we took their conditions to be but curioſitie. But then will it be too late, then the time will be turned, laughing ſhall be turned into weeping, and weeping into rejoycing. Read Sapien. 2. 3. 4. 5.

Few Noble men called to Chriſts Kingdom.

Pſal. 91.

Therefore (as before I have ſaid) great cauſe have I to thank God, which hath vouched you worthy of this moſt bountifull bleſſing: much more then have you cauſe (my good Lord) ſo to be, I mean thankfull. For look upon your vocation I pray you, tell me how many Noblemen, Earls ſons, Lords, Knights, and men of eſtimation, hath God in this Realm of England dealt thus withall? I dare ſay you think not that you have deſerved this. Only Gods mercie in his Chriſt, hath wrought this on you, as he did in Jeremias time on Abimelech, in Achabs time on Abdias, in Chriſts time on Joſeph of Arimathea, in the Apoſtles time on Sergius Paulus, and the Queen of Candaces Chamberlain. Onely now be thankfull and continue, continue, continue (my good Lord) continue to confeſſe Chriſt. Be not aſhamed of him before men: for then will not he be aſhamed of you. Now will he try you; ſtick faſt unto him, and he will ſtick faſt by you, he will be with you in trouble, and deliver you. But then muſt you cry unto him: for ſo it proceedeth; He cried unto me, and I heard him, I was with him in trouble, &c.

Gods remembrances.

Chriſt onely muſt have both heart and hand.

Remember Lots wife which looked back. Remember Francis Spira. Remember that none is crowned, but he that ſtriveth lawfully. Remember that all you have is at Chriſts commandment. Remember he loſt more for you, than you can loſe for him. Remember you loſe not that which is loſt for his ſake: for you ſhall finde much more here and elſewhere. Remember you ſhall dye, and when, where, and how, ye cannot tell. Remember the death of ſinners is moſt terrible. Remember the death of Gods Saints is moſt precious in his ſight. Remember the multitude goeth the wide way which windeth to wo. Remember that the ſtrait gate which leadeth to glory, hath but few travellers. Remember Chriſt biddeth you ſtrive to enter in thereat. Remember he that truſteth in the Lord, ſhall receive ſtrength to ſtand againſt all the aſſaults of his enemies. Be certain all the hairs of your head are numbred. Be certain your good father hath appointed bounds, over the which the Devill dares not look. Commit your ſelf to him; he is, hath been, and will be your keeper. Caſt your care on him, and he will care for you. Let Chriſt be your ſcope, and mark to prick at; let him be your patern to work by; let him be your enſample to follow; give him as your heart, ſo your hands, as your minde, ſo your tongue, and your faith, ſo your feet, and let his word be your candle, to go before you in all matters of religion. Bleſſed is he that walketh not to theſe Popiſh prayers, nor ſtandeth at them, nor ſitteth at them; glorifie God both in ſoul and body. He that gathereth not with Chriſt, ſcattereth abroad. Uſe prayer, look for Gods help, which is at hand to them that ask and hope thereafter aſſuredly. In which prayes I heartily deſire your Lordſhip to remember us, who as we are going with you right gladly (God therefore be praiſed) ſo we look to go before you, hoping that you will follow, if God ſo will, according to your daily prayer; Thy will be done on earth, &c. The good ſpirit of God alwayes guide your Lordſhip unto the end. Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

To Maſter Warcup and his wife, Miſtreſſe Wilkenſon, and others of his godly friends, with their families.

THe ſame peace our Saviour Chriſt left with his people, which is not without war with the world, A pithy and effectuall Letter of M. Bradford to M. Warcup, and Miſtreſſe Wilkenſon.

world, Almightie God work plentifully in your hearts now and for ever. Amen.

The time I perceive is come wherein the Lords ground will be known, I mean, it will now ſhortly appeare who have received Gods Goſpel into their hearts indeed, to the taking of good roote therein: for ſuch will not for a little heate or ſun-burning wither, but ſtiffely will ſtand and grow on, maugre the malice of all burning ſhowres and tempeſts. And for as much as (my beloved in the Lord) I am perſwaded of you, that yee be indeed the children of God, Gods good ground, which groweth and will grow on (by Gods grace) bringing forth fruit to Gods glorie after your vocations, as occaſions ſhall be offered (burn the Sun never ſo hot) therefore I cannot but ſo ſignifie unto you and heartily pray you and every one of you, accordingly to go on forwards after your Maſter Chriſt, not ſticking at the foul way and ſtormy weather, which you are to come into, and are like ſo to do: of this being moſt certain, that the end of your journey ſhall be pleaſant and joyfull in ſuch a perpetuall reſt and bliſſefulneſſe, as cannot but ſwallow up the ſhowres that ye now feel and are ſouſed in, if ye often ſet it before your eyes, after Pauls counſell in the latter end of the fourth, and beginning of the fifth Chapter of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians. Reade it I pray you, and remember it often as a reſtorative to refreſh you, leſt ye faint in the way.

Foul way and foul weather to the kingdom of Heaven.

And beſides this ſet before you alſo, that though the weather be foul, and ſtorms grow apace, yet go not ye alone, but other your brothers and ſiſters tread the ſame path, as Saint Peter telleth us: and therefore company ſhould cauſe you to be the more couragious and cheerfull. But if you had no company at all to go preſently with you, I pray you tell me, if even from the beginning, the beſt of Gods friends have found any fair weather and way to the place whither ye are going (I mean Heaven) than ye now finde and are like to do, except ye will with the worldlings, which have their portion in this life, tarry ſtill by the way till the ſtorms be overpaſt, and then either night will ſo approach that ye cannot travell, either the doors will be ſparred before ye come, and ſo ye then lodge without in wonderfull and evill lodgings. Reade Apocalyps 22. Begin at Abel, and come from him to Noe, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, Ioſeph, the Patriarcks, Moſes, David, Daniel, and all the Saints of the old Teſtament, and tell me whether ever any of them found any fairer way than ye now finde.

The paſſage of all Gods Saints both in the old and new Teſtament, hath been through affliction.

If the old Teſtament will not ſerve, I pray you come to the new, and begin with Mary and Ioſeph, and come from them to Zachary and Elizabeth, Iohn Baptiſt, and every one of the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts, and ſearch whether they all found any other way into the City we travell towards, than by many tribulations.

Reade the ſtory of the Primitive Church above deſcribed.

Beſides theſe, if ye ſhould call to remembrance the Primitive Church, Lord God, ye ſhould ſee many to have given cheerfully their bodies to moſt grievous torments, rather than they would be ſtopped in their journey, that there is no day in the year, but (I dare ſay) a thouſand was the feweſt that with great joy loſt their homes here, but in the City they went unto, have found other maner of homes than mans minde is able to conceive. But if none of theſe were, if ye had no company now to go with you, as ye have me your poor brother and bondman of the Lord, with many other, I truſt in God, if you had none other of the Fathers, Patriarcks, Kings, Prophets, Apoſtles, Euangeliſts, Martyrs, and other holy Saints and children of God, that in their journey to Heaven-ward, found as ye now finde, and are like to finde if ye go on forward, as I truſt ye will, yet ye have your Maſter and your Captain Ieſus Chriſt, the dear darling and onely begotten and beloved Son of God, in whom was all the Fathers pleaſure, joy, and delectation, ye have him to go before you, no fairer way, but much fouler into this our City of Ieruſalem. I need not (I truſt) to rehearſe what manner of way he found. Begin at his birth, and till ye come at his buriall, ye ſhall finde that every foot and ſtride of his journey was no better, but much worſe than yours is now.

Chriſt Ieſus the ring-leader of all Gods children afflicted.

We muſt not be ſo dainty to look for fairer weather than Chriſt himſelf went thorow.

Wherefore (my dearly beloved in the Lord) be not ſo dainty, as to look for that at Gods hands, your dear Father, which the Fathers, Patriarcks, Prophets, Apoſtles, Euangeliſts, Martyrs, Saints, and his own Son Ieſus Chriſt did not finde. Hitherto we have had fair way (I trow) and fair weather alſo: now becauſe we have loitered by the way, and not made the ſpeed we ſhould have done, our loving Lord and ſweet Father hath overcaſt the weather, and ſtirred up the ſtorms and tempeſts, that we might with more haſte run out our race before night come, and the doors be ſparred. The Devill ſtandeth now at every Inne door in his City and Country of this world, crying unto us to tarry and lodge in this or that place till the ſtorms be overpaſt; not that he would not have us wet to the skin, but that the time might overpaſſe us, to our utter deſtruction. Therefore beware of his enticements. Caſt not your eyes on things that be preſent, how this man doth, and how that man doth: but caſt your eyes on the gleve ye run at, or elſe ye will loſe the game. Ye know that he which runneth at the gleve, doth not look on others that ſtand by, and go this way or that way, but altogether he looketh on the gleve, and on them that run with him, that thoſe which be behinde overtake him not, and that he may overtake them which be before: even ſo ſhould we do, leave off looking on thoſe which will not run the race to Heavens bliſſe by the path of perſecution with us, and caſt our eyes on the end of our race, and on them that go before us, that we may overtake them, and on them which come after us, that we may provoke them to come the faſter after.

Phil. 3. The Devils enticements not to be truſted.

To look to the mark.

He that ſhooteth, will not caſt his eyes in his ſhooting on them that ſtand by, or ride by the wayes (I trow) but rather at the mark he ſhooteth at: for elſe he were like to win the wrong way: Even ſo my dearly beloved, let your eyes be ſet on the mark ye ſhoot at, even Chriſt Ieſus, who for the joy ſet before him, did joyfully carry his croſſe, contemning the ſhame, and therefore he now ſitteth on the right hand of the throne of God. Let us follow him: for this did he that we ſhould not be faint-hearted. For we may be moſt aſſured, that if we ſuffer with him, we ſhall undoubtedly raign with him: but if we deny him, ſurely he will deny us: for he that is aſhamed of me, ſaith Chriſt, and of my Goſpel, in this faithleſſe generation, I will be aſhamed of him before the Angels of God in heaven. O how heavie a ſentence is this to all ſuch as know the Maſſe to be an abominable Idoll, full of idolatry, blaſphemy and ſacrileage againſt GOD and his Chriſt (as undoubtedly it is) and yet for fear of men, for loſſe of life or goods, yea, ſome for advantage and gain, will honeſt it with their preſence, diſſembling both with God and man, as their own heart ond conſcience doth accuſe them. Better it were that ſuch had never known the truth, than thus wittingly, and for fear or favour of man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, to diſſemble it, or rather (as indeed it is) to deny it. The end of ſuch, is like to be worſe than their beginning. Such had need to take heed of the two terrible places to the Hebrews in the 6. and 10. Chapters, leſt by ſo doing they fall therein. Let them beware they play no wily beguile with themſelves, as ſome do I fear me, which go to Maſſe, and becauſe they worſhip not, nor kneel not, nor knock not as others do, but ſit ſtill in their Pues, therefore they think they rather do good to others than hurt.

Diſſembling Goſpellers.

But (alas) if theſe men would look into their own conſciences, there ſhould they ſee they are very diſſemblers, and in ſeeking to deceive others (for by this means the Magiſtrates think them of their ſort) they deceive themſelves. They think at the elevation time, all mens eyes are ſet upon them, to mark how they do. They think others, hearing of ſuch men going to Maſſe, do ſee, or enquire of their behaviour there. Oh if there were in thoſe men that are ſo preſent at the Maſſe, either love to God, or to their brethren, then would they for the one or both, openly take Gods part, and admoniſh the people of their Idolatry. They fear man more than him which hath power to caſt both ſoul and body into hell fire: they halt on both knees: they ſerve two maſters. God have mercie upon ſuch, and open their eyes with his eye ſalve, that they may ſee, that they which take no part with God, are againſt God, and that they which gather not with Chriſt, do ſcatter abroad. Oh that they would reade what Saint John ſaith will be done to the fearfull. The counſell given to the Church of Laodicea, is good counſell for ſuch.

But to return to you again (dearly beloved) be not ye aſhamed of Gods Goſpel: It is the power of GOD to ſalvation to all thoſe that do beleeve it. Be therefore partakers of the afflictions, as God ſhall make you able, knowing for certain, that he will never tempt you farther than he will make you able to bear: and think it no ſmall grace of God, to ſuffer perſecution for Gods truth: for the ſpirit of God reſteth upon you, and ye are happy, as one day ye ſhall ſee. Reade 2 Theſſalonians 1. Hebrews 12. As the fire hurteth not gold, but maketh it finer, ſo ſhall ye be more pure, by ſuffering with Chriſt, 1 Peter 1. The flail and winde hurteth not the wheat, but cleanſeth it from the chaff. And ye (dearly beloved) are Gods wheat: fear not therefore the flail: fear not the fanning winde, fear not the milſtone, fear not the oven: for all theſe make you more meet for the Lords own tooth. Sope, though it be black, ſoileth not the cloth, but rather at the length maketh it more clean: ſo doth the black Croſſe help us to more whiteneſſe, if God ſtrike with his battledore. Becauſe ye are Gods ſheep, prepare your ſelves to the ſlaughter, alwayes knowing that in the ſight of the Lord our death ſhall be precious. The ſouls under the Altar look for us to fill up their number: happy are we if God have ſo appointed us. Howſoever it be (dearly beloved) caſt your ſelves wholly upon the Lord, with whom all the hairs of your heads are numbred, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh. Will we nill we, we muſt drink Gods cup, if he have appointed it for us. Drink it willingly then, and at the firſt when it is full, leſt peradventure if we linger, we ſhall drink at the length of the dregs with the wicked, if at the beginning we drink not with his children: for with them his judgment beginneth, and when he hath wrought his will on Mount Sion, then will he viſit the Nations round about.

Submit your ſelves therefore under the mighty hand of the Lord. No man ſhall touch you without his knowledge. When they touch you therefore, know it is your weal. God thereby will work to make you like unto Chriſt here, that ye may be alſo like unto him elſewhere. Acknowledge your unthankfulneſſe and ſin, and bleſſe God that correcteth you in the world, becauſe you ſhall not be damned with the world. Otherwiſe might he correct us, than in making us to ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake: but this he doth becauſe we are not of the world. Call upon his Name through Chriſt for his help, as he commandeth us. Beleeve that he is mercifull to you, heareth you, and helpeth you: I am with him in trouble, and will deliver him, ſaith he. Know that God hath appointed bounds, over the which the Devill and all the world ſhall not paſſe. If all things ſeem to be againſt us, yet ſay with Job, If he will kill me, I will hope in him. Reade the 91. Pſalm, and pray for me your poor brother, and fellow ſufferer for Gods Goſpel ſake, his Name therefore be praiſed; and of his mercie he make me and you worthy to ſuffer with good conſcience for his Names ſake. Apoc.21. 22. the way thither to be by perſecutions; the dear friends of God, how they have gone it after the example of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe footſteps let us follow even to the gallows, if God ſo will, not doubting but that as he within three dayes roſe again immortall, even ſo we ſhall do in our time, that is, when the trump ſhall blow, and the Angel ſhall ſhout, and the Son of man ſhall appear in the clouds with innumerable Saints and Angels, in majeſty and great glory: then ſhall the dead ariſe, and we ſhall be caught up into the clouds to meet the Lord, and ſo be alwayes with him. To Sir Iames Hales Knight, then priſoner in the Counter in Bredſtreet.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to Sir James Hales, knight.

THe GOD of mercie, and father of all comfort, plentifully pour out upon you and in you his mercie, and with his conſolations comfort and ſtrengthen you to the end, for his and our Chriſts ſake.

Although right worſhipfull Sir, many cauſes might move me to be content with crying for you to your God and my God, that he would give you grace to perſevere well, as he hath right notably begun, to the great glory of his Name, and comfort of all ſuch as fear him; as lack of learning, of familiarity, yea, acquaintance (for I think I am unknown to you, both by face and name) and other ſuch like things; yet I cannot content my ſelf, but preſume ſomething to ſcrible unto you, not that I think my ſcribling can do you any good, but that I might declare my συμπαθειαν and compaſſion, love, and affection I bear towards your maſterſhip, which is contented, yea deſirous with us poor miſers, to confeſſe Chriſts Goſpel in theſe perillous times and dayes of tryall. Oh Lord God, how good art thou, which doeſt thus glean out grapes, I mean children for thy ſelf, and brethren for Chriſt? Look good Maſter Hales on your vocation; not many Judges, not many Knights, not many landed men, not many rich men, and wealthy to live as you are, hath God choſen to ſuffer for his ſake, as he hath now done you.

How God gleaneth out his people.

Certainly

The world, people, worldly wiſedome, are evill judges of things ſpirituall.
Heb. 12.
Praiſe of the croſſe.

Certainly I dare ſay you think not ſo of your ſelf, as though God were bound to prefer you, or had need of you: but rather attribute this as all good things unto his free mercie in Chriſt. Again, I dare ſay that you being a wiſe man, do judge of things wiſely, that is, concerning this your croſſe, you judge of it not after the world and people, which is magnus erroris magiſter, nor after the judgment of reaſon and worldly wiſedom, which is fooliſhnes to faith, nor after the preſent ſenſe, to which non videtur gaudii, ſed moleſtiæ. i.e. It ſeemeth not to be joyous but grievous, as Paul writeth: but after the word of God, which teacheth your croſſe to be, in reſpect of your ſelf between God and you, Gods chaſtiſing, and your fathers correction, nurture, ſchool, tryall, path-way to Heaven, glory and felicity, and the furnace to conſume the droſſe, and mortifie the reliques of old Adam which yet remain, yea even the frame-houſe to faſhion you like to the deareſt Saints of God here, yea to Chriſt the Son of God, that elſewhere you might be like unto him.

Now concerning your croſſe in reſpect of the world, between the world and you, Gods word teacheth it to be a teſtimoniall of Gods truth, of his providence, of his power, of his juſtice, of his wiſedom, of his anger againſt ſin, of his goodneſſe, of his judgment, of your faith and religion, ſo that by it you are to the world a witneſs of God, one of his Teſtes, that he is true, he ruleth all things, he is juſt, wiſe, and at length will judge the world, and caſt the wicked into perdition, but the godly he will take and receive into his eternall habitation. I know you judge of things after faiths fetch, and the effects or ends of things, and ſo you ſee æternum pondus gloriæ, i.e. an eternall weight of glory, which this croſſe ſhall bring unto you, dum non ſpectas ea quæ videntur, ſed ea quæ non videntur. i.e. While ye look not on things which are ſeen, but on the things which are not ſeen. Let the worldlings weigh things, and look upon the affairs of men with their worldly and corporall eyes, as did many in ſubſcription of the Kings laſt will, and therefore they did that, for the which they beſhrewed themſelves: but let us look on things with other manner of eyes, as God be praiſed you did, in not doing that which you were deſired, and driven at to have done. You then beheld things not as a man, but as a man of God, and ſo you do now in religion, at the leaſt hitherto you have done, and that you might do ſo ſtill, I humbly beſeech and pray you, ſay with David, Defecerunt oculi mei in eloquium tuum: quando conſolaberis me? i. Mine eyes fail for thy word, ſaying; when wilt thou comfort me? Though you be as uter in fumo. i. like a bottle in the ſmoke; (for I hear you want health) yet ne obliviſcaris juſtificationes Dei. i. Do not forget the ſtatutes of the Lord: but cry out, Quot ſunt dies ſervi tui? quando facies de perſequentibus me judicium? i. e. How many are the dayes of thy ſervant? when wilt thou execute judgement on them that perſecute me? And be certain, Quod Dominus veniens veniet, & non tardabit. Si moram fecerit, expecta illum. i. The Lord will ſurely come, and not ſtay; though he tarry, wait for him: for he is but ad momentum in ira ſua, & vita in voluntate ejus: Ad veſperam demorabitur fletus, & ad matutinum lætitia. i. He is but a while in his anger, but in his favour is life: weeping may abide at evening, but joy cometh in the morning. Follow therefore Eſays counſell, Abſcondere ad modicum, ad momentum, donec pertranſeat indignatio ejus. i. Hide thy ſelf for a very little while, untill his indignation paſſe over, which is not indignatio indeed, but to our ſenſe, and therefore in the ſix and twentieth chapter of Eſay, God ſaith of his Church and people, that as he keepeth night and day: ſo Non eſt indignatio mihi. i. The mother ſometime beateth the childe, but yet her heart melteth upon it, even in the very beating: and therefore ſhe caſteth the rod into the fire, and calleth the childe, giveth it an apple, and dandleth it moſt motherly. And to ſay the truth, the love of mothers to their children, is but a trace to train us to behold the love of God towards us: and therefore ſaith he, Can a mother forget the childe of her womb? As who ſhould ſay, No: but if ſhe ſhould ſo do, yet will not I forget thee, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Ah comfortable ſaying: I will not forget thee, ſaith the Lord. Indeed the children of God think oftentimes that God hath forgotten them, and therefore they cry, Ne abſcondas faciem tuam à me, &c. i. Hide not thy face from me, &c. Ne derelinquas me Domine, &c. i. Leave me not, O Lord, &c. Whereas in very truth it is not ſo, but to their preſent ſenſe: and therefore David ſaid, Ego dixi in exceſſu meo projectus ſum à facie tua. i. I ſaid in my agony, I was clean caſt away from thy face. But was it ſo? Nay verily. Reade his Pſalms, and you ſhall ſee. So writeth he alſo in other places very often, eſpecially in the perſon of Chriſt: as when he ſaith, Deus meus, Deus meus, ut quid dereliquiſti me? i. My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? He ſaith not, Vt quid de relinquis? i. Why doeſt thou forſake me? or, derelinques? i. Why wilt thou forſake me? But, Vt quid dereliquiſti? i. Why haſt thou forſaken me? Where indeed God had not left him, but that it was ſo to his ſenſe, and that this Pſalm telleth us full well: which Pſalm I pray you now and then reade, it is the two and twentieth, and thereto joyn the thirtieth, and the hundred and ſixteenth, with divers other. The ſame we reade in the Prophet Eſay, the fortieth chapter, where he reproveth Iſrael for ſaying, GOD had forgotten them. Nunquid neſcis, ſaith he? Knoweſt thou not? An non audiviſti? &c. Haſt thou not heard? &c. Qui ſperant in Domino mutabunt fortitudinem. i. They that truſt in the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength. And in his four and fiftieth chapter, Noli timere, &c. Ad punctum enim, in modico dereliqui te, at in miſerationibus magnis congregabo te. In momento indignationis abſcondi faciem meam parumper à te, at in miſericordia ſempiterna miſertus ſum tui, dicit Redemptor tuus Dominus. Nam iſtud erit mihi ſicut aquæ Noe. Vt enim juravi ne porro aquæ Noe pertranſirent terram, ſic juravi ut non iraſcar tibi & non increpem te. Montes enim commovebuntur & colles contremiſcent, miſericordia autem mea non recedet à te, & fœdus pacis meæ non movebitur, dicit miſerator tuus Dominus. i: Fear not, &c. For a little while I have forſaken thee, but with great compaſſion will I gather thee. For a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee, for a little ſeaſon: but in everlaſting mercie have I had compaſſion on thee, ſaith the Lord thy Redeemer. For this is unto me, as the waters of Noe. For as I have ſworn that the waters of Noe ſhould no more go over the earth, ſo have I ſworn that I would not be angry with thee nor rebuke thee. For the mountains ſhall remove, and hils ſhall fall down, but my mercie ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace fall away, ſaith the Lord that hath compaſſion on thee.

Be certain, be certain, good Maſter Hales, that all the hairs of your head, your dear father hath numbred, ſo that one of them ſhall not periſh: your name is written in the book of life. Therefore upon God caſt all your care, which will comfort you with his eternall conſolations, and make you able to go through the fire (if need be) which is nothing to be compared to the fire wherein our enemies ſhall fall and lye for ever, from the which the Lord deliver us, though it be through temporall fire, which muſt be conſtrued according to the end and profit that cometh after it; ſo ſhall it then not much fear us to ſuffer it for our maſter Chriſts cauſe, the which the Lord grant us for his mercies ſake, Amen. To my very friend in the Lord,

Doctor Hill, Phyſician.

A letter to D. Hill, Phyſician.

THe God of mercie and father of all comfort at this preſent and for ever ingraff in your heart the ſenſe of his mercie in Chriſt, and the continuance of his conſolation, which cannot but enable you to carry with joy whatſoever croſſe he ſhall lay upon you, Amen.

Hitherto I could have no ſuch liberty, as to write unto you, as I think you know: but now in that through Gods providence I have no ſuch reſtraint, I cannot but ſomething write, as well to purge me of this ſuſpicion of unthankfulneſſe towards you, as alſo to ſignifie my carefulneſſe for you in theſe perillous dayes, leſt you ſhould wax cold in Gods cauſe (which God forbid) or ſuffer the light of the Lord once kindled in your heart to be quenched, and ſo become as you were before, after the example of the world, and of many other, which would have been accounted otherwiſe in our dayes, and yet ſtill beguil themſelves, ſtill would be ſo accounted, although by their outward life they declare the contrary, in that they think it enough to keep the heart pure, notwithſtanding that the outward man doth curry-favour.

Parting ſtakes between God and the world.

In which doings, as they deny God to be jealous, and therefore requireth the whole man as well body as ſoul, being both create, as to immortality and ſociety with him, ſo redeemed by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and now ſanctified by the holy ſpirit to be the Temple of God, and member of his Son (as I ſay) by their parting ſtake to give God the heart, and the world the body, they deny God to be jealous (for elſe they would give him both, as the wife would do to her huſband whether he be jealous or no, if ſhe be honeſt) ſo they play the diſſemblers with the Church of God by their fact, offending the godly, whom either they provoke to fall with them, or make more careleſſe and conſcienceleſſe if they be fallen, and occaſioning the wicked and obſtinate to triumph againſt God, and the more vehemently to proſecute their malice againſt ſuch as will not defile themſelves in body or ſoul with the Romiſh rags now received amongſt us. Becauſe of this, I mean leſt you, my dear Maſter and Brother in the Lord, ſhould do as many of our Goſpellers do for fear of man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, and hath power but of the body, not fearing the Lord, which hath power both of ſoul and body, and not onely temporally, but alſo eternally: I could not but write ſomething unto you, as well becauſe duty deſerveth it, (for many benefits I have received of God by your hands, for the which he reward you, for I cannot) as alſo becauſe charity and love compelleth me; not that I think you have any need (for as I may rather learn of you, ſo I doubt not but you have hitherto kept your ſelf upright from halting) but that I might both quiet my conſcience, calling upon me hereabout, and ſignifie unto you by ſomething, my carefulneſſe for your ſoul, as painfully and often you have done for my body.

Diſſembling with the church.

Two maſters. Two ſorts of ſubjects. Two wayes. Two kingdoms.

Therefore I pray you call to minde, that there be but two Maſters, two kindes of people, two wayes, and two manſion places. The Maſters be Chriſt and Satan: the people be ſervitors to either of theſe, the wayes be ſtrait and wide; the manſions be Heaven and Hell. Again, conſider that this world is the place of tryall of Gods people, and the devils ſervants: for as the one will follow his Maſter whatſoever cometh of it, ſo will the other. For a time it is hard to diſcern who pertaineth to God, and who to the Devill: as in the calm and peace, who is a good ſhipman and warriour, and who is not. But as when the ſtorm ariſeth, the expert Marriner is known, and as in war the good ſouldier is ſeen, ſo in affliction and the croſſe, eaſily Gods children are known from Satans ſervants: for then, as the good ſervant will follow his Maſter, ſo will the godly follow their captain, come what will come, whereas the wicked and hypocrites will bid adiew, and deſire leſſe of Chriſts acquaintance. For which cauſe the Croſſe is called a probation and tryall, becauſe it trieth who will go with God, and who will forſake him. And now in England we ſee how ſmall a company Chriſt hath in compariſon of Satans ſouldiers. Let no man deceive himſelf: for he that gathereth not with Chriſt, ſcattereth abroad. No man can ſerve two maſters; the Lord abhorreth double hearts; the luke warm, that is, ſuch as are both hot and cold, he ſpitteth out of his mouth. None that halt on both knees doth God take for his ſervants. The way of Chriſt is the ſtrait way, and ſo ſtrait, that as a few finde it, and few walk in it, ſo no man can halt in it, but muſt needs go upright: for as the ſtraitneſſe will ſuffer no reeling to this ſide or that ſide: ſo if any halt, he is like to fall off the bridge into the pit of eternall perdition.

Affliction trieth who go with God, and who go with the Divell.

Chriſts part the ſmaller, and why?

Strive therefore, good Maſter Doctor, now you have found it, to enter into it: and if you ſhould be called or pulled back, look not on this ſide, or that ſide, or behinde you, as Lots wife did, but ſtraight forwards is the end which is ſet before you (though it be to come) as even now preſent: like as you do and will your patients to do in purgations, and other your miniſtrations, to conſider the effect that will enſue; where through the bitterneſſe and loathſomeneſſe of the purgation is ſo overcome, and the painfulneſſe, in abiding the working of that is miniſtred, is ſo eaſed, that it maketh the patient willingly and joyfully to receive that is to be received, although it be never ſo unpleaſant: ſo (I ſay) ſet before you the end of this ſtrait way, and then doubtleſſe, as Paul ſaith, æternum pondus gloriæ pariet, i. It ſhall bring with it an eternall weight of glorie, whilſt we look not on the thing which is ſeen, for that is temporall, but on the thing which is not ſeen, which is eternall. So doth the husbandman in plowing and tilling ſet before him the harveſt time; ſo doth the Fiſher conſider the draught of his net, rather then the caſting in; ſo doth the Merchant the return of his merchandiſe; and ſo ſhould we in theſe ſtormy dayes ſet before us not the loſſe of our goods, libertie, and very life, but the reaping time, the coming of our Saviour Chriſt to Judgement, the fire that ſhall burn the wicked and diſobedience to Gods Goſpel, the blaſt of the Trumpe, the exceeding glory prepared for us, in heaven eternally, ſuch as the eie hath not ſeen, the eare hath not heard, nor the heart of man can conceive. The more we loſe here, the greater joy ſhall we have there. The more we ſuffer, the greater triumph. For corruptible droſſe, we ſhall finde incorruptible treaſures; for gold, glorie; for ſilver, ſolace without end; for riches, robes royall; for earthly houſes, eternall palaces; mirth without meaſure, pleaſure without paine, felicitie endleſſe; Summa, we ſhall have God the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt.

A wiſe man will ever conſider the end.

The glorious recompence of ſuch as ſuffer; for the Lord.

O happie place! Oh that this day would come! Then ſhall the end of the wicked be lamentable, then ſhall they receive the juſt reward of Gods vengeance, then ſhall they cry woe, woe, that ever they did as they have done. Read Wiſd. 2.3.4.5. Read Matthew 25. Read 1 Corinth. 15. 2 Corinth. 5. and by Faith (which God increaſe in us) conſider the thing there ſet forth. And for your comfort, read Hebrews 11. to ſee what Faith hath done, alwayes conſidering the way to heaven to be by many tribulations, and that all they which will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution. You know this is our Alphabet; He that will be my Diſciple, ſaith Chriſt, muſt deny himſelf, and take up his Croſſe and follow me, not this Biſhop, nor that Doctor, not this Emperour, nor that King, but me, ſaith Chriſt: For he that loveth Father, Mother, Wife, Children, or very life, better then me, is not worthy of me. Remember that the ſame Lord ſaith; He that will ſave his life ſhall loſe it. Comfort your ſelfe with this, that as the Divels had no power over the Porkets, or over Jobs goods without Gods leave, ſo ſhall they have none over you. Remember alſo that all the haires of your head are numbred with God. The Divel may make one beleeve he will drown him, as the Sea in his ſurges threatneth to the land: but as the Lord hath appointed bounds for the one, over the which he cannot paſſe, ſo hath he done for the other.

The way to heaven is by tribulations.

Math. 8.

On God therefore caſt your care, love him, ſerve him after his Word, feare him, truſt in him, hope at his hand for all help, and alwayes pray, looking for the Croſſe, and whenſoever it commeth, be aſſured the Lord, as he is faithfull, ſo he will never tempt you further then he will make you able to beare, but in the midſt of the temptation will make ſuch an evaſion, as ſhall be moſt to his glorie and your eternall comfort. God for his mercie in Chriſt, with his holy ſpirit endue you, comfort you, under the wings of his mercie ſhaddow you, and as his deare childe guide you for evermore. To whoſe mercifull tuition, as I do with my heartie prayer commit you; ſo I doubt not but you pray for me, and ſo I beſeech you to do ſtill. My brother P. telleth me you would have the laſt part of Saint Jeromes workes, to have the uſe thereof for a fortnight. I cannot for theſe three dayes well forbeare it, but yet on Thurſday next I will ſend it you, if God let me not, and uſe me and that I have as your own. The Lord for his mercie in Chriſt direct our wayes to his glorie.

Out of priſon by yours to command:
Iohn Bradford.

To Miſtreſſe M.H. a godly Gentlewoman, comforting her in that common heavineſſe and godly ſorrow, which the feeling and ſenſe of ſinne worketh in Gods children.

I Humbly and heartily pray the everlaſting God and Father of mercie to bleſſe and keep your heart and minde in the knowledge and love of his truth, and of his Chriſt, through the inſpiration and working of his holy ſpirit, Amen.

Another ghoſtly letter of M. Bradford to Miſtris M.H.

Although I have no doubt, but that you proſper and go forward daily in the way of godlineſſe, more and more drawing towards perfection, and have no need of any thing that I can write, yet becauſe my deſire is that you might be more fervent and perſevere to the end, I could not but write ſomething unto you, beſeeching you both often and diligently to call unto your minde, as a mean to ſtirre you hereunto, yea, as a thing which God moſt ſtraightly requireth you to beleeve, that you are beloved of God, and that he is your deare Father, in, through, and for Chriſt and his deaths ſake. This love and tender kindneſſe of God towards us in Chriſt is abundantly herein declared, in that he hath to the godly work of creation of this World made us after his Image, redeemed us being loſt, called us into his Church, ſealed us with his mark and ſigne manuall of Baptiſme, kept and conſerved us all the dayes of our life, fed, nouriſhed, defended, and moſt fatherly chaſtiſed us, and now hath kindled in our hearts the ſparkles of his feare, faith, love and knowledge of his Chriſt and truth, and therefore we lament, becauſe we lament no more our unthankfulneſſe, our fraileneſſe, our diffidence and wavering in things wherein we ſhould be moſt certain.

Gods benefits to be declared.

All theſe things we ſhould uſe as meanes to confirme our Faith of this, that God is our God and Father, and to aſſure us, that he loveth us as our Father in Chriſt: to this end (I ſay) we ſhould uſe the things before touched, eſpecially in that of all things God requireth this Faith and fatherly perſwaſion of his fatherly goodneſſe, as his chiefeſt ſervice. For before he asketh any thing of us, he ſaith; I am the Lord thy God, giving himſelf, and then all he hath to us to be our own. And this he doth in reſpect of himſelf, of his own mercy and truth, and not in reſpect of us, for then were grace no grace. In conſideration whereof, when he ſaith; Thou ſhalt have none other Gods but me, thou ſhalt love me with all thy heart, &c. though of duetie we are bound to accompliſh all that he requireth, and are culpable and guiltie if we do not the ſame, yet he requireth not theſe things further of us, then to make us more in love, and more certain of this his covenant, that he is our Lord and God. In certaintie whereof, as he hath given this whole world to ſerve to our need and commoditie; ſo hath he given his Sonne Chriſt Jeſus, and in Chriſt, himſelf to be a pledge and gage; whereof the holy Ghoſt doth now and then give us ſome taſte and ſweet ſmell to our eternall joy.

The chiefeſt ſervice of God is to think well of his fatherly goodneſſe in Chriſt.

Where feeling faileth, yet obedience is required.

Therefore (as I ſaid) becauſe God is our father in Chriſt, and requireth of you ſtraitly to believe it, give your ſelf to obedience, although you do it not with ſuch feeling as you deſire. Firſt muſt Faith go before, and then feeling will follow. If our imperfection, frailtie, and many evils ſhould be occaſions whereby Satan would have us to doubt, as much as we can let us abhorre that ſuggeſtion, as of all others moſt pernicious; for ſo indeed it is. For when we ſtand in a doubt, whether God be our Father, we cannot be thankfull to God, we cannot heartily pray or think any thing we do acceptable to God, we cannot love our neighbours, and give over our ſelves to care for them, and do for them as we ſhould do, and therefore Satan is moſt ſubtile hereabouts, knowing full well that if we doubt of Gods eternall mercies towards us through Chriſt, we cannot pleaſe God, or do any thing as we ſhould do to man. Continually caſteth he into our memories our imperfection, frailtie, fals, and offences, that we ſhould doubt of Gods mercie and favour towards us.

Let no ſuggeſtion make us doubt of Gods favour in Chriſt.

Therefore (my good ſiſter) we muſt not be ſluggiſh herein, but as Satan laboureth to looſen our Faith, ſo muſt we labour to faſten it by thinking on the promiſes and covenant of God in Chriſts bloud; namely, that God is our God with all that ever he hath: which covenant dependeth and hangeth upon Gods own goodneſſe, mercie and truth only, and not on our obedience or worthineſſe in any point, for then ſhould we never be certain. Indeed God requireth of us obedience and worthineſſe, but not that thereby we might be his Children, and he our Father: but becauſe he is our Father and we his Children through his own goodneſſe in Chriſt, therefore requireth he Faith and obedience. Now if we want this obedience and worthineſſe which he requireth, ſhould we doubt whether he be our Father? Nay, that were to make our obedience and worthineſſe the cauſe, and ſo to put Chriſt out of place, for whoſe ſake God is our Father: But rather becauſe he is our Father, and we feele our ſelves to want ſuch things as he requireth, we ſhould be ſtirred up to a ſhamefaſtneſſe and bluſhing, becauſe we are not as we ſhould be: and thereupon ſhould we take occaſion to go to our Father in prayer on this manner:

To ſtay upon Gods promiſe in Chriſts bloud.

Obedience giveth not to us to be Gods children, but to be Gods children giveth obedience.

How a man ſhould pray when feeling of Gods comfort lacketh.

Deare Father, thou of thine own mercy in Ieſus Chriſt haſt choſen me to be thy childe, and therefore thou wouldſt I ſhould be brought into thy Church and faithfull company of thy children; wherein thou haſt kept me hitherto, thy name therefore be praiſed. Now I ſee my ſelf to want faith, hope, love, &c. which thy children have and thou requireſt of me, wherethrough the Divell would have me to doubt, yea utterly to deſpaire of thy fatherly goodneſſe, favour and mercy. Therefore I come to thee as to my mercifull Father, through thy deare Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, and pray thee to help me good Lord: help me, and give me faith, hope, love, &c. and grant that thy holy ſpirit may be with me for ever, and more and more to aſſure me that thou art my Father; that this mercifull covenant that thou madeſt with me in reſpect of thy grace in Chriſt, and for Chriſt, and not in reſpect of any my worthineſſe, is alwayes to me, &c.

On this ſort (I ſay) you muſt pray and uſe your cogitations, when Satan would have you to doubt of ſalvation. He doth all he can to prevaile herein. Do you all you can to prevaile herein againſt him. Though you feele not as you would, yet doubt not, but hope beyond all hope, as Abraham did. For alwayes (I ſaid) goeth faith before feeling. As certain as God is almightie, as certain as God is mercifull, as certain as God is true, as certain as Ieſus Chriſt was crucified, is riſen, and ſitteth on the right hand of the Father, as certain as this is Gods Commandement: I am the Lord thy God, &c. ſo certain ought you to be that God is your Father. As you are bound to have no other Gods but him, ſo are ye no leſſe bound to believe that God is your God. What profit ſhould it be to you to believe this to be true; I am the Lord thy God, to others, if you ſhould not believe that this is true to your ſelf? The Divell believeth on this ſort. And whatſoever it be that would move you to doubt of this, whether God be your God through Chriſt, that ſame cometh undoubtedly of the Divell. Wherefore did God make you, but becauſe he loved you? Might not he have made you blinde, dumbe, deafe, lame, frantick, &c. Might not he have made you a Iew, a Turk, a Papiſt, &c. And why hath he not done ſo? Verily becauſe he loved you? And why did he love you? What was there in you to move him to love you? Surely nothing moved him to love you, and therefore to make you, and ſo hitherto to keep you, but his own goodneſſe in Chriſt. Now then in that his goodneſſe in Chriſt ſtill remaineth as much as it was, that is, even as great as himſelf, for it cannot be leſſened; how ſhould it be but that he is your God and Father? Believe this, believe this my good ſiſter, for God is no changeling; them whom he loveth, he loveth to the end.

Hope beyond hope.
Faith goeth before feeling.

Doubting cometh of the Divell.

Eccleſ. 2.

Caſt therefore your ſelf wholly upon him, and think without all wavering that you are Gods Childe, that you are a Citizen of Heaven, that you are the daughter of God, the Temple of the holy Ghoſt, &c. If hereof you be aſſured as you ought to be, then ſhall your conſcience be quieted, then ſhall you lament more and more that you want many things which God loveth; then ſhall you labour to be holy in ſoule and body; then ſhall you go about that Gods glory may ſhine in all your words and workes; then ſhall you not be affraid what man can do unto you; then ſhall you have wiſedome to anſwer your adverſaries, as ſhall ſerve to their ſhame, and your comfort; then ſhall you be certain that no man can touch one haire of your head further then ſhall pleaſe your good Father, to your everlaſting joy; then ſhall you be moſt certain, that God as your good Father will be more carefull for your children, and make better proviſion for them, if all you have were gone, then you can; then ſhall you (being aſſured I ſay of Gods favour towards you) give over your ſelf wholly to help and care for others that be in need; then ſhall you contemne this life, and deſire to be at home with your good and ſweet Father; then ſhall you labour to mortifie all things that would ſpot either ſoule or bodie. All theſe things ſpring out of this certain perſwaſion and Faith, that God is our Father, and we are his children by Chriſt Ieſus. All things ſhould help our Faith herein; but Satan goeth about in all things to hinder us.

Faith and aſſured hope of Gods favour, is the fountain of all well doing.

Therefore let us uſe earneſt and heartie prayer; let us often remember this covenant; I am the Lord thy God; let us looke upon Chriſt and his precious bloud ſhed for the obſignation and confirmation of his covenant; let us remember all the free promiſes of the Goſpel; let us ſet before us Gods benefits generally in making this world, in ruling it, in governing it, in calling and keeping his Church, &c. let us ſet before us Gods benefits particularly, how he hath made his creatures after his image, how he made us of perfect limbs, forme, beautie, memorie, &c. how he hath made us Chriſtians, and given us a right judgement in his religion; how he hath ever ſince we were borne, bleſſed, kept, nouriſhed, and defended us; how he hath often beaten, chaſtiſed, and fatherly corrected us; how he hath ſpared us, and doth now ſpare us, giving us time, ſpace, place, grace. This if you do and uſe earneſt prayer, and ſo flee from all things which might wound your conſcience, giving your ſelf to diligence in your vocation, you ſhall finde at the length (which God grant to me with you) a ſure certaintie of ſalvation, without all ſuch doubt as may trouble the peace of conſcience, to your eternall joy and comfort, Amen, Amen.

Yours to uſe in Chriſt, Iohn Bradford.

Another Letter full of godly comfort, written to the ſame perſon.

Another like letter of comfort to M. H.

THe good Spirit of God which guideth his children, be with you my good ſiſter in the Lord for ever, Amen.

Although, as I to you, ſo you unto me in priſon are unknown, yet to him whom we deſire to pleaſe, we are not only in perſons, but alſo in hearts known and throughly ſeen: and therefore as for his ſake you would by that you ſent of me, be perceived how that in God you beare to me a good will; ſo that I to you might be ſeen in God to beare you the like, I ſend to you theſe few words in writing, wiſhing that in all your doings and ſpeech, yea even in your very thoughts you would labour to feele that they are all preſent and open before the ſight of God, be they good or bad. This cogitation often had in minde, and prayer made to God for the working of his Spirit, thereby, as a mean, you ſhall at the length feele more comfort and commoditie, then any man can know, but ſuch as be exerciſed therein. Howbeit this is to be added, that in thinking your ſelf, and all that you have and do, to be in the ſight of God; this (I ſay) is to be added, that you think his ſight is the ſight not only of a Lord, but rather of a Father, which tendereth more your infirmities, then you can tender the infirmities of any your children. Yea, when in your ſelf you ſee a motherly affection to your little one that is weak, let the ſame be unto you a trace to traine you to ſee the unſpeakable kinde affection of God your Father towards you.

Conſideration of Gods tender affection to us in Chriſt his Sonne.

No time nor meanes to be preſcribed to God.

And therefore upon the conſideration of your infirmities and naturall evills, which continually cleave unto us, take occaſion to go to God as your father through Chriſt: and before his mercifull heart lay open your infirmities and evils, with deſire of pardon and help after his good will and pleaſure, but in his time, and not when you will, and by what means he will, not by that way you would: in the mean ſeaſon hang on hope of his fatherly goodneſſe, and ſurely you ſhall never be aſhamed. For if a woman that is naturall cannot finally forget the childe of her wombe, be ſure God which is a Father ſupernaturall cannot, nor will not forget you. Yea if a woman could be ſo forgetfull, yet God himſelf ſaith, he will not be ſo.

Iſai. 49.

This opinion, yea rather certain perſwaſion of God our Father through Chriſt ſee that you cheriſh, and by all means, as well by diligent conſideration of his benefits, as of his loving corrections, whether they be inward or outward, ſee that you nouriſh; knowing for certain, that as the Divel goeth about nothing ſo much as to bring you in a doubt whether ye be Gods childe or no: ſo whatſoever ſhall move you to admit that dubitation, be aſſured the ſame to come from the Divel, if you feele in your ſelf not only the want of good things, but alſo plentie of evill, do not therefore doubt whether you be Gods childe in Chriſt, or no.

The practice of the Divel to bring a man in doubt whether he be Gods childe, or no.

We ought to meaſure Gods favour neither by our goodnes nor ilneſſe, but only by our faith in Chriſt.

For if for your goodneſſe or ilneſſe ſake, which you feele or feele not, ye ſhould beleeve or doubt, then ſhould you make Chriſt Ieſus, for whoſe ſake only God is your father, either nothing, or elſe but half Chriſt.

But rather take occaſion of your wants in good, and of your plentie in evill, to go to God as to your Father, and to pray to him, that in as much as he commandeth you to beleeve that he is your God and Father; ſo he would give you his good Spirit, that you might feele the ſame, and live as his childe, to his glory: and ceaſe not upon ſuch prayers to looke for comfort in Gods good time, ſtill hoping the beſt, and rejecting all dubitation, and ſo all evill works, words, and cogitations, as the Lord ſhall enable you by his good Spirit and grace, which I beſeech him to give unto you, my good ſiſter, for ever. And further I pray you, that as he hath made you to be an helper unto your husband, ſo you would endeavour your ſelf therein to ſhew thy ſame as well in ſoule as bodie; and beg grace of God, that your endeavour may be effectuall to both your comforts in Chriſt, Amen.

A letter of M. Bradford to W. P.

GRace and peace from God the Father, through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

Dear brother, God moſt juſtly hath caſt me down into a dungeon, but much better then I deſerve; wherein I ſee no man but my Keeper, nor can ſee any except they come to me. Something in the earth my lodging is, which is an example and memoriall of my earthly affections (which God I truſt will mortifie) and of my ſepulchre, whereunto I truſt my Lord God will bring me in peace in his good time. In the mean ſeaſon he give me patience, lively hope, and his good Spirit. I pray you pray for me, for the prayer of the godly, if it be fervent, worketh much with God. I thank God my common diſeaſe doth leſſe trouble me then when I was abroad, which doth teach me the mercifull providence of God towards me. Vſe true and hearty prayer, and you ſhall perceive God at length will declare himſelf to ſee, where now many think he ſleepeth.

This diſeaſe was a rheume, with a feebleneſſe of ſtomack wherewith he was much troubled whiles he was at liberty.

A Letter which he wrote to a faithfull woman in her heavineſſe and trouble: moſt comfortable for all thoſe to reade that are afflicted and broken hearted for their ſinnes.

A letter of M. Bradford to a faithfull woman inwardly afflicted.

GOD our good Father for his mercies ſake in Chriſt with his eternall conſolation ſo comfort you, as I deſire to be comforted of him in my moſt need: Yea, he will comfort you (my deare ſiſter) only caſt your care upon him, and he never can nor will forſake you. For his calling and gifts be ſuch, that he can never repent him of them. Whom he loveth, he loveth to the end: none of his choſen can periſh. Of which number I know you are, my dearly beloved ſiſter: God increaſe the faith thereof daily more and more in you, he give unto you to hang wholly on him and on his providence and protection. For whoſo dwelleth under "that ſecret thing, and help of the Lord, he ſhall be cockſure for evermore. He that dwelleth I ſay; for if we be flitters and not dwellers, as was Lot a flitter from Segor, where God promiſed him protection, if he had dwelled there ſtill: we ſhall remove to our loſſe, as he did into the mountains.

Pſal. 31. 90.

Gen. 19.

Dwell therefore, that is, truſt, and that finally unto the end, in the Lord (my dear ſiſter) and you ſhall be as Mount Sion. As mountains compaſſe Ieruſalem; ſo doth the Lord all his people. How then can he forget you, which are as the apple of his eye, for his dear Sons ſake? Ah dear heart, that I were now but one half houre with you, to be a Simon to help to carry your Croſſe with you. God ſend you ſome good Simon to be with you, and help you.

You complain in your Letters of the blindeneſſe of your minde, and the troubles you feele. My dearly beloved, God make you thankfull for that which God hath given unto you; he open your eies to ſee what and how great benefits you have received, that you may be leſſe covetous, or rather impatient, for ſo (I feare me) it ſhould be called, and more thankfull. Have you not received at his hands ſight to ſee your blindeneſſe, and thereto a deſirous and ſeeking heart to ſee where he lieth in the mid-day, as his dear Spouſe ſpeaketh of her ſelf in the Canticles? Oh Joyce, my good Joyce, what a gift is this? Many have ſome ſight, but none this ſobbing and ſighing, none this ſeeking which you have, I know, but ſuch as he hath married unto him in his mercies. You are not content to kiſſe his feete with the Magdalen, but you would be kiſſed even with the kiſſe of his mouth, Canticles 1. You would ſee his face with Moſes, forgetting how he biddeth us ſeek his face, Pſalme 27. yea, and that for ever, Pſalme 105. Which ſignifieth no ſuch ſight, as you deſire to be in this preſent life, which would ſee God now face to face, whereas he cannot be ſeen, but covered under ſomething, yea ſometime in that which is (as you would ſay) clean contrary to God; as to ſee his mercy in his anger. In bringing us to hell, faith ſeeth him bring us to Heaven; in darkneſſe it beholdeth brightneſſe: in hiding his face from us, it beholdeth his merry countenance. How did Job ſee God, but as (you would ſay) under Satans cloak? For who caſt the fire from Heaven upon his goods? Who overthrew his houſe, and ſtirred up men to take away his cattell, but Satan? And yet Job pierced through all theſe, and ſaw Gods work, ſaying; The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away, &c.

God cannot be ſeene, but covered under ſomething.
How faith ſeeth God, where fleſh ſeeth hell

In reading of the Pſalmes, how often do you ſee that David in the ſhaddow of death ſaw Gods ſweet love? And ſo my dearly beloved, I ſee that you in your darkneſſe and dimneſſe by faith do ſee claritie and brightneſſe: by faith, I ſay, becauſe faith is of things abſent, of things hoped for, of things which I appeale to your conſcience, whether you deſire not. And can you deſire any thing which you know not? And is there of heavenly things any other true knowledge then by faith?

Therefore (my deare heart) be thankfull, for (before God I write it) you have great cauſe. Ah, my Joyce, how happie is the ſtay wherein you are? Verily you are even in the bleſſed ſtate of Gods children; for they mourn, and do not you ſo? And that not for worldly weale, but for ſpirituall riches, Faith, Hope, Charitie, &c. Do you not hunger and thirſt for righteouſneſſe? And I pray you, ſaith not Chriſt, who cannot lie, that happy are ſuch? How ſhould God wipe away the teares from your eyes in Heaven, if now on earth ye ſhed no teares? How could Heaven be a place of reſt, if on earth ye finde it? How could you deſire to be at home, if in your journey you found no grief? How could you ſo often call upon God, and talk with him, as I know you do, if your enemie ſhould ſleep all day long? How ſhould you elſewhere be made like unto Chriſt, I mean in joy, if in ſorrow you ſobbed not with him? If you will have joy and felicitie, you muſt firſt needs feele ſorrow and miſery. If you will go to Heaven, you muſt ſaile by hell. If you will imbrace Chriſt in his robbes, you muſt not think ſcorne of him in his ragges. If you will ſit at Chriſts Table in his Kingdome, you muſt firſt abide with him in his temptations. If you will drink of his Cup of glorie, forſake not his Cup of ignominie.

The way to heaven is to go through hell.

Can the head corner ſtone be rejected, and the other more baſe ſtones in Gods building be in this world ſet by? You are one of his lively ſtones, be content therefore to be hewn and ſnagged at, that you might be made more meete to be joyned to your fellowes which ſuffer with you Satans ſnatches, the worlds wounds, contempt of conſcience, and threats of the fleſh, where-through they are enforced to cry, Oh wretches that we are, who ſhall deliver us? Happie and twice happie are you (my deare ſiſter) that God now haileth you whether you would not, that you might come whether you would. Suffer a little and be ſtill. Let Satan rage againſt you, let the world cry out, let your conſcience accuſe you, let the Law loade you, and preſſe you down, yet ſhall they not prevaile, for Chriſt is, Emmanuel, that is, God with you. If God be with us, who can be againſt us? The Lord is with you, your Father cannot forget you; your Spouſe loveth you. If the waves and ſurges ariſe, cry with Peter, Lord, I periſh; and he will put out his hand and help you. Think not that he which hath given you ſo many things corporally, as inductions of ſpirituall and heavenly mercies, and that without your deſerts or deſire, can denie you any ſpirituall comfort, deſiring it. For if he give to deſire, he will give you to have and enjoy the thing deſired. The deſire to have, and the going about to aske, ought to certifie your conſcience, that they be his earneſt of the thing which you asking he will give you; yea before you aske, and whileſt you are about to aske, he will grant the ſame, as Iſaiah ſaith, to his glory and your enternall conſolation. Philip. 1.
Deſire of ſpirituall comfort, though it be lacking is a great gift of God.

If he had not choſen you (as moſt certainly he hath) he would not have ſo called you; he would never have juſtified you; he would never have ſo glorified you with his gracious gifts, which I know, praiſed be his name therefore; he would never have ſo exerciſed your faith with temptations, as he hath done and doth; if (I ſay) he had not choſen you. If he have choſen you (as doubtleſſe, dear heart, he hath done in Chriſt, for in you I have ſeene his earneſt, and before me and to me you could not deny it, I know both where and when) if I ſay, he have choſen you, then neither can you, nor ever ſhall you periſh. For if you fall, he putteth under his hand; you ſhall not lie ſtill; ſo carefull is Chriſt your Keeper over you. Never was mother ſo mindefull over her childe, as he is over you. And hath not he alwaies been ſo?

Rom. 8.
Exerciſe of tentations a great token of election.

Speak woman, when did he finally forget you? And will he now trowe you in your moſt neede do otherwiſe, you calling upon him, and deſiring to pleaſe him? Ah (my Joyce) think you God to be mutable? Is he a changeling? Doth not he love to the end them whom he loveth? Are not his gifts and calling ſuch, that he cannot repent him of them? For elſe were he no God. If you ſhould periſh, then wanted he power; for I am certain his will towards you is not to be doubted of. Hath not the ſpirit, which is the ſpirit of truth, told you ſo? And will you now hearken with Eve to the lying ſpirit which would have you not to deſpair, (no he goeth more craftily to work, howbeit to that end, if you ſhould give eare unto it, which God forbid) but to doubt and ſtand in a mammering, and ſo ſhould you never truly love God, but ſerve him of a ſervile fear, leſt he ſhould caſt you off for your unworthineſſe and unthankfulneſſe; as though your thankfulneſſe or worthineſſe were any cauſe with God, why he hath choſen you, or will finally keep you.

Rom. 11.

Every lying ſpirit not to be hearkned unto. Satan ſeeketh to bring tender conſciences to doubting, but Gods promiſe in Chriſt ſtandeth ſure for ever.

Ah mine own dear heart, Chriſt only, Chriſt only, and his mercie and truth. In him is the cauſe of your election. This Chriſt, this mercie, this truth of God remaineth for ever, is certain for ever, I ſay, for ever. If an Angell from Heaven ſhould tell you contrary, accurſed be he. Your thankfulneſſe and worthineſſe are fruits and effects of your election, they are no cauſes. Theſe fruits and effects ſhall be ſo much more fruitfull and effectuall, by how much you waver not.

All our election is in and for Chriſt only.

Therefore (my dearly beloved) ariſe, and remember from whence you are falne. You have a Shepherd which neither ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth; No man nor Devill can pull you out of his hands. Night and day he commandeth his Angels to keep you. Have you forgotten what I read to you out of the Pſalm: The Lord is my Shepherd, I can want nothing? Do you not know that God ſpared Noah in the Ark on the outſide, ſo that he could not get out? So hath he done to you (my good ſiſter) ſo hath he done to you. Ten thouſand ſhall fall on your right hand, and twentie thouſand on your left hand, yet no evill ſhall touch you. Say boldly therefore; Many a time from my youth up they have fought againſt me, but they have not prevailed, no, nor never ſhall prevail, for the Lord is round about his people. And who are the people of God, but ſuch as hope in him? Happie are they that hope in the Lord, and you are one of thoſe, my dear heart, for I am aſſured you have hoped in the Lord; I have your words to ſhew moſt manifeſtly, and I know they were written unfainedly. Indeed not to ſay, that even before God you have ſimply confeſſed to me, and that oftentimes no leſſe. And once of you had this hope, as you doubtleſſe had it, though now you feele it not, yet ſhall you feele it again: for the anger of the Lord laſteth but a moment, but his mercie laſteth for ever. Tell me (my dear heart) who hath ſo weakned you? Surely not a perſwaſion which came from him that called you. For why ſhould you waver? Why ſhould you waver, and be ſo heavy hearted? Whom look you on? On your ſelf? On your worthineſſe? On your thankfulneſſe? On that which God requireth of you, as faith, hope, love, feare, joy, &c. Then can you not but waver indeed: for what have you as God requireth? Beleeve you, hope you, love you, &c. as much as you ſhould do? No, no, nor ever can in this life. Ah, my dearly beloved, have you ſo ſoon forgotten that which ever ſhould be had in memory? Namely, that when you would and ſhould be certain and quiet in conſcience, then ſhould your faith burſt throughout all things not only that you have in you, or elſe are in Heaven, earth, or hell, untill it come to Chriſt crucified, and the eternall ſweet mercies and goodneſſe of God in Chriſt? Here, here is the reſting place, here is your Spouſes bed; creep into it, and in your armes of faith imbrace him, bewail your weakneſſe, your unworthineſſe, your diffidence, &c. and you ſhall ſee he will turn to you. What ſaid, I, you ſhall ſee? Nay, I ſhould have ſaid, You ſhall feel he will turn to you. You know that Moſes, when he went to the Mount to talk with God, he entred into a dark cloud, and Helias had his face covered when God paſſed by. Both theſe dear friends of God heard of God, but they ſaw him not, but you would be preferred before them. See now (my dear heart) how covetous you are. Ah be thankfull, be thankfull. But God be praiſed your covetouſneſſe is Moſes covetouſneſſe. Well, with him you ſhall be ſatisfied. But when? Forſooth when he ſhall appear. Here is not the time of ſeeing, but as it were in a glaſſe. Iſaac was deceived becauſe he was not content with hearing only.

Though feeling faile, yet let hope hold faſt.

The eye of faith muſt look upon nothing elſe but only Chriſt crucified.

Therefore to make an end of theſe many words, wherewith I fear me I do but trouble you from better exerciſes; inaſmuch as you are indeed the childe of God elect in Chriſt before the beginning of all times, inaſmuch as you are given to the cuſtodie of Chriſt, as one of Gods moſt precious Jewels; inaſmuch as Chriſt is faithfull, and hitherto hath all power, ſo that you ſhall never periſh, no one hair of your head ſhall not be loſt: I beſeech you, I pray you, I deſire you, I crave at your hands with all my very heart, I ask of you with hand, pen, tongue, and minde, in Chriſt, through Chriſt, for Chriſt, for his name, bloud, mercies, power, and truths ſake, my moſt intirely beloved ſiſter, that you admit no doubting of Gods finall mercies towards you, howſoever you feel your ſelf; but complain to God, and crave of him, as of your tender and dear Father, all things, and in that time which ſhall be moſt opportune, you ſhall finde and feel far above that your heart or the heart of any creature can conceive, to your eternall joy. Amen, Amen, Amen.

Learn here to put away doubting, all tender hearts that ſeek after Chriſt.

The good Spirit of God alwais keep us as his dear children; he comfort you, as I deſire to be comforted, my dearly beloved, for evermore, Amen.

I break up thus abruptly, becauſe our common prayer time calleth me. The peace of Chriſt dwell in both our hearts for ever, Amen.

As for the report of W. Po. if it be as you hear, you muſt prepare to bear it. It is written on Heavens door; Do well, and hear evill. Be content therefore to hear whatſoever the enemy ſhall imagine to blot you withall. Gods holy Spirit alwais comfort and keep you, Amen, Amen. This This eighth of Auguſt, by him that in the Lord deſireth to you as well and as much felicitie as to his own heart.

The Poeſie written upon heaven gates.

John Bradford.

Here followeth another Letter of his, written to the good Ladie Vane, wherein he reſolveth certain queſtions which ſhe demanded. This Ladie Vane was a ſpeciall Nurſe, and a great ſupporter to her power of the godly Saints, which were impriſoned in Queen Maries time. Unto whom divers Letters I have both of Maſter Philpot, Careles, Trahern, Thomas Roſe, and of others more, wherein they render unto her moſt gratefull thanks for her exceeding goodneſſe extended towards them, with their ſingular commendation and teſtimonie alſo of her Chriſtian zeal towards Gods afflicted priſoners, and to the veritie of his Goſpel. She departed of late at Holborn, Anno 1568. whoſe end was more like a ſleep, then any death; ſo quietly and meekly ſhe deceaſed and departed hence in the Lord.

Commendation of the Lady Vane.

Note how God commonly rewardeth the helpers and friends of his Saints.

Amongſt other which wrote unto her, Maſter Bradford alſo ſent theſe Letters to the ſaid Ladie; the tenor whereof here followeth.

To my good Ladie Vane.

THe true ſenſe and ſweet feeling of Gods eternall mercies in Chriſt Jeſus be ever more and more lively wrought in your heart by the holy Ghoſt, Amen.

A letter of M. Bradford written to the good Lady Vane, wherein he diſcuſſeth doubts concerning the coming to Maſſe.

The abomination of the Maſſe ſet forth.

Theſe queſtions were concerning the Maſſe, wherein ſhe deſireth his judgement.

I moſt heartily thank you (good Madam) for your comfortable Letters; and whereas you would be advertiſed what were beſt to be done on your behalf, concerning your three queſtions; the truth is, that the queſtions are never well ſeen, nor anſwered, untill the thing whereof they ariſe be well conſidered, I mean untill it be ſeen how great an evill the thing is. If it be once indeed in your heart perceived, upon probable and pithie places gathered out of Gods Book, that there was never thing upon the earth ſo great, and ſo much an adverſarie to Gods true ſervice, to Chriſts death, paſſion, prieſthood, ſacrifice and Kingdom, to the Miniſtery of Gods Word and Sacraments, to the Church of God, to repentance, faith, and all true godlineſſe of life, as that is whereof the queſtions ariſe (as moſt aſſuredly it is indeed) then cannot a Chriſtian heart but ſo much the more abhorre it, and all things that in any point might ſeem to allow it, or any thing pertaining to the ſame, by how much it hath the name of Gods ſervice.

Again, your Ladiſhip doth know, that as all is to be diſcommended and avoided, which is followed or fled from in reſpect of our ſelves, in reſpect of avoiding Chriſts Croſſe: ſo the end of all our doings ſhould be to God-wards, to his glory, to our neighbours, to edification and good example, whereof none can be given in allowing any of the three queſtions by you propounded. But becauſe this which I write now is brief, and needeth the more conſideration or explication; as I doubt not of the one in you, ſo from me by Gods grace you ſhall receive the other ſhortly. For I have already written a little book of it, which I will ſend unto you, in the which you ſhall have your queſtions fully anſwered and ſatisfied, and therefore I omit to write any more hereabout preſently; beſeeching God our good Father to guide you as his dear childe with his Spirit of wiſedome, power, and comfort unto eternall life, that you may be ſtrong, and rejoyce in him and with his Church, to carry Chriſts Croſſe, if he ſhall ſo think it need, 1 Pet. 1. Which is a thing to be deſired, wiſhed, and embraced, if we looked on things after the judgement of Gods Word, and tried them by that touchſtone.

He meaneth his book which he calleth the hurt of hearing Maſſe.

If you be accuſtomed to think on the brevity, vanity, and miſery of this life, and on the eternity, truth, and felicity of everlaſting life; if you look on things after their ends, and not after their preſent appearance only; if you uſe your ſelf to ſet Gods preſence, power, and mercy alwais before your eies, to ſee them, as God by every creature would you ſhould; I doubt not but you ſhall finde ſuch ſtrength and comfort in the Lord, as you ſhall not be ſhaken with all the power of Satan. Gods mercy in Chriſt be with you, and his good Spirit guide you for ever, Amen.

Another Letter to the Lady Vane.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to the foreſaid Lady Vane.

As to mine own ſoul, I wiſh to your Ladiſhip grace and mercy from God our dear Father in Chriſt our Lord and Saviour.

I thank God that ſomething he hath eaſed you, and and mitigated his fatherly correction in us both; I would to God he had done ſo much in the behalf of the grief of the body to you, as he hath done to me. For as for the ſoul, I truſt you feel that which I pray God increaſe in you, I mean his fatherly love, and grant that I may with you feel the ſame in ſuch degree as may pleaſe him; I will not ſay as you feel, leſt I ſhould ſeem to aske too much at one time. God doth often much more plentifully viſit with the ſenſe of his mercy them that humble themſelves under his mighty hand, and are ſore exerciſed (as you long have been) then others, which to the face of the world have a more ſhew and appearance.

Therefore I wiſh as I do, and that not only for mine own commodity, but alſo that I might occaſion you to the conſideration of the goodneſſe of God, which I by your Letters do well eſpy; which is indeed the high-way, whereby as God increaſeth his gifts, ſo ſheweth he more lively his ſalvation, Pſal. 50. 107. I have received Gods bleſſing from you, the which I have partly diſtributed unto my three fellow-priſoners, Maſter Farrat, Maſter Taylor, Maſter Philpot; and the reſidue I will beſtow upon foure poor ſouls which are impriſoned in the common Goale for Religion alſo. As for mine own part, if I had need, I would have ſerved my turn alſo. But becauſe I had not, nor (I thank God) have not, I have been and will be your Almner in ſuch ſort as I have already advertiſed you. God reward you, and give you to finde it ſpiritually and corporally. Becauſe otherwiſe I cannot talk with you, therefore on this ſort, as occaſion and opportunity will ſerve, I am ready to ſhew my good will and deſire of your help and furtherance in the Lord to everlaſting life, whereunto God bring us ſhortly for his mercies ſake, Amen.

Good Madam be thankfull to God, as I hope you be; be earneſt in prayer, continue in reading and hearing Gods Word, and if Gods further croſſe come, as therein God doth ſerve his providence (for elſe it ſhall not come unto you) ſo be certain the ſame ſhall turn to your eternall joy and comfort, Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

To my dear friends and brethren, R. and E. with their wives and families.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to two faithfull friends of his, one Roydon, and Ellis.

The comfort of Chriſt felt commonly of his children in their croſſe for his ſake, the everlaſting God work in both your hearts, my good brethren, and in the hearts of both your yoak fellows, eſpecially of good Mary my good ſiſter in the Lord, Amen.

If I had not ſomething heard of the hazzard which you are in for the Goſpels ſake, if you continue the profeſſion and confeſſion thereof, as I truſt you do and will do, and that unto the end, God enabling you, as he will doubtleſſe for his mercies ſake, if you hope in him (for this bindeth him, as David in Chriſts perſon witneſſeth; Our Fathers hoped in thee, and thou deliveredſt them, &c. Pſal. 22.) yet by conjectures I could not but ſuppoſe (though not ſo certainly) the time of your ſuffering and probation to be at hand. For now is the power of darkneſſe fully come upon this Realm moſt juſtly for our ſinnes, and abuſing the Light lent us of the Lord, to the ſetting forth of our ſelves more then Gods glory, that as well we might be brought into the better knowledge of our evils, and ſo heartily repent (which God grant us to do) as alſo we might have more feeling and ſenſe of our ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, by the humbling and dejecting of us, thereby to make us as more deſirous of him, ſo him more ſweet and pleaſant unto us; the which thing the good Spirit of God work ſenſibly in all our hearts for Gods holy names ſake.

For this cauſe I thought it my dutie, being now where I have ſome liberty to write (the Lord be praiſed) and hearing of you as I hear; to do that which I ſhould have done, if I had heard nothing at all: that is, to deſire you to be of good cheer and comfort in the Lord (although in the world you ſee cauſe rather to the contrary) and to go on forwards in the way of God whereinto you are entred, conſidering that the ſame cannot but ſo much more and more wax ſtraight to the outward man, by how much you draw neerer to the end of it: even as in the travell of a woman, the neerer ſhe draweth to her delivery, the more her pains increaſe; ſo it goeth with us in the Lords way, the neerer we draw to our deliverance by death to our eternall felicity.

The neerer we come to our journies end, travelling to heaven, the ſtraighter is the way.

Example whereof we have, I will not ſay, in the holy Prophets and Apoſtles of God, which when they were yong girded themſelves, and went in manner whither they would, but when they waxed old, they went girded of others, whither they would not, concerning the outward man; but rather and moſt lively in our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe life and way was much more painfull to him towards the end, than it was at the beginning. And no marvell, for Satan can ſomething abide a man to begin well, and ſet forwards, but rather than he ſhould go on to the end, he will vomit his gorge, and caſt out flouds to overflow him, before he will ſuffer that come to paſſe.

Example of the travell of a woman.

John 21.

Example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

Therefore as we ſhould not be diſmayed now at this world, as though ſome ſtrange thing were happened unto us, in that it is but as it was wont to be to the godly, in that the Devill declareth himſelf after his old wont, in that we have profeſſed no leſſe, but to forſake the world and the Devill, as Gods very enemies, in that we learned no leſſe at the firſt, when we came to Gods School, than to deny our ſelves, and take up our Croſſe and follow our Maſter, which leadeth us none other way than he himſelf hath gone before us: as (I ſay) we ſhould not be diſmayed, ſo we ſhould with patience and joy go forwards, if we ſet before us as preſent the time to come, like as the wife in her travell doth the deliverance of her childe, and as the Saints of God did, but eſpecially our Saviour and patern Jeſus Chriſt; for the Apoſtle ſaith; He ſet before him the joy and glory to come, and therefore contemned the ſhame and ſorrow of the croſſe; ſo if we did, we ſhould finde at the length as they found. For whom would it grieve which hath a long journey to go through a peece of foul way, if he knew that after that, the way ſhould be moſt pleaſant, yea the journey ſhould be ended, and he at his reſting place moſt happy? Who will be afraid, or loath to leave a little pelf for a little time, if he knew he ſhould ſhortly after receive moſt plentifull riches? Who will be unwilling for a little while to forſake his wife, children, or friends, &c. when he knoweth he ſhall ſhortly after be aſſociated unto them inſeparably, even after his own hearts deſire? Who will be ſorry to forſake his life, which cannot but be moſt certain of eternall life? Who loveth the ſhadow better than the body? Who can love this life, but they that regard not the life to come? Who can deſire the droſſe of this world, but ſuch as be ignorant of the treaſures of the everlaſting joy in heaven? I mean, who is afraid to dye, but ſuch as hope not to live eternally? Chriſt hath promiſed pleaſures, riches, joy, felicity, and all good things to them that for his ſake loſe any thing, and ſuffer any ſorrow. And is he not true? How can he but be true? for guil was never found in his mouth.

The malice of the Devill no new thing.

Heb. 12.

Godly counſell ſtirring us to the contempt of this tranſitory life.

Matth. 19.

1 Pet. 2.

Alas then, why are we ſo ſlack and ſlow, yea hard of heart to beleeve him, promiſing us thus plentifully eternall bliſfulneſſe, and are ſo ready to beleeve the world promiſing us many things, and paying us nothing? If we will curry favour now, and halt on both parts, then it promiſeth us peace, quietneſſe, and many other things elſe. But how doth it pay this gear? or if it pay it, with what quietneſſe of conſcience? Or if ſo; how long I pray you? Do not we ſee before our eyes, men to dye ſhamefully, I mean as rebels and other malefactors, which refuſe to dye for Gods cauſe? What way is ſo ſure a way to heaven, as to ſuffer in Chriſts cauſe? If there be any way on horſe-back to heaven, ſurely this is the way; By many troubles (ſaith the Apoſtle) we muſt enter into heaven. All that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution. For the world cannot love them that are of GOD; the Devill cannot love his enemies; the world will love none but his own: you are Chriſts, therefore look for no love here. Should we look for fire to quench our thirſt? And as ſoon ſhall Gods true ſervants finde peace and favour in Antichriſts regiment.

The flattering promiſes of this world, ill-favouredly performed.

2 Tim. 3.

Therefore (my dearly beloved) be ſtout in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on you his armour; ſtand in the liberty of Chriſt which you have learned; rejoyce that you may be counted worthy to ſuffer any thing for Gods cauſe: to all men this is not given. Your reward is great in heaven, though in earth ye finde nothing. The journey is almoſt paſt, you are almoſt in the haven; hale on apace I beſeech you, and merrily hoiſe up your ſails. Caſt your ſelves on Chriſt, who careth for you. Keep company with him now ſtill to the end; he is faithfull, and will never leave you, nor tempt you further than he will make you able to bear; yea in the middeſt of the temptation he will make an out-ſcape. Now pray unto him heartily, be thankfull of his indignation, rejoyce in hope of the health you ſhall receive, and be mindefull of us which are in the vaward, and by Gods grace truſt in Chriſt to be made able to break the Ice before you, that you following may finde the way more eaſie. God grant it may ſo be, Amen, Amen.

To bear the croſſe with courage.

Out of priſon by your Brother in Chriſt,
Iohn Bradford.

To Miſtris Wilkinſon.

A Letter of M. Bradford to Miſtris Wilkinſon.

ALmighty God our moſt loving Father, increaſe in your heart (my good mother and dear miſtris in the Lord) his true knowledge and love in Chriſt, to the incouraging and comforting of your faith in theſe ſtormy dayes; as neceſſary unto us, ſo profitable if we perſiſt unto the end, which thing God grant to us, Amen.

My right dearly beloved, I know not what other thing to write unto you, than to deſire you to be thankfull to the Lord, in that amongſt the not many of your calling and ſtate, it pleaſeth him to give you his rare bleſſing, I mean to keep you from all the filth wherewith our country is horribly defiled. This bleſſing aſſuredly is rare as you ſee. But now if he ſhall bleſſe you with another bleſſing, which is more rare, I mean to call you forth as a Martyr, and a witneſſe againſt this filth, I hope you will become double thankfull. For a greater token commonly we have not to judge of our election and ſalvation, next to Chriſt and faith in him, than the croſſe, eſpecially when it is ſo glorious, as on this ſort to ſuffer any thing, but chiefly loſſe of this life, which indeed is never found till it be ſo loſt; except the grain of wheat fall and be dead, it remaineth fruitleſſe.

The croſſe a great token of election.

You know how that he which was rapt into the third heaven, and did know what he wrote, doth ſay, That as the corn liveth not, except it be dead and caſt into the earth, ſo truly our bodies. And therefore the croſſe ſhould ſo little fear us, that even death it ſelf ſhould altogether be deſired of us, as the Taylor which putteth off our rags, and arayeth us with the royall robes of immortality, incorruption and glory. Great ſhame it ſhould be for us, that all the whole creatures of God ſhould deſire, yea groan in their kinde for our liberty, and we our ſelves to loath it; as doubtleſſe we do, if for the croſſe, yea for death it ſelf, we with joy ſwallow not up all ſorrow that might let us from following the Lords calling, and obeying the Lords providence; whereby doubtleſſe all croſſes, and death it ſelf doth come, and not by hap or chance. In conſideration whereof, right dear mother, that this providence ſtretcheth it ſelf ſo unto us, and for us, that even the hairs of our heads are numbred with God, not one of them to fall to our hurt; ſurely we declare our ſelves very faint in faith, if we receive not ſuch comfort, that we can willingly offer our ſelves to the Lord, and caſt our whole care upon his back, honouring him with this honour, that he is and ever will be carefull for us, and all we have, as for his dear children. Be therefore of good cheer even in the middeſt of theſe miſeries, be thankfull to the Lord, and prepare your ſelf for a further tryall, which if God ſend you, as I hope, ſo do you beleeve, that God therein will help and comfort you, and make you able to bear whatſoever ſhall happen. And thus much, having this opportunity, I thought good to write, praying God our Father to recompence into your boſome all the good that ever you have done, to me eſpecially, and to many others, both in this time of trouble, and alwayes heretofore.

1 Cor.

Rom.

Your own in the Lord,
John Bradford.

Another Letter written to certain godly perſons, incouraging them to prepare themſelves with patience to the Croſſe.

Another fruitfull Letter of M. Bradford, exhorting from the love of this world, to the patient bearing of the croſſe.

GRacious God and moſt mercifull Father, for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, thy dearly beloved Son, grant us thy mercie, grace, wiſedom, and holy Spirit to counſell, comfort, and guide us, in all our cogitations, words and works, to thy glory, and our everlaſting joy and peace for ever, Amen.

In my laſt Letter you might perceive my conjecturing to be no leſſe towards you, than now I have learned. But (my dearly beloved) I have learned none other thing, than before I have told you would come to paſſe, if ye caſt not away that which ye have learned. I do appeal to both your conſciences, whether herein I ſpeak truth, as well of my telling (though not ſo often as I might and ſhould, God forgive me) as alſo of your learning. Now God will try you, to make others to learn by you, that which ye have learned by others: and by them which ſuffered this day ye might learn (if already ye had not learned) that life and honour is not to be ſet by more than Gods commandement. They in no point for all that ever their ghoſtly Fathers could do, having Doctor Death to take their part, would conſent, or ſeem to conſent to the Popiſh Maſſe and Papiſticall God, otherwiſe than in the dayes of our late King they had received. And this their faith they have confeſſed with their deaths, to their great glory, and all our comforts, if we follow them; but to our confuſion, if we ſtart back from the ſame. Wherefore I beſeech you to conſider it, as well to praiſe God for them, as to go the ſame way with them, if God ſo will.

The Lady Jane and her husband were beheaded that day.

Doctor Death the Popes chaplain.

Conſider not the things of this life, which is a very priſon to all Gods children; but the things of everlaſting life, which is our very home. But to the beholding of this gear, ye muſt open the eyes of your minde, of faith I ſhould have ſaid, as Moſes did, which ſet more by trouble with Gods people, than by the riches of Egypt, and Pharaohs Court. Your houſe, home, and goods, yea life, and all that ever ye have, God hath given you as love-tokens, to admoniſh you of his love, and to win your love to him again. Now will he try your love, whether ye ſet more by him than by his tokens, or no. If ye for his tokens ſake, that is, for your home, houſe, goods, yea life, will go with the world, leſt ye ſhould loſe them, then be aſſured your love, as he cannot but eſpy it to be a ſtrumpets love, ſo will he caſt it away with the world. Remember that he which will ſave his life ſhall loſe it, if Chriſt be true: but he which adventureth, yea loſeth his life for the Goſpels ſake, the ſame ſhall be ſure to finde it eternally. Do not ye know that the way to ſalvation, is not the broad way which many run in, but the ſtraight way, which few now walk in?

Example of Moſes, forſaking Pharaohs houſe, to go with Gods people.

Gods love-tokens.

A ſtrumpet ſetteth more by her tokens than by her lover.

Before perſecution came, men might partly have ſtood in a doubt by the outward ſtate of the world with us (although by Gods word it was plain) whether was the high-way (for there were as many that pretended the Goſpel as Popery) but now the Sun is riſen, and the winde bloweth, ſo that the corn which hath not taken faſt root, cannot nor will not abide; and therefore eaſily ye may ſee the ſtraight way by the ſmall number that paſſeth thorow it. Who will now adventure their goods and life for Chriſts ſake, which yet gave his life for our ſakes? We are now become Gergeſites, that would rather loſe Chriſt than our Porkets. A faithfull wife is never tried ſo to be, but when ſhe rejecteth and withſtandeth wooers. A faithfull Chriſtian is then found ſo to be, when his faith is aſſaulted.

In King Edwards time the high way could not be known.

Matth. 8. Gergeſites ſet more by their Pigs than by Chriſt.

If we be not able, I mean, if we will not forſake this world for Gods glory and Goſpels ſake, trow ye that God will make us able, or give us a will to forſake it for natures ſake? Dye ye muſt once, and leave all ye have (God knoweth how ſoon and when) will ye, or will ye not, and ſeeing perforce ye muſt do this, will ye not willingly now do it for Gods ſake?

If ye go to Maſſe, and do as the moſt part doth, then may ye live at reſt and quietly; but if ye deny to go to it, then ſhall ye go to priſon, loſe your goods, leave your children comfortleſſe, yea loſe your life alſo. But (my dearly beloved) open the eyes of your faith, and ſee how ſhort a thing this life is, even a very ſhadow and ſmoke. Again, ſee how intolerable the puniſhment of hell fire is, and that endleſſe. Laſt of all, look on the joys incomprehenſible, which God hath prepared for all them world without end, which loſe either lands or goods for his names ſake. And then do ye reaſon thus; If we go to Maſſe, the greateſt enemy that Chriſt hath, though for a little time we ſhall live in quiet, and leave to our children that they may live by hereafter, yet ſhall we diſpleaſe God, fall into his hands (which is horrible to hypocrites) and be in wonderfull hazard of falling from eternall joy into eternall miſery, firſt of ſoul, and then of body, with the Devill and all Idolaters.

The tranſitory pleaſures of this life weighed with the endleſſe puniſhment to come hereafter both of body and ſoul.

Again, we ſhall want peace of conſcience, which ſurmounteth all the riches of the world: and for our children, who knoweth whether God will viſit our Idolatry on them in this life; yea our houſe and goods are in danger of loſing, as our lives be, through many caſualties: and when God is angry with us, he can ſend alwayes, when he will, one mean or another to take all from us for our ſins, and to caſt us into care for our own ſakes, which will not come into ſome little trouble for his ſake.

On this ſort reaſon with your ſelves, and then doubtleſſe God will work otherwiſe with you, and in you, than ye are ware of. Where now ye think your ſelves unable to abide perſecution, be moſt aſſured, if ſo be you purpoſe not to forſake God, that God will make you ſo able to bear

1 Cor. 10.
God will give ability, not only to bear his croſſe, but alſo to rejoyce in bearing it.

his croſſe, that therein you ſhall rejoyce. Faithfull is God (ſaith Paul) which will not tempt you further than he will make you able to bear, yea he will give you an out-ſcape in the croſſe, which ſhall be to your comfort. Think how great a benefit it is, if God will vouch you worthy this honour, to ſuffer loſſe of any thing for his ſake. He might juſtly caſt moſt grievous plagues upon you, and yet now he will correct you with that rod whereby you ſhall be made like to his Chriſt, that for ever ye may reign with him. Suffer your ſelves therefore now to be made like to Chriſt, for elſe ye ſhall never be made like unto him. The Devill would gladly have you now to overthrow that which godly ye have of long time profeſſed. Oh how would he triumph, if he could win his purpoſe? Oh how would the Papiſts triumph againſt Gods Goſpel in you? Oh how would you confirm them in their wicked Popery? Oh how would the poor children of God be diſcomforted, if now you ſhould go to Maſſe and other Idolatrous ſervice, and do as the world doth?

Hath God delivered you from the ſweat to ſerve him ſo? Hath God miraculouſly reſtored you to health from your grievous Agues for ſuch a purpoſe? Hath God given you ſuch bleſſings in this world, and good things all the dayes of your life hitherto, and now of equity will ye not receive at his hands, and for his ſake, ſome evill? God forbid: I hope better of you. Uſe prayer, and caſt your care upon God; commit your children into his hand; give to God your goods, bodies, and lives, as he hath given them, or rather lent them unto you. Say with Job; God hath given, and God hath taken away, his name be praiſed for ever. Caſt your care upon him, I ſay, for he is carefull for you; and take it amongſt the greateſt bleſſings of God, to ſuffer for his ſake. I truſt he hath kept you hitherto to that end.

A great bleſſing of God to ſuffer for his ſake.

And I beſeech thee, O mercifull Father, for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, that thou wouldeſt be mercifull unto us, comfort us with thy grace, and ſtrengthen us in thy truth, that in heart we may beleeve, and in tongue boldly confeſſe thy Goſpel, to thy glory, and our eternall ſalvation, Amen. Pray for me, and I by Gods grace will do the ſame for you.

Iohn Bradford.

An admonition to certain profeſſours of the Goſpel, to beware they fall not from it, in conſenting to the Romiſh Religion, by the example of other halting and double-faced Goſpellers.

Another Letter or admonition of M. Bradford to certain godly profeſſors of Gods truth.

The peace of Chriſt, which is the true effect of Gods Goſpel beleeved (my dearly beloved) be more and more plentifully perceived of you, through the grace of our dear Father, by the mighty working of the holy Spirit our comforter, Amen.

Though I have many Letters preſently to hinder me from writing unto you, yet being deſired, I could not but ſomething ſignifie my ready good will in this behalf, ſo much as I may, when I cannot ſo much as I would.

You hear and ſee how Satan beſtirreth him, raging as a roaring Lion to devoure us. You ſee and feel partly what ſtorms he hath raiſed up to drown the poor boat of Chriſt, I mean his Church. You ſee how terribly he traineth his ſouldiers, to give a fierce on-ſet on the vaward of Gods battell. You ſee how he hath received power of God, to moleſt Gods children, and to begin at his houſe. By reaſon whereof conſider two things; one, the cauſe on our behalf; the other, what will be the ſequele on ſtrangers.

Two things to be conſidered in the perſecution of Gods people.

For the firſt, if we be not blinde, we cannot but well ſee that our ſins are the cauſe of all this miſery; our ſins, I ſay, which I would that every one of us would apply to our ſelves after the example of Jonas and David, turning over the wallet, that other mens offences might lye behinde, and our own before. Not that I would excuſe other men, which exteriorly have walked much more groſſely than many of you have done; but that I would provoke you all as my ſelf, to more hearty repentance and prayer. Let us more and more increaſe to know and lament our doubting of God, of his preſence, power, anger, mercie, &c.

Earneſt repentance maketh the croſſe more pleaſant.
Coloſſ. 1.

Let us better feel and hate our ſelf-love, ſecurity, negligence, unthankfulneſſe, unbelief, impatience, &c. and then doubtleſſe the croſſe ſhall be leſſe fearfulll, yea it ſhall be comfortable, and Chriſt moſt dear and pleaſant; death then ſhall be deſired, as the diſpatcher of us out of miſery, and entrance into eternall felicity and joy unſpeakable: the which is ſo much the more longed for, by how much we feel indeed the ſerpents bits, wherewith he woundeth our heels, that is, our outward Adam and ſenſes. If we had, I ſay, a lively and true feeling of his poyſon, we could not but as rejoyce over our Captain that hath bruiſed his head, ſo be deſirous to follow his example, that is, to give our lives with him and for him, and ſo fill up his paſſions, that he might conquer and overcome in us and by us, to his glory and comfort of his children.

If Gods judgment be ſo ſharp to his children, what will it be to his enemies?

Now the ſecond (I mean the ſequele, or that which will follow on the ſtrangers) my dearly beloved, let us well look upon. For if ſo be that God juſtly do thus give to Satan and his ſeed, to vex and moleſt Chriſt and his penitent people; Oh what and how juſtly may he and will he give to Satan to intreat the wretchleſſe and impenitent ſinners? If judgment begin thus at Gods houſe, what will follow on them that be without, if they repent not? Certainly for them is reſerved the dregs of Gods cup, that is, brimſtone, fire, and tempeſt intolerable. Now are they unwilling to drink of Gods cup of afflictions, which he offereth common with his Son Chriſt our Lord, leſt they ſhould loſe their Pigs with the Gergeſites. They are unwilling to come into the way that bringeth to Heaven, even afflictions; they in their hearts cry, Let us caſt his yoke from us; they walk two wayes, that is, they ſeek to ſerve God and Mammon, which is unpoſſible, they will not come nigh the ſtraight way that bringeth to life; they open their eyes to behold preſent things onely; they judge of religion after reaſon, and not after Gods word; they follow the more part, and not the better; they profeſſe God with their mouthes, but in their hearts thay deny him, or elſe they would ſanctifie him by ſerving him more than men; they part ſtake with GOD, which would have all, giving part to the world, to the Romiſh rout, and Antichriſtian Idolatry now ſet abroad amongſt us publikely; they will have Chriſt, but none of his Croſſe, which will not be; they will be counted to live godly in Chriſt, but yet they will ſuffer no perſecution; they love this world, where-through the love of God is driven forth of them; they ſavour of thoſe things that be of men, and not that be of God; Summa, they love God in their lips, but in their hearts, yea and in their deeds deny him, as well by not repenting their evils paſt, as by continuing in evill ſtill, by doing as the world, the fleſh and the Devill willeth, and yet ſtill perchance they will pray, or rather prate, Thy will be done in earth, which is generally that every one ſhould take up his croſſe and follow Chriſt. But this is a hard ſaying; Who is able to abide it?

Matth. 8.

The doings and wayes of the wicked deſcribed, and what is the end thereof.

Therefore Chriſt muſt be prayed to depart, leſt all the Pigs be drowned. The Devill ſhall have his dwelling again in themſelves rather than in their Pigs, and therefore to the Devill they ſhall go, and dwell with him in eternall perdition and damnation, even in hell-fire a torment endleſſe, and above all cogitations incomprehenſible, if they repent not.

He doth imbolden them to take up Chriſts croſſe, and to follow him.

Wherefore by them (my dearly beloved) be admoniſhed to remember your profeſſion, how that in Baptiſme you made a ſolemn vow to forſake the Devill, the world, &c. You promiſed to fight under Chriſts ſtandard. You learned Chriſts Croſſe afore you begun with A. B. C. Go to then, pay your vow to the Lord; fight like men, and valiant men under Chriſts ſtandard; take up your croſſe and follow your Maſter, as your brethren, Maſter Hooper, Rogers, Taylor, and Saunders have done, and as now your brethren, Maſter Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Farrar, Bradford, Hawks, &c. be ready to do. The Ice is broken before you, therefore be not afraid, but be content to dye for the Lord. You have no cauſe to waver or doubt of the Doctrine thus declared by the blood of the Paſtors. Remember that Chriſt ſaith; He that will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it. And what ſhould it profit you to win the whole world, much leſſe a little quietneſſe, your goods, &c. and to loſe your own ſouls? Render to the Lord that he hath lent you, by ſuch means as he would have you render it, and not as you would. Forget not, Chriſts Diſciples muſt deny themſelves, as well concerning their will, as concerning their wiſedom. Have in minde, that as it is no ſmall mercie to beleeve in the Lord, ſo it is no ſmall kindeneſſe of God towards you, to ſuffer any thing, much more death for the Lord. If they be bleſſed that dye in the Lord, how ſhall they be that dye for the Lord? Oh what a bleſſing is it to have death due for our ſins, diverted into a demonſtration and teſtification of the Lords truth? Oh that we had a little of Moſes faith to look upon the end of the Croſſe, to look upon the reward, to ſee continually with Chriſt and his people greater riches than the riches of Egypt. Oh let us pray that God would open our eyes to ſee his hid Manna, heavenly Jeruſalem, the congregation of his firſt-born, the melody of the Saints, the Tabernacle of God dwelling with men: then ſhould we run and become violent men, and ſo take the Kingdom of Heaven as it were by force. God our Father give us for his Chriſts ſake to ſee a little, what and how great joy he hath prepared for us, he hath called us unto, and moſt aſſuredly giveth us for his own goodneſſe and truths ſake, Amen.

Bleſſed be they that dye in the Lord, but more bleſſed be they that dye for the Lord.
The end and riches that follow the croſſe.

My dearly beloved, repent, be ſober, and watch in prayer, be obedient, and after your vocations, ſhew your obedience to the higher powers in all things that are not againſt Gods word, therein acknowledge the ſoveraign power of the Lord: howbeit, ſo that ye be no rebels, or rebellers for no cauſe; but becauſe with good conſcience you cannot obey, be patient ſufferers, and the glory and good ſpirit of God ſhall dwell upon us. I pray you remember us your afflicted brethren, being in the Lords bonds for the teſtimony of Chriſt, and abiding the gracious hour of our dear and moſt merciful Father. The Lord for Chriſts ſake, give us merry hearts to drink luſtily of his ſweet cup, which daily we grone and ſigh for, lamenting that the time is thus prolonged. The Lord Jeſus give us grace to be thankfull, and to abide patiently the provident hour of his moſt gracious will, Amen, Amen.

From the Counter in the Poultry. Yours in Chriſt, Iohn Bradford.

To my good brother Iohn Careles, priſoner in the Kings Bench.

A letter of M. Bradford to John Careles.

THe Father of mercie and God of all comfort, viſit us with his eternall conſolation, according to his great mercies in Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, Amen.

My very dear brother, if I ſhall report the truth unto you, I cannot but ſigniſie, that ſince I came into priſon, I never received ſo much conſolation as I did by your laſt letter, the name of God be moſt heartily praiſed therefore. But if I ſhall report the truth unto you, and as I have begun, ſpeak ſtill the verity, I muſt confeſſe, that for mine unthankfulneſſe to you-wards, and to God eſpecially, I have more need of Gods mercifull tidings, than I had ever heretofore. Ah that Satan envieth us ſo greatly. Ah that our Lord would tread his head under our feet ſhortly. Ah that I might for ever both my ſelf beware, and be a godly example to you and others to beware of unthankfulneſſe. Good brother Careles, we had more need to take heed, after a lightening, of a foil than before. God therfore is to be praiſed even when he hideth, and that not of long, a cheerfull countenance from us, leſt we being not expert how to uſe it as we ſhould do, do hurt more our ſelves thereby, ſo great is our ignorance and corruption. This my good brother, and right dear to my very heart, I write unto you, as to one whom in the Lord I imbrace, and I thank God that you do me in like manner. God our Father more and more give us both his good ſpirit, that as by faith we may feel our ſelves united unto him in Chriſt, ſo by love we may feel our ſelves linked in the ſame Chriſt one to another, I to you, and you to me, we to all the children of God, and all the children of God to us, Amen, Amen.

After a lightening take heed of a foil.

Commend me to your good brother Skelthrop, for whom I heartily praiſe my God, which hath given him to ſee his truth at the length, and to give place to it. I doubt not but that he will be ſo heedy in all his converſation, that his old acquaintance may ever thereby think themſelves aſtray. Wo and wo again ſhould be unto us, if we by our example ſhould make men to ſtumble at the truth. Forget not ſalutations in Chriſt, as you ſhall think good, to Trew, and his fellows. The Lord hath his time (I hope) for them alſo, although we perchance think otherwiſe. A drop maketh the ſtone hollow, not with once, but with often dropping; ſo if with hearty prayer for them, and good example, you ſtill and drop upon them as you can, you ſhall ſee Gods work at the length. I beſeech God to make perfect all the good he hath begun in us all, Amen. I deſire you all to pray for me the moſt unworthy priſoner of the Lord,

This Skelthrop was a free-will man.

The charitable ſpirit of maſter Bradford in reducing them that be weak and ignorant.

Your brother, Iohn Bradford.

To Maſter Iohn Hall and his wife, priſoners in Newgate for the teſtimony of the Goſpel.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to John Hall and his Wife in Newgate priſon.

ALmighty God our heavenly Father through Jeſus Chriſt, be with you both my dearly beloved, as with his dear children for ever, and ſo he bleſſe you with his holy ſpirit, that you may in this your croſſe (for his cauſe doubtleſſe) rejoyce and gladly take it up to bear it ſo long as he ſhall think good. I have heard (my good brother and ſiſter) how that GOD hath brought you both into his School-houſe (whereas you were both purpoſed by his leave to have played the trewands) that thereby you might ſee his carefulneſſe and love towards you. For if it be a token of a loving and carefull father for his children, to prevent vent the purpoſe, and diſappoint the intent of his children, purpoſing to depart a while from the School for fear of beating (which thing they would not do, if they did as much conſider the commodity of Learning which there they might get:) how ſhould you take this work of the Lord preventing your purpoſe, but as an evident ſign of love and fatherly carefulneſſe that he beareth towards you? If he ſhould have winked at your wills, then would you have eſcaped beating, I mean the croſſe; but then ſhould you have loſt the commodity of learning that which your father will now have you to learn and feel, and therefore hath he ſent to you his croſſe. He (I ſay) hath brought you where you be; and though your reaſon and wit will tell you, it is by chance or fortune, or otherwiſe, yet (my dearly beloved) know for certain that whatſoever was the mean, God your Father was the worker hereof, and that for your weal, although otherwiſe your old Adam doth tell you, and you feel: yet I ſay of truth that your duty is to think of this croſſe, that as it is of Gods ſending, and cometh from him; ſo although your deſerts be otherwiſe, it is of love and fatherly affection for your weal and commodities ſake.

The croſſe cometh not without Gods ſending.

What commodity is hereby, you will perchance object. You are now kept in cloſe priſon, you will ſay; your family and children be without good over-ſeers; your ſubſtance diminiſheth by theſe means; your poverty will approach; and perchance more perils alſo, yea and loſſe of life too. Theſe are no commodities, but diſcommodities, and that no ſmall ones; ſo that juſtly you would be glad to know what commodity can come to you by this croſſe, whereby cometh ſo great diſcommodities.

To theſe things I anſwer, that indeed it is true you ſay of your bodies, families, children, ſubſtance, poverty, life, &c. Which things, if you would conſider a while with inward eyes, as you behold them with outward; then perhaps you ſhould finde more eaſe. Do not you now by the inward ſenſe perceive that you muſt part from all theſe and all other commodities in the world? Tell me then, have not you this commodity by your croſſe, to learn to loath and leave the world, and to long for and deſire another world, where is perpetuity? You ought of your own head and free will to have (according to your profeſſion in Baptiſme) forſaken the world and all earthly things, uſing the world, as though you uſed it not. Your heart ſet onely upon your hoard in heaven, or elſe you could never be Chriſts true Diſciples, that is, to be ſaved, and be where he is. And trow you (my good hearts in the Lord) trow you I ſay that this is no commodity, by this croſſe to be compelled hereto, that you might aſſuredly enjoy with the Lord endleſſe glory? How now doth God, as it were, fatherly pull you by the ears, to remember your former offences concerning theſe things and all other things, that repentance and remiſſion might enſue? How doth God now compell you to call upon him, and to be earneſt in prayer? Are theſe no commodities? Doth not the Scripture ſay, that God doth correct us in this world, becauſe we ſhall not be damned with the world? That God chaſteneth every one whom he loveth? That the end of this correction ſhall be joy and holineſſe? Doth not the Scripture ſay, That they are happy that ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake, as you now do? That the glory and ſpirit of God is upon them? That, as you are now made like unto Chriſt in ſuffering, ſo ſhall you be made like him in reigning? Doth not the Scripture ſay, That you are now going the high and right way to Heaven? That your ſuffering is Chriſts ſuffering? My dearly beloved, what greater commodities than thoſe can a godly heart deſire.

Worldly loſſe recompenſed with endleſſe and perpetuall gain by the croſſe.

What commodity the croſſe bringeth.

C

Promiſes annexed to the croſſe.

Therefore ye are commanded to rejoyce and be glad when ye ſuffer as now ye do: for through the goodneſſe of God great ſhall be your reward: Where? Forſooth on earth firſt your children; for now they are in Gods meer and immediate protection. Never was father ſo carefull for his children, as God is for yours preſently. Gods bleſſing, which is more worth than all the world, you leave indeed to your children. Though all your providence for them ſhould be pulled away; yet God is not poor, he hath promiſed to provide for them moſt fatherly. Caſt thy burthen upon me, ſaith he, and I will bear it. Do you therefore caſt them, and commend them unto God your Father, and doubt not that he will dye in your debt. He never was found unfaithfull, and he will not now begin with you. The good mans ſeed ſhall not go a begging his bread; for he will ſhew mercie upon thouſands of the poſterity of them that fear him. Therefore (as I ſaid) Gods reward firſt upon earth ſhall be felt by your children even corporally, and ſo alſo upon you, if God ſee it more for your commodity, at the leaſt inwardly you ſhall feel it by quietneſſe and comfort of conſcience: and ſecondly, after this life you ſhall finde it ſo plentifully, as the eye hath not ſeen, the ear hath not heard, the heart cannot conceive how great and glorious Gods reward will be upon your bodies, much more upon your ſouls. God open our eyes, to ſee and feel this indeed. Then ſhall we think the croſſe which is a mean hereto to be commodious. Then ſhall we thank God that he would chaſtiſe us. Then ſhall we ſay with David; Happy am I that thou haſt puniſhed me: for before I went aſtray, but now I keep thy laws.

Pſal. 55.

Care of children to be left to Gods providence.

Pſal. 37.

This that we may do indeed (my dearly beloved) let us firſt know that our croſſe cometh from God: Secondly, that it cometh from God as a father, that is, to our weal and good. Therefore let us thirdly call to minde our ſins, and aſk pardon. Whereto let us fourthly look for help certainly at Gods hand in his good time: help, I ſay, ſuch as ſhall make moſt to Gods glory, and to the comfort and commodity of our ſouls and bodies eternally. This if we certainly conceive, then will there iſſue out of us hearty thankſgiving, which God requireth as a moſt precious ſacrifice. That we may all through Chriſt offer this, let us uſe earneſt prayer to our God and dear Father, who bleſſe us, keep us, and comfort us under his ſweet croſſe for ever, Amen, Amen.

Two things to be conſidered of all men that be under the croſſe.

My dear hearts, if I could any way comfort you, you ſhould be ſure therof, though my life lay thereon, but now I muſt do as I may, becauſe I cannot as I would. Oh that it would pleaſe our dear Father ſhortly to bring us where we ſhould never depart, but enjoy continually the bleſſed fruition of his heavenly preſence: Pray, pray that it may ſpeedily come to paſſe, pray. To morrow I will ſend to you to know your eſtate, ſend me word what are the chiefeſt things they charge you withall. From the Counter.

By your brother in the Lord,
Iohn Bradford.

To Miſtris Hall, priſoner in Newgate, and ready to make anſwer before her adverſaries.

OVr moſt mercifull God and Father through Chriſt Ieſus our Lord and Saviour, be mercifull unto us, and make perfect the good he hath begun in us unto the end, Amen.

Another letter of M. Bradford to Miſtreſs Hall.

Matth. 5.

My dear ſiſter, rejoyce in the Lord, rejoyce: be glad, I ſay, be merry and thankfull, not onely becauſe Chriſt ſo commandeth us, but alſo becauſe our ſtate wherein we are preſently, requireth no leſſe, for we are the Lords witneſſes. God the Father hath vouched ſafe to chuſe us amongſt many, to witneſſe and teſtifie that Chriſt his Son is King, and that his word is true. Chriſt our Saviour, for his loves ſake towards us, will have us to bear record that he is no uſurper nor deceiver of the people, but Gods Embaſſadour, Prophet, and Meſſias; ſo that of all dignities upon earth this is the higheſt. Greater honour had not his Prophets, Apoſtles, nor deareſt friends, than to bear witneſſe with Chriſt, as we now do. The world, following the counſell of their Sire Sathan, would gladly condemn Chriſt and his verity, but lo the Lord hath choſen us to be his champions to let this. As ſtout ſouldiers therefore let us ſtand to our Maſter, who is with us, and ſtandeth on our right hand, that we ſhall not be much moved, if we hope and hang on his mercie; he is ſo faithfull and true, that he will never tempt us farther than he will make us able to bear.

The blood of Martyrs ſtandeth for the verity of Chriſt againſt the world and Satan, who would ſuppreſſe the ſame.

Therefore be not carefull (for I hear ſay this day you ſhall be called forth) what you ſhall anſwer. The Lord which is true and cannot lye, hath promiſed, and will never fail nor forget it, that you ſhall have both what and how to anſwer, ſo as ſhall make his ſhameleſſe adverſaries aſhamed. Hang therefore on this promiſe of God, who is an helper at a pinch, and a moſt preſent remedy to them that hope in him. Never was it ever heard of, or ſhall be, that any hoping in the Lord was put to foil.

The Lord promiſeth, and will give them that ſtand in his defence, how and what to anſwer.

Therefore as I ſaid, I ſay again, Dear ſiſter, be not onely not carefull for your anſwering, but alſo be joyfull for your cauſe. Confeſſe Chriſt, and be not aſhamed, and he will confeſſe you, and never be aſhamed of you. Though loſſe of goods and life be like here to enſue; yet if Chriſt be true (as he is moſt true) it is otherwiſe indeed: for he that loſeth his life, ſaith he, winneth it; but he that ſaveth it, loſeth it. Our ſins have deſerved many deaths. Now if God ſo deal with us, that he will make our deſerved death a demonſtration of his grace, a teſtimoniall of his verity, a confirmation of his people, and overthrow of his adverſaries; What great cauſe have we to be thankfull? Be thankfull therefore good ſiſter, be thankfull. Rejoyce and be merry in the Lord; be ſtout in his cauſe aud quarrell, be not faint-hearted, but run out your race, and ſet your Captain Chriſt before your eyes. Behold how great your reward is. See the great glory, and the eternity of felicity prepared for you. Strive and fight lawfully, that you may get the Crown. Run to get the game, you are almoſt at your journeys end; I doubt not but our Father will with us ſend to you alſo, as he did to Helias a fiery chariot, to convey us into his kingdom. Let us therefore not be diſmayed, to leave our cloak behinde us, that is, our bodies to aſhes. God will one day reſtore them to us like to the body of our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, whoſe coming is now at hand; Let us look for it, and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh, Amen, Amen. The Lord of mercie grant us his mercie, Amen. I pray you pray for me, and ſo deſire my brethren which be with you. Gods peace be with us all, Amen. Bleſſed be the dead that dye in the Lord; then how much more they that dye for the Lord.

A bleſſed thing, ſeeing a man muſt needs dye, to dye for the Lord.

4 Reg. 2.

Your Brother in bonds,
Iohn Bradford.

To a woman that deſired to know his minde, whether ſhe refraining from the Maſſe, might be preſent at the Popiſh Popiſh Mattins, or no.

I Beſeech Almighty GOD our heavenly Father to be mercifull unto us, and to increaſe in you my good ſiſter, the knowledge and love of his truth, and at this preſent give me grace ſo to write to you ſomething of the ſame, as may make to his glory and our own comfort and confirmation in him, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Whether you may come with ſafe conſcience to the Church now, that is, to the Service uſed commonly, in part, as at Mattins, or at Evenſong, or no, is your deſire to have me to write ſomething for your further ſtay. My dearly beloved, although your benefits towards me might perchance make you to think, that in reſpect thereof I would bear with that which elſe were not to be born withall; yet by Gods grace I am purpoſed, ſimply and without all ſuch reſpect in this matter, to ſpeak to you the truth according to my conſcience, as I may be able to ſtand unto, when I ſhall come before the Lord.

A reſolution of M. Bradford, whether a chriſtian abſtaining from the Maſs, may hear the Popiſh Mattins, or no.

Firſt therefore, go about to learn perfectly the firſt leſſon to be learned of all that profeſſe Chriſt, that is, to deny your ſelf, and in nothing to ſeek your ſelf.

Three leſſons to be learned of every chriſtian.

Secondly, learn after this, to begin at the next leſſon to it, which is, to ſeek God in all things you do, and leave undone.

Thirdly, know that then you ſeek God, when in his ſervice you follow his Word, and not mans fantaſies, cuſtome, multitude, &c. and when with your brother you follow the rule of charity, that is, To do as you would be done by. In theſe is a ſum of all the counſell I can give you, if that hereto I admoniſh you of the ſervice now uſed, which is not according to Gods word, but rather againſt Gods word directly, and in manner wholly. So that your going to the ſervice, is a declaration that you have not learned the firſt leſſon, nor never can learn it, ſo long as you go thither; therefore the ſecond leſſon you ſhall utterly loſe, if you ceaſe not the ſeeking of your ſelf, that is, if for company, cuſtome, father, or friend, life or goods, you ſeem to allow that which God diſalloweth. And this that you the better may perceive, I purpoſe by Gods grace briefly to ſhew.

Firſt, the Mattins and Evenſong is in a tongue forbidden publikely to be uſed in the Congregation that perceiveth not the tongue. Read how Paul affirmeth it, to pray in an unknown tongue, to be againſt Gods Commandement. This one (I trow) were enough, if nothing elſe were. For how can Gods glory be ſought, where his word and commandement is wilfully broken? How can charity to man ſtand, when charity to GOD, which is obedience to his word, is overthrown?

Reaſons proving that no chriſtian may come to the Popiſh Mattins and Evenſong, with a good conſcience.

The Popes ſervice is in a tongue unknown.

Again, both in Mattins and in Evenſong is Idolatry maintained for Gods ſervice; for there is invocation and prayer made to Saints departed this life, which robbeth God of that glory which he will give to none other.

The Popes ſervice is full of Idolatry. Eſay 5.

Moreover, this ſervice, and the ſetters forth of it condemneth the Engliſh ſervice as hereſie, thereby falling into Gods curſe, which is threatned to all ſuch as call good evill, and evill good; whereof they ſhall be partakers that do communicate with them.

The Popes ſervice condemneth our Engliſh ſervice of hereſie.

Beſides this, this Latine ſervice is a plain mark of Antichriſts catholike Synagogue; ſo that the communicants and approvers of it thereby declare themſelves to be members of the ſame Synagogue, and ſo cut off from Chriſt and his Church, whoſe exteriour mark is the true adminiſtration of Gods word and Sacraments.

The Popes Latine ſervice is a mark of Antichriſt.

Furthermore, the example of your going thither to allow the Religion of Antichriſt (as doubtleſſe you do indeed, howſoever in heart you think) think) occaſioneth the obſtinate to be utterly intractable, the weak Papiſts to be more obſtinate, the ſtrong Goſpellers to be ſore weakened, and the weak Goſpellers to be utterly overthrown: which things, how great offences they be, no pen is able to utter by letters. All theſe evils you ſhall be guilty of, that company with theſe in religion exteriorly, from whom you are admoniſhed to flye. If Chriſt be Chriſt, follow him: gather with him, leſt you ſcatter abroad. Serve God, not onely in ſpirit, but alſo in body. Make not your body, now a member of Chriſt, a member of Antichriſt. Come out from amongſt them, ſaith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing. Confeſſe Chriſt and his truth, not onely in heart, but alſo in tongue, yea in very deed, which few Goſpellers do. Indeed they deny him, and therefore had need to tremble, leſt that Chriſt will deny them in the laſt day: the which day, if it were ſet before our eyes often, then would the pleaſures and treaſures of this world be but trifles.

The going to the Popes ſervice giveth ill example, and is offenſive.

Chriſts leſſon.

Therefore good ſiſter, often have it before your eyes, daily ſet your ſelf and your doings as before the judgement ſeat of Chriſt now, that hereafter you be not called into judgement. Think that it will little profit you to win the whole world, and to loſe your own ſoul. Mark Chriſts leſſons well, He that will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it. The Father of Heaven commandeth you to hear Chriſt, and he ſaith, Follow me: this can you not do, and follow Idolatry or Idolaters. Fly from ſuch, ſaith the Scripture.

This God grant to you, to me, and to all Gods children, Amen. Thus in haſte I have accompliſhed your requeſt. God grant that as you have done me much good bodily, ſo this may be a little mean to do you ſome good ſpiritually, Amen. If time would ſerve, I would have written more at large. The 2. of March, Anno 1555.

To the Worſhipfull, and in God my moſt dear friend, the Lady Vane.

An Epiſtle of M. Bradford to the Lady Vane concerning the ſeat of the Popes pretenſed primacy. The Pope proved to be the great Antichriſt ſpoken of by the Apoſtles.

THe good Spirit of God our Father be more and more plentifully perceived of your good Ladiſhip, through the mediation and merits of our dear Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

Although your benefits towards me have deſerved at my hands the ſervice I can do for you, yet (Right Worſhipfull and dearly beloved in the Lord) the true fear of God, and the love of his truth, which I perceive to be in you, ſpecially and above all other things doth binde me hereunto. This bearer hath told me that your deſire is to have ſomething ſent to you concerning the uſurped authority of the Supremacie of the Biſhop of Rome (which is undoubtedly that great Antichriſt, of whom the Apoſtles do ſo much admoniſh us) that you may have as well ſomething the more to ſtay you on, as alſo wherewith to anſwer the adverſaries, becauſe you may perchance therein be ſomething appoſed. To ſatisfie this your deſire, I will briefly go about, and ſo, that I will by Gods grace fully ſet forth the ſame, to enarm you to withſtand the aſſaults of the Papiſts herein, if you mark well and reade over again that which I now write.

The Pope diſplacing Chriſt.

The words of Chriſt to Peter, Feed my ſheep, expounded.

The Papiſts do place in preheminence over the whole Church, the Pope, thereby unplacing Chriſt, which is the head of the Church, that giveth life to the whole body, and by his Spirit doth make lively every member of the ſame. This they do without all Scriptures. For where they bring in this ſpoken to Peter, Feed my ſheep; I would gladly know whether this was not commanded unto others alſo. As for that (which perchance they will urge) that he ſpake to Peter by name, if they had any learning, they would eaſily perceive how that it was not for any ſuch cauſe as they pretend; but rather by a threefold commandement to reſtore him to the honour of an Apoſtle, which he had loſt by his threefold deniall. And how dare they interpret this word, My ſheep, my lambs, to be the univerſall Church of Chriſt? I trow a man might eaſily by the like “ reaſon prove that Peter himſelf had reſigned that which Chriſt had given to him, in exhorting his fellow Paſtors to feed the flock of Chriſt. Is not this pretie ſtuffe? Becauſe Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Feed my ſheep, therefore he ought to rule the univerſall and whole Church of Chriſt? If Peter do truely write unto others that they ſhould do the like, that is, Feed Chriſts flock, either he tranſlateth his right and authority committed to him upon them, or elſe he doth participate or communicate with them: ſo that fooliſhly they go about to eſtabliſh that which hath no ground. Peter indeed was a ſhepherd of the ſheep, but ſuch a one as beſtowed his labour on them ſo farre, as he could ſtretch himſelf by his Miniſtery. But the Papiſts prate that he had full power over all Churches: Wherein they may ſee Paul to improve them, for elſe he had done unjuſtly in denying him the ſuperiour place. Howbeit, who ever yet read that Peter did take any thing upon him over Churches committed unto other men? Was not he ſent of the Church, and ſent of one not having rule over the reſt? I grant that he was an excellent inſtrument of God, and for the excellency of his gifts, whenſoever they met together, place therefore was commonly given unto him. But what is this to the purpoſe, to make him ruler and head over all the whole Church, becauſe he was ſo over a ſmall congregation?

“ Argument. Chriſt bidding Peter, Feed his flock, made him head over the Univerſall Church: Ergo Peter bidding the Paſtors feed the flock of Chriſt made them alſo heads over the Univerſall Church.

Ab una exponente ad ſuam excluſivam non valet conſequentia.

Chriſt made Peter a ſhepherd: Ergo Chriſt made Peter only the chief ſhepherd of his ſheep.

Peter was excellent for his gifts, and not for the place where he ſate.

Argument. Peter left the title which he received, to his ſucceſſors. Peter received the title of Satan: Ergo Peter left the title of Satan to his ſucceſſors.

No mention of ſucceſſion nor primacy inheritable, in all the Scripture.

But be it ſo that Peter had as much given to him as they do affirm: Who yet will grant that Peter had a patrimony given for his heires? He hath left (ſay the Papiſts) to his ſucceſſors the ſelf ſame right which he received. O Lord God, then muſt his ſucceſſour be a Satan: for he received that title of Chriſt himſelf. I would gladly have the Papiſts to ſhew me one place of ſucceſſion mentioned in the Scriptures. I am ſure that when Paul purpoſely painteth out the whole adminiſtration of the Church, he neither maketh one head, nor any inheritable Primacy, and yet he is altogether in commendation of unity. After he hath made mention of one God the Father, of one Chriſt, of one Spirit, of one body of the Church, of one Faith, and of one Baptiſme, then he deſcribeth the mean and manner how unitie is to be kept; namely, becauſe unto every Paſtor is grace given after the meaſure wherewith Chriſt hath endued them. Where I pray you is now any title of Plenitudinis poteſtatis, of fulneſſe of power? When he calleth home every one unto a certain meaſure, why did he not forthwith ſay one Pope? Which thing he could not have forgotten, if the thing had been as the Papiſts make it.

No cauſe why any perpetuity of primacy ſhould belong to Rome more then to other places.

As Peters chaire was in Rome, ſo Moſes chaire was in the wilderneſſe: Ergo the principality of the Jewiſh Church ſhould be in the wilderneſſe.

But let us grant that perpetuitie of the primacie in the Church was eſtabliſhed in Peter; I would gladly learn why the ſeat of the Primacie ſhould be rather at Rome then elſewhere. Mary ſay they, becauſe Peters chair was at Rome. This is even like to this, that becauſe Moſes the greateſt Prophet, and Aaron the firſt Prieſt exerciſed their offices unto their death in the deſert, therefore the principalleſt place of the Jewiſh Church ſhould be in the wilderneſſe. But grant them their reaſon that it is good. What ſhould Antioch claim? For Peters chair was there alſo, wherein Paul gave him a check, which was unſeemly and unmannerly done of Paul, that would not give place to his Preſident and better.

Peter had no Biſhoprick at Rome. Conjectures that Peter was not at Rome.

No ſay the Papiſts, Rome muſt have this authoritie becauſe Peter died there. But what if a man ſhould by probable conjectures ſhew, that it is but a fable, which is faigned of Peters Biſhoprick at Rome? Read how Paul doth ſalute very many private perſons when he writeth to the Romanes. Three yeers after his Epiſtle made, he was brought to Rome priſoner. Luke telleth, that he was received of the brethren, and yet in all theſe, is no mention at all of Peter, which then by their ſtories was at Rome. Belike he was proud, as the Pope and Prelats be, or elſe he would have viſited Paul. Paul being in priſon in Rome did write divers Epiſtles, in which he expreſſeth the names of many which were in compariſon of Peter, but raſcall perſonages, but of Peter he ſpeaketh never a word. Surely if Peter had been there, this ſilence of him had been ſuſpicious. In the 2. Epiſtle to Timothy, Paul complaineth that no man was with him in his defence, but all had left him. If Peter had been then at Rome, as they write, then either Paul had belied him, or Peter had played his Peters part, Luke 23. In another place, how doth he blame all that were with him, only Timothy excepted? Therefore we may well doubt whether Peter was at Rome Biſhop as they prate: for all this time and long before, they ſay that Peter was Biſhop there.

2 Tim. 4. Phil. 2.

If Peters chair make the primacie: why might not Antioch claime as much as Rome, where he ſate firſt?

But I will not ſtir up coales in this matter. If Rome be the chief ſeat becauſe Peter died there, why ſhould not Antioch be the ſecond? Why ſhould not James and John which were taken with Peter to be as Pillars? Why, I ſay, ſhould not their ſeats have honour next to Peters ſeat? Is not this gear prepoſterous, that Alexandria where Mark (which was but one of the Diſciples) was Biſhop, ſhould be preferred before Epheſus, where John the Evangeliſt taught and was Biſhop, and before Jeruſalem, where not only James taught, and died Biſhop, but alſo Chriſt Jeſus our Lord and high Prieſt for ever, by whom being maſter, I hope, honour ſhould be given to his chair, more then to the chair of his Chaplains?

Peters Apoſtleſhip was over the circumciſed, and not over the Gentiles.

I need to ſpeak nothing how that Paul telleth Peters Apoſtleſhip to concern rather circumciſion or the Jews, and therefore properly pertaineth not to us. Neither do I need to bring in Gregorius the firſt Biſhop of Rome, which was about the yeer of our Lord 600. who plainly in his works doth write that this title of primacy, and to be head over all Churches under Chriſt, is a title meet and agreeing only to Antichriſt, and therefore he calleth it a prophane, a miſchievous, and an horrible title. Whom ſhould we beleeve now, if we will neither beleeve Apoſtle nor Pope?

The title of primacy a foretoken of Antichriſt.

How the title of primacy firſt came up, and by whom.

If I ſhould go about to tell how this name was firſt gotten by Phocas, I ſhould be too long. I purpoſe God willing to ſet it forth at large in a work which I have begun of Antichriſt, if God for his mercies ſake give me life to finiſh it. For this preſent therefore I ſhall deſire your Ladiſhip to take this in good part. If they will needs have the Biſhop of Rome to be acknowledged for the head of the Church, then will I urge them that they ſhall give us a Biſhop. But they obtrude unto us a butcher rather, or a biteſheep, then a Biſhop. They brag of Peters ſucceſſion, of Chriſts Vicar, this is alwais in their mouth. But alas how can we call him Chriſts Vicar that reſiſteth Chriſt, oppugneth his veritie, perſecuteth his people, and like a Prelate preferreth himſelf above God and man? How, or wherein doth the Pope and Chriſt agree? How ſupplyeth he Peters Miniſtery, that boaſteth of his ſucceſſion?

The Biſhop of Rome ſeemeth indeed rather a butcher then a Biſhop.

If they will needs make the biſhop of Rome the ſupreme head, they muſt firſt prove him a Biſhop indeed and not in name.

Therefore to begin withall, which I will uſe preſently for a concluſion, if the Papiſts will have the Biſhop of Rome ſupreme head of the Church of Chriſt in earth, they muſt, afore they attain this, give us a Biſhop in deed, and not in name. For whoſoever he be that will make this the bond of unity, whatſoever the Biſhop of Rome be, ſurely this muſt needs follow, that they do nothing elſe but teach a moſt wicked defection, and departing from Chriſt.

But of this, if God lend me life, I purpoſe to ſpeak more at large hereafter. Now will I betake your Ladiſhip unto the tuition of God our father, and Chriſt our only head Paſtor and Keeper, to whom ſee that you cleave by true faith, which dependeth only upon the Word of God; which if you do follow as a lantern to your feet, and a light to your ſteps, you ſhall then avoid darkneſſe, and the dangerous deeps whereinto the Papiſts are fallen by the judgement of God, and ſeek to bring us into the ſame dungeon with them, that the blinde following the blinde, they both may fall into the ditch: out of the which God deliver them according to his good will, and preſerve us for his Names ſake, that we being in his light, may continue therein, and walk in it whileſt it is day; ſo ſhall the night never overpreſſe us, we going from light to light, from vertue to vertue, from faith to faith, from glory to glory, by the governance of Gods good Spirit, which God our father give unto us all for ever, Amen.

Your Brother in bonds for the teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt,
Iohn Bradford.

He wrote alſo another fruitfull Letter to this R. Hopkins, which you may read in the book of Letters of the Martyrs.

Here followeth another letter of M. Bradford, to one Richard Hopkins, Sheriffe ſometimes of Coventry, and yet being (as I hear ſay) alive. This Hopkins, whom Maſter Bradford commendeth ſo much in this Letter, during the time of his Sheriffealtie was defected and accuſed, by certain maglinant adverſaries, of matter pertaining to Religion. What matter it was, I am not yet certainly informed, unleſſe it were for ſending and lending unto a thief, being then in priſon ready to be hanged, a certain Engliſh book of Scripture for his ſpirituall comfort.

Whereupon, or elſe upon ſome ſuch like matter, he being maliciouſly accuſed, was ſent for and committed to the Fleet, and there endured a ſufficient time, not without great perill of life. Notwithſtanding, the ſaid Hopkins being at length delivered out of priſon, following this counſell of M. Bradford, and minding to keep his conſcience pure from idolatry, was driven with his wife and eight yong children, to avoid the Realm, and ſo, leaving all other worldly reſpects, with his great loſſe and damage went into high Germany, where he continued in the Citie of Baſil, till the death of Queen Mary, being like a good Tobias, to his power a friendly helper, and a comfortable reliever of other Engliſh Exiles there about him, Gods holy bleſſing ſo working with him therefore, that in thoſe farre Countries neither he fell in any great decay, neither any one of all his houſhold, during all that time there, miſcarried, but ſo many as he brought out, ſo many he re-carried home again, yea and that with advantage, and Gods plenty withall upon him. Now the Letter written to this Richard Hopkins by M. Bradford, is this.

A Letter to Maſter Richard Hopkins, then Sheriff of Coventrie, and priſoner in the Fleet, for the faithfull and conſtant confeſſing of Gods holy Goſpel.

A Letter of M. Bradford to R. Hopkins priſoner the ſame time for his conſcience.

Dearly beloved in the Lord, I wiſh unto you, as unto mine own brother, yea as to mine own heart root, Gods mercie, and the feeling of the ſame plentifully in Chriſt our ſweet Saviour, who gave himſelf a ranſome for our ſinnes, and price for our redemption, praiſed therefore be his holy name for ever and ever. Amen.

I will not go about to excuſe my ſelf for not ſending unto you hitherto, ſuffering for the Lords ſake as you do, to the comfort of me and all that love you in the truth; but rather accuſe my ſelf both before God and you, deſiring you of forgiveneſſe, and with me to pray to God for pardon of this my unkinde forgetting you, and all other my ſinnes, which I beſeech the Lord in his mercy to do away for his Chriſts ſake. Amen.

Now to make amends to you ward, I would be glad if I could: but becauſe I cannot, I ſhall heartily deſire you to accept that will, and this which I ſhall now write unto you thereafter; I mean, after my will and not after the deed to accept and take it. At this preſent my dear heart in the Lord, you are in a bleſſed ſtate, although it ſeem otherwiſe to you, or rather unto your old Adam, the which I dare now be ſo bold as to diſcern from you, becauſe you would have him not only diſcerned, but alſo utterly deſtroyed. For if God be true, then is his word true.

Now his word pronounceth of your ſtate that it is happy, therefore it muſt needs be ſo. To prove this, I think it need not: for you know that the holy Ghoſt ſaith, That they are happy which ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake, and that Gods glory and Spirit reſteth on them which ſuffer for conſcience to God. Now this you cannot but know, that this your ſuffering is for righteouſneſſe ſake, and for conſcience to God-wards, for elſe you might be out of trouble even out of hand. I know in very deed that you have felt and do feel your unthankfulneſſe to God, and other ſinnes, to witneſſe to you, that you have deſerved this impriſonment, and lack of libertie, betwixt God and your ſelf, and I would you ſo would confeſſe unto God in your prayers, with petition for pardon and thankſgiving, for his correcting you here. But you know that the Magiſtrates do not perſecute in you your ſinnes, your unthankfulneſſe, &c. But they perſecute in you Chriſt himſelf, his righteouſneſſe, his veritie, and therefore happy be you that have found ſuch favour with God your Father, to accompt you worthy to ſuffer for his ſake in the ſight of man; ſurely you ſhall rejoyce therefore one day with a joy unſpeakable, in the ſight of man alſo.

Martyrs perſecuted not for their ſins, but for Chriſt only, and the Goſpel.

You may think your ſelf born in a bleſſed time, that have found this grace with God, to be a veſſell of honour to ſuffer with his Saints, yea with his Son. My beloved, God hath not done ſo with many. The Apoſtle ſaith, Not many noble, not many rich, not many wiſe in the world, hath the Lord God choſen. Oh then what cauſe have you to rejoyce, that amongſt the not many, he hath choſen you to be one? For that cauſe hath God placed you in your office, that therefore ye might the more ſee his ſpeciall dignation and love towards you. It had not been ſo great a thing for Maſter Hopkins to have ſuffered as Maſter Hopkins, as it is for Maſter Hopkins alſo to ſuffer as Maſter Sheriff. Oh happy day that you were made Sheriff; by the which as God in this world would promote you to a more honourable degree, ſo by ſuffering in this roome he hath exalted you in heaven, and in the ſight of his Church and children, to a much more excellent glory. When was it read that a Sheriff of a City hath ſuffered for the Lords ſake? Where read we of any Sheriff that hath been caſt into priſon for conſcience to Godward? How could God have dealt more lovingly with you, then herein he hath done? To the end of the world it ſhall be written for a memoriall to your praiſe, that Richard Hopkins Sheriff of Coventry, for conſcience to do his office before God, was caſt into the Fleet, there kept priſoner a long time. Happy and twice happy are you, if herefore you may give your life. Never could you have attained to this promotion on this ſort out of that office. How do you preach now, not only to all men, but ſpecially to Magiſtrates in this Realm? Who would ever have thought that you ſhould have been the firſt Magiſtrate that for Chriſts ſake ſhould have loſt any thing? As I ſaid before, therefore I ſay again, that your ſtate is happy. Good brother, before God I write the truth unto you, my conſcience bearing me witneſſe that you are in a moſt happy ſtate with the Lord, and before his ſight.

1 Cor. 1.

R. Hopkins the firſt Magiſtrate that ſuffered for his conſcience.

Be thankfull therefore, rejoyce in your trouble, pray for patience, perſevere to the end, let patience have her perfect work. If you want this wiſedome and power, ask it of God, who will give it to you in his good time. Hope ſtill in him, yea if he ſhould ſlay you, yet truſt in him with Job, and you ſhall perceive that the end will be to finde him mercifull and full of compaſſion: for he will not break promiſe with you, which hitherto did never ſo with any. He is with you in trouble, he heareth you calling upon him, yea before you call, your deſires are not only known, but accepted through Chriſt. If now and then he hide his face from you, it is but to provoke your appetite, to make you the more to long for him. This is moſt true, He is coming, and will come, he will not be long. But if for a time he ſeem to tarry, yet ſtand you ſtill, and you ſhall ſee the wonderfull works of the Lord. Oh beloved, wherefore ſhould you be heavy? Is not Chriſt Emmanuel, God with us? Shall you not finde that as he is true in ſaying, In the world you ſhall have trouble; ſo is he in ſaying, In me you ſhall have comfort? He doth not ſwear only that trouble will come, but withall he ſweareth that comfort ſhall enſue. And what comfort? Such a comfort as the eye hath not ſeen, the eare hath not heard, nor the heart of man can conceive. O great comfort: who ſhall have this? Forſooth they that ſuffer for the Lord. And are not you one of them? Yea verily are you. Then, as I ſaid, happy, happy, and happy again are you my dearly beloved in the Lord. You now ſuffer with the Lord, ſurely you ſhall be glorified with him. Call upon God therefore in your trouble, and he will hear you, yea deliver you in ſuch ſort, as moſt ſhall make both to his and your glory alſo. And in this calling I heartily pray you to pray for me your fellow in affliction. Now we be both going in the high way to Heaven: for by many afflictions muſt we enter in thither, whither God bring us for his mercies ſake, Amen, Amen.

1 Cor. 2.

Your fellow in affliction,
Iohn Bradford.

To my good Siſter Miſtreſſe Elizabeth Brown.

A Letter of M. Bradford to Miſtreſſe Brown now called Miſtreſſe Rughbrough.

Good Siſter, God our Father make perfect the good he hath begun in you unto the end.

I am affraid to write unto you becauſe you ſo overcharge your ſelf at all times, even whenſoever I do but ſend to you commendations. I would be more bold on you then many others, and therefore you might ſuſpend ſo great tokens till I ſhould write unto you of my need; which thing doubtleſſe I would do if it urged me. Dear Siſter, I ſee your unfained love to mewards in God, and have done of long time, the which I do recompence with the like, and will do by Gods grace ſo long as I live, and therefore I hope not to forget you, but in my poor prayers to have you in remembrance, as I hope you have me. Otherwiſe I can do you no ſervice, except it be now and then by my writing to let you from better exerciſe; where yet the end of my writing is to excite and ſtirre up your heart more earneſtly to go onwards in your well begun enterpriſe. For you know none ſhall be crowned, but ſuch as ſtrive lawfully, and none receiveth the glove, but thoſe that runne to the appointed mark. None ſhall be ſaved but ſuch as perſiſt and continue to the very end.

Heb. 10.

Therefore, dear ſiſter, remember that we have need of patience, that when we have done the good will of God, we may receive the promiſe. Patience and perſeverance be the proper notes, whereby Gods children are known from counterfeits. They that perſevere not, were always but hypocrites. Many make godly beginnings, yea their progreſſe ſeemeth marvellous, but yet after in the end they fail. Theſe were never of us ſaith Saint Iohn: for if they had been of us, they would have continued unto the very end.

Wholeſome leſſons of life.

Go to now therefore mine own beloved in the Lord; as you have well begun, and well gone forward, ſo well perſiſt, and happily end, and then all is yours. Though this be ſharp and ſower, yet it is not tedious and long. Do all that ever you do, ſimply for God, and as to God; ſo ſhall never unkindeneſſe nor any other thing make you to leave off from well doing, ſo long as you may do well. Accuſtome your ſelf now to ſee God continually, that he may be all in all unto you. In good things behold his mercy, and apply it unto your ſelf. In evill things and plagues behold his judgements, where-through learn to fear him. Beware of ſin, as the ſerpent of the ſoul, which ſpoileth us of all our ornature and ſeemely apparell in Gods ſight. Let Chriſt crucified be your book to ſtudy on, and that both night and day. Mark your vocation, and be diligent in the works thereof. Uſe hearty and earneſt prayer, and that in ſpirit. In all things give thanks to God our Father through Chriſt. Labour to have here life everlaſting begun in you: for elſe it will not be elſewhere enjoyed. Set Gods judgement often before your eyes, that now examining your ſelf, you may make diligent ſute, and obtain never to come into judgement. Uncover your evills to God, that he may cover them. Beware of this Antichriſtian traſh: defile not your ſelf in ſoul or body therewith, but accompliſh holineſſe in the fear of God, and bear no yoak with unbeleevers. Look for the coming of the Lord which is at hand; by earneſt prayer and godly life haſten it. God our Father accompliſh his good work in you, Amen. Commend me to my good Mother Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon, and to my very dear ſiſter Miſtreſſe Warcup. I ſhall daily commend you all to God, and I pray you do the like for me.

Iohn Bradford.

To a friend of his inſtructing him how he ſhould anſwer his adverſaries.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to his friend, with inſtructions how to anſwer his adverſaries.

My good brother, our mercifull God and dear Father through Chriſt, open your eyes effectually to ſee, and your heart ardently to deſire the everlaſting joy which he hath prepared for his ſlaughter ſheep, that is, for ſuch as ſhrink not from his truth for any ſuch ſtormes ſake. Amen.

Example of Moſes anſwering before K. Pharaoh.

When you ſhall come before the Magiſtrates to give an anſwer of the hope which is in you, do it with all reverence and ſimplicitie. And becauſe you may be ſomething afraid by the power of the Magiſtrates and crueltie which they will threaten againſt you, I would you ſet before you the good Father Moſes to follow his example: for he ſet the inviſible God before his eies of Faith, and with them looked upon God and his glorious Majeſtie and power, as with his corporall eies he ſaw Pharaoh and all his fearefull terrors. So do you my dearly beloved; let your inward eyes give ſuch light unto you, that as you know you are before the Magiſtrates, ſo and much more, you and they alſo are preſent before the face of God, which will give ſuch wiſedome to you, fearing him and ſeeking his praiſe, as the enemies ſhall wonder at; and further, he will ſo order their hearts and doings, that they ſhall, will they nill they, ſerve Gods providence towards you (which you cannot avoid though you would) as ſhall be moſt to his glory and your everlaſting comfort.

Therefore my good brother, let your whole ſtudy be only to pleaſe God: put him always before your eies, for he is on your right hand leſt you ſhould be moved; he is faithfull, and never will ſuffer you to be tempted above that he will make you able to bear. Yea, every hair of your head he hath numbred, ſo that one of them ſhall not periſh without his good will, which cannot but be good unto you, in that he is become your Father through Chriſt: and therefore as he hath given you to beleeve in him (God increaſe his belief in us all) ſo doth he now graciouſly give unto you to ſuffer for his names ſake: the which you ought with all thankfulneſſe to receive, in that you are made worthy to drink of the ſelf ſame cup, which not only the very Sons of God have drunk of before you, but even the very naturall ſon of God himſelf hath brought you good luck. Oh he of his mercy make us thankfull to pledge him again, Amen.

Inſtructions how to anſwer, and to behave himſelf before the Iudges.

Becauſe the chiefeſt matter they will trouble you, and go about to deceive you withall, is the Sacrament, not of Chriſts body and bloud, but of the altar as they call it, thereby deſtroying the Sacrament which Chriſt inſtituted; I would you noted theſe two things: Firſt, that the Sacrament of the altar which the Prieſt offereth in the maſſe, and eateth privately with himſelf, is not the Sacrament of Chriſts body and bloud inſtituted by him, as Chriſts inſtitution plainly written and ſet forth in the Scriptures, being compared to their uſing of it plainly doth declare.

Again, if they talk with you of Chriſts Sacrament inſtituted by him, whether it be Chriſts body or no: anſwer them, that as to the eies of your reaſon, to your taſte and corporall ſenſes is bread and wine, and therefore the Scripture calleth it after the conſecration ſo: even ſo to the eies, taſte, and ſenſes of your faith, which aſcendeth to the right hand of God in Heaven, where Chriſt ſitteth, it is in very deed Chriſts body and bloud, which ſpiritually your ſoul feedeth on to everlaſting life in Faith, and by faith, even as your body preſently feedeth on the Sacramentall bread and Sacramentall wine.

Chriſt is able to keep his promiſe in the Sacrament, the ſubſtance of bread ſtill remaining. The Papiſts deny the omnipotency of God and how.

By this means as you ſhall not allow tranſubſtantiation, nor none of their Popiſh, opinions: ſo ſhall you declare the Sacrament to be a matter of faith, and not of reaſon, as the Papiſts make it. For they deny Gods omnipotency, in that they ſay Chriſt is not there, if bread be there: but faith looketh on the omnipotency of God, joyned with his promiſe, and doubteth not but that Chriſt is able to give that he promiſeth us ſpiritually by faith, the bread ſtill remaining in ſubſtance, as well as if the ſubſtance of bread were taken away: for Chriſt ſaith not in any place, this is no bread. But of this geare God ſhall inſtruct you, if you hang on his promiſe, and pray for the power and wiſedome of his Spirit, which undoubtedly as you are bound to look for, praying for it, ſo he hath bound himſelf by his promiſe to give it: the which thing he grant unto us both, and to all his people, for his names ſake, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

To certain godly men, whom he exhorteth to be patient under the Croſſe, and conſtant in the true doctrine which they had profeſſed.

A Letter of exhortation of M. Bradford to certain friends, to be patient under the Croſſe.

My dearly beloved in the Lord, as in him I wiſh you well to fare, ſo I pray God I and you may continue in his true ſervice, that perpetually we may enjoy the ſame welfare, as here in hope, ſo in Heaven indeed, and eternally.

You know this world is not your home, but a pilgrimage and place wherein God trieth his children: and therefore as it knoweth you not, nor can know you, ſo I truſt you know not it, that is, you allow it not, nor in any point will ſeeme ſo to do, although by many you be occaſioned thereto. For this hot Sun, which now ſhineth, burneth ſo ſore, that the corne which is ſown upon ſand and ſtony ground, beginneth to wither, that is, many which before times were taken for hearty Goſpellers, begin now for the fear of afflictions to relent, yea to turn to their vomit again, thereby declaring that though they go from amongſt us, yet were they never of us: or elſe they would have ſtill tarried with us, and neither for gain nor loſſe have left us, either in word or deed. As for their heart (which undoubtedly is double, and therefore in danger to Gods curſe) we have as much with us, as the Papiſts have with them, and more to by their own judgement. For they playing wily beguile themſelves, think it enough inwardly to favour the truth, though outwardly they curry favour. What though with my body, ſay they, I do this or that? God knoweth my heart is whole with him.

Backſliding of Goſpellers.

Ah brother, if thy heart be whole with God, why doeſt not thou confeſſe and declare thy ſelf accordingly by word and fact? Either that, which thou ſayeſt thou beleeveſt in thy heart, is good or no. If it be good, why art thou aſhamed of it? If it be evill, why doeſt thou keep it in thy heart? Is not God able to defend thee, adventuring thy ſelf for his cauſe? Or will he not defend his worſhippers? Doth not the Scripture ſay, that the eyes of the Lord are on them that fear him, and truſt in his mercy? And whereto? Forſooth to deliver their ſouls from death, and to feed them in the time of hunger.

Miniſters of God.
Pſal. 33.

If this be true, as it is moſt true, why are we afraid of death, as though God could not comfort or deliver us, or would not, contrary to his promiſe? Why are we afraid of the loſſe of our goods, as though God would leave them that fear him deſtitute of all good things, and ſo do againſt his moſt ample promiſes? Ah faith, faith, how few feel thee now adayes? Full truely ſaid Chriſt, that he ſhould ſcarcely finde faith when he came on earth. For if men beleeved theſe promiſes, they would never do any thing outwardly, which inwardly they diſallow. No example of men, how many ſoever they be, or how learned ſoever they be, can prevail in this behalf: for the pattern which we muſt follow is Chriſt himſelf, and not the more company or cuſtome. His Word is the lantern to lighten our ſteps, and not learned men. Company and cuſtome are to be conſidered according to the thing they allow. Learned men are to be liſtned to and followed according to Gods lore and law? for elſe the more part goeth to the Divell. As cuſtome cauſeth errour and blindneſſe, ſo learning, if it be not according to the light of Gods Word, is poyſon, and learned men moſt pernicious. The Divell is called Dæmon for his cunning, and the children of the world are much wiſer then the children of light in their generation: and I know the Divell and his darlings have always for the moſt part more helps in this life then Chriſts Church and her children. They (the Divell and his Synagogue I mean) have cuſtome, multitude, unitie, antiquitie, learning, power, riches, honour, dignitie and promotions plenty, as alwayes they have had, and ſhall have commonly and for the moſt part, untill Chriſts coming, much more then the true Church hath preſently, heretofore hath had, or hereafter ſhall have. For her glory, riches, and honour is not here; her triall, croſſe, and warfare is here.

Lack of faith.
Pſal. 119.
Learning to be followed, ſo far as it concurreth with Gods Word.
Luke 15.
The Synagogue of the Divell more furniſhed with worldly helps then the Church of Chriſt.

And therefore, my dear hearts in the Lord, conſider theſe things accordingly. Conſider what you be, not worldlings, but Gods children. Conſider where you be, not at home, but in a ſtrange Country. Conſider among whom you are converſant, even in the midſt of your enemies, and of a wicked generation, and then I truſt you will not much muſe at affliction. Which you cannot be without, being as you be, Gods children, in a ſtrange Countrey, and in the midſt of your enemies, except you would leave your Captain Chriſt, and follow Satan for the muck of this mould, reſt and quietneſſe, which he may promiſe you, and you indeed think you ſhall receive it by doing as he would have you to do: my ſweet hearts, he is not able to pay that he promiſeth. Peace and warre come from God, riches and poverty, wealth and woe. The Divell hath no power but by Gods permiſſion. If then God permit him a little on your goods, body or life, I pray you tell me what can much hurt you, as Peter ſaith, you being followers of godlineſſe? Think you that God will not remember you in his time, as moſt ſhall be to your comfort? Can a woman forget the childe of her womb? And if ſhe ſhould, yet will not I forget thee (ſaith the Lord). Look upon Abraham in his exile and miſery, look upon Iacob, Ioſeph, Moſes, David, the Prophets, Apoſtles, and all the godly from the beginning: and my good brethren, is not God the ſame God? Is he a changeling? you have heard of the patience of Iob (ſaith Saint Iames) and you have ſeen the end how that God is mercifull, patient and long ſuffering: even ſo I ſay unto you that you ſhall finde accordingly, if ſo be you be patient, that is, if ſo be you fear him, ſet his Word before you, ſerve him thereafter, and if he lay his croſſe on you, you bear it with patience: the which you ſhall do when you conſider it not accordingly to the preſent ſenſe, but according to the end, Heb. 12. 1 Cor. 4.

Therefore I heartily beſeech you, and out of my bonds which I ſuffer for your ſake, pray you mine own ſweet hearts in the Lord, that you would cleave in heart and humble obedience to the doctrine taught you by me, and many other my brethren. For we have taught you no fables nor tales of men, or our own fantaſies, but the very Word of God, which we are ready with our lives (God ſo enabling us, as we truſt he will) to confirm, and by the ſhedding of our blouds, in all patience and humble obedience to the ſuperiour powers, to teſtifie and ſeal up, as well that you might be more certain of the doctrine, as that you might be ready to confeſſe the ſame before this wicked world, knowing that if we confeſſe Chriſt and his truth before men, he will confeſſe us before his Father in Heaven: if ſo be we be aſhamed hereof for loſſe of life, friends or goods, he will be aſhamed of us before his Father, and his holy Angels in Heaven.

He exhorteth to come from the Maſſe.
Apoc. 18.

Therefore take heed, for the Lords ſake take heed, take heed, and defile not your bodies or ſoules with this Romiſh and Antichriſtian Religion ſet up amongſt us again: but come away, come away, as the Angel crieth, from amongſt them in their idolatrous ſervice, leſt you be partakers of their iniquitie. Hearken to your Preachers as the Theſſalonians did to Paul; that is, conferre their ſayings with the Scriptures, and if they ſound not thereafter, the morning light ſhall not ſhine upon them.

Vſe much and hearty prayer for the Spirit of wiſedome, knowledge, humbleneſſe, meekneſſe, ſobrietie, and repentance; which we have great need of, becauſe our ſinnes have thus provoked the Lords anger againſt us: but let us bear his anger, and acknowledge our faults with bitter tears, and ſorrowfull ſighes, and doubtleſſe he will be mercifull to us after his wonted mercy. The which thing he vouchſafe to do for his holy names ſake, in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord, to whom with the Father, and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour, glory, praiſe, and everlaſting thanks from this time forth for evermore. Amen.

A Letter to Maſter George Eaton.

A Letter of M. Bradford to M. George Eaton.

ALmightie God our heavenly Father, recompence abundantly into your boſome, my dearly beloved, here and eternally, the good which from him by you, I have continually received ſithence my coming into priſon. Otherwiſe can I never be able to requite your loving kindeneſſe here, then by praying for you, and after this life, by witneſſing your faith declared to me by your fruits, when we ſhall come and appear together before the throne of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whither (I thank God) I am even now a going, ever looking when Officers will come, and ſatisfie the Precept of the Prelates, whereof though I cannot complain, becauſe I have juſtly deſerved an hundred thouſand deaths at Gods hands by reaſon of my ſinnes, yet I may and muſt rejoyce, becauſe the Prelates do not perſecute in me mine iniquities, but Chriſt Jeſus and his veritie: ſo that they perſecute not me, they hate not me, but they perſecute Chriſt, they hate Chriſt.

The Prelats perſecute and hate the martyrs, not for their iniquities, but for hatred of Chriſt, and of his verity in them.

And becauſe they can do him no hurt (for he ſitteth in Heaven, and laugheth them and their devices to ſcorn, as one day they ſhall feel) therefore they turn their rage upon his poor ſheep, as Herod their father did upon the Infants, Matth. 2. Great cauſe therefore have I to rejoyce, that my dear Saviour Chriſt will vouchſafe, amongſt many, to chooſe me to be a veſſell of grace to ſuffer in me (which have deſerved ſo often and juſtly to ſuffer for my ſinnes) that I might be moſt aſſured I ſhall be a veſſell of honour, in whom he will be glorified.

Therefore, my right dear brother in the Lord, rejoyce with me, give thanks for me, and ceaſe not to pray, that God for his mercies ſake would make perfect the good he hath begun in me. And as for the doctrine which I have profeſſed and preached, I do confeſſe unto you in writing, as to the whole world I ſhortly ſhall by Gods grace in ſuffering, that it is the very true doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, of his Church, of his Prophets, Apoſtles, and all good men: ſo that if an Angel ſhould come from Heaven and preach otherwiſe, the ſame were accurſed.

John Bradford giveth teſtimony of his doctrine.

Therefore waver not, dear heart in the Lord, but be confirmed in it, and as your vocation requireth, when God ſo will, confeſſe it, though it be perillous ſo to do. The end ſhall evidently ſhew another manner of pleaſure for ſo doing, then tongue can tell. Be diligent in prayer, and watch therein. Uſe reverent reading of Gods Word. Set the ſhortneſſe of this time before your eyes, and let not the eternitie that is to come, depart out of your memory. Practiſe in doing, that you learn by reading and hearing. Decline from evill, and purſue good. Remember them that be in bonds, eſpecially for the Lords cauſe, as members of your body, and fellow heires of grace. Forget not the afflictions of Sion, and the oppreſſion of Jeruſalem; and God our Father ſhall give us his continuall bleſſing through Chriſt our Lord, who guide us as his dear children for ever. Amen.

And thus I take my Vale and farewell with you (dear Brother) for ever in this preſent life, till we ſhall meet in eternall bliſſe; whither our good God and Father bring us ſhortly, Amen. God bleſſe all your Babes for ever, Amen. Out of priſon this eighth of February.

Your afflicted Brother for the Lords cauſe,

Iohn Bradford.

ALmighty God our heavenly Father for his Chriſts ſake, encreaſe in us faith, by which we may more and more ſee what glory and honour is repoſed and ſafely kept in Heaven, for all them that beleeve with the heart, and confeſſe Chriſt and his truth with the mouth, Amen.

My dearly beloved, I remember that once heretofore I wrote unto you a Vale, or a farewell upon conjecture: but now I write my farewell to you in this life in deed, upon certain knowledge. My ſtaffe ſtandeth at the door, I continually look for the Sheriff to come for me, and I thank God I am ready for him. Now go I to practiſe that which I have preached. Now am I climing up the hill, it will cauſe me to puffe and to blow before I come to the cliffe. The hill is ſteep and high, my breath is ſhort, and my ſtrength is feeble: pray therefore to the Lord for me, that as I have now through his goodneſſe, even almoſt come to the top, I may by his grace be ſtrengthened, not to reſt till I come where I ſhould be. Oh loving Lord, put out thy hand, and draw me unto thee: for no man cometh, but he whom the Father draweth. See, my dearly beloved, Gods loving mercy: he knoweth my ſhort breath and great weakneſſe. As he ſent for Helias in a fiery chariot, ſo ſendeth he for me: for by fire my droſſe muſt be purified, that I may be fine gold in his ſight. O unthankfull wretch that I am: Lord do thou forgive me mine unthankfulneſſe. Indeed I confeſſe (right dear to me in the Lord) that my ſins have deſerved hell fire, much more then this fire. But lo, ſo loving is my Lord, that he converteth the remedy for my ſinnes, the puniſhment for my tranſgreſſions, into a teſtimoniall of his truth, and a teſtification of his veritie, which the Prelats do perſecute in me, and not my ſins: Therefore they perſecute not me, but Chriſt in me, which, I doubt not, will take my part unto the very end. Amen.

God turneth the deſerved death of his to a glorious teſtimoniall of his truth.

O that I had ſo open an heart, as could ſo receive as I ſhould do, this great benefit and unſpeakable dignitie, which God my Father offereth to me. Now pray for me, my dearly beloved: pray for me that I never ſhrink. I ſhall never ſhrink I hope. I truſt in the Lord I ſhall never ſhrink: for he that always hath taken my part, I am aſſured will not leave me when I have moſt need, for his truth and mercies ſake. Oh Lord help me. Into thy hands I commend me wholly. In the Lord is my truſt, I care not what man can do unto me. Amen. My dearly beloved, ſay you Amen alſo, and come after if ſo God call you. Be not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt, but keep company with him ſtill. He will never leave you, but in the midſt of temptation will give you an outſcape, to make you able to bear the brunt. Uſe hearty prayer, reverently read and hear Gods Word, put it in practice: look for the Croſſe, lift up your heads, for your redemption drawet nigh; know that the death of Gods Saints is precious in his ſight: Be merry in the Lord, pray for mitigation of Gods heavy diſpleaſure upon our Country. God keep us for ever, God bleſſe us with his ſpirituall bleſſings in Chriſt. And thus I bid you farewell for ever in this preſent life. Pray for me, pray for me; for Gods ſake, pray for me. God make perfect his good work begun in me. Amen. Out of priſon the ſeventh of February.

Yours in the Lord, Iohn Bradford.

In the ſtory of Maſter Bradford it was above rehearſed, how a certain Gentlewoman, being in trouble by her Father and Mother for not coming to Maſſe, ſent her ſervant to viſit M. Bradford in priſon. Who tendering the wofull caſe of the Gentlewoman, to the intent partly to confirm her with counſell, partly to relieve her oppreſſed minde with ſome comfort, directed this Letter unto her; the contents whereof are theſe.

I Wiſh unto you right worſhipfull, and my dearly beloved Siſter in the Lord, as to my ſelf, the continuall grace and comfort of Chriſt, and of his holy Word, through the operation of the holy Spirit, who ſtrengthen your inward man with the ſtrength of God, that you may continue to the end in the faithfull obedience of Gods Goſpel, whereto you are called, Amen.

I perceived by your ſelf the laſt day when you where with me, how that you are in the Schoolehouſe, and tryall Parlour of the Lord, which to me is (at the leaſt it ſhould be) a great comfort to ſee the number of Gods elect by you increaſed, which is in that ſtate whereof God hath not called many, as Paul ſaith. And as it is a comfort to me, ſo ſhould it be a confirmation unto me, that the Lord for his faithfulneſſe ſake will make perfect and finiſh the good he hath begun in you to the end.

If then your croſſe be to me a comfort or token of your election, and a confirmation of Gods continuall favor (my dearly beloved) how much more ought it to be ſo unto you? Unto whom he hath not only given to beleeve, but alſo to come into the trace of ſuffering for his ſake, and that not commonly of common enemies, but even of your own Father, Mother, and all your friends, I mean Kinſfolkes, as you told me. By which I ſee Chriſts words to be true; How that he came to give his children ſuch a peace with him, as the Divell might not, nor may abide, and therefore ſtirreth up Father and Mother, Siſter and Brother, rather then it ſhould continue. But (my dear Siſter) if you cry with David to the Lord, and complain to him; how that for conſcience to him your Father and Mother have forſaken you, you ſhall hear him ſpeak in your heart, that he hath received you, and by this would have you to ſee, how that he maketh you here like to Chriſt, that elſewhere in Heaven you might be like unto him; whereof you ought to be moſt aſſured, knowing that in time, even when Chriſt ſhall appear, you ſhall be like unto him. For he will make your body, which now you defile not with Idolatricall ſervice in going to Maſſe, like unto his own glorious and immortall body, according to the power whereby he is able to do all things. He will confeſſe you before his Father, which do not deny his verity in word nor deed before your father; he will make you to reign with him, that now ſuffer for him and with him; he will not leave you comfortleſſe, that ſeek no comfort but at his hand; though for a little time you be afflicted, yet therein will he comfort and ſtrengthen you, and at the length make you to be merry with him in ſuch joy as is infinite and endleſſe. He will wipe all the tears from your eyes; he will imbrace you as your dear husband; he will after he hath proved you, crown you with a crown of glory and immortalitie, ſuch as the heart of man ſhall never be able to conceive in ſuch ſort as the thing is. He now beholdeth your ſtedfaſtneſſe, and ſtriving to do his good will; and ſhortly will he ſhew you how ſtedfaſt he is, and will be ready to do your will, after that you have fully reſigned it to his will.

Pledge him in his cup of the Croſſe, and you ſhall pledge him in the cup of his glory. Deſire to drink it before it come to the dregs, whereof the wicked ſhall drink, and all thoſe that for fear of the croſſe and pledging the Lord, do walk with the wicked in betraying in fact and deed that which their heart imbraceth for verity. The which thing if you ſhould do (which God forbid) then my dear Miſtreſſe and Siſter in the Lord, you ſhould not only loſe all that I have before ſpoken, and much more infinitely of eternall joy and glory, but alſo be a caſt-away, and partaker of Gods moſt heavy diſpleaſure in hell fire eternally; and ſo for a little eaſe, which you cannot tell how long it will laſt, to loſe for ever and ever all eaſe and comfort. For he that gathereth not with me (ſaith Chriſt; as no Maſſe-goſpeller doth) ſcattereth abroad. According to that we do in this Body, we ſhall receive, be it good or bad. If of our words we ſhall be judged to condemnation or ſalvation; much more then of our facts and deeds. You cannot be partaker of Gods Religion and Antichriſts ſervice, whereof the Maſſe is moſt principall. You cannot be a member of Chriſts Church, and a member of the Popes Church. You muſt glorifie God not only in ſoul and heart, but alſo in body and deed. You may not think that God requireth leſſe of you his Wife now, then your Husband did of you. If both heart and Body your Husband would have, ſhall Chriſt have leſſe, trow you, which hath ſo bitterly and deerly bought it? If your Husband could not admit an excuſe how your heart is his only, if he ſhould have taken your Body in bed with another; do you think that Chriſt will allow your Body at Maſſe, although your heart conſent not to it?

3 Reg. 19.
Againſt Maſſe-goſpellers, which know the truth in their heart, and deny it in their deeds.

God eſteemeth his children, not only of their hearts, but of their pure hands and works, and therefore in Helias time he counted none to be his ſervants and people, but ſuch as had not bowed their knees to Baal; as now he doth not in England account any other to be his dearlings, which know the truth in heart, and deny it in their deeds, as do our Maſſe-goſpellers.

A falſe Chriſt of the Prieſt and the Bakers making.
The Maſſe deſtroyeth preaching and the Kingdome of Chriſt.

We ought to deſire above all things the ſanctifying of Gods holy name, and the coming of his Kingdom; and ſhall we then ſee his name blaſphemed ſo horribly as it is at Maſſe, by making it a ſacrifice propitiatory, and ſetting forth a falſe Chriſt of the Prieſts and Bakers making, to be worſhipped as God, and ſay nothing? The Jews rent their cloathes aſunder in ſeeing or hearing any thing blaſphemouſly done or ſpoken againſt God, and ſhall we yet come to Church where Maſſe is, and be mute? Paul and Barnabas rent their cloaths to ſee the people of Lycaonia to offer ſacrifice unto them, and ſhall we ſee ſacrifice and Gods ſervice done to an inanimate creature, and be mumme? What thing helpeth more or ſo much Antichriſts Kingdom as doth the Maſſe? And what deſtroyeth preaching and the Kingdom of Chriſt upon Earth more then it doth? And how can we then ſay, Let thy Kingdom come, and go to Maſſe? How can we pray before God, Thy will be done on Earth, when we will do our own will, and the will of our Father or friends?

Now pray we, Deliver us from evill, which knowing the Maſſe to be evill, do come to it?

But what go I about to light a candle in the noon day, that is, to tell you that we may not go to Maſſe, or to the congregation where it is, except it be to reprove it, in that all men in ſo doing do but diſſemble both with God and man? And is diſſembling now to be allowed? How long will men yet halt on both knees (ſaith God?) Halting (ſaith Paul) bringeth out of the way, that is to ſay, out of Chriſt, which is the way: ſo that he which is not in him ſhall wither away, and be caſt into hell fire. For Chriſt will be aſhamed of them before his Father, which be now aſhamed of his truth before this wicked generation.

He diſſwadeth her from the Maſſe.

Therefore (my good Miſtreſſe) take good heed; for it had been better for you never to have known the truth, and there-through to have eſcaped from Papiſticall uncleanneſſe, then now to return to it, making eftſoones your members, being members of righteouſneſſe, members of unrighteouſneſſe, as you do, if you do but go to the Church where Maſſe is. Be pure therefore, and keep your ſelf from all filth of the ſpirit, and of the fleſh. Abſtain not only from all evill, but from all appearance of evill.

And ſo the God of peace ſhall be with you, the glory of God ſhall govern you, the Spirit of God ſhall ſanctifie you, and be with you for ever, to keep you from all evill, and to comfort you in all your diſtreſſe and trouble; which is but ſhort if you conſider the eternity you ſhall enjoy in glory and felicitie in the Lord, which undoubtedly you ſhall not fail but inherit for ever, if ſo be you, as the elect childe of God, put your truſt in his mercie, call upon his name unfainedly, and yeild not over to the wicked world, but ſtick ſtill againſt it unto the end. God for his holy names ſake, which is properly the God of the widows, be your good and dear Father for ever, and help you always as I my ſelf would be holpen at his hands in all things, and eſpecially in this his own cauſe, Amen, Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

To one by whom he had received much comfort and relief in his trouble and impriſonment.

A Letter of thanks to a good benefactor of his.

The mercy of God in Chriſt, peculiar to his children, be evermore felt of you, my dearly beloved in the Lord, Amen.

When I conſider with my ſelf the benefits which God hath ſhewed unto me by your means, if I had ſo good and thankfull a heart as I would I had, I could not with dry eyes give him thanks; for certainly they are very many and great. And now being yet ſtill the Lords priſoner, I receive from him more benefits by you. For the which I think my ſelf ſo much bound to you, my good Brother (although you were but the inſtrument by whom God wrought and bleſſed me) that I look not to come out of your debt by any pleaſure, or ſervice that I ſhall ever be able to do you in this life. I ſhall heartily pray unto God therefore to requite you the good you have done to me for his ſake: for I know that which you have done, you have done it ſimply in reſpect of God and his Word. He therefore give you daily more and more to be confirmed in his truth and Word, and ſo plentifully poure upon you the riches of his holy Spirit and Heavenly treaſures laid up in ſtore for you, that your corporall and earthly riches may be uſed of you as Sacraments and ſignifications thereof; the more to deſire the one, that is, the heavenly, and the leſſe to eſteem the other, that is, the earthly. For Satans ſollicitation is, ſo to ſet before you the earthly, that therein and thereby you ſhould not have acceſſe to the conſideration of the heavenly, but as one bewitched ſhould utterly forget them, and altogether become a lover and worſhipper of the earthly Mammon, and ſo to fall to covetouſneſſe, and a deſire to be rich, by that means to bring you into many noyſome and hurtfull luſts: as now adaies I hear of many which have utterly forſaken God and all his Heavenly riches, for Antichriſts pleaſure, and the preſerving of their worldly pelf, which they imagine to leave to their poſterity, whereof they are uncertain, as they may be moſt certain they leave to them Gods wrath and vengeance, in his time to be ſent by viſitation, if they in time heartily repent not, and prevent not the ſame by earneſt prayer. Wherein (my good Brother) if you be diligent, hearty, and perſevere, I am ſure God will preſerve you from evill, and from yeelding your ſelf to do as the world now doth, by allowing in bodily fact in the Romiſh ſervice, that which the inward cogitation and minde doth diſallow. But if you be cold in prayer, and come into conſideration of earthly and preſent things ſimply, then ſhall you fall into faithleſſe follies and wounding of your conſcience; from which God evermore preſerve you with your good wife, and your babe Leonard, and all your family, to the which I wiſh the bleſſing of God now and for ever, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Chriſt forſaken of many for the preſerving of worldly pelf.

I pray you give thanks for me to your old bedfellow, for his great friendſhip for your ſake ſhewed to me when I was in the Tower.

To a faithfull friend of his, and his wife, reſolving their doubt why they ought not to come to auricular confeſſion.

Another Letter of M. Bradford diſproving auricular confeſſion.

The mercifull God, and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which loveth us as a moſt dear Father, and hath put upon him towards us the affections of a moſt tender Mother towards her children, ſo that he can no leſſe think upon us (although of our ſelves we be moſt unworthy, and deſerve nothing leſſe) then ſhe can think on her only begotten childe in his diſtreſſe, yea if ſhe ſhould forget her childe, as ſome unnaturall mother will do, yet will he never forget us, although for a time he ſeem to ſleep, that we might be occaſioned to call loude and awake him: this good God keep you, my dear Brother “ Nathanael, and your good yoak-fellow, my heartily beloved Siſter in the Lord, in all things now and for ever, to his glory and your eternall comfort: and alſo of his goodneſſe he grant you both the feeling of that hope, which undoubtedly he hath laid up in ſtore for you both, farre paſſing the ſtore and proviſion, not only which you have made, but all the world is able to make, as I truſt already he hath wrought it in you, but I beſeech him to increaſe it more and more, and kindle in you a hearty longing for the enjoying of the ſame: the which once felt and had indeed, then the means by the which we come thereto, cannot be ſo greatly dread, as moſt men do dread them, becauſe either they want this feeling (I mean it, of altogether) or elſe becauſe the ſenſe of this preſent time and things therein, are as a miſt to the hiding of thoſe things from our ſight, leſt we ſhould run and imbrace them by hearty prayer; the Spirit whereof God grant us, and indeed we ſhould attain enough in this behalf, if we continued therein.

“ Note that this Nathanael was not his proper name, but he was ſo called for his unfained ſimplicitie and truth.

For auricular Confeſſion, wherein you deſire my advice for your good yoak-fellow and family (my moſt dear Brother) I am as ready to give it, as you to deſire it, yea more glad, foraſmuch as half a ſuſpicion was in me (at the leaſt touching my dear Siſter your wife) of a loathing of my advice, that too much had been given, where indeed I ſhould lament my too little feeding you ſpiritually, as both you out of priſon and in priſon have fed me corporally. But as I always thought of her, ſo I yet think that ſhe is the childe of God, whom God dearly loveth, and will in his good time to her eternall comfort give her her hearts deſire in ſure feeling and ſenſible beleeving of this, which I would ſhe had often in her minde; namely, that he is her God and Father through Chriſt Jeſus our dear Lord and Saviour. A greater ſervice to God ſhe cannot give, then to beleeve this. If Satan ſay ſhe beleeveth not, to anſwer, not him but the Lord, and to ſay, yea, Lord help my unbelief, and increaſe my poor faith, which Satan ſaith is no faith: make him a lyar Lord, as always he hath been, is, and ſhall be. Undoubtedly, ſooner or latter God will graciouſly hear her groans, and keep all her tears in his bottell, yea write them in his counting Book, for he is a righteous God, and hath no pleaſure in the death of his creature; he loveth mercy, he will return and ſhew her his mercy, he will caſt all her ſinnes and iniquities into the bottome of the Sea; and the longer that he tarrieth (as he doth it but to prove her) ſo the more liberally will he recompence her long looking, which no leſſe pleaſeth him, then it grieveth now her outward Adam. For the mortification whereof God uſeth this Croſſe, and therefore if ſhe deſire to bear the ſame, doubtleſſe God will make her able to bear it; and in preſumption of his goodneſſe and ſtrength, let her caſt her ſelf wholly upon him: for he is faithfull, and will aſſuredly confirm, and bring to a happy end that good which graciouſly he hath begun in her. The which thing I deſire him to do for his own glory and names ſake, Amen, Amen.

What to do if Satan charge our conſcience with unbelief.

The Lord the longer he tarrieth, the more liberally he recompenceth at his coming.

And now to the matter. Confeſſion auricular, as it was firſt uſed and inſtituted (which was by the way of counſell asking) I take to be amongſt thoſe traditions which are indifferent, that is, neither unlawfull, nor neceſſarily binding us, except the offence of the weak could not be avoided. But to conſider it, as it is now uſed (I write to you but as I think, and what my minde is; which follow no further, then good men by Gods Word do allow it) to conſider it, I ſay, as it is now uſed, me think, it is plainly unlawfull and wicked, and that for theſe cauſes.

Confeſſion auricular to what end it was firſt inſtituted.

Auricular confeſſion, as it is abuſed, is to be rejected, as unlawfull and wicked for eight cauſes.

Firſt, becauſe they make it a ſervice of God, and a thing which pleaſeth God of it ſelf, I will not ſay meritorious; this bringer my brother can tell you at large how great evill this is.

Secondly, becauſe they make it of neceſſitie, ſo that he or ſhe that uſeth it not, is not taken for a good Chriſtian.

Enumeration of ſins impoſſible.

Thirdly, becauſe it requireth of it ſelf an impoſſibilitie, that is, the numbring and telling of all our ſins, which no man perceiveth, much leſſe can utter.

Fourthly, becauſe it eſtabliſheth and confirmeth, at the leaſt alloweth praying to Saints; Precor Sanctam Mariam, you muſt ſay or the Prieſt for you.

Fifthly, becauſe it is very injurious to the liberty of the Goſpel, the which to affirm in example and fact, I take to be a good work and dear in Gods ſight.

Confeſſion prejudiciall to Chriſtian liberty.

Sixthly, becauſe (as it is uſed) it is a note, yea a very ſinew of the Popiſh Church: and therefore Ye ſhould be ſo far from allowing the ſame, that we ſhould think our ſelves happy to loſe any thing in bearing witneſſe there againſt.

Confeſſion a mark of the Popes Church.

Seventhly, becauſe inſteed of counſell, thereat you ſhould receive poyſon, or if you refuſe it under ſir Johns Benedicite, you ſhould no leſſe there be wound in the briars.

Confeſſion inſteed of counſell, giveth poyſon.

Eighthly, becauſe the end and purpoſe why we go thither, is for the avoiding of the Croſſe, that is, for our own cauſe, and not for Chriſts cauſe, or for our brethrens commoditie. For in that they make it ſo neceſſary a thing, and a worſhipping of God, it cannot but be againſt Chriſt, and the freedom of his Goſpel: and the ſame thing teacheth us, that it is againſt the commoditie of our brethren, which either be weak, either be ſtrong, either be ignorant, either be obſtinate. If they be weak, by your reſorting to it, they be made more weak. If they be ſtrong, you do what you can to infirm their ſtrength. If they be ignorant, therein you help to keep them by your fact. If they be obſtinate, your reſorting to it cannot but rock them aſleep in their obſtinate errour of the neceſſitie of this rite and ceremonie. Theſe cauſes recited do ſhew you what I think in this: but my thinking muſt no farther binde you then a mans thought ſhould do, except the ſame be grounded upon Gods Word which bindeth indeed, as I think they do. I doubt not but you weighing theſe cauſes, and eſpecially two of the firſt and the laſt, if you pray to God for his Spirit to direct you, and thereto aske the advice of this my good Brother and other godly learned men, I doubt not (I ſay) but you ſhould be guided to do that which is beſt in Gods ſight, although in the ſight of the world perhaps you ſhould be counted fooliſh & preciſe. But be at a point with your ſelves as the Diſciples of Chriſt, which had forſaken themſelves, to follow not your will, but Gods will, as you daily pray in the Lords prayer.

The croſſe of Chriſt be willing to carry, leſt you carry the croſſe of the world, the fleſh, or the Divell. One of theſe four croſſes you muſt carry. Three of them bring to hell, and therefore the more part goeth that way, which is a broad way. Only the fourth bringeth to Heaven, but few go that way, as well becauſe the way is ſtraight, as alſo becauſe few walk in it. Howbeit, though it be ſtraight, it is but ſhort, and the few are many, if you conſider the godly, as the Patriarcks, Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors, and Chriſt Jeſus, with all his guard and train. Think not ſcorn to come after them, which are gone before you, and after them which now go before you, in whoſe number I truſt I am appointed to be one, and I beſeech you pray for me, that God would vouch me worthy that honour. Our ſins deſerve plagues, priſon, and the loſſe of all that ever we have: therefore if God remove our ſins out of ſight, and ſend us priſon, or loſſe of goods and living for his names ſake, Oh how happy are we? My dear hearts in the Lord, conſider this gear, and be aſſured that he which loſeth any thing for Chriſts ſake, the ſame in his poſterity ſhall finde it here, and in Heaven elſewhere. As for unableneſſe to anſwer for your faith; it ſhall be enough to will them to diſpute with your teachers. Faith ſtandeth not in diſputing. I think few, if it came to diſputing, could defend the Godhead of Chriſt and many other articles; I ſpeak it for the ſimple ſort. Pray for me. Lack of paper maketh this end. Commend me to my good Brother R. B. and my good Siſter his Wife. I pray them to pray for me. I truſt by this bearer to hear how you do.

Four croſſes, whereof three bring to hell.

Why the more part go that way that leadeth to perdition.

Another Letter to N. and his Wife.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to a dear friend and his Wife.

GOds mercy in Chriſt I wiſh you to feel, my dear brother, with my faithfull Siſter your Wife, now and for ever, Amen.

Having this occaſion, I could not but write ſomething, as well to put my ſelf in remembrance of my duty to God-wards for you both in thankfulneſſe and prayer, as to put you in remembrance of me: and your duty towards God for me, in praying for me; for I dare not ſay in thankfulneſſe for me: not that I would have you to give no thanks to God for his wonderfull great and ſweet mercies towards me, and upon me in Chriſt his Sonne; but becauſe I have not deſerved it at either of your hands. For ye both know right well, at leaſt my conſcience doth accuſe me, how that I have not only not exhorted and taught you (as both my vocation and your deſerts required) to walk worthy of that vocation which God hath made you worthy of, and with trembling and fear to work out your ſalvation, that is, in the fear of God to give your ſelves to great vigilancie in prayer for the increaſe of faith, and to a warie circumſpection in all your converſation, not only in works and words, but alſo in thoughts, becauſe God is a ſearcher of the heart, and out of the heart it cometh that defileth us in Gods ſight: I have (I ſay) not only not done this, but alſo have given you example of negligence in prayer, watching, faſting, talking, and doing, ſo that woe to me for giving ſuch offence. Partly for this cauſe, dear Brother and Siſter, God hath caſt me here that I might repent me and turn to him, and that ye might alſo by his correction upon me be more diligent to redreſſe theſe things and others, if they in your conſcience do accuſe you.

Antichriſt reigning in England.

My dearly beloved, heavy is Gods anger falne upon us all; dolefull is this day. Now hath Antichriſt all his power again. Now is Chriſts Goſpel trodden under foot. Now is Gods people a deriſion and prey for the wicked. Now is the greateſt plague of all plagues faln, the want of Gods Word: and all theſe we have, yea I alone have juſtly deſerved. Oh that as I write (I alone) I could with David, 1 Par. 21. and with Jonas in heart ſay ſo. But I do not, I do not, I ſee not how grievouſly I have ſinned, and how great a miſery is faln for mine unthankfulneſſe for Gods Word, for mine hypocriſie in profeſſing, preaching, hearing, and ſpeaking of Gods Word: for my not praying to God for the continuance of it, for my not loving of it throughly as it requireth, &c. I will ſpeak nothing of my manifeſt evils, for they are known to you well enough.

M. Bradford confeſſing himſelf to the Lord.

He exhorteth them by his confeſſion to do the like.

His prayer to God.

Dear Brother and Siſter, with me ſay ye the like for your own parts, and with me joyn your hearts, and let us go to our heavenly Father, and for his Chriſts ſake beſeech him to be mercifull unto us, and to pardon us: Oh good Father, it is we that have deſerved the taking away of thy Word, it is we that have deſerved theſe thy juſt plagues faln upon us; we have done amiſſe, we have dealt unjuſtly with thy Goſpel, we have procured thy wrath, and therefore juſt art thou in puniſhing us, juſt art thou in plaguing us, for we are very miſerable. But good Lord and dear Father of mercy, whoſe juſtice is ſuch, that thou wilt not puniſh the poor ſouls of this Realm, which yet have not thus ſinned againſt thee, as we have done (for many yet never heard thy Word) for our treſpaſſes; and whoſe mercy is ſo great, that thou wilt put our iniquities out of thy remembrance for thy Chriſts ſake, if we repent and beleeve: grant us we beſeech thee, true repentance and faith, that we, having obtained pardon for our ſinnes, may through thy Chriſt get deliverance from the tyranny of Antichriſt now oppreſſing us.

Pſal. 125.

Oh good Father, which haſt ſaid, that the Scepter of the wicked ſhould not long lye upon and over the juſt, leſt they put forth their hands to iniquity alſo; make us juſt, we pray thee in Chriſts name, and cut aſunder the cordes of them that hate Sion; let not the wicked people ſay, Where is their God? Thou our God art in heaven, and doeſt whatſoever pleaſeth thee upon earth.

Oh that thou wouldeſt in the mean whiles, before thou doſt deliver us, that (I ſay) thou wouldeſt open our eyes to ſee all theſe plagues to come from thee, and all other that ſhall come, whatſoever they be, publike or private, that they come not by chance nor by fortune, but that they come even from thy hand, and that juſtly, and mercifully; Juſtly, becauſe we have and do deſerve them, not onely by our birth poyſon ſtill ſticking and working in us, but alſo by our former evill like paſte, which by this puniſhment and all other puniſhments thou wouldeſt have us to call to our remembrance, and to ſet before us, that thou mighteſt put them from before thee, where as they ſtand ſo long as they are not in our remembrance, to put them away by repentance. Mercifully, O Lord God, doeſt thou puniſh, in that thou doeſt not correct to kill, but to amend, that we might repent our ſins, ask mercie, obtain it freely in Chriſt, and begin to ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake; to be part of thy houſe, whereat thy judgement beginneth; to be partakers of the afflictions of thy Church, and thy Chriſt, that we might be partakers of the glory of the ſame; to weep here, that we might rejoyce elſewhere; to be judged in this world, that we might with thy Saints judge hereafter the world; to ſuffer with Chriſt, that we might reign with him; to be like to Chriſt in ſhame, that we might be like to him in glory; to receive our evils here, that we might with poor Lazarus finde reſt elſewhere; reſt, I ſay, and ſuch a reſt as the eye hath not ſeen, the ear hath not heard, nor the heart of man is able to conceive.

The croſſe ſent from God, and to what end.

Oh that our eyes were open to ſee this, that the croſſe cometh from thee to declare thy juſtice and thy mercie, and hereto, that we might ſee how ſhort a time the time of ſuffering is; how long a time the time of rejoycing is to them that ſuffer here, bnt to them that will not, how long and miſerable a time is appointed and prepared; a time, without time in eternall woe and perdition, too horrible to be thought upon. From the which keep us dear father, and give more light in ſoul to ſee this gear, and how that all thy deareſt children have carried the croſſe of grievous afflictions in this life; in whoſe company do thou place us, and ſuch a croſſe lay upon us, as thou wilt make us able to bear, to thy glory and our ſalvation in Chriſt, for whoſe ſake we pray thee to ſhorten the dayes of this our great miſery fallen upon us moſt juſtly, and in the mean ſeaſon give us patience, repentance, faith, and thy eternall conſolation; Amen, Amen, Amen.

And thus dear hearts, I have talked (me thinks) a little while with you, or rather we have all talked with God. Oh that God would give us his ſpirit of grace and prayer. My dearly beloved, pray for it, as for your ſelves, ſo for me, and that God would vouchſafe to make me worthy to ſuffer with a good conſcience for his names ſake. Pray for me, and I ſhall do the like for you. This 20. of December, by him whom by this bringer ye ſhall learn. I pray you give my commendations to all that love me in the Lord. Be merry in Chriſt, for one day in heaven we ſhall meet and rejoyce together for evermore, Amen.

To my good Brother, Auguſtine Barneher.

This Auguſtine being a Dutchman, was Latimers ſervant, and a faithfull Miniſter in the time of K. Edward, and in Q. Maries time a diligent attendant upon the Lords priſoners.

MIne own good Auguſtine, the Lord of mercie bleſſe thee my dear brother for ever. I have good hope, that if you come late at night, I ſhall ſpeak with you, but come as ſecretly as you can: Howbeit, in the mean ſeaſon if you can, and as you can, learn what Maſter G. hath ſpoken to Doctor Story and others. The cauſe of all this trouble both to my Keeper and me, is thought to come by him. It is ſaid that I ſhall be burned in Smithfield, and that ſhortly. Domini voluntas fiat. Ecce ego Domine, mitte me, i. The Lords Will be done. Behold here I am Lord, ſend me. Ah mine own ſweet friend, I am now alone, leſt I ſhould make you and others worſe. If I ſhould live, I would more warily uſe the company of Gods children, then ever I have done. Iram Domini portabo, quoniam peccavi ei, i. I will bear the Lords anger, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him. Commend me to my moſt dear ſiſter, for whom my heart bleedeth, the Lord comfort her and ſtrengthen her unto the end. I think I have taken my leave of her for ever in this life, but in eternall life we ſhall moſt ſurely meet, and praiſe the Lord continually. I have now taken a more certain anſwer of death, then ever I did: and yet not ſo certain as I think I ſhould do. I am now as a ſheep appointed to the ſlaughter. Ah my God, the houre is come, glorifie thy moſt unworthy childe. I have glorified thee, ſaith this my ſweet Father, and I will glorifie thee, Amen. Ah mine own bowels, praiſe God for me, and pray for me; for I am his hope: I hope he will never forſake me, though I have above all other moſt deſerved it. I am the moſt ſingular example of his mercy; praiſed be his name therefore for ever. Cauſe Miſtreſſe Perpoint to learn of the Sheriff Maſter Cheſter, what they purpoſe to do with me, and know if you can, whether there be any Writ forth for me: Factus ſum ſicut Nycticorax in domicilio, & Paſſer ſolitarius in tecto, i. I am like to an Owle in the houſe, and as a Sparrow alone in the houſe top. Ah my Auguſtine, how long ſhall Gods enemies thus triumph? I have ſent you this of the Baptiſme of children to write out: when this is done, you ſhall have other things. Pray, pray mine own dear heart, on whom I am bold. The Keeper telleth me, that it is death for any to ſpeak with me, but yet I truſt that I ſhall ſpeak with you.

Pſal. 101.

John Bradford.

To theſe Letters of M. Bradford above ſpecified, here is alſo adjoyned another Letter of the ſaid Bradford, written to certain of his faithfull friends, worthy of all Chriſtians to be read; wherein is deſcribed a lively compariſon between the Old man and the New: Alſo between the Law and the Goſpel, containing much fruitfull matter of Divinity, neceſſary for Chriſtian conſciences to reade and underſtand.

A Letter of Maſter Bradford, deſcribing a compariſon between the Old man and the New, &c.

A compariſon between the Old man and the New, by M. Bradford.

A Man that is regenerate and born of God (the which thing that every one of us be, our Baptiſme, the Sacrament of regeneration, doth require under pain of damnation, and therefore let every one of us with the Virgin Mary ſay; Be it unto me, O Lord, according to thy Word, according to the Sacrament of Baptiſme, wherein thou haſt declared our adoption; and let us lament the doubting hereof in us, ſtriving againſt it, as we ſhall be made able of the Lord) a man, I ſay, that is regenerate, conſiſteth of two men (as a man may ſay) namely of the Old man, and of the New man. The Old man is like to a mighty Giant, ſuch a one as was Goliath, for his birth is now perfect. But the New man is like unto a little childe, ſuch a one as was David, for his birth is not perfect untill the day of his generall reſurrection.

The Old man. The New man.

Why the Old man is ſtronger then the New.

The Old man therefore is more ſtrong, luſty, and ſtirring then is the New man, becauſe the birth of the New man is begun now, and the Old man is perfectly born. And as the Old man is more ſtirring, luſty, and ſtronger then the New man; ſo is the nature of him clean contrary to the nature of the New man, as being earthly and corrupt with Satans ſeed, the nature of the New man being heavenly, and bleſſed with the celeſtiall Seed of God. So that one man, inaſmuch as he is corrupt with the ſeed of the Serpent, is an Old man; and in aſmuch as he is bleſſed with the Seed of God from above, he is a New man. And as in aſmuch as he is an Old man, he is a ſinner and an enemy to God; ſo inaſmuch as he is regenerate, he is righteous and holy, and a friend to God, the Seed of God preſerving him from ſin, ſo that he cannot ſinne, as the ſeed of the Serpent, wherewith he is corrupt even from his conception, inclineth him, yea inforceth him to ſinne, and nothing elſe but to ſinne: So that the beſt part in man before regeneration, in Gods ſight, is not only an enemy, but enmitie it ſelf.

In what reſpect one man is both an Old man and alſo a New man.

One man therefore which is regenerate, well may be called always juſt, and always ſinfull; juſt in reſpect of Gods Seed, and his regeneration; ſinfull in reſpect of Satans ſeed and his firſt birth. Betwixt theſe two men therefore there is continuall conflict, and warre moſt deadly. The fleſh and old man, by reaſon of his birth that is perfect, doth often for a time prevail againſt the New man (being but a childe in compariſon) and that in ſuch ſort, as not only other, but even the children of God themſelves think that they be nothing elſe but Old, and that the Spirit and Seed of God is loſt and gone away; where yet notwithſtanding the truth is otherwiſe, the Spirit and the Seed of God at the length appearing again, and diſpelling away the clouds which cover the Sunne of Gods Seed from ſhining, as the clouds in the ayre do the corporall Sunne; ſo that ſometimes a man cannot tell by any ſenſe, that there is any Sunne, the clouds and winds ſo hiding it from our ſight: Even ſo our cecitie or blindneſſe, and corrupt affections do often ſhaddow the ſight of Gods Seed in Gods Children, as though they were plain reprobates. Whereof it cometh, that they praying according to their ſenſe, but not according to the truth, deſire of God to give them again his Spirit, as though they had loſt it, and he had taken it away. Which thing God never doth indeed, although he make us to think ſo for a time; for always he holdeth his hand under his children in their fals, that they lie not ſtill as other do which are not regenerate. And this is the difference betwixt Gods Children which are regenerate and elect before all times in Chriſt, and the wicked always; that the elect lye not ſtill continually in their ſinne, as do the wicked, but at the length do return again by reaſon of Gods Seed, which is in them hid as a ſparkle of fire in the aſhes; as we may ſee in Peter, David, Paul, Mary Magdalen, and others. For theſe (I mean Gods Children) God hath made all things in Chriſt Jeſus, to whom he hath given his dignitie, that they ſhould be his inheritance and Spouſes.

How one man may be called always ſinfull, and always juſt.

Why the Old man oftentimes prevaileth againſt the New man.

The Old man ſo mightily prevaileth ſometimes againſt the New in the Children of God, that the Spirit and Seed of God ſeemeth to be utterly taken from them: whereas indeed it is not ſo, as afterwards to their great comfort they finde and feel.

This our Inheritour Chriſt Jeſus, God with God, light of light, coeternall and conſubſtantiall with the Father, and with the holy Ghoſt, to the end that he might become our husband (becauſe the husband and the wife muſt be one body and fleſh) hath taken our nature upon him, communicating with it and by it in his own perſon, to us all his children, his divine Majeſty (as Peter ſaith) and ſo is become fleſh of our fleſh, and bone of our bones ſubſtantially; as we are become fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones ſpiritually, all that ever we have pertaining to him, yea

1 Pet. 1.

As the wife is no ſueable perſon, but the husband: ſo Chriſt being our husband, let him enter the action for our ſins.

even our ſins; as all that ever he hath, pertaineth unto us, even his whole glory. So that if Satan ſhould ſummon us to anſwer for our debts or ſins, in that the wife is no ſueable perſon, but the husband, we may well bid him enter his action againſt our Husband Chriſt, and he will make him a ſufficient anſwer.

For this end (I mean that we might be coupled and married thus to Chriſt, and ſo be certain of ſalvation, and at godly peace with God in our conſciences) God hath given his holy Word, which hath two parts (as now the children of God do conſiſt of two men) one part of Gods Word being proper to the old man, and the other part of Gods Word being proper to the new man. The part properly pertaining to the old man is the Law; the part properly pertaining to the new man is the Goſpel.

The Law pertaineth to the old man, and the Goſpel to the new.

What the Law is.

What the Goſpel is.

The Law is a doctrine which commandeth and forbiddeth, requiring doing and avoiding. Under it therefore are contained all precepts, threatnings, promiſes upon conditions of our doing and avoiding, &c. The Goſpel is a doctrine which always offereth and giveth, requiring Faith on our behalf, not as of worthineſſe, or as a cauſe, but as a certificate unto us, and therefore under it are contained all the free and ſweet promiſes of God; as I am the Lord thy God, &c.

The conſcience feared and beaten down with the terrour of Gods judgement againſt ſin, may not look upon the Law, but flye to the Goſpel for relief and comfort.

John 13.

To the conſcience quieted and at peace with God, the Law ſerveth only to keep down the old man.

In thoſe that be of yeers of diſcretion, it requireth faith, not as a cauſe, but as an inſtrument, whereby we our ſelves may be certain of our good husband Chriſt and of his glory, and therefore when the conſcience feeleth it ſelf diſquieted for fear of Gods judgement againſt ſin, ſhe may in no wiſe look upon the doctrine pertaining to the old man, but on the doctrine only that pertaineth to the new man, in it not looking for that which it requireth, that is Faith, becauſe we never beleeve as we ſhould; but only on it which it offereth, and which it giveth, that is, on Gods grace and eternall mercy and peace in Chriſt. So ſhall ſhe be in quiet, when ſhe looketh for it altogether out of her ſelf, in Gods mercy in Chriſt Jeſus: in whoſe lap if ſhe lay her head with Saint John, then is ſhe happy, and ſhall finde quietneſſe indeed. When ſhe feeleth her ſelf quiet, then, in Gods name, let her look on the Law, and upon ſuch things as it requireth, thereby to bridle and keep down the old Adam, to ſlay that Goliath; from whom ſhe muſt needs keep the ſweet promiſes, being the bed wherein her Spouſe and ſhe meet and lye together. For as the wife will keep her bed only for her husband, although in other things ſhe is contented to have fellowſhip with others, as to ſpeak, ſit, eate, drink, go, &c. ſo our conſciences, which are Chriſts Wives, muſt needs keep the bed, that is, Gods ſweet promiſes alonely for our ſelves and our husband, there to meet together, to embrace and laugh together, and to be joyfull together. If ſin, the Law, the Divel, or any thing would creep into the bed, and lye there, then complain to thy husband Chriſt, and forthwith thou ſhalt ſee him play Phinees part. Thus (my dearly beloved) I have given you in few words a ſum of all the Divinity which a Chriſtian conſcience cannot want.

Num. 25.

A Letter written to his Mother, as a farewell, when he thought he ſhould have ſuffered ſhortly after.

Another Letter or leave-taking to his mother, ſuppoſing that he ſhould have ſuffered ſhortly after.

THe Lord of life and Saviour of the World, Jeſus Chriſt, bleſſe you and comfort you, my good and dear Mother, with his heavenly comfort, conſolation, grace, and ſpirit, now and for ever. Amen.

If I thought that daily, yea almoſt hourely you did not cry upon God the Father through Jeſus Chriſt, that he would give me his bleſſing, even the bleſſing of his children; then would I write more hereabouts. But foraſmuch as herein I am certain you are diligent, and ſo I beſeech you good Mother to continue; I think it good to write ſomething, wherby this your crying might be furthered. Furthered it will be, if thoſe things which hinder it be taken away. Among the which, in that I think my impriſonment is the greateſt and chiefeſt, I will thereabout ſpend this Letter, and that briefly, leſt it might increaſe the let, as my good Brother this bringer can tell you. You ſhall know therefore, good Mother, that for my body, though it be in an houſe, out of the which I cannot come when I will, yet in that I have conformed my will to Gods will, I finde herein liberty enough, I thank God. And for my lodging, bedding, meat, drink, godly and learned company, Books, and all other neceſſaries for mine eaſe, comfort, and commoditie, I am in much better caſe then I could wiſh, and Gods mercifull providence here is farre above my worthineſſe. Worthineſſe, quoth I? Alas I am worthy of nothing but damnation.

He meaneth the danger of more ſtraight impriſonment that might here by follow.

But beſides all this, for my ſoul I finde much more commodity. For God is my Father, I now perceive, through Chriſt; therefore in priſoning me for his Goſpel, he maketh me like to the Image of his Sonne Jeſus Chriſt here, that when he cometh to Judgement I might then be like unto him, as my truſt and hope is, I ſhall be. Now maketh he me like to his friends the Prophets, Apoſtles, the holy Martyrs and Confeſſors. Which of them did not ſuffer at the leaſt impriſonment or baniſhment for his Goſpel and Word?

Now Mother, how farre am I unmeet to be compared to them? I (I ſay) which always have been, and am ſo vile an hypocrite and grievous a ſinner. God might have cauſed me long before this time to have been caſt into priſon as a theef, a blaſphemer, an unclean liver, and an haynous offender of the Laws of the Realm; but (dear Mother) his mercy is ſo great upon both you and all that love me, that I ſhould be caſt into priſon as none of theſe, or for any ſuch vices, but only for his Chriſts ſake, for his Goſpels ſake, for his Churches ſake, that thereby as I might learn to lament and bewail my ingratitude and ſins, ſo I might rejoyce in his mercy, be thankfull, look for eternall joy with Chriſt, for whoſe ſake, praiſed be his name for it, I now ſuffer, and therefore ſhould be merry and glad. And indeed (good Mother) ſo I am, as ever I was, yea never ſo merry and glad was I, as now I ſhould be, if I could get you to be merry with me, to thank God for me, and to pray on this ſort: Ah good Father, which doſt vouchſafe that my ſonne, being a grievous ſinner in thy ſight, ſhould finde this favour with thee, to be one of thy Sonnes Captains and men of warre to fight and ſuffer for his Goſpels ſake, I thank thee, and pray thee, in Chriſts name, that thou wouldſt forgive him his ſins and unthankfulneſſe, and make perfect in him that good which thou haſt begun; yea Lord I pray thee make him worthy to ſuffer, not only impriſonment, but even very death for thy truth, religion, and Goſpels ſake. As Anna did apply and give her firſt childe Samuel unto thee, ſo do I dear Father, beſeeching thee for Chriſts ſake to accept this my gift, and give my ſon John Bradford grace always truly to ſerve thee and thy people, as Samuel did, Amen Amen.

A prayer for his mother to offer unto God in his behalf.

If on this ſort (good Mother) from your heart you would pray, as I ſhould be the moſt merrieſt man that ever was; ſo am I certain the lets of your prayer for my impriſonment would be taken away. Good mother therefore mark what I have written, and learn this prayer by heart, to ſay it daily, and then I ſhall be merry, and you ſhall rejoyce if that you continue, as I truſt you do in Gods true religion, even the ſame I have taught you, and my Father Traves I truſt will put you in remembrance of: my brother Roger alſo I truſt doth ſo daily. Go to therefore, and learn apace. Although the Devill caſt divers lets in the way, God in whom you truſt, will caſt them away for his Chriſts ſake, if you will call upon him; and never will he ſuffer you to be tempted above that he will make you able to bear. But how you ſhould do herein, the other letter which I have written herewith, ſhall teach you, which I would have none ſhould read till my father Traves have read it, and he will give you by Gods grace ſome inſtructions.

This Letter came not to our hands.

Now therefore will I make an end, praying you good mother, to look for no moe letters: for if it were known that I have pen and ink, and did write, then ſhould I want all the foreſaid commodities I have ſpoken of concerning my body, and be caſt into ſome dungeon in fetters of iron: which thing I know would grieve you, and therefore for Gods ſake, ſee that theſe be burned, when this little prayer in it is copied by my brother Roger: for perchance your houſe may be ſearched for ſuch gear, when you think little of it: and look for no moe, ſweet mother, till either God ſhall deliver me, and ſend me out, either you and I ſhall meet together in heaven, where we ſhall never part aſunder, Amen.

Exhortation to his two ſiſters.

I require you Elizabeth and Margaret my ſiſters, that you will fear God, uſe prayer, love your husbands, be obedient unto them, as God willeth you: bring up your children in Gods fear: and be good houſwives. God bleſſe you both, with both your husbands, my good brethren, to whom to do good, becauſe I now cannot, I will pray for them and you. Commend me to my ſiſter Anne, mother Pike. Th. Sorrocold and his wife, R. Shalcroſſe and his wife, R. Bolton, J. Wild, M. Vicar, the Parſon Mottrom, Sir Laurence Hall, with all that love, and I truſt, live in the Goſpel; and God turn Sir Thomas his heart, Amen. I will daily pray for him. I need not to ſet my name, you know it well enough.

Becauſe you ſhould give my letters to my father Traves to be burned, I have written here a prayer for you to learn to pray for me good mother, and another for all your houſe in your evening prayer to pray with my brother. Theſe prayers are written with mine own hand: keep them ſtill, but the letters give to father Traves to burn, and give father Traves a copy of the later prayer.

Another Letter to his mother, as his laſt farewell unto her in this world, a little before he was burned.

Another, and the laſt Letter of M. Bradford written to his mother a little before his death.

GOds mercie and peace in Chriſt, be more and more perceived of us, Amen.

My moſt dear mother, in the bowels of Chriſt I heartily pray and beſeech you to be thankfull for me unto God, which thus now taketh me unto himſelf: I dye not, my good mother, as a thief, a murderer, an adulterer, &c. but I dye as a witneſſe of Chriſt, his Goſpel and verity, which hitherto I have confeſſed (I thank God) as well by preaching, as by impriſonment, and now even preſently I ſhall moſt willingly confirm the ſame by fire. I knowledge that God moſt juſtly might take me hence ſimply for my ſins (which are many, great, and grievous: but the Lord for his mercie in Chriſt, hath pardoned them all I hope) but now dear mother, he taketh me hence by this death, as a Confeſſor and witneſſe, that the Religion taught by Chriſt Jeſus, the Prophets, and the Apoſtles, is Gods truth. The Prelates do perſecute in me Chriſt whom they hate, and his truth which they may not abide, becauſe their works are evill, and may not abide the truth and light, leſt men ſhould ſee their darkneſſe. Therefore my good and moſt dear mother, give thanks for me to God, that he hath made the fruit of your womb to be a witneſſe of his glory, and attend to the truth, which (I thank God for it) I have truly taught out of the pulpit of Mancheſter. Uſe often and continuall prayer to God the father through Chriſt. Hearken, as you may, to the Scriptures: ſerve God after his Word, and not after cuſtome: beware of the Romiſh religion in England, defile not your ſelf with it: carry Chriſts croſſe as he ſhall lay it upon your back: forgive them that kill me: pray for them, for they know not what they do: commit my cauſe to God our father: be mindefull of both your daughters, and help them as you can.

Bradford perſecuted of the Prelates, not for his ſins, but for the truth of Chriſt.

I ſend all my writings to you my brother Roger, do with them as you will, becauſe I cannot as I would, he can tell you more of my minde. I have nothing to give you, or to leave behinde me for you: onely I pray God my father, for his Chriſts ſake, to bleſſe you, and keep you from evill. He give you patience, he make you thankfull, as for me, ſo for your ſelf, that he will take the fruit of your womb to witneſſe his verity: wherein I confeſſe to the whole world, I dye and depart this life, in hope of a much better: which I look for at the hands of God my father, through the merits of his dear ſon Jeſus Chriſt.

Thus, my dear mother, I take my laſt farewell of you in this life, beſeeching the Almighty and eternall father by Chriſt, to grant us to meet in the life to come, where we ſhall give him continuall thanks and praiſe for ever and ever, Amen. Out of priſon the 24. of June, 1555.

Your ſon in the Lord,
John Bradford.

A Letter ſent with a ſupplication to Queen Mary, her Councell, and the whole Parliament.

A letter of M. Bradfords joyned with a ſupplication ſent to Q. Mary, her Councell, and the Parliament.

IN moſt humble wiſe complaineth unto your Majeſty and Honors, a poor ſubject perſecuted for the confeſſion of Chriſts verity: the which verity deſerveth at your hands to be maintained and defended, as the thing by the which you reign and have your Honours and authorities. Although we that be profeſſors, and through the grace of God the conſtant confeſſors of the ſame, are (as it were) the outſweepings of the world: yet (I ſay) the verity it ſelf is a thing not unworthy for your ears to hear, for your eyes to ſee, and for your hands to handle, help and ſuccour, according to that the Lord hath made you able, and placed you where you are, for the ſame purpoſe. Your Highneſſe and Honours ought to know, that there is no innocencie in words or deeds, where it is enough and ſufficeth onely to accuſe. It behoveth Kings, Queens, and all that be in authority, to know that in the adminiſtration of their kingdoms they are Gods miniſters. It behoveth them to know, that they are no Kings, but plain Tyrants, which reign not to this end, that they may ſerve and ſet forth Gods glory after true knowledge: and therefore it is required of them, that they would be wiſe, and ſuffer themſelves to be taught, to ſubmit themſelves to the Lords diſcipline, and to kiſſe their Soveraign, leſt they periſh; as all thoſe Potentates with their principalities and dominions cannot long proſper, but periſh indeed, if they and their Kingdoms be not ruled with the Scepter of God, that Difference between Kings and Tyrants.

Good warning to Q. Mary.

is with his word; which who ſo honoureth not, honoureth not God, and they that honour not the Lord, the Lord will not honour them, but bring them into contempt, and at the length take his own cauſe, which he hath moſt chiefly committed unto them to care for, into his own hands, and ſo overthrow them, and ſet up his truth gloriouſly; the people alſo periſhing with the Princes, where the word of prophecie is wanting, much more is ſuppreſſed, as it is now in this Realm of England; over which the eyes of the Lord are ſet to deſtroy it, your highneſſe, and all your honours, if in time you look not better to your office and duties herein, and not ſuffer your ſelves to be ſlaves and hangmen to Antichriſt and his Prelates, which have brought your highneſſe and honours already to let Barrabas looſe, and to hang up Chriſt: as by the grace and help of God I ſhall make apparent, if firſt it would pleaſe your excellent Majeſty, and all your honours, to take to heart Gods doctrine, which rather through the malice of the Phariſees, I mean the Biſhops and Prelates, then your conſciences, is oppreſſed; and not for our contemptible and execrable ſtate in the ſight of the world, to paſſe the leſſe of it. For it (the doctrine I mean) is higher, and of more honour and majeſty, than all the whole world. It ſtandeth invincible above all power, being not our doctrine, but the doctrine of the everliving God, and of his Chriſt, whom the father hath ordained King, to have dominion from ſea to ſea, and from the river unto the ends of the world. And truly ſo doth he, and will he reign, that he will ſhake all the whole earth with his iron and brazen power, with his golden and ſilvery brightneſſe, onely by the rod of his mouth, to ſhivers, in ſuch ſort as though they were pots of clay, according to that which the Prophets do write of the magnificence of his Kingdom. And thus much for the thing, I mean the doctrine, and your duties to hearken, to propagate, and defend the ſame.

Princes made ſlaves to Antichriſt.

Chriſt ordained to bear dominion over all.

But now will our adverſaries mainly cry out againſt us, becauſe no man may be admitted once to whiſt againſt them, that we pretend falſly the doctrine and word of God, calling us the moſt wicked contemners of it, and hereticks, ſchiſmaticks, traytors, &c. All which their ſayings, how malicious and falſe they are, though I might make report to that which is written by thoſe men whoſe works they have condemned, and all that retain any of them, publikely by proclamation: yet here will I occaſion your Majeſty and honours by this my writing, to ſee that it is far otherwiſe than they report of us. God our father for his holy names ſake, direct my pen to be his inſtrument to put into your eyes, ears and hearts, that which moſt may make to his glory, to the ſafeguard of your ſouls and bodies, and preſervation of the whole Realm, Amen.

Chriſts martyrs falſly belyed of the Prelates for hereticks, and ſchiſmaticks.

John Bradford.

To certain of his friends, N. S. and R. C.

A Letter of M. Bradford to certain perſons being at that time not thoroughly inſtructed in the doctrine of Gods Election.

I Wiſh to you, my good brethren, the ſame grace of God in Chriſt, which I wiſh and pray the father of mercies to give me for his holy names ſake, Amen.

Your Letter though I have not read my ſelf, becauſe I would not alienate my minde from conceived things, to write to others, yet I have heard the ſum of it, that it is of Gods election; wherein I will briefly write to you my faith, and how I think it good and meet for a Chriſtian man to wade in it. I beleeve, that man, made after the Image of God, did fall from that bleſſed ſtate, to the condemnation of himſelf, and all his poſterity. I beleeve that Chriſt, for man being thus fallen, did oppoſe himſelf to the juſtice of God, a Mediator, paying the ranſome and price of redemption for Adam and his whole poſterity that refuſe it not finally. I beleeve, that all that beleeve in Chriſt, I ſpeak of ſuch as be of yeers of diſcretion, are partakers of Chriſt and all his merits. I beleeve that faith, and to beleeve in Chriſt (I ſpeak not now of faith that men have by reaſon of miracles, John 2.11. Acts 8. or by reaſon of earthly commodity, Mat. 13. cuſtome and authority of men, which is commonly ſeen, the hearts of them that ſo beleeve, being not right and ſimple before God: but I ſpeak of that faith which indeed is the true faith, the juſtifying and regenerating faith) I beleeve, I ſay, that this faith and belief in Chriſt, is the work and gift of God, given to none other than to thoſe which be the children of God, that is, to thoſe whom God the Father before the beginning of the world hath predeſtinate in Chriſt unto eternall life.

True faith. Exod. 4.

“ Thus do I wade in Predeſtination, in ſuch ſort as God hath patefied and opened it. Though in God it be the firſt, yet to us it is laſt opened. And therfore I begin with Creation, from whence I come to Redemption, ſo to Juſtification, and ſo to Election. On this ſort I am ſure, that warily and wiſely a man may walk in it eaſily by the light of Gods ſpirit, in and by his word, ſeeing this faith not to be given to all men, 2 Theſſalonians 3. but to ſuch as are born of God, predeſtinate before the world was made, after the purpoſe and good will of God: which will we may not call into diſputation, but in trembling and fear ſubmit our ſelves to it, as to that which can will none otherwiſe than that which is holy, right, and good, how far ſoever otherwiſe it ſeem to the judgment of reaſon, which muſt needs be beaten down to be more carefull for Gods glory, than for mans ſalvation, which dependeth onely thereon, as all Gods children full well ſee: for they ſeek not the glory which cometh of men, but the glory which cometh of God, Jeremy 9. John 5. They know God to be a God which doth on earth, not onely mercie, but alſo judgment, which is his Juſtice and moſt Juſtice, although our fooliſh reaſon cannot ſee it. And in this knowledge they glory and rejoyce, though others through vain curioſity, grudge and murmur thereagainſt. Thus briefly I have ſent you my minde and meaning concerning this matter. Hereafter you ſhall have (I think) your Letter particularly anſwered by Maſter Philpot; as alſo if I have time, and ſo you require it, I will do.

“ M. B. for the certainty of this faith, ſearch your hearts. If you have it, praiſe the Lord: for you are happy, and therefore cannot finally periſh: for then happineſſe were not happineſſe, if it could be loſt. When you fall, the Lord will put under his hand, that you ſhall not lye ſtill. But if ye feel not this faith, then know that Predeſtination is too high a matter for you to be diſputers of, untill you have been better ſcholers in the ſchoolhouſe of repentance and juſtification, which is the Grammer ſchool, wherein we muſt be converſant and learned before we go to the Univerſity of Gods moſt holy Predeſtination and providence. Of this matter he writeth more at large in the book of Letters of the Martyrs, Fol. 37

John Bradford.

Notes upon the ſame Epiſtle, and to the matter of Election appertaining.

Notes to this Epiſtle added.

AS touching the doctrine of Election (whereof this Letter of M. Bradford, and many other his Letters mo do much intreat) three things muſt be conſidered.

1. Firſt, what Gods election is, and what is the cauſe thereof.
2. Secondly, how Gods election proceedeth in working our ſalvation.
3. Thirdly, to whom Gods election pertaineth, and how a man may be certain thereof.

Between Predeſtination and Election, this difference there is. Predeſtination is as well to the reprobate, as to the elect. Election pertaineth only to them that be ſaved.

Difference between Predeſtination and Election.

Predeſtination, in that it reſpecteth the reprobate, is called Reprobation: in that it reſpecteth the ſaved, is called Election, and is thus defined.

Predeſtination is the eternal decreement of God, purpoſed before in himſelf, what ſhall befall on all men, either to ſalvation or damnation.

Definition of predeſtination. Election defined.

Election is the free mercie and grace of God in his own will, through faith in Chriſt his Son, chooſing and preferring to life ſuch as pleaſeth him.

The parts of the definition examined.

In this definition of Election, firſt goeth before (the mercie and grace of God) as the cauſes thereof, whereby are excluded all the works of the Law, and merits of deſerving, whether they go before faith, or come after. So was Jacob choſen, and Eſau refuſed, before either of them began to work, &c.

Mercie and grace.

Free mercie and grace.

Secondly, in that this mercie and grace of God in this definition is ſaid to be (free) thereby is to be noted the proceeding and working of God not to be bounded to any ordinary place, or to any ſucceſſion of chair, nor to ſtate and dignity of perſon, nor to worthineſſe of blood, &c. but all goeth by the meer will of his own purpoſe; as it is written, Spiritus ubi vult, ſpirat, &c. And thus was the outward race and ſtock of Abraham after the fleſh refuſed (which ſeemed to have the preeminence) and another ſeed after the ſpirit raiſed up to Abraham of the ſtones, that is, of the Gentiles. So was the outward Temple of Jeruſalem and chair of Moſes, which ſeemed to be of price, forſaken, and Gods chair advanced in other nations. So was tall Saul refuſed, and little David accepted: the rich, the proud, the wiſe of this world rejected, and the word of ſalvation daily opened to the poor and miſerable abjects; the high mountains caſt under, and the low valleys exalted, &c.

The free mercie and grace of God in his own will.

Rom. 9.

Thirdly, where it is added (in his own will) by this falleth down the free will and purpoſe of man, with all his actions, counſels, and ſtrength of nature; according as it is written, Non eſt volentis, neque currentis, ſed miſerentis Dei, &c. i. It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercie. So we ſee how Iſrael ran long, and yet got nothing. The Gentiles unneth began to ſet out, and yet got the game. So they which came at the firſt hour did labour more, and yet they which came laſt, were rewarded with the firſt, Matthew 20. The working will of the Phariſee ſeemed better, but yet the Lords will was rather to juſtifie the Publican, Luke 18. The elder ſon had a better will to tarry by his father, and ſo did indeed: and yet the fat Calf was given to the yonger ſon that ran away, Luke the 15. Whereby we have to underſtand, how the matter goeth, not by the will of man, but by the will of God, as it pleaſeth him to accept, according as it is written, Non ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri, ſed ex Deo nati ſunt, &c. i. Which are born, not of the will of the fleſh, nor yet of the will of man, but of God. Furthermore, as all then goeth by the will of God onely, and not by the will of man: ſo again here is to be noted, that this will of God never goeth without faith in Chriſt Jeſus his Son.

Matth. 20.

Luke 18.

Luke 15.

John 1.

Gods mercy in ſaving the elect not excludeth the condition of faith in Chriſt.

And therefore fourthly is this clauſe added in the definition, through faith in Chriſt his Son. Which faith in Chriſt to us-ward maketh all together. For firſt, it certifieth us of Gods election: as this Epiſtle of Maſter Bradford doth well expreſſe. For whoſoever will be certain of election in God, let him firſt begin with his faith in Chriſt: which if he finde in him to ſtand firm, he may be ſure, and nothing doubt, but that he is one of the number of Gods elect. Secondly, the ſaid faith, and nothing elſe, is the onely condition and means whereupon Gods mercie, grace, election, vocation, and all Gods promiſes to ſalvation do ſtay, according to the words of Saint Paul, Si permanſeritis in fide, &c. i. If ye abide in the faith, Coloſſ. 1. Thirdly, this faith alſo is the immediate and next cauſe of our juſtification ſimply, without any other condition annexed. For as the mercie of God, his grace, election, vocation, and other precedent cauſes do ſave and juſtifie us upon condition, If we beleeve in Chriſt: ſo this faith onely in Chriſt without condition is the next and immediate cauſe, which by Gods promiſe worketh our juſtification; according as it is written, Crede in Dominum Ieſum, & ſalvus eris, tu & domus tua. i. Beleeve in the Lord Jeſus, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, thou and thy whole houſe, Act. 16. And thus much touching the definition of election, with the cauſes thereof declared. Which you ſee now to be no merits, nor works of man, whether they go before or come after faith, but onely the meer mercie of God through faith. For like as all they that be born of Adam, do taſte of his malediction, though they taſted not his apple: ſo all they that be born of Chriſt, (which is by faith) take part of the obedience of Chriſt, although they never did that obedience themſelves, which was in him, Rom. 5.

The free mercy and grace of God in his own good will through faith in Chriſt his ſon our Lord.

Faith is the only condition whereby Gods grace doth ſave us.

Acts 16.

Faith onely is the immediate cauſe of our juſtifying.

The ſecond conſideration.

Now to the ſecond conſideration; let us ſee likewiſe, how, and in what order this election of God proceedeth in chooſing and electing them which he ordaineth to ſalvation; which order is this. In them that be choſen to life, firſt Gods mercie and free grace bringeth forth election; election worketh vocation, or Gods holy calling; which vocation, through hearing, bringeth knowledge and faith of Chriſt. Faith through promiſe, obtaineth juſtification, juſtification through hope, waiteth for glorification.

Grace,
Election,
Vocation,
Faith,
Juſtification,
Glorification.

Election is before time. Vocation and faith cometh in time. Juſtification and glorification is without end.

Election, depending upon Gods free grace and will, excludeth all mans will, blinde fortune, chance and all peradventures.

Mans free will,
Blinde fortune.
Mans wiſdom,
Mans learning
Mans merits.
Works of the law excluded from the cauſes of our ſalvation in Chriſt.

Vocation, ſtanding upon Gods election, excludeth all mans wiſedom, cunning, learning, intention, power and preſumption.

Faith in Chriſt, proceeding by the gift of the holy Ghoſt, and freely juſtifying man by Gods promiſe, excludeth all other merits of men, all condition of deſerving, and all works of the Law, both Gods law and mans law, with all other outward means whatſoever.

Juſtification, coming freely by faith, ſtandeth ſure by promiſe, without doubt, fear, or wavering in this life.

Glorification, pertaining only to the life to come, by hope is looked for.

Grace and mercie preventeth.

Election ordaineth.

Vocation prepareth and receiveth the Word, whereby cometh faith.

Faith juſtifieth.

Juſtification bringeth glory.

Election is the immediate and next cauſe of vocation.

Vocation (which is the working of Gods ſpirit by the Word) is the immediate and next cauſe of faith.

Faith is the immediate and next cauſe of juſtification.

Papiſts confound the doctrine of election.

And this order and connexion of cauſes is diligently to be obſerved, becauſe of the Papiſts, which have miſerably confounded and inverted this Doctrine, thus teaching, that almighty God ſo far forth as he fore-ſeeth mans merits before to come, ſo doth he diſpenſe his election. Dominus prout cujuſque merita fore prævidet, ita diſpenſat electionis gratiam. And again, Nullis præcedentibus meritis Dominum rependere electionis gratiam, futuris tamen concedere: That is, That the Lord recompenceth the grace of election, not to any merits preceding; but yet granteth the ſame to the merits which follow: As though we had our election by our holineſſe that followeth after, and not rather have our holineſſe by Gods election going before.

Election.

But we, following the Scripture, ſay otherwiſe, that the only cauſe of Gods election, is his own free mercie: and the onely cauſe of our juſtification is our faith in Chriſt, and nothing elſe. As for example: firſt concerning election, if the queſtion be asked, Why was Abraham choſen, and not Nachor? Why was Jacob choſen, not Eſau? Why was Moſes elected, and Pharaoh hardned? Why David accepted, and Saul refuſed? Why few be choſen, and the moſt forſaken? It cannot be anſwered otherwiſe but thus; Becauſe it was ſo the good will of God.

That vocation he meaneth here which is after purpoſe.

In like manner touching vocation, and alſo faith, if the queſtion be asked, Why this vocation and gift of faith was given to Cornelius the Gentile, and not to Tertullus the Jew? Why to the poor, to the babes, and little ones of this world (of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh, I thank thee Father, which haſt hid this from the wiſe, &c. Matth. 11.) Why to the unwiſe, the ſimple abjects and outcaſts in this world? (Of whom ſpeaketh Saint Paul, 1 Corinthians 1. Ye ſee your calling, my brethren, how not many of you, &c.) Why to the ſinners, and not to the juſt? Why the beggers by the high-wayes were called, and the bidden gheſts excluded? We can go to no other cauſe, but to Gods purpoſe and election, and ſay with Chriſt our Saviour; Quia pater ſic complacitum eſt ante te. i. Yea father, for ſo it ſeemeth good in thy ſight, Luke 10.

Vocation bringeth faith.

Juſtification by faith only.

And ſo for Juſtification likewiſe, if the queſtion be asked, Why the Publican was juſtified, and not the Phariſee? Luke 18. Why Mary the ſinner, and not Simon the inviter? Luke 11. Why Harlots and Publicans go before the Scribes and Phariſees in the Kingdom? Matthew 21. Why the ſon of the free-woman was received, and the bond-womans ſon being his elder rejected? Geneſis 21. Why Iſrael, which ſo long ſought for righteouſneſſe, found it not: and the Gentiles, which ſought not for it, found it? Romans 9. We have no other cauſe hereof to render, but to ſay with Saint Paul, Becauſe they ſought for it by works of the law, and not by faith: which faith, as it cometh not by mans will (as the Papiſt falſly pretendeth) but onely by the election and free gift of God; ſo it is onely the immediate cauſe whereunto the promiſe of our ſalvation is annexed, according as we read; And therefore of faith is the inheritance given, as after grace, that the promiſe might ſtand ſure to every ſeed, Romans 4. Item, in the ſame Chapter, Faith, beleeving in him which juſtifieth the wicked, is imputed to righteouſneſſe.

How faith and election are linked together in the act of juſtifying.

And thus concerning the cauſes of our ſalvation, ye ſee how faith in Chriſt, onely and immediately, without any condition doth juſtifie us, being ſo linked with Gods mercie and election, that whereſoever election goeth before, there faith in Chriſt muſt needs follow after. And again, whoſoever beleeveth in Chriſt Jeſus, through the vocation of God, he muſt needs be partaker of Gods election.

The third conſideration. Election known to God ſimply.

Election known to man by means.

Whereupon reſulteth now the third note or conſideration; which is, to conſider whether a man in this life may be certain of his election. To anſwer to which queſtion, this firſt is to be underſtood; that although our election and vocation ſimply indeed be known to God onely in himſelf, à priore: yet notwithſtanding it may be known to every particular faithfull man, à poſteriore, that is, by means, which means is faith in Chriſt Jeſus crucified. Forſomuch as by faith in Chriſt a man is juſtified, and thereby made the childe of ſalvation, reaſon muſt needs lead the ſame to be then the childe of election, choſen of God unto everlaſting life. For how can a man be ſaved, but by conſequence it followeth, that he muſt alſo be elected?

Faith is the means whereby we be certified of our election.

And therefore of Election it is truly ſaid; De electione judicandum eſt à poſteriore; that is to ſay, we muſt judge of Election, by that which cometh after, that is, by our faith and belief in Chriſt: which faith, although in time it followeth after Election, yet this is the proper and immediate cauſe aſſigned by the Scripture, which not onely juſtifieth us, but alſo certifieth us of this election of God.

De electione judicandum eſt à poſteriore.

Whereunto likewiſe well agreeth this preſent Letter of Maſter Bradford, wherein he ſaith; Election, albeit in God it be the firſt, yet to us it is the laſt opened. And therefore beginning firſt (ſaith he) with creation, I come from thence to the redemption and juſtification by faith, and ſo to election. Not that faith is the cauſe efficient of election, being rather the effect thereof, but is to us the cauſe certificatory, or the cauſe of our certification, whereby we are brought to the feeling and knowledge of our election in Chriſt. For albeit that election firſt be certain in the knowledge of God: yet in our knowledge, faith onely that we have in Chriſt, is the thing that giveth to us our certificate and comfort of this election.

Election firſt known to God, and laſt opened to man.

Wherefore, whoſoever deſireth to be aſſured that he is one of the elect number of God, let him not climb up to heaven to know, but let him deſcend into himſelf, and there ſearch his faith in Chriſt the Son of God: which if he finde in him not faigned, by the working of Gods holy ſpirit accordingly; thereupon let him ſtay, and ſo wrap himſelf wholly both body and ſoul under Gods generall promiſe, and cumber his head with no further ſpeculations; knowing this, that whoſoever beleeveth in him, ſhall not periſh, John 3. ſhall not be confounded, Romans 9. ſhall not ſee death, John 8. ſhall not enter into judgement, John 5. ſhall have everlaſting life, John 37. ſhall be ſaved, Matthew 28. Acts 16. ſhall have remiſſion of all his ſins, Acts 10. ſhall be juſtified, Romans 3. Galatians 2. ſhall have floods flowing out of him of water of life, John 7. ſhall never dye, John 11. ſhall be raiſed in the laſt day, John 6. ſhall finde reſt to his ſoul, and ſhall be refreſhed, Matthew 11.

Every man to ſtay himſelf upon Gods generall promiſe.

Now then forſomuch as we ſee faith to be the ground, whereupon dependeth the whole condition of our juſtifying, let us diſcuſſe in like maner what is this faith whereof the Scripture ſo much ſpeaketh, for the more plain underſtanding of the ſimple. For many kindes there be of faith: as a man may beleeve every thing that is true, yet not every truth doth ſave, neither doth the beleeving of every truth juſtifie a man. He that beleeveth that God created all things of nought, beleeveth truly. He that beleeveth that God is a juſt God, that he is omnipotent, that he is mercifull, that he is true of promiſe, beleeveth well, and holdeth the truth. So he that beleeveth that God hath his election from the beginning, and that he alſo is one of the ſame elect and predeſtinate, hath a good belief, and thinketh well: but yet this belief alone, except it be ſeaſoned with another thing, will not ſerve to ſalvation: as it availed not the old Jews, which ſo thought of themſelves, and yet think to this day to be only Gods elect people.

What faith is. Divers kindes of faith. Every truth hath his faith, but every truth juſtifieth not: no more doth every faith.

Onely the faith which availeth to ſalvation is that, whoſe object is the body and paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt crucified. So that in the act of juſtifying, Faith the action, Chriſt the object of faith.

ing, theſe two, Faith and Chriſt, have a mutuall relation, and muſt always concur together, Faith as the action which apprehendeth; Chriſt as the object which is apprehended.

Faith and Chriſt correlatives.

For neither doth the paſſion of Chriſt ſave without faith, neither doth faith help, except it be in Chriſt: as we ſee the body of man ſuſtained by bread and drink, not except the ſame be received and conveyed into the ſtomack: and yet neither doth the receiving of every thing ſuſtain mans body, except it be meat and drink, which have power to give nouriſhment. In like ſort it is with Faith: for neither doth the beleeving of every thing ſave, but only Faith in the bloud of Chriſt: neither again doth the ſame bloud of Chriſt profit us, except by faith it be received. And as the ſun being the cauſe of all light, ſhineth not but to them only which have eies to ſee: nor yet to them neither unleſſe they will open their eyes to receive the light: ſo the paſſion of Chriſt is the efficient cauſe of ſalvation, but faith is the condition whereby the ſaid paſſion is to us effectuall.

Chriſt without faith, ſaveth not. Faith without Chriſt helpeth not.

And that is the cauſe why we ſay with the Scripture, that faith only juſtifieth us, not excluding thereby all other extern cauſes that go before faith, as grace, mercy, election, vocation, the death of Chriſt, &c. all which be extern cauſes, working our ſalvation through faith. But when we ſay that faith only juſtifieth us, the meaning thereof is this; that of all internall actions, motions, or operations in man, given to him of God, there is none other that contenteth and pleaſeth God, or ſtandeth before his judgement, or can help any thing to the juſtifying of man before him, but only this one action of Faith in Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God.

Grace, election, vocation. Chriſts death, cauſes extern of our ſalvation. Faith the onely intern cauſe of mans ſalvation. Faith is an action in man, but not of man.

For although the action of praying, faſting, alms, patience, charity, repentance, the fear and love of God be high gifts in man, and not of man, given of God to man, yet be none of all theſe actions in man imputed of God to ſalvation, but only this one action of faith in man upon Chriſt Jeſus the Son of God. Not that the action it ſelf of beleeving, as it is a quality in man, doth ſo deſerve, but becauſe it taketh that dignity of the object. For as I ſaid, the act of juſtifying faith, as it is an action in man, is not to be conſidered alone, but muſt ever go with his object, and taketh his vertue thereof. Like as the looking up of the old Iſraelites did not of it ſelf procure any health unto them, but the promiſe made in the object, which was the brazen Serpent, whereupon they looked, gave them health by their looking up. Even ſo after like ſort are we ſaved by faith and ſpirituall looking up to the body of Chriſt crucified. Which faith to define is this.

Vertues and works of charity, though they be good gifts of God in man, yet they ſerve not to juſtification. Faith taketh his dignity of his object. Looking up to the brazen ſerpent, and beleeving upon the body of Chriſt compared.

To beleeve Jeſus Chriſt to be the Sonne of the living God, ſent into this world, by his death to ſatisfie for our ſins, and ſo to receive the ſame.

And thus much touching election and faith; with the order and explication of the cauſes neceſſary to be conſidered in our ſalvation, whereby may appear how farre the pretenſed Catholicks do ſwerve from the right minde of the Scriptures. For where the Scriptures in declaring the cauſes of ſalvation, do ſend us only to faith, as the only condition whereby theſe cauſes have their working, theſe Catholikes do quite leave out faith, and in ſtead thereof place in other conditions of doings, merits, will-works, pardons, maſſes, and eſpecially auricular confeſſions, with penance and ſatisfaction for our ſins, &c.

The errour of the Papiſts perverting the minde of Gods teſtament; how, and wherein.

And beſides theſe Letters above ſpecified of M. John Bradford, there hath come to our hands certain other Letters of his, not long ago, ſent by a certain old friend of the ſaid John Bradford unto us. Which Letters being written of him in former times before his trouble, as they have not been yet printed nor ſeen abroad, ſo I thought it not amiſſe to communicate the ſame to the Chriſtian Reader, for the worthineſſe of the matter, and the goodneſſe of the man, which may redound, I truſt, to no ſmall fruit to him, that with godly eyes ſhall adviſe the ſame.

A Letter of Maſter Bradford, to father Travers, Miniſter of Blackley.

The abundant grace and rich mercie of God in Chriſt our onely Saviour and high Biſhop, be increaſed in your heart, through the lively worker of all goodneſſe, the holy ſpirit, untill the day of the Lord, &c.

I have received your two Letter (good Father Travers) ſithence that I did write unto you, whereof though honeſty willeth to make an excuſe, yet truth biddeth me otherwiſe, and ſaith, it is better with ſhame to confeſſe the fault (for therin is, as a man might ſay, half a deſerving of pardon) than without ſhame to lye. I might have written unto you twice (notwithſtanding indeed ſome buſineſſe wherein I have ſomething been occupied) but yet I have not. Now the cauſe is, becauſe I would not. And why would I not? but becauſe I could not, I mean, becauſe my canning is taken away by ſin, for my ſins do forbid goodneſſe unto me. Indeed if my ſinning were of infirmity, there were good hope of recovery of that which I have loſt: But ſeeing, both willing and knowing I have too much yeelded, and yet do yeeld to my infirmities, juſtly I do deſerve, that becauſe I have caſt away, and rejected the word of the Lord behinde my back, the Lord ſhould reject me. And becauſe I would not have bleſſing, I am worthy (as David ſaith) that it be taken away from me. I have now at length experience, that to bring a man forth of Gods favour, is ſooner ſeen when a man hath received all things abundantly, than when need or the croſſe pincheth. Afore it pleaſed God to work the reſtitution (you know what I mean) and afore it pleaſed God to provide for me as he hath done, ſo that I can ſay in nothing where any want is, as pertaining to my body: I was another maner of man, than now I am, and yet Gods deſerts have otherwiſe bounden me: but the Scripture is true, I have advanced my children, and nouriſhed them, but they have contemned me, I have fed them that they were fat and groſſe, and they ſpurned againſt me. Perchance you will ask me wherein? Oh father Travers, I warrant you, this is my ſtile, in carnall, and not in ſpirituall writing, doth ſomething ſhew unto you; but as for it, in compariſon of other things is nothing. For where the life of man is ſuch, that either it paireth or amendeth, as Paul ſaith, The outward man is corrupted day by day, and therefore except the inward man be renewed, the ſhoe goeth awry, every building in Chriſt doth grow to a holy Temple, as the wicked on the contrary part ſhall proceed to worſer, 2 Timot. 3. I have made a change far otherwiſe in going back, than I think by Letters I can perſwade you: Wherein will you ſay? For the firſt, ſecond, and third, and to be brief, in all things; As for an example, Gods true fear is flown away from me, love to my brethren is exiled from me, faith is utterly taken away. In ſtead whereof is diſtruſt and doubtfulneſſe bearing rule, contempt of Gods honour, and of my brethren reigning, and in ſtead of true fear, an imagined fear, according to my brain holding the principality. For I extenuate ſin, and I do not conſider that in ſin, ſin, which a Chriſtian ought to conſider; that ſin being not forgiven, is ſuch a thing for the which God caſteth his creature away, as examples not onely of Saul, of Judas, of the Iſraelites (which were beloved indeed, and yet for ſin are rejected) but alſo of others, on whom lately for my warning God hath ſhewed the ſame, do admoniſh me. But it is but my pen which writes this: for the wicked, ſaith Salomon, when they come into the depth of their ſins, then they grow in ſecurity. I am I cannot tell what: I fear, but it is but blindely, or elſe would I awake otherwiſe than I do, I fear me, I ſay, that I am intangled of the Devill, after his deſire. Pray for me, that the Lord would give me repentance, that I may eſcape out of his ſnares. Alas, the ſpirit of prayer, which before I have felt plentifully, is taken clean away from me. The Lord be mercifull unto me. I am ſold under ſin, I am the bond-ſlave of ſin: for whom I obey, his ſervant I am. I am aſhamed to ſpeak of it, no I ſhame not at all: for I have forgot to bluſh, I have given over to weep. And truly I obey, I obey I ſay mine own concupiſcences, namely in eating, in drinking, in jangling and idleneſſe, I will not ſpeak of vain-glory, envie, diſdain, hypocriſie, deſire of eſtimation, ſelf-love, and who can tell all? Is this the reward thou rendereſt to God, O Bradford? It is true, yea too true, thou knoweſt it, O Lord, for thy mercies ſake pardon me. In your Letters you touch me home, how that there is no mans heart, but that conſidering the ingratitude of this world, this belly-cheer (wherein you even take me by the noſe) &c. his eyes would tumble out great guſhes of tears. The Lord be praiſed which worketh ſo in you, for it is with me as with them of whom you complain. Indeed it may be ſo again, but oh it is very unlikely: for mine enemies are become old, and are made by cuſtome more than familiar, for they are as it were converted into nature in me. Yet I am not grieved therefore, although I cannot perſwade my ſelf that God will help me. O Lord be mercifull unto me for thy Chriſts ſake. This day I received the Lords Supper, but how I have welcomed him, this night (which I have ſpent in laſciviouſneſſe, in wantonneſſe, and in prodigality, obeying my fleſh and belly) doth ſo declare, that what to ſay, or write any more, I know not, ſleep doth aggravate mine eyes, and to pray I am altogether unapt. All this is come through the occaſion of making this bringer a ſupper in my chamber, the Lord pardon me, I truſt no more to be ſo far overſeen. But this I write, not that the anger of God, which I have deſerved, ſo ſeareth me, thou knoweſt it O Lord. But of this perchance too much.

Deut. 32.

Prov. 18.

2 Tim. 1.

For Gods ſake pray for me, good Father Travers, and write unto me as you may by your weakneſſe, your Letters do me good. By this which I have now written, you may conſider more, touch me therefore home in your Letters, and the Lord, I truſt, ſhall and will reward you. If God lend me life, of which I am moſt unworthy, I will more trouble you with my Letters than I have done; but bear with me, I do it not out of any evill will, the Lord I take to judge, there is none whoſe company and talk I more deſire than yours, I ſpeak it before God. Prove my mothers minde how ſhe can bear it, if when I ſhall come down, I ſhall ſhew my ſelf another man outwardly, but alas fainedly, than before I have done. Marry when my coming will be I know not. Indeed two things move me ſore, the one for my mothers cauſe, concerning her better inſtruction, if the Lord would thereto uſe me his inſtrument, the other is to talk with you, and eftſoons to trouble you, as I have hitherto ever done, but alwayes to my profit. For Gods ſake pray for me, for I had never ſo much need. This Sunday at night, following S. Andrews day, at Pembroke Hall.

The moſt miſerable, hard-hearted, unthankfull ſinner.
John Bradford.

Another Letter of John Bradford to Sir Thomas Hall, and Father Travers of Blackley.

THe grace of God our moſt mercifull Father, keep your minde and ſoul in Chriſt Jeſus, who alone is our full ſufficient Saviour, for in him we be complete, being made through his death and one onely oblation made and offered by himſelf upon the Croſſe, the children of God, and fellow heirs with him of the celeſtiall Kingdom, which is the free gift of God, and cometh not of merits, but of the meer grace of God, given to none that putteth any maner of hope or truſt in any other thing viſible or inviſible, than in that oblation of ſweet ſavour which Chriſt himſelf did offer upon good Friday (as we call it) which oblation is alway recent and new in the ſight of God the Father, and maketh interceſſion for us; us I mean, which think that onely ſacrifice then offered, to be ſufficient, as it is, hath been, and ever ſhall be for all the faithfull, by the which ſacrifice (if we beleeve) we have free pardon of all our ſins. To him therefore which was both the offerer, and the offering, be all honour and praiſe, with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, bleſſed for ever, Amen.

Sir Thomas, the occaſion of this my long ſilence, mine old friend John Travers, ſhall declare unto you, upon the knowledge whereof I doubt not of your pardon. I have ſent unto you an Engliſh and Latine Teſtament, both in one print and volume, the which, though it be not ſo beautifull without as I could have ſent you, yet no leſſe beautifull within, and more I think for your profit, and better for your eyes, your eyes I mean of the body. For undoubtedly it giveth light unto the ſoul, if ſhe be not dead. Whereof take this for an argument, and a true proof. If your ſoul be not delighted in it, if your ſoul do not hunger for it (I mean not the book, but the Doctrine in the book) ſurely your ſoul is ſore ſick, for as the body abhorring meat is not well, even ſo muſt the ſoul be, for other meat hath ſhe none. Chriſt, whom you muſt beleeve afore all men, affirmeth this to be true in the 4. of Matthew. Not onely in bread, but in every word of God the ſoul doth live. Mark well, he ſaith not, one or two words, as an Epiſtle, or a Goſpel; but he ſaith, every word. Take heed, beleeve Chriſt better than any man, be he never ſo holy. For he that is of God, (John 8.) heareth the word of God. Will you have a more plain badge, whether you have the elect Childe of God or no, then this Text: Chriſt ſaith, He that is of God, heareth the word of God: but other word of God have we none, than in the Canon of the Bible: and all things written therein, are written for our learning (ſaith S. Paul) whereby he proveth, ſeeing that it is a learning, yea our learning, that we muſt learn it. Therefore woe be to all them which either perſwade men, that there is other doctrine of like authority, or that diſſwade men from imbracing this word, this word of God, or that think this word, eſpecially the new Teſtament, is not above all other to be loved, to be read, to be chewed. This is the precious ſtone, which in the Goſpel Chriſt ſaith, when a man hath found, he ſelleth all that ever he hath, and buyeth it. Mark now how neceſſary and precious Chriſt maketh that which great learned men (nay the Devils but no men) think not neceſſary, God help them. Chriſt bade his Diſciples ſell their coats, and buy a ſword: which is none other thing then the Word of God: for ſo S. Paul calleth it, the ſword of the ſpirit. Nay ſay our learned men, (I lie, they have ſaid ſo, now they are aſhamed) fetch fire and burn it.

This I ſay Sir Thomas, to the intent no ungodly hypocriſie ſhould perſwade or diſſwade you from reading the holy Word of God, the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. Follow you Saint Pauls leſſon: Attend reading, and let the Word of God dwell in you. How much? Plentifully, ſaith he. And to what end? To feed the flock of Chriſt: even as much as in you is, ſaith Peter, not once a yeer or once a quarter as a Strawbery, but ſo much as in you is. This Word of God trieth all doctrine: for we ought to have our conſcience charged with nothing as touching religion, except the Word of God in the Canon of the Bible ſet it out, I mean not only in allegories, but even in plain words. For no other foundation can any man lay, beſides that which is laid. Saint Paul ſaith, the ground-work is laid already. Even ſo ſaith he to the Epheſians; We be his Workmanſhip to do good works, which God hath created that we ſhould walk in them. He ſaith they were not to be made, but they are made already. What ſhall we think then of ſuch works as mans wit hath founded, which yet ſeem moſt holy? Let Gods Word be Judge. Read the ſame diligently and reverently with prayer (I mean not Latine ſervice not underſtood, but with true hearty prayer) and mark what the Law requireth, even that which we cannot give, the whole heart, and more if it were poſſible. But to this end, that we ſeeing our abominable uncleanneſſe and inabilitie, might deſpair in our ſelves, trembling at the juſtice of God, and his anger which we continually procure, and ſo amplect Chriſt, in whom God the Father is well pleaſed. Which Chriſt is the end of the Law to juſtifie all that beleeve, and continue not in their Popiſh ignorance, juſtifying themſelves; and treading Chriſts bloud under their feet, denying the Lord that bought them. All ſuch, be they never ſo well learned, never ſo holy, be nothing but hypocrites, and plain Antichriſts, which may not abide the ſword of Gods mouth. For the trumpets of the army (I mean ſtill Gods Word) when they blow, the high walls of Jericho, the figure of hypocriſie falleth down. Embrace therfore Gods holy Word, and be not only a reader, but a doer: for your calling requireth you to be apt to teach ſuch proud hypocriticall arrogant bablers, as I am now (which if I may uſe this terme, defile Gods Word) God forgive me, and pray you for me, and give God thanks for me, that ſpareth me thus Lucifer-like, not of a true zeale, but of a fooliſh braging, which prate of Gods holy Word. I wote not what I do to confeſſe it. So it is. I have ſent to you other Books which I pray you reade. I have written your name in them. The holy Ghoſt keep you with your brother George, his wife, and children, and with your Brother James, &c. Sir Laurence, &c. This 20. of March.

A very painted Hypocrite,
John Bradford. Yours
in Chriſt for ever.

Pray for me, pray for me, give God thanks for me, and take John Traves help to read this Letter written in haſte.

If any thing but good be chanced to John Traves (which God forbid) I pray you burn my Letters out of hand.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford, to Father Traves.

Gratia, miſericordia, & pax à Deo patre noſtro, & Domino Ieſu Chriſto Domino noſtro.

IF mine heart were not altogether adamantine, your kinde Letters to me unkinde miſer would cauſe me from the bottome of the ſame, to confeſſe mine ingratitude towards you upon your behalf anempſt me ſo much deſerved: but as I am to do, ſo ſhew I my ſelf to write, and as I am unable in the one, ſo am I fooliſh in the other; in all thoſe unkindneſſes, rudeneſſe, &c. whereof you accuſe your ſelf, I am inforced to acknowledge my ſelf moſt juſtly condemned, not ſo fainedly by me confeſſed, as moſt truly by you experienced. In your Letters as in a glaſſe I may learn, by you in dejecting your ſelf, to eſpy my nakedneſſe, which tofore I thought cloathed Duplici veſtitu, now only but with fig leaves hypocritiſhly guilded, of which dejection wrought in you by the holy Ghoſt, be not proud: For what have you that you have not received? but be thankfull to the Lord, not only therefore, but alſo for thoſe ſurges which you feel now through the cares accompanying marriage, now through education and bringing up of your children, and family, now through that croſſe of the common accuſtomed trade of living: for Per multas tribulationes oportet ingredi regnum Dei: Through many tribulations we muſt enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, yea they be the cogniſances of Gods election, the letter Thau, the inſtruments which work ſuſpiria æternæ vitæ, and therefore to be imbraced. Beleeve me it is the moſt excellent gift of God, a man to deject and humble himſelf, and to feel the croſſes of Chriſt as croſſes. But I moſt hypocriticall wretch, not worthy that this earth ſhould bear me, am even agoing to bed with Jeſabel, and ſuch as commit fornication with her, which is afflictio maxima. O Lord help me and deliver me for Jeſus ſake, anoint mine eyes with oyntment that I may ſee. O give me not over into a leude minde and reprobate ſenſe, but awake my ſleeping ſoul that Chriſt may ſhine in me. You know the croſſe, the fatherly croſſe, the loving Lord hath laid upon me: but I, but I am little or nothing moved therewith, I work therein (yet not I but Gods Spirit) not of a repentant faithfull minde, but (I cannot tell how) of a ſloathfull blinde wretchleſſe intent. O Lord forgive me for ſaying ſo, (it is thy gift) forgive me mine unthankfulneſſe for Jeſus ſake, and as herein I blaſphemed and diſhoneſted thy holy name, ſo do thou by thy holy Spirit glorifie by me the ſame. So be it, So be it.

Sithence my coming to London, I was with M. Latimer, whoſe counſell is as you ſhall hear, which I purpoſe by Gods grace to obey (if it be thy will, O Lord, fiat.) He willed me (as I have done) to write to my Maſter who is in the Country, and to ſhew him, that if within a certain time which I appointed, 14. dayes, he do not go about to make reſtitution, that I will ſubmit my ſelf to my Lord Protector, and the Kings Majeſties Councell to confeſſe the fault, and aske pardon. This life is uncertain and frail, and when time is, it muſt be deferred. And what ſhould it profit me to winne the whole world, and to loſe mine own ſoul? If, as I juſtly have deſerved, I be put to death for it, Gods will be done. At the leaſt, ſlander, reproach, rebuke, loſſe of worldly friends, loſſe of living, &c. ſhall enſue. What then? Lord thy will be done, thine I am; if death come, welcome be it, if ſlander, &c. Even as thou wilt Lord, So be it. Only grant me a penitent loving obedient heart, and of meer love to go forwards herein, and not to ſhrink, to ſtand and not to fall, that thy name only be praiſed herein. Amen. Pray, pray for me, cry for me, and when you ſhall hear any thing, comfort my mother, to whom for that this bringer hath not given me an houres warning of his departure, I have not only written nothing, but alſo have thus pratled to you, who (as no man elſe would) I think will bear with me. For as God knoweth (to whoſe grace I commit you and your bed-fellow, with all your children and family) the ſhortneſſe of time, and this ſaid bringers importance, is only the let I neither ſend you ſpectacles, the price of the Paraphraſes, nor thanks for your cheeſe, as by the next that cometh I will, God willing, ſend the premiſſes to you, and a godly Teſtament for Sir Thomas Hall, which is at the binding. But be not acknown that I have now written to you, for ſo I have prayed this bringer. God be with us, and pray for me, and abhorre not my rude ſcribing, which if it were as well written as it is meant, would deſerve pardon. Thus make I an end, imputing to the haſtineſſe of this bringer all blame, which you may lay unto me.

From the Temple, this Sunday, immediately after M. Latimers famous Sermon, which this bringer, as he ſaith, did hear.

By your poореſt friend,
Iohn Bradford.

It ſhall not be long, God willing, but you ſhall both have and hear from me. Keep with you Melancthons Common places, for I have another.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with increaſe of all manner godly knowledge and living, be with you and all your houſhold, now, and ever, Amen.

To excuſe this my long ſilence, within five or ſixe dayes after my (like fooliſh) Letters written to you by John Moſſe; it pleaſed God to ſend my Maſter hither to London (whom as I lately tofore had advertiſed by Letters) I moved (you know wherein) and prayed him to diſcharge the ſame, or elſe I would ſubmit my ſelf, &c. Whereunto he anſwered, that if the Books would declare it, he would ſatisfie, &c. The Books I ſhewed, whereupon he promiſed as much as I could aske. But being herein ſomething more moved then he had cauſe (God be praiſed therefore, which of his meer good pleaſure wrought it) at times as I could, I deſired to know how and in what time he would diſcharge us both. He thinking me to be over curious herein, was not therewith contented, and hearing me to alledge the uncertainty of time, and the fear of Gods juſtice (which O gracious Lord grant me to feel indeed as much as thou knoweſt good for me) he anſwered me to be ſcrupulous, and of a ſuperſtitious conſcience (for animalis homo non percipit ea quæ ſunt Dei :) and plainly ſaid further, that I ſhould not know, nor by theſe words have his head ſo under my girdle. And when I ſhewed him that (God witneſſed with me) I went about no ſuch thing: He ſaid, that there was no godly conſcience, ſeeing he promiſed afore the face of God to diſcharge me, and to pay the thing, but it ought ſo to be quieted. And thus at divers and ſundry times, moving eftſoons to know of him the way and time of diſcharging the debt, and having none other anſwers then tofore, I doubting worldly wiſedome, which uſeth delayes, to raign in him with this Mammon (the which O mercifull God eradicate out of his heart, minde, and all others) I was ſomething more ſharp, and told him, non ego tamen, ſed gratia tua Domine, I would obey God more then man: the which he lightly regarding, as ſeemed, I departed, and went to Maſter Latimer to have had him to have brought me to my Lord Protector (whoſe grace then was purpoſed ſhortly to take his journey to viſit the Ports) M. Latimer I ſay willed me to ſtay untill his return, which will not be long before Eaſter. In this mean time I bade my bed-fellow my Maſters ſonne, whom my Maſter had uſed as his inſtrument to move me carnally, for my Maſter diſcharged him of his exhibition, telling him that he could not be able to keep either houſe or childe, for I purpoſed to undo both him and all his, untruly thou knoweſt good Lord, and bade him to take that as a warning, that both he and his brethren ſhould provide for themſelves as they could, I bade I ſay my ſaid bed-fellow to ſhew my Maſter, as of himſelf, my further purpoſe, which thing when he knew, it ſo moved and feared him, that he began ſomething to relent, and then made fair promiſes, that look what I ſhould deviſe, that would he do. I deviſed, but my devices pleaſed him not. And thus, but not vainly I truſt (as I now do with you, but I know your gentleneſſe which ever hath borne with me) I ſpent the time in which I have been ſilent to write, nay babble to you. And he, departing out of London tofore I knew, did ſend me word by another of his ſaid ſonnes, not ſo given to the Goſpel, and a good life according as my bed-fellow, and therfore more to be ſuſpected (for though pietas non eſt ſuſpicioſa, as I ſhould think my ſelf rather impius; yet Chriſt bade us to be prudentes ſicut ſerpentes) this other brother I ſay told me that my Maſter would do all things, only his fame and abilitie preſerved (& quid prodeſt totum mundum lucrari, animæ vero jacturam facere?) And with the ſaid brother my Maſter ſent me a little billet alſo, wherein he confeſſed that he was contented within twelve moneths to deliver to my hands the whole money: which bill I thinking not ſo good as it might have been, have deviſed another, and have ſent it down to him in the Countrey, with requeſt that he will ſeal and ſigne it. For thus M. Latimer thinketh ſufficient, but as yet I hear not of it, doubting worldly wiſedome, which was the whore that overcame Sampſon, that moved David to ſlay Urias, that brought wiſe Salomon to idolatry, that crucified Chriſt the which moved me to perperate hoc facinus, the which worketh in my Maſters heart, having higher place there then Timor Domini. What ſay I there, yea, yea, with me, it ſitteth in the holy place (the Lord deliver us) doubting I ſay worldly wiſedome, I remain in that ſame ſtate now for this matter (though in worſe for my ſoul, which is more to be lamented, pray therefore I beſeech you, pray with me, and for me, that I may do ſo earneſtly) that I was in at my laſt writing unto you. And as I then was purpoſed, ſo I doubt not (grant it Lord) but that I ſhall perſevere, if in the mean ſeaſon I ſhall not hear from my Maſter accordingly. Thus I have (like my ſelf) fooliſhly, but truly declared unto you in many babling words, which wit (if I had it) would have ſhortly and briefly comprehended. Arrogant, nay Gods working unthankfull wretch, my working in this matter, which is, and was the only cauſe (as I now do) I troubled you not afore, to the intent I might advertiſe you ſome certaintie in this thing. And though ſilence had been much better then this fooliſh prating, yet your fatherly kindeneſſe ever towards me in expecting from you a correction, as I have herein given cauſe, may though not to you, yet to me be profitable.

In hope whereof, I proceed in requiring you to continue your remembrance of me a moſt unkinde wretch to God and you, in your prayers with the Almighty mercifull Lord, that I may more regard his will and pleaſure herein, then all honour or ſhame in this life. But I muſt confeſſe unto you that my working in this matter is not of love, as I ſhould do, nor of fear of Gods juſtice (mine unthankfulueſſe, mine unthankfulneſſe, if nothing elſe were, hath not only deſerved it, but doth deſerve more then everlaſting damnation, O Lord be mercifull to me) I do not ſo repent it as I ſhould do. Why ſay I So? as though this So were any thing: Oh hypocriticall wretch that I am. Alas Father Traves, let me ſo call you, I am hard-hearted, there was never any ſo obſtinate, ſo unkinde, againſt ſo loving, ſo mercifull, ſo gracious, ſo good, ſo beneficiall a Lord, yea a Father, as I wretch, and moſt miſerable ſinner am. This I ſpeak, but not of humility, but of hypocriſie, yet I ſpeak truly. I pray thee good Father for Chriſts ſake, I may think it truly, as I write it even of arrogancy, ſo it is. Therefore pray and cry for me. Here be ſuch goodly, godly, and learned Sermons, which theſe uncircumciſed ears of mine hear at the leaſt thrice a weeke, which were able (the great loving mercy of God offered to me in them, I mean) to burſt any mans heart, to relent, to repent, to beleeve, to love, and to fear that omnipotent gracious Lord: but my adamantine, obſtinate, moſt unkinde, ingrate, unthankfull heart, hearing my Lord, which is the Lord over all Lords, ſo graciouſly, ſo lovingly, vouchſafe by ſo many his inſtruments to ſpeak, to call, to cry unto me, now by his law, now by his threats, now by his Goſpel, now by his promiſes, now by all his creatures, to come, to come even to himſelf; I hide me with Adam in the Garden, I play not only Samuel running to Hely, but I play Jonas running to the Sea, and there I ſleep upon the hatches tumbling in Jeſabels bed, quod eſt afflictio maxima, untill it pleaſe God to anoint mine eyes collyrio, untill it pleaſe him to raiſe up a tempeſt, to turn and look upon me, as Luke ſaith he did on Peter. For O Lord it is thy gift, and cometh of thee, and of thy meer grace, it cometh not of man, it cometh not of works, to repent, to beleeve, to fear, and to love. Work thou therefore in me for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, which am thy creature and moſt unthankfull hypocriticall ſervant, not when I will, nor as I will, but when thou wilt, even that which may be moſt to the glory of thy name, Amen. What ſhould I write? nay, why do I not pluck theſe ſame words and paper in pieces, for I write altogether of hypocriſie and arrogant preſumption, I will confeſſe it (thou wicked ſpirit the Lord judge thee:) I will confeſſe it, it is moſt true John Traves, I but only write it, for it is not I, it is hypocriſie. Scientia (if I had it) inflaret, Oh Lord grant me thy grace, and leave me not to mine own judgement and reaſon. Hypocriſie, arrogancy, and obſtinate ſecuritie environ me (yet I feel them not) the Lord deliver me. Pray, pray for me. Give God thanks for me: O Lord, even tua fiat voluntas: Unclock this mine heart, thou which haſt the Key of David, which openeſt only, that I may deſire to have the deſire of the glory of thy name, of repentance, faith, &c. Pray for me, and be thankfull for me, O Father Traves, and write to me. Your Letters I deſire more to ſee, then any mans living. Let me have them therefore as you may, but your prayer at all times, that God would open mine heart to feede and taſte of theſe comfortable places of Scripture (which to me are locked) memento Ieſum Chriſtum reſurrexiſſe ex mortuis. This Text as a Text of moſt comfort (as it is indeed, and when God will, I ſhall feed on it) did Paul ſend to Timothy to be his comfort in all places. For our ſalvation (this day of reſurrection) is nearer now then when we beleeved. Therefore qui perſeveraverit, ſalvus erit. For conſummabitur prævaricatio, ſaith Daniel, finem accipiet peccatum, delebitur iniquitas, & adducetur juſtitia ſempiterna. Deus enim ipſe veniet & ſalvabit nos. Veniens, veniet, & non tardabit, & quandocunque manifeſtatus fuerit vita noſtra Chriſtus, tunc & nos manifeſtabimur cum illo in gloria. Semel enim oblatus eſt ut multorum peccata tolleret, rurſus abſque peccato conſpicietur iis qui illum expectant in ſalutem. Sic ſemper cum Domino erimus: proinde conſolemini vos invicem mutuo ſermonibus hiis. O Lord open mine eyes which ſee nothing of the great comforts in theſe thy moſt rich words: Open mine eyes, good Lord, ne nunquam obdormiam in morte. Pray for me, and commend me to your good bed-fellow, & omnibus in Chriſto fratribus oſculo ſancto. Thus I make an end (for it is time you may ſay) and I pray you ſtill water Sir Thomas Hall, unto whom I have ſent a fair Teſtament both in Engliſh and Latine, if this bringer will carry it. And I have herewith ſent you a Letter, which firſt peruſe and read, and when you have ſo done, abhorre not me, but my wickedneſſe, and pray for me. And as you can ſee a meet time, ſeal it, and deliver it to Sir Nicholas Wolffoncros, by ſuch policie as you can think by Gods grace through prayer. I confeſſe unto you, God is my witneſſe, to my knowledge, I never in my being in the Country this Winter at any time called it to remembrance, the Lord forgive me. I would by ſome occaſion, if any could be had, afore the delivery of the Letter, by ſome ſtory or communication, that he did know that abomination to be ſinne, for I fear me he thinketh it to be no ſinne. The Lord open our eyes, and forgive us, Amen. The peace of God be with you, Amen. From the Temple, this twenty two of March, 1547.

Yours in Chriſt moſt bounden,
Iohn Bradford.

I have ſent you three pair of good Spectacles I trow, and other ſuch Books as have your name written in them, which take in good worth, and pray for me, and give thanks for me.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

Gratia, miſericordia, & pax, &c.

My chance is not by this bringer to have any warning in manner of his farewell, ſo that I am conſtrained, time coarcting me, to write not ſo much of things (which I will omit) as my deſire was. Concerning the great matter you know of, it hath pleaſed God to bring it to this end, that I have a bill of my Maſters hand, wherein he is bound to pay the ſum afore Candlemas next coming. This thinks Maſter Latimer to be ſufficient. Therefore I pray you to give that gracious Lord thanks, and thanks, and thanks upon it, for me a moſt wretched ingrate ſinner, which have alſo in other things no leſſe cauſe to praiſe Gods name: As for that I have and ſuſtain my Maſters ſore diſpleaſure, the which hath brought me (God I ſhould ſay through it) unto a more contempt of worldly things, through the ſequeſtration of ſuch his buſineſſe, as tofore I had ado withall, I call it a contempt, well, take the word even as it is hypocritically and vain gloriouſly ſpoken: for the which fault amongſt my others innumerable, I truſt you remember in your prayers whereof I have (I would I knew how much) need. There is yet another thing, whereof I will advertiſe you even to this end, that you might pray if it be Gods will, that as I truſt ſhortly to begin, ſo he may vouchſafe to confirm that he hath begun, as (if I be not deceived) I beleeve it is his working. If the thing ſeem by Gods Spirit in you that I preſume, then for the Lords ſake advertiſe me: for I am much given to that diſeaſe, the Lord deliver me. I have moved my M. therein already by Letters, to ſee if I ſhall have any living of him as hitherto I have had, but I have thereof no anſwer, nor as our naturall ſpeech is, any likelihood of any grant. Yet that I have already, I truſt, will ſuffice me for three yeers: you look what my purpoſe meaneth, I am ſo long afore I come to it. Therefore I do it, becauſe my long babling ſhould be leſſe tedious. Now ſhall you have it. If Gods will be (whereunto pray I may be obedient) I am minded afore Midſomer to leave London to go to my Book at Cambridge, and if God ſhall give me grace, to be a Miniſter of his Word. Thus you have of a flye an Elephant. Well, take it in good part though you ſee my etiam non, and not etiam, etiam. A tumbling block gathereth no moſſe: ſo therefore pray for me. Perchance I do fooliſhly to forſake ſo good a living as I have. I will ſay no more hereof, but pray for me. I truſt as I ſaid, for three yeers ſtudy I have ſufficient, if my Maſter take all from me: and when this is ſpent, God will ſend more. I do not write this that you ſhould think me to be in need of worldly help, and therefore as Friers were wont, ſecretly to beg. No, in the Lords name I require you not to take it ſo: for I had rather never ſend Letter, afore I ſhould be herein a croſſe to you, for ſufficit ſua diei afflictio, we are more ſet by then many Sparrows. But if my Mother, or Sir Thomas Hall murmure at it, or be offended with me, as you can, remedy it with your counſell. Howbeit, as yet I will not write to them of it, untill ſuch time as I be going. I am ſomething fickle minded and unconſtant, therefore pray for me, that my hand being put to the plough (preſumptuouſly ſpoken) I look not back. You may gather by my words in this Letter the Heroicall heart which lyeth in me.

I have ſent you a Book of Bucer againſt Wincheſter in Engliſh, lately tranſlated, which I never read, therefore I cannot praiſe it. And as I call to remembrance, I did ſend you with the other Books more then you received, at the leaſt one of them I remember, which is called, The Common places, or the Declaration of the faith by Urbanus Rhegius. Aſk for it, or ſend me word in whom the default is, you have it not. Hereafter, and that ſhortly by Gods grace I will ſend you Primitiæ laborum meorum, a work or two which I have tranſlated into Engliſh, ſo ſoon as they be printed, which will be afore Whitſontide. Pray for me good Father Traves, and God ſend you health of ſoul and body, as I would mine own or any mans living. But yet to warn you of that you know not, in writing your Letters to me, you hit me home, and give me that I look for. You are deceived, and ſo is all that knoweth me, I never came to any point of mortification, therefore a little tickling ſets me afiote, God help me, and give God thanks for me, as all men be moſt bounden. Thus when I once begin to write to you, I run as the Prieſt ſaith Mattins, for I think I may be bold on you. The holy Ghoſt preſerve you, your wife and family, and perſevere his grace in you unto the end. I pray you pray for me, a moſt (what ſhould I call me) miſerable and blaſphemous ſinner. The peace of God be with us. From the Temple this twelfth of May, 1548.

Sir Thomas Hall hath deceived me, but himſelf moſt. I deſire to ſpeak with him, as this Winter it may chance, if I diſcharge not my ſelf of mine office, ſo ſee him. Pray for him, and for me.

A very Hypocrite,
Iohn Bradford.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford To Father Traves.

The perſeverance of Gods grace, with the knowledge of his good will, increaſe with you unto the end. To declare my ſelf as I am a carnall man, which underſtandeth not the things that be of the Spirit. Theſe my Letters, though I counterfeit and meddle amongſt them the ſpirituall words, as the Divell did in his temptations to Chriſt, will declare no leſſe. For I begin with carnall things in effect, and no marvell if I ſo end: for how can a man gather figs of bryars? Theſe words as they ſeem, ſo they are ſpoken for a cloak to make you think otherwiſe: but Father Traves, you cannot think ſo evill of me as I am: But to the matter. This preſent day by Gods grace I take my journey towards Cambridge, where I pray God, and ſo earneſtly I pray you to pray for me, that I may circumſpectly redeem this time which God hath appointed (to me unknown) to lend me: for alas, I have ſpent moſt wickedly the time paſt, for the which I muſt account even for every hair breadth as they ſay: for God hath not given here time to ſin. But if I conſidered this (as I do nothing leſſe, cuſtome of ſin and pleaſing my ſelf hath ſo hardened my heart) I ſhould then come to the feeling of my ſelf, then ſhould I hate ſin which I now love, then ſhould I fear Gods wrath, which I now contemne, then ſhould I cry out and weep, and continually pray, whereas now I am as dry as a ſtone, as dumb as a nail, as far from praying, as he that never knew any taſte of it. Which thing once I felt, (thanks to the Lord) but now for mine unthankfulneſſe I am almoſt (but moſt worthily) deprived. I fear me God will take his grace from me, I am ſo unthankfull. Alas, why do I lye in ſaying I fear me? Nay, God grant I may do ſo, for then ſhould I pray and pray: but ſeeing I cannot, ſpeak you for me, pray for me, that the Lord would remember his old compaſſions towards me, for his mercies ſake draw me, yea compell me to ſerve, to fear and to love him. Thus may you ſee how I preſume: for my intent was to have been a Miniſter of Gods Word, to have been his inſtrument to call from as I have called to ſin, but you ſee how that God puniſheth mine arrogancy. Alas, what ſhall I do? I am an unprofitable and an idle member, I thought I ſhould have been therein profitable, but Medice cura teipſum. How ſhould I, or what ſhould I do? I cannot labour with my hands. Well, I truſt God will give me grace and knowledge to tranſlate: nothing I fear me, yea I diſtruſt me, that I ſhall never be Miniſter of Gods Word: yea, if arrogancy were not in me, how ſhould I, of all wretches the greateſt, think me to look to the higheſt room and vocation that is upon earth? Therefore eftſoones I deſire you to pray for me, that Gods will may be done in me whether I live or dye, ſo that his name be honoured. My Maſter which was, hath denied me all his beneficence, but I have for this life more then enough, thanks be to God. As this Winter I intend by Gods favour to declare more unto you. This Book which I have ſent, take it in good part, it is the firſt, I truſt it ſhall not be the laſt, God hath appointed me to tranſlate. The print is very falſe, I am ſorry for it.

I

I pray you be not offended at my babling in the Prologues, &c.

John Bradford.

I will lye, God willing, this Summer at Katherines Hall in Cambridge: write to me.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford, to Father Traves.

The loving kindneſſe and abundant mercy of God the Father, poured plentifully upon all the faithfull, in the bloud of that meek Lamb Jeſus Chriſt our only ſatisfaction and Mediator, through the working of the moſt holy Spirit, be encreaſed and perceived in you daily more and more, to the glory of God, &c.

Becauſe I ſtand both in doubt of the reading and delivery of ſuch Letters as I write and ſend unto you (dearly beloved Father Traves) I am conſtrained to leave off ſuch griefs, and ſpirituall wants, as thanks unto the Lord I unwillingly feel: for the fleſh, as you know, loveth nothing ſo much as ſecuritie, of all enemies moſt perillous, and not a little familiar with me: from the which, with vain-glory, hypocriſie, &c. and worldlineſſe, the Lord deliver me. I had not thought to have written thus much, but theſe I cannot keep, but commit them to your prayers. And to the intent I would you ſhould not think any ingratitude in me; as alſo that I might give you occaſion to write to me again, as heretofore I have done, even ſo do I interturb and trouble you with my babling, but yet having this commodity, that I babble not ſo much as I wont to do. The cauſe I have declared, which had almoſt been the cauſe I had not written at all. I did write unto you from London when I came hither: ſend me word what Letters you have received, for from you I have received but two, and both by John Moſſe, and in the latter I perceived that the Lord had viſited you with ſickneſſe, his Fatherly rod, whereby he declareth his love upon you, and that he careth for you, Vt in tempore ſupremo exultes nunc ad breve tempus afflictus, quo exploratio fidei multo pretioſior auro quod perit, & tamen probatur, &c. Siquidem in hoc vocatus es, ut cum Chriſto patiaris, nam & cum illo glorificaberis. Certus enim ſermo eſt, ſi ſufferimus & con regnabimus. You know that Chriſt, etſi filius Dei erat, tamen ex his quæ paſſus eſt didicit obedientiam. Patientia opus perfectum habeat ut ſitis perfecti & integri, nullaque in parte diminuti: and doth not patientia come of probatio, the one then you had, ſo that you were going a School to learn the other, which learned what want you? The end of all Gods proving, is as Paul ſaith, Vt impertiat nobis ſanctimoniam: igitur gratias age Deo patri qui idoneum te fecit ad participationem ſortis ſanctorum in lumine, &c. Nam qui parumper afflixit, idem inſtauret te, fulciat, roboret, ſtabiliat. And that the Lord knoweth how eripere pios è tribulatione, and that in tempore opportuno, even ſhortly: for haud tardat qui promiſit: nam modicum tempus, & videbis me; veniens enim veniet, & non tardabit. Itaque qui conſortes eſtis crucis Chriſti, gaudete, ſaith Peter, ut in revelatione quoque gloriæ ejus gaudeatis exultantes. Oh how doth my will over-run my wit. Why Bradford, whom writeſt thou unto? Thou ſheweſt thy ſelf. Thus Father Traves, you may ſee my raſhneſſe to rabble out the Scripture without purpoſe, rime, or reaſon. I will not blot it out as I thought to have done: for that hereby you ſhall ſee my need of your prayer. Well, I look for a watch-word from you. Write for Gods ſake, and pray for me that I may be in ſomething profitable to the Lords congregation, that I may be no ſtumbling block, ut confundantur in me qui illum expectant. Send me ſuch counſell as the Lords Spirit ſhall move you how to ſtudy. My deſire is in ſomething to be profitable, if it were the Lords will, for to be Miniſter verbi. Alas I am unmeet, and my time, my time, yea the Lords time, I have hitherto evill, yea moſt wickedly miſ-ſpent it, &c. Thus will I end. The Lord be with you, and your Bed-fellow, to whom have me heartily commended, and to all your children and family, the which I beſeech the Lord to lighten his countenance over, and grant you his peace: pray for me. I long for winter to ſpeak with you. Reſcribe oro. Pray for me. This aſſumption day in Katherines Hall in Cambridge.

Yours with all I have and can,
Iohn Bradford.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

The plentifull grace of God the Father, through our only Maſter and Lord Jeſus Chriſt, increaſe in us daily to the glory of his name. Amen.

Foraſmuch as I have often written unto you, good Father Traves, and yet have not once heard from you ſithence Pentecoſt, I cannot now be ſo bold either in writing much or often as I would have been: Howbeit this I ſay, that I much marvell that I hear not from you: but not ſo, for I am ſo wretched a ſinner, that the Lords Spirit I am certain doth not move you to write to me, yet for Gods ſake pray for me, and in the Lords name I deſire you to give thanks to God for me. And when it may pleaſe God to move you, write to me, though it be but two words, and counſell me how to ſtudy the Word of life, the miniſtery whereof I deſire, if it be the Lords pleaſure, to profeſſe, and that I may do it both in living and learning, pray for me. Herus meus omnibus rebuis ſuis me abdicavit, & quæ prius conceſſerat, jam ſolvere renuit, & mihi prorſus factus eſt inimicus. I know not when I ſhall ſee you in body, therefore let me hear from you. I write not this that you ſhould think me in egeſtate aut anguſtiis eſſe. No Father, the Lord giveth me omnia affatim, and will do. I truſt I ſhall ſhortly here have a fellowſhip, I am ſo promiſed, and therefore I have taken the degree of Maſter of Art, which elſe I could not have attained. If I get a fellowſhip, I ſhall not need de craſtino ſollicitus eſſe, as hereafter I ſhall more write to you by Gods grace. I pray you write again, and often pray for me. In haſte as appeareth, the twenty two of October. Ne ſciat mater mea quod herus meus adeo duriter mecum egit, &c.

Miſerrimus peccator,
I. Bradford.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

The peace and plenteous mercy of God our Heavenly Father, in his Chriſt our only Lord and Saviour, be ever increaſed in you by the holy Spirit, qui efficit omnia in omnibus, Amen.

Father Traves though I might think my ſelf more happy, if you would often write unto me, yet becauſe I ought to have reſpect to your pains, which now that old man cannot ſo well ſuſtain as it might, I had rather loſe my happineſſe in that behalf, then will your grief, for as much as it can be no happineſſe unto me which turneth to your pain: yet becauſe pain is not painfull when it is joyned with gain, I therefore deſire you for Gods ſake to pray often for me: for if I ſhall not be worthy of your prayer, as the Lord who knoweth all things doth right well ſee it, and ſo my conſcience witneſſeth, yet your good prayer ſhall return into your own boſome. And know this, that whoſo converteth a ſinner by prayer, whether it be by prayer, preaching, or writing letters, &c. the ſame hath ſaved a ſoul. Uſe therefore, for Gods ſake I ask it, that pains whereunto is joyned profit, I mean prayer to God for me, a miſerable and moſt wretched ſinner: and as for the gainleſſe pain in writing to me, uſe it yet as you may, and ſurely God for whoſe ſake you do it, in that he will reward a cup of cold water, will in ſome thing requite you. And I know certainly, that if you did ſee what ſpirituall profit I receive by your Letters, I am certain you would not think all your labour loſt. For Chriſts ſake therefore begin again to write unto me, and reprove me ſharply for my horrible unthankfulneſſe to God. You know how that God hath exonerated my loden conſcience of the great weighty burthen, for ſo I did write to you, yea the Lord hath in a manner unburdened me of the leſſer burthen alſo: for I have an aſſurance of the payment of the ſame by Candlemas. Lo thus you ſee what a good God the Lord is unto me. O Father Traves give thanks for me, and pray God to forgive me my unthankfulneſſe. But what ſhould I rehearſe the benefits of God towards me? Alas I cannot, I am too little for all his mercies, yea, I am not only unthankfull, but I am too far contumelious againſt God. For where you know the Sun, the Moon, and the ſeven Starres did forſake me, and would not ſhine upon me, you know what I mean per herum & heriles amicos, yet the Lord hath given me here in the Univerſity as good a living as I would have wiſhed. For I am now a Fellow of Pembroke Hall: for the which neither I nor any other for me did ever make any ſute: yea there was a contention betwixt the M. of Katherins hall and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, who is Maſter of Pembroke Hall, whether ſhould have me, ſit hoc tibi dictum. Thus you may ſee the Lords carefulneſſe for me. My Fellowſhip here is worth ſeven pound a yeer, for I have allowed me 18. pence a week, and as good as thirty three ſhillings four pence a yeer in money, beſides my Chamber, Launder, Barber, &c. and I am bound to nothing but once or twice a yeer to keep a Probleme. Thus you ſee what a good Lord God is to me. But I pray you what do I now to God for all this? I will not ſpeak of the great mercies he ſheweth unto my ſoul. Surely Father Traves I have clean forgotten God, I am all ſecure, idle, proud, hard-hearted, utterly void of brotherly love, I am envious, and diſdain others, I am a very ſtark hypocrite, not only in my words and works, but even in theſe my Letters to you. I am all ſenſuall without the true fear of God, another manner of man then I have been ſince my calling. Alas Father Traves, I writ this to put my ſelf in remembrance, but I am without all ſenſe, I do but only writ it. For Gods ſake pray for me, which am only in name a Chriſtian, in very deed a very worldling, and to ſay to you the very truth, the moſt worldling of all other. I pray you exhort my Mother now and then, with my Siſter Margaret to fear the Lord, and if my Mother had not ſold the Fore furre which was in my Fathers Gown, I would ſhe would ſend it me, ſhe muſt have your counſell in a piece of Cloath.

Yours for ever, Iohn Bradford.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

The ſelf ſame mercy, grace, and peace, which heretofore I have felt plenteouſly, though now through mine unthankfulneſſe and wilfull obedience to the pleaſure of this outward man, I neither feel, neither can be perſwaded that I poſſeſſe, yea if I ſhall truly write, I in manner paſſe not upon the ſame, ſo far am I faln, the Lord help me, the ſame mercy, &c. I ſay, I wiſh unto you as I can, with all increaſe of godlineſſe. Hypocritically with my pen and mouth, beſeeching you in your earneſt prayers to God, to be an earneſt ſuter unto God for me which am faln into ſuch a ſecurity, and even an hardneſſe of heart, that neither I ſorrow my ſtate, neither with any grief or fear of Gods abjection do write this: before the Lord which knoweth the hearts of all men I lye not. Conſider for Chriſts ſake therefore, good Father Traves, my neceſſity though I my ſelf do it not, and pray for me, that God caſt me not off as I deſerve moſt juſtly. For where I ought to have well proceeded in Gods School, by reaſon of the time, I confeſſe it to my ſhame, I am ſo farre gone back, as alas if ſhame were in me I might be aſhamed to write it, but much more to write it, and think it not, ſuch is the reward of unthankfulneſſe. For where God wrought the reſtitution of the great thing you know of, the which benefit ſhould binde me to all obedience: Alas Father Traves I am too unthankfull, I finde no will in heart (though by my writing it will be hard to perſwade you) either to be thankfull, either to begin a new life in all things to mortifie this outward man, and heartily to be well content to ſerve the Lord in Spirit and verity, and withſtand mine affections, and eſpecially my beaſtly ſenſualitie in meat and drink, wherewith I was troubled at my being with you, but now through my licencious obeying that affect, I am faln ſo, that a whole legion ſpirituum malorum, poſſeſſeth me. The Lord whom I only with mouth (my heart ſtill abiding both in hardneſſe and wilfulneſſe) call upon, deliver me and help me. And for Gods ſake give you hearty thanks for the great benefit of reſtitution, pray to the Lord that at the length I may once return to the obedience of his good will, Amen. I thank you for your cheeſe, and ſo doth Father Latimer as unknown: for I did give it him, and he ſaith he did never eat better cheeſe, and ſo I dare ſay he did not. I thank him I am as familiar with him, as with you: yea God ſo moveth him towards me, that his deſire is to have me come and dwell with him whenſoever I will, and welcome. This do I writ yet once more to occaſion you to be thankfull for me to the Lord, which by all means ſheweth nothing but moſt high love to me: And I again a very obſtinate rebellion. Pray therefore for me in haſte.

The ſinfull, Iohn Bradford.

William Minge.

Will. Minge died in priſon.

The next day after, Maſter Bradford and John Leaf did ſuffer in Smithfield, Will. Minge Prieſt died in priſon at Maidſtone being there in bonds for Religion, and like to have ſuffered alſo, if he had continued the fury of his adverſaries, whoſe nature was to ſpare and favour none that favoured Chriſts pure Goſpel: which W. Minge with as great conſtancy and boldneſſe yeelded up his life in priſon, as if it had pleaſed God to have called him to ſuffer by the fire, as the other good and godly men had done at the ſtake, and as he himſelf was ready alſo ſo to do, if it had pleaſed God to have called him thereunto.

Iames Treviſam buried in the fields.

The ſtory of James Treviſam, buried in the fields, and ſummoned after his death.

Upon the third of July 1555. died one James Treviſam in the Pariſh of Saint Margaret in Lotheburry, upon a Sunday, who being impotent and lame kept his bed; for he could not riſe out of it a long time. This Trevisam had a ſervant, one John Smal, which read on the Bible, and as he was in reading, Berd the Promooter came to the houſe, and would needs go up the ſtairs, where he found four perſons beſides him and his wife; to wit, the yong man that read, and two men and a woman. All which folks, the ſaid Berd the Promooter there being, apprehended and carried to the Counter, where they remained about a fortnight, for all the friends they could make. Moreover the ſaid Berd would have had alſo James the lame man himſelf to Newgate in a Cart (and brought the Cart to the door:) but for neighbours. Nevertheleſſe, the poor man was fain to put in two ſureties for his forthcoming; for he could not go out of his bed, being not only impotent, but alſo very ſick the ſame time. So within a few daies, the ſaid James lying in extremity, the Parſon of the church named M. Farthing, came to him, and had communication with him, and agreed well, and ſo departed. It hapned after the Prieſt was come down into the ſtreet, there met him one Coller, a Founder. Yea, ſaith he, be ye agreed? I will accuſe you, for he denieth the Sacrament of the Altar. Upon that the Parſon went to him again, and then the Prieſt and he could not agree. And ſo the Parſon went to the Biſhop of London and told him. The Biſhop anſwered, that he ſhould be burnt, and if he were dead, he ſhould be buried in a Ditch. And ſo when he died, the Parſon was againſt his wife as much as he could, neither would let her have the coffin to put him in, nor any thing elſe, but was fain to bear him upon a Table to More-field, and there was he buried. The ſame night the body was caſt up above the ground, and his ſheet taken from him, and he left naked. After this, the owner of the field ſeeing him, buried him again, and a fortnight after the Sumner came to his grave, and ſummoned him to appear at Pauls before his Ordinary, to anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be laid againſt him. But what more befell upon him, I have not certainly to ſay.

M. Farthing, Parſon of S. Margarets in Lothbury, accuſer of James.

THE HISTORY OF Mr. JOHN BLAND Preacher and Martyr,

Conſtantly ſuffering for the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

THe 12. day of July, John Bland, John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton, were all four burned at Canterbury together for one cauſe: of the which number, Frankeſh and Bland were Miniſters and Preachers of the word of God: the one being Parſon of Adeſham, the other the Vicar of Rolvindon. This Maſt. Bland was a man ſo litle born for his own commodity, that no part of his life was ſeparated from the common and publike utility of all men. For his firſt doings were there imployed to the bringing up of children in learning and vertue. Under whom were trained divers towardly yong men, which even at this preſent do handſomely flouriſh. In the number of whom is D. Sands, a man of ſingular learning and worthineſſe, as may well beſeem a Scholler meet for ſuch a Schoolmaſter, whom I gladly here name for his ſingular gifts of vertue and erudition.

July 12. John Bland, John Frankeſh, Martyrs.

M. Bland Schoolmaſter to D. Sands, ſometimes Biſhop of Worceſter, now Archbiſhop of York.

After this, he coming to the Miniſtery in the Church of GOD, or rather being called thereto, was inflamed with incredible deſire to profit the congregation, which may appear by this; that whereas he was caſt into Canterbury priſon for the preaching of the Goſpel, and delivered once or twice from thence at the ſute of his friends, yet would he needs preach the Goſpel again as ſoon as he was delivered. Whereupon he being the third time apprehended, when his friends yet once again would have found the means to have delivered him if he would have promiſed to abſtain from preaching; he ſtood in it earneſtly, that he would admit no ſuch condition, notably well expreſſing unto us the manner and example which we read in the Apoſtle Paul? Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? tribulation, or anguiſh, or hunger, or nakednes, or danger, or perſecution, or the ſword, &c. But to expreſſe the whole life and doings of this godly Martyr, ſeeing we have his own teſtimony concerning the ſame, it ſhall be beſt to refer the Reader to his own report, writing to his father of the whole diſcourſe of his troubles, from the beginning almoſt to the latter end, in order and maner as ye ſhall hear.

M. Bland offered by his friends to be delivered, refuſeth.

A diſcourſe of the whole proceſſe and doings of Maſter Bland, written and reported by himſelf to his father in his own Letter, as followeth.

DEarly beloved father in Chriſt Ieſus, I thank you for your gentle Letters. And to ſatisfie your minde, as concerning the troubles whereof you have heard, theſe ſhall both declare unto you all my vexations that have chanced me ſince ye were with me, and alſo ſince I received your laſt Letters. God keep you ever.

Your ſon, Iohn Bland.

FIrſt, the 3. of Septem. being Sunday after ſervice ended, ere I had put off my Surplice, John Auſten came to the table (commonly called the Lords table) and laid both his hands upon it, ſaying, Who ſet this here again? Now they ſay they took the table down the Sunday before, which I knew not, neither do I know who ſet it up again. The Clerk anſwered, that he knew not. Then Auſten ſaid, he is a knave that ſet it here. I was then going down the Church, marvelling what he meant, and ſaid; Goodman Auſten, the Queens Highnes hath ſet forth a Proclamation, that ye may move no ſedition. And ere I could ſpeak any more, he ſaid, thou art a knave: And I ſaid, well Goodman Auſten, that I have ſaid, I have ſaid. By Gods ſoul (quoth he) thou art a very knave. Then my Clerk ſpake to him, but what I am not ſure. But he ſaid, ye are both heretick knaves, and have deceived us with this faſhion too long, and if he ſay any Service here again, I will lay the Table on his face; and in that rage he with other took up the Table, and laid it on a cheſt in the Chancell, and ſet the Treſſels by it. Wherefore I rode by and by to Maſter Iſaac, and ſhewed him the cauſe, both how ſeditiouſly he had ſpoken, and performed it with a like deed. Maſter Iſaac directed a warrant to the Conſtable or Boſholder, which was incontinently ſerved, ſo that he was brought before him the ſame night, and was bound by recognizance, with ſureties, to appear if he were called. But we agreed ſo well then, that it was never called for, the Table was brought down, and was permitted, as before.

Declaration of the troubles of M. Bland, how and by whom he was apprehended, and brought to his condemnation.

John Auſten perſecutor.

John Auſten offended with the Communion table.

Note the uncharitable ſpirit of this Papiſt, and ſo commonly of them all.

Maſter Iſaac a good Juſtice.

The Communion table ſet up again.

The 26. of Nov. being Sunday, Richard Auſten and his brother Thomas came to the foreſaid table after the Communion was done, and as I was going by them, Richard ſaid unto me, Maſter Parſon we have to ſpeak to you. And I ſaid, what is your will? And he ſaid, you know that you took down the tabernacle or ſeeing wherin the Rood did hang, and ſuch other things: we would know what recompence you will make us. For the Queens proceedings are (as you know) that ſuch muſt up again.

Quoth I, I know no ſuch proceedings as yet; and as for that I did, I did it by commandment.

No, ſaid Thomas Auſten, ye will not know the Queens proceedings.

Yes, ſaid I, I refuſe not to know them.

Tho. Auſten and Rich. Auſten pick matter againſt M. Bland.

Then ſaid Richard, ye are againſt the Queens proceedings; for you ſay there are abominable uſes and devilliſhneſſe in the Maſſe.

Goodman Auſten, ſaid I, if I ſo ſaid, I will ſay it again, and God willing, ſtand to the proof of it.

Maſters all, quoth Richard Auſten, bear record of theſe words, and went his way.

M. Bland charged for ſpeaking againſt the Maſſe.

Quoth Thomas Auſten, thou wilt as ſoon eat this book as ſtand to them. No, quoth I, not ſo ſoon. Tell us, quoth he, what devilliſhneſſe is, that is in the Maſſe.

I often preached it unto you, ſaid I, and ye have not beleeved it, nor born it away, nor will now neither, though I ſhould tell you.

Thou (quoth he) haſt told us alwayes, like an heretick as thou art. Now ye lye goodman Auſten, quoth I, by your leave. Marry, quoth he, thou lyeſt. And I ſaid, and you lye, for I have taught you Chriſt and his truth.

Quoth he, thou art an heretick, and haſt taught us nothing but hereſie: for thou canſt ſay nothing that is true.

Yes, goodman Auſten, I can ſay that God is in heaven, and ye will ſay (I trow) that it is true, and ſo have I taught you truly.

Falſe accuſation.

Quoth he, thou haſt taught us like an heretick, and haſt ſaid, that there is no Devill in hell.

Well, ſaid I, lye on; me think you can ſay little truth. Many other taunts he gave, too long to write. And at the laſt he ſaid, ye pulled down the Altar; will ye build it again? No (quoth I) except I be commanded; for I was commanded to do that I did.

Well, if you will not, ſaid he, then will I. For I am Churchwarden.

Tho. Auſten threatneth to bring in a Popiſh Prieſt againſt Maſter Bland.

I charge you, ſaid I, that you do not, except you have authority. I will, ſaid he, not let for your charge. For we will have a Maſſe here on Sunday, and a Preacher, that ſhall prove thee an heretick, if thou dare abide his coming.

Yes, quoth I, God willing, I will abide and hear him; for ſure I am, that he cannot diſprove any Doctrine that I have preached.

Yes, quoth he, and that thou ſhalt hear, if thou run not away ere then.

No goodman Auſten, I will not run away.

Marry, quoth he, I cannot tell; thou art as like yea, as nay: with many other words we came out of the Church door, and ſo departed.

Falſe ſlander againſt Maſter Bland.

When the Sunday came, I looked for our Preacher, and at that time of morning prayer I ſaid to the Clerk; why do ye not ring? ye forget that we ſhall have a Sermon to day. No, quoth he, M. Miles ſervant hath been here this morning, and ſaid, his Maſter hath Letters from my L. Chancellor, that he muſt go to London, and cannot come. That day I did preach to them a Sermon in his ſted. Now have they ſlandered me, that I had prepared a company from divers places to have troubled him; but they agreed not in their lye. For ſome ſaid, I had them at Adeſham, and that Richard Auſten had knowledge, and ſent for the Kings Conſtable to ſee the peace kept, which is found a lye. Other ſaid, I had them lying in wait for him between Canterbury and Adeſham. Other ſaid, I had them in both places, that if the one miſt, the other ſhould not. God forgive them all. Now upon theſe two matters they crake, that they ſent two Bills of complaint to the Councell. Wherefore by the councell of friends, I made this teſtimony, and ſent it up by Maſter Wiſeman.

The behaviour of Iohn Bland Parſon of Adeſham, in the County of Kent, the Sunday, the third day of December laſt paſt, containing the words which he there ſpake unto the people.

M. Bland parſon of Adeſham cleareth himſelf of falſe ſlander.

Whereas upon certain communication had between the ſaid Parſon and Richard Auſten, and Thomas Auſten in the preſence of all the Pariſh of Adeſham, the Sunday before Saint Andrews day laſt, the ſaid Auſten then declared, that the ſaid Parſon had taught there in times paſt great hereſies, which to confound, they would prepare a Preacher againſt the next Sunday following, if ſo be the ſaid Parſon would abide, and not run away: Upon which rumour, divers and ſundry perſons reſorted out of the country, unto the ſaid Pariſh Church, at the ſaid ſame day appointed, there to hear the Preacher; and at the time in which the Sermon ought to be made, no man appeared there to preach. But it was reported unto the Parſon, that the Preacher appointed, had urgent buſineſſe, and could not come. So that the multitude being now come together, the ſame Parſon perceiving that the peoples expectation was defrauded, ſaid: Foraſmuch as you are come willingly to hear ſome good advertiſement of the Preacher, which cannot be now preſent, I think it not convenient to permit you to depart without ſome Exhortation for your edifying. And ſo further declaring that he had no licence to preach, ſaid, that he would not meddle with any matter in controverſie. And then he began the Epiſtle of the day, deſiring the audience to mark three or four places in the ſame Epiſtle, which touched quietneſſe and love one to another: and there briefly reading the Epiſtle, he noted the ſame places, and ſo making an end thereof, deſired all men to depart quietly and in peace, as they did, without any manner of diſturbance, or token of evill.

M. Bland exhorting the people to love and quietneſſe.

Another matter of trouble wrought againſt Io. Bland, as appeareth by his own narration.

The third matter againſt M. Bland.

A Popiſh maſſe Prieſt brought to ſay Maſſe at Adeſham.

Upon the Innocents day, being the 28. day of Decem. they had procured the Prieſt of Stodmarſh to ſay them Maſſe; he had nigh made an end of Mattins ere I came; and when he had made an end of Mattins, he ſaid to me, Maſt. Parſon, your neighbour have deſired me to ſay Mattins and Maſſe; I truſt ye will not be againſt the Queens proceedings. No (quoth I) I will offend none of the Queens Majeſties laws, God willing. What ſay ye, quoth he, and made as he had not heard? And I ſpake the ſame words to him again, with an higher voice; but he would not hear, though all the Chancell heard: So I cryed the third time (that all the Church heard) that I would not offend the Queens laws, and then he went to Maſſe; and when he was reading the Epiſtle, I called the Clerk unto me, with the becking of my finger, and ſaid unto him; I pray you deſire the Prieſt when the Goſpel is done, to tarry a little; I have ſomething to ſay to the people, and the Clerk did ſo.

M. Bland again exhorteth the people in his Pariſh Church.

And the Prieſt came down into the ſtall where he ſate; and I ſtood up in the Chancell door, and ſpake to the people of the great goodneſſe of God, alwayes ſhewed unto his people, unto the time of Chriſts coming; and in him and his coming, what benefit they paſt, we preſent, and our ſucceſſors have; and among other benefits,

I ſpake

Bland ſpeaketh of the right inſtitution of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

He ſpeaketh of the abuſe of the Sacrament in the Maſſe.

He declareth how the Maſſe was patched and pieced together, and by what Popes.

M. Bland violently plucked down in his Sermon by the Churchwarden

M. Bland thruſt into a ſide Chappell till the maſſe was done.

M. Blands dagger taken from him.

Ramſey apprehended by Th. Auſten.

John Gray of Wingham troubled for a word ſpeaking.

I ſpake of the great and comfortable Sacrament of his body and blood. And after I had declared briefly the inſtitution, the promiſe of life to the good, and damnation to the wicked, I ſpake of the bread and wine, affirming them to be bread and wine after the conſecration, as yonder Maſſe book, ſaying; Panem ſanctum vitæ æternæ, & calicem ſalutis perpetuæ, &c. Holy bread of eternall life, and the cup of perpetuall ſalvation. So that like as our bodily mouths eat the Sacramentall bread and wine, ſo doth the mouth of our ſouls (which is our faith) eat Chriſts fleſh & blood. And when I had made an end of that, I ſpake of the miſuſe of the Sacrament in the Maſſe; ſo that I judged it in that uſe no Sacrament, and ſhewed how Chriſt bade us all eat and drink; and one onely in the Maſſe eateth and drinketh, and the reſt kneel, knock, and worſhip: and after theſe things ended, as briefly as I could, I ſpake of the Benefactors of the Maſſe, and began to declare what men made the Maſſe, and recited every mans name, and the patch that he put to the Maſs; and ere I had rehearſed them all, the Churchwarden and the Borſholder, his Son-in-law, violently came upon me, and took my book from me, and pulled me down, and thruſt me into the Chancell, with an exceeding roar and cry. Some cryed, Thou heretick; ſome, thou traytor, ſome, thou rebell; and when every man had ſaid his pleaſure, and the rage was ſomething paſt; be quiet good neighbours, ſaid I, and let me ſpeak to you quietly. If I have offended any law, I will make anſwer before them that are in authority to correct me. But they would not hear me, and pulled, one on this ſide, and another on that, and began again. Then Richard Auſten ſaid, Peace, Maſters, no more till Maſſe be done, and they ceaſed. Then ſaid I to the Churchwarden and the Borſholder, either holding me by the arm: Maſters, let me go into the Churchyard till your Maſſe be done. No, quoth the Churchwarden, thou ſhalt tarry here till Maſs be done. I will not, quoth I, but againſt my will. And they ſaid, Thou ſhalt tarry, for if thou go out, thou wilt run away. Then ſaid I to the Borſholder, Lay me in the ſtocks, and then ye ſhall be ſure of me, and turned my back to the Altar. By that time Richard Auſten had deviſed what to do with me, and called to the Borſholder and the Churchwarden, and bade them put me into a ſide Chappell, and ſhut the door to me, and there they made me tarry till Maſſe was ended. When the Maſſe was ended, they came into the Chappell to me, and ſearched what I had about me, and found a dagger, and took it from me. Then ſaid T. Auſten, churchwarden, after many brablings that they made with me, Thou keepeſt a wife here amongſt us, againſt Gods Law and the Queens. Ye lye, goodman Auſten, ſaid I, it is not againſt Gods Law, nor as I ſuppoſe, againſt the Queens. Thus they brought me out of the Church, and without the door they railed on me, without pity or mercie: but anon the Prieſt came out of the Church, and Ramſey that of late was Clerk, ſaid unto him, Sir, where dwell you? And therefore Thomas Auſten took him by the arm, and ſaid, Come on ſirra, you are of his opinion, and took his dagger from him, and ſaid, he ſhould go with him. I am content, ſaid he, and a little mocked them in their envious talk. By this time there came in at the Church ſtile, one John Gray of Wingham, ſervant to John Smith, and ſeeing them hold Ramſey by the arms, ſaid to him; How now Ramſey, have you offended the Queens Laws? No, quoth he. Then there is no tranſgreſſion. Therewith Thomas Auſten took him, and ſaid, Ye are one of their opinion, ye ſhall go with them for company, and took his dagger from him, and then demanded what he did there? But after (I think) for very ſhame they let him go again. But they carried me and Ramſey to Canterbury, with 18. perſons weaponed. A ſheet of paper will not hold the talk that we had that night with Maſter Hardes Juſtice, Maſter Oxenden, Maſter Spilman, and Maſter Tutſam.

M. Bland and Ramſey carried to Canterbury.

M. Hardes Juſtice.

M. Oxenden Juſtice.

M. Spilman, M. Tutſam, Gentleman, againſt Bland.

James Chapman and Bartholomew Joyes, ſureties for M. Bland.

Ch. Hogekins and Simon Barrat, ſureties for Ramſey.

The next day they made a Bill againſt me, but it ſerved not their purpoſe, which was, that they would have had me to priſon. But James Chapman, and Bartholomew Joyes, were bound in twenty pounds either of them, for my appearance at the next generall Seſſions, or in the mean time to appear, if I were ſent for before the Queens Majeſties Councell, or any other Commiſſioners ſent by the Queens authority. And Ramſey was bound to the peace, and to be of good behaviour till the next Seſſions. His ſureties were Thomas Hogeking, and Simon Barrat.

M. Bland taken from his ſureties.

Sir Thomas Moyles commandeth M. Bland to Canterbury caſtle.

Now the 23. or 24. of February, ſir Thomas Finch, Knight, and Maſter Hardes, ſent for me and my ſureties to Maſter Finches place, and took me from my ſureties, and ſent me to the Caſtle of Canterbury, by ſir Thomas Moyles commandment (they ſaid) where I lay ten weeks, and then was bayled, and bound to appear at the next Seſſions holden at Canterbury; but after, they changed it to be at Aſhford on the Thurſday in Whitſun-week, being the nineteenth of May: but in the mean time the matter was exhibited to the ſpirituall Court.

The firſt Examination of Maſter John Bland in the ſpirituall Court, before Doctor Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Maſter Collins, Commiſſary.

M. Bland brought before M. Harpsfield and M. Collins.

M. Bland maſter of Art of Cambridge.

The 18. day of May, Maſter Harpsfield, Arch-Deacon of Canterbury, made the Majors Sergeant to bring me before him and Maſter Collins, Commiſſary, into Chriſts Church, and they went with me into a chamber, in the Suffragan of Dovers houſe. Then the Archdeacon ſaid, Art thou a Prieſt? And I ſaid, I was one. And he ſaid, Art thou any graduate of any Univerſity? And I ſaid, Yea. What degree (ſaid he) haſt thou taken? The degree (quoth I) of a Maſter of Art. The more pity (quoth he) that thou ſhouldeſt behave thy ſelf as thou haſt done. Thou haſt been a common Preacher licenſed, haſt thou not? And I ſaid, I have been ſo. Marry (quoth he) ſo I underſtand.

What haſt thou preached?

And I ſaid, Gods Word, to the edifying (I truſt) of his people.

No, no, quoth he, to the deſtroying of their ſouls and thine both, except the mercie of God be all the greater. I pray thee, what haſt thou preached? tell me.

I told you, quoth I, what I have preached.

Nay, but tell me, quoth he, what one matter haſt thou preached to the edifying of the people, as thou ſayeſt? I will tell you no particular matter; for I perceive you would have ſome matter againſt me.

Note how theſe Papiſts ſeek for matters, to ſuck the blood of poor men.

No, by my faith, quoth he, but that only I would win thee from hereſies that thou art bewrapt in, and haſt infected others withall. For thou haſt preached, as I am informed, that the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar is not the very body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt after the conſecration. Tell me, haſt thou not thus preached? and is not this thine opinion?

Sir, quoth I, I perceive (as I ſaid) that ye ſeek matter againſt me. But ſeeing that I am bound in the Seſſions to my good behaviour for preaching, ing, which may be broken with words, and well I know not with what words; and alſo both mine authority to preach, and my living are taken from me, I think I am not bound to make you an anſwer.

Collins. Maſter Bland, do you not remember, that Saint Peter biddeth you make anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the faith that is in you?

A man not bound to anſwer ſuch as ask of purpoſe to bring him into trouble.

M. Bland upon promiſe talketh with them of the ſacrament.

Bland. I know that, and am content ſo to anſwer as that text biddeth: but I know that Maſter Archdeacon doth not ask me after that manner, but rather to bring me into trouble. Then they ſaid, No, ye ſhall not be troubled for any thing that ye ſay here.

Bland. I am content for knowledge ſake to commune with you in any matter, but not otherwiſe. And ſo they fell in reaſoning more than the ſpace of an hour, of the Sacrament, both againſt me. At the laſt Maſter Collins ſaid; Maſter Bland, will ye come and take in hand to anſwer ſuch matter on Munday next, as ſhall be laid to you?

Mark what fidelity is in the promiſe of theſe men.

Bland. Sir, ye ſaid I ſhould not be troubled for any thing that ſhould be ſaid here for learnings ſake. And they ſaid, ye ſhall not, but it is for other matters.

Bland. Sir, I am bound to appear, as ſome tell me, on Thurſday next at Aſhford, I am in doubt whether I can or no: yet I have purpoſed to be there, and ſo to go to London to Maſter Wiſeman, for an Obligation that he hath, whereby I ſhould receive certain mony to pay my debts withall. Then ſaid Maſter Archdeacon, I will write to Maſter Wiſeman, that ye ſhall ſuſtain no loſſe.

Bland. That ſhall not need: for I can ſuſtain no great loſſe, if I go not. But I pray you to let me have a longer day. No, quoth he.

M. Bland warned to appear again before them.

Bland. Sir, I cannot well come on Munday.

Harpſ. Wilt thou not come, when he ſo gently ſpeaketh to thee, where he may command thee?

Bland. I do not deny to come, but I deſire a longer day.

“ Note here the extreme dealing of the pretended Catholikes.

Harpſ. “Thou ſhalt have no other day; I charge thee to come on Munday.

Bland. Sir, I perceive it ſhall be for this or like matters: will it pleaſe you or Maſter Collins, for Gods ſake, to confer Scriptures privately with me in this matter, ſeeing ye ſay ye would ſo gladly win me?

Harpſ. With all my heart will I take the pains, and I will alſo borrow my Lord of Dovers Library, to have what books thou wilt: and thus they departed. Now the 17. of May at Aſhford I could not be releaſed, although I was called to the ſpirituall Court for the ſame matter, but was bound to appear at the Seſſions holden at Crambroke, the third of July.

Another appearance of M. Bland before the Archdeacon, and his fellows.

The ſecond appearance of M. Bland. M. Harpſfields words to Maſter Bland.

THe 21. day of May I appeared in the Chapter houſe, where was a great multitude of people, unlooked for of me; and Maſter Archdeacon ſaid thus to me; Ye are come here according as ye were appointed: and the cauſe is, that it hath pleaſed the Queens Highneſſe, here to place me, to ſee Gods holy word ſet forth, and to reform thoſe that are here fallen into great and hainous errours, to the great diſpleaſure of God, and the decay of Chriſts Sacraments, and contrary to the faith of the Catholike Church, whereof thou art notably known to be one that is ſore poyſoned with the ſame, and haſt infected and deceived many with thy evill preaching, which if thou wilt renounce, and come home again to the Catholike Church, both I and many other moe would be very glad; and I for my part ſhall be right glad to ſhew you the favour that lieth in me, as I ſaid unto you when you were appointed hither, becauſe ye then refuſed to ſatisfie again the people that ye had deceived. And whereas it is feined by you, that I ſhould openly diſpute the matter with you this day: although I did neither ſo intend nor appoint, yet I am content to diſpute the matter with thee, if thou wilt not without diſputation help to heal the ſouls that are brought to hellward by thee? What ſayeſt thou?

Falſe ſurmiſes pretended againſt Maſter Bland.

The anſwer of M. Bland to M. Harpſfields words.

Bland. I do proteſt before God and you all, that neither is my conſcience guilty of any errour or hereſie, neither that I ever taught any errour or hereſie willingly. And where your Maſterſhip ſaith, that I have feined an open diſputation with you, it is not true, as I can thus approve: Upon Saturday I was at Ugdens, and there Maſter Bingham laid it to my charge, that ſuch an open diſputation, as ye have here offered, ſhould be this day between you and me: Whereat I much marvelled, and ſaid to him, that before that preſent I never heard any ſuch word; neither would I anſwer nor diſpute: and to this can Maſter Vaghan, Maſter Drenden, Maſter Seth of Overland, and Maſter Ugden witneſſe; and further I ſaid to them, that I never ſpake to you of any diſputation, nor you to me. Now if your Maſterſhip have any thing to ſay to me by the Law, I will make anſwer to it.

M. Bland cleareth himſelf of the falſe report of M. Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Hear ye what he ſaith? His conſcience is clear. I pray thee whereon groundeſt thou thy conſcience? let me hear what thy faith is.

Bland. I know not why ye ſhould more ask me a reaſon of my faith, than any other man in this open audience?

Harpſ. Why thou heretick, art thou aſhamed of thy faith? if it were a Chriſtian belief, thou needeſt not to be aſhamed of it.

To beleeve the Articles of our Chriſtian faith never ſo well, will not ſuffice the Papiſts.

Bland. I am not aſhamed of my faith. For I beleeve in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jeſus Chriſt his onely Son our Lord, &c. with all the other Articles of the Creed; and I do beleeve all the holy Scriptures of God to be moſt certain and true.

Harpſ. Wilt thou declare no more than this?

Bland. No.

The Popiſh faith of Doctor Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Well, I will tell thee whereon I ground my faith: I do beleeve and ground my faith and conſcience upon all the Articles of the Creed, and upon all the holy Scriptures, Sacraments, and holy Doctors of the Church, and upon all the generall Councels that ever were ſince the Apoſtles time. Lo hereupon ground I my faith; with many words moe, which I well remember not. And when he could get no other anſwer of me, than I had ſaid before, he called for a Scribe to make an act againſt me. And after much communication, I ſaid; by what law and authority will ye proceed againſt me. Maſter Collins ſaid; By the Canon law.

M. Bland requireth to have his Counſeller.

Bland. I doubt whether it be in ſtrength or no. Yet I pray you let me have a Counſeller in the Law, and I will make anſwer according to the Law.

Harpſ. Why thou heretick, thou wilt not confeſſe thy faith to me, that have authority to demand it of thee, and yet I have confeſſed my faith to thee before all this audience. As concerning the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, thou haſt taught, that after the conſecration it is bread and wine, and not the body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. How ſayeſt thou, haſt thou not thus taught?

Bland. Sir, as concerning this matter of the Sacrament, when I was with you and Maſter Collins, ye ſaid then it was for other matters that I ſhould come hither: and further, that ye would be content at my deſire, to confer Scriptures with me, to ſee if ye could winne me; and ye ſaid, ye would borrow my Lord of Dovers Librarie, that I ſhould have what booke I would; and now ye require me thus to anſwer, contrarie to your promiſe, ere anie conference be had, and ſeeke rather to bring mee into trouble, than to winne me.

Harpſ. I will, as God ſhall helpe me, do the beſt to thee that I can, if thou wilt be anie thing conformable; and I truſt to diſſolve all thy doubts, if thou be willing to here. And I alſo will deſire theſe two worſhipfull men, my Lord of Dover, and Maſter Collins, to heare us.

Bland. No, ye ſhall pardon mee of that: there ſhall be no ſuch witneſſe. But when we agree, ſet to our hands. Hereat made the people a noiſe againſt me, for refuſing the witneſſe: and here had we many moe words, then I can rehearſe. But at the laſt I ſaid; Sir, will ye give me leave to aſke you one queſtion? And he ſaid, yea, with all my heart. For in that thou aſkeſt anie thing, there is ſome hope that thou mayeſt be wonne.

M. Blands queſtion to D. Harpsfield.

Bland. Sir, when it pleaſed Almightie God to ſend his Angel unto the Virgin Marie to ſalute her, and ſayed; Haile full of grace, &c. came anie ſubſtance from God our Father into the Virgins wombe to become man? whereat as well Maſter Archdeacon, as my Lord of Dover, and Maſter Collins, ſtaid. But my Lord ſpake the firſt, and ſaid; the holy Ghoſt came to her; and ere he had brought out his ſentence, Maſter Syriac Peters ſaid; Vertus altiſſimi obumbrauit. Truth, ſayd Maſter Archdeacon, it was the power of God, ſent by the holy Ghoſt. They had forgotten, that genitus fuit ex ſubſtantia patris; Or elſe they perceived whereunto this queſtion tended: and ſo both I and they left it; by what words I cannot tell. but I ſaid; Sir, ſhall I aſke one other? And hee ſayd, yea. Is there in the ſacrament, after the conſecration, Chriſts naturall bodie, with all the qualities of a naturall bodie, or no?

Another queſtion of Maſter Bland to Doctor Harpsfield.

The anſwer of D. Harpsfield to the queſtion.

Harpſ. Harke, ſayd Maſter Archdeacon: heare ye this hereticke? He thinkes it an abſurditie to grant all the quantities of Chriſts naturall body to be in the ſacrament. But it is no abſurditie. For even that naturall body that was borne of the Virgin Marie is glorified, and that ſame body is in the ſacrament after the conſecration. But perceive ye not the arrogancie of this heretick, that will put me to anſwer him, and hee will not anſwer me? he thought to put me to a pinch with his queſtion; for I tell you it is a learned queſtion.

Bland. So if ye be ſo much diſcontented with mee, I will ſay no more; yet I would all men heard, that ye ſay the glorified body of Chriſt is in the ſacrament, after the conſecration.

How can the glorified body be in the ſacrament, when the ſacrament was given before the body was crucified, and it was crucified before it was glorified?

Harpſ. I may call thee groſſe ignorant. Thou groſſe ignorant, is not the ſame body glorified, that was borne of the Virgin Marie? is it then anie abſurditie to grant that to bee in the ſacrament? And whiles he ſpake manie other words, I ſaid to Maſter Petit, that the ſacrament was inſtituted, delivered, and received of his Apoſtles, before Chriſts body was crucified; and it was crucified before it was glorified; which ſaying Maſter Petit partly recited to Maſter Archdeacon.

The body unglorified was given in the ſacrament, in a glorified act, quoth Harpsfield.

Harpſ. Thou art without all learning. Was not Chriſts body given to his Apoſtles, as in a glorified act? and yet no inconvenience, although his naturall body was not crucified; for when he was born of the Virgin Marie without paine, was not that the act of a glorified body? And when he walked on the water, and when he came into the houſe to his Apoſtles, the doors being ſhut faſt, were not theſe acts of a glorified body?

Dover. Then my Lord of Dover helped him to a better place, and ſaid; when Chriſt was in Mount Thabor, he was there glorified in his Apoſtles ſight.

Harpſ. Ye ſay truth, my Lord, he was glorified in the ſight of three of his Apoſtles.

Bland. This me think is new doctrine.

D. Harpsfield reviveth the bill of complaint againſt M. Bland.

Harpſ. Well, ſeeing he will by no other way be reformed, let the people come in and prove theſe matters againſt him. And therewith the Archdeacon brought forth a copy of the Bill of complaint that was put againſt me at Chriſtmas, and about that we talked a little. And then Maſter Archdeacon roſe up, and ſaid; See ye good people, that know this matter, that ye come in, and prove it againſt him. Whereunto anſwered Thomas Auſten; I pray you, ſaid he, let us be no more troubled with him. And then ſpake John Auſten, and Heath with one eye, and began to accuſe me; but no anſwer they could have of me, but do to me what ye can by law, and I will anſwer it. Then ſaid Thomas Auſten, Bland, ye were once abjured.

Tho. Auſten chargeth M. Bland with another untruth.

Bland. Ye ſay not truly, goodman Auſten, I was never abjured. Either, ſaid he, ye were abjured, or elſe ye had the Kings pardon. Neither of both; ye ſpeak this of malice; with many other brabling words moe. Then Maſter Archdeacon departed, and left Maſter Collins to command me to appear the next day. Howbeit, for certain other urgent buſineſſe that I had, I did not appear, but wrote a letter to M. Commiſſary, deſiring him to reſpite the matter till my coming home again; and if he would not, I would be content to ſubmit my ſelf to the law when I came home.

M. Bland appearing at Seſſions in Cranbroke.

Now about the 28 day of June I came to M. Commiſſary, to ſhew him of my return, and offered my ſelf to tatisfie the law, if it were proceeded againſt me, before Maſter Cockes of Sturray, and Markes the Apparitor; but Maſter Commiſſary ſaid gently, he had done nothing againſt me. And ſo appointed me to appear before him the Friday ſevennight after. Now in the mean time was the Seſſions holden at Cranbroke, where I was bound to appear; and carrying ſurety with me to be bound again, for I looked for none other, did appear the third day of July.

Sir John Bakers talk with M. Bland.

M. Blands brought up by D. Lupton, Provoſt of Eaton Colledge.

And ſir John Baker ſaid; Bland, ye are, as we hear ſay, a Scot; where were ye born and brought up? And I ſaid I was born in England. And he ſaid, where? And I ſaid, in Sedber, and brought up by one Docto Lupton, Provoſt of Eaton Colledge. Well, ſaid he, I know him well. Remain to your bond till afternoon.

Sir Thomas Moyles words.

M. Bland laid in Maidſton Jayl.

M. Bland carried to the Aſſize at Rocheſter.

Then ſaid ſir Thomas Moyle, Ah Bland, thou art a ſtiffe-necked fellow. Thou wilt not obey the law, nor anſwer when thou art called. No will, quoth ſir John Baker? Maſter Sheriffe, take him to your ward: and the Bayliffe ſet me in the ſtocks, with other, and would not hear me ſpeak one word; and ſo we remained in the Jayle of Maidſton, till a fortnight before Michaelmas, or thereabout; and then we were carried to Rocheſter, to the Aſſize holden there, where we were among the priſoners two dayes: and when we were called, and the Judges of Aſſize asked our cauſes, when my cauſe was rehearſed, Maſter Barrow, Clerk of the peace ſaid, that I was an excommunicate perſon.

M. Bland carried again to Maidſton Caſtle.

Then Maſter Roper of Linſted talked with the Judges, but what I am not able to ſay. But the Judges of Aſſize ſaid; Take them to Maidſton again, and bring them to the Seſſions that ſhall be holden next at the town of Maldin: Howbeit, the Sheriffe did not ſend for us, ſo that we tarried at Maidſtone till the Seſſions holden at Greenewich, the 18 and 19 of February. I and other being within the barre amongſt the fellons, and irons upon our armes, were called out the later day by the Jayler and Bayliffes, and eaſed of our irons, and carried by them into the town to ſir John Baker, Maſter Petit, Maſter Webbe, and two other whom I know not.

Another examination of Maſter Bland before ſir Iohn Baker.

Baker, Bland wherefore were ye caſt into priſon?

Bland. I cannot well tell. Your Maſterſhip caſt me in.

Baker. Yea, but wherefore were ye in before that time?

Bland. For an unjuſt complaint put upon me.

Baker. What was the complaint?

Bland. I told him as truly and briefly as I could.

Baker. Let me ſee thy book; and I took him a Latine Teſtament.

Baker. Will ye go to the Church, and obey and follow the Queenes proceedings, and do as an honeſt man ſhould do.

Bland. I truſt in God to do no otherwiſe but as an honeſt man ſhould do.

Baker. Will ye do as I ſayd?

A queſtion propounded to ſir John Baker.

Bland. Will it pleaſe your Maſterſhip to give me leave to ask you a queſtion?

Baker. Yea.

Bland. Sir, may a man do any thing that his conſcience is not ſatisfied in to be good?

Baker. Away, away, and threw down the book, and ſayed, It is no Teſtament. And I ſaid, Yes. And Maſter Web took it up, and ſaid unto me marvellous gently; Maſter Bland, I knew you when ye were out of this opinion. I would to God ye would reforme your ſelf; with better words then I will write. And I ſaid; If ye have known me of another opinion then I am of now, it was for lack of knowledge.

Haſty judgement of a Juſtice.

Baker. Yea, ſayeſt thou ſo? by St. Marie, and thou hold thee there, I will give ſixe fagots to burne thee with all, ere thou ſhouldeſt be unburned: hence knave, hence. And ſo were we reprieved into our place again within the barre. And at night, when judgement of fellons and all was done, we were called, and the Judge ſaid to the Jayler; Take them with you, and deliver them to the Ordinarie, and if they will not be reformed let them be delivered to us againe, and they ſhall have judgement and execution. And one of our companie ſaid; My Lord, if we be killed at your hands for Chriſts ſake, we ſhall live with him for ever.

M. Bland and his fellows ſent to the Ordinary by ſir John Baker.

Another appearance of Maſter Bland in the Spirituall Court.

M. Bland brought again to the caſtle of Canterbury. The B. of Dover, M. Collins, maſter Mills, with others.

THen came we to the Caſtle of Canterburie, and there we remained till the ſecond day of March, at which day we were brought into the Chapterhouſe of Creechurch, where were ſet the Suffragane of Canterburie, Maſter Collins, Maſter Milles, with other; and then went to them Maſter Orenden, Maſter Petit, Maſter Web and Maſter Hardes, Juſtices. And when I was called, Maſter Web ſayd; Here wee preſent this man unto you, as one vehemently ſuſpect of hereſie.

Bland. And I ſaid; Maſter Web, ye have no cauſe to ſuſpect mee of hereſie. I have been a priſoner this whole yeere, and no matter proved againſt me. I pray you wherefore have I been ſo long kept in priſon?

Web. Leave your arrogant asking of queſtions, and anſwer to that that is laid to your charge.

The anſwers of M. Bland firſt to the Juſtices.

Bland. I do ſo; for I ſay you have no cauſe to ſuſpect me of hereſie.

Web. Yes; ye denied to ſir John Baker, to be conformable to the Queens proceedings.

Bland. Is it a juſt cauſe to ſuſpect me of hereſie, for asking a queſtion with leave? So we had moe words there then I well remember.

Then ſtood up Maſter Petit, and ſayd; Ye were caſt into priſon, becauſe ye fled away from your Ordinarie.

Bland. Then have I had wrong. For I never fled, nor diſobeyed mine Ordinarie, nor did any thing contrarie to the law. Let them now ſay if I did: but they ſaid nothing. And when I ſaw they held their peace, I ſaid; Maſter Commiſſarie, have you been the cauſe of this mine impriſonment? No quoth he; ye know that when ye went from me, ye were appointed to appeare the Friday after the Seſſions, Here I was ſuffered to ſpeak no more, but ſhut up in a corner till my companions were likewiſe preſented, and then we were ſent to Weſtgate into priſon, and were put in ſeverall cloſe holds, that never one of us could ſpeake to another, nor any man was permitted to come to us. We were foure times at this appearance: but one they diſpatched by what means I cannot tell: whoſe name was Cornewall, a Tanner.

Cornwall a Tanner, diſpatched in ſecret priſon.

And thus hitherto paſſed the talke betweene Bland and the Juſtices, and certain Gentlemen of the Shire. Now followeth the order of the reaſoning betweene him and the Clergie men, before whom he was examined. But foraſmuch as the chiefeſt doer and Judge againſt him was the Biſhop of Dover or Suffragan of Canterburie, called Doctor Richard Thorneton, to the intent it may appear what little truth or conſtancie is in theſe Catholike perſecutors, I thought here to exhibite by the way a certain Popiſh letter, written of a Papiſt unto him. Wherein is declared what a Goſpeller the ſayd Richard Thorneton was in King Edwards time, which now turning with the world, ſheweth himſelf ſuch a bitter perſecutor againſt Gods ſervants in Queene Maries time. The copy of this letter here followeth.

A Copy of a Popiſh Letter written to the Biſhop of Dover, by one Thomas Goldwell, a Prieſt, declaring what a Profeſſor he was in King Edwards time.

The meanes of the arrivall of Cardinall Poole.

RIght Reverend, and my good Lord, after my hearty thanks for your good cheer at my laſt being with your Lordſhip, this ſhall be to certifie you, that as ſoon as I arrived with my Lords Grace, I gave him your letters, but I had much work to obtain any thing of him for you. For there hath been given very evill informations of you, and it hath been ſaid, that you have concurred with all manner of evill proceedings, the which hath theſe yeers paſt been in England, as well againſt the holy Sacrament of the Altar, and againſt the ſupreme authority of Chriſts Vicar in earth, as with the uſe of the abominable late Communion, and with the marriage of Prieſts, as well religious as ſecular; and that you have given orders to (I cannot tell how many) baſe, unlearned, and evill diſpoſed people, by reaſon of the which they have taken upon them to preach, and to do much hurt in Kent. So that men think that yet if any new mutation, the which God forbid, ſhould chance, you would be as ready to change as any other. And indeed it maketh me to fear the ſame, by reaſon that not-withſtanding it hath pleaſed Almighty God to provide, that your abſolution was ſent unto you (not looking, I dare ſay, for any ſuch thing) of all manner of matters paſt, yet your Lordſhip (more regarding the vanitie of the world, then the offence of God, the which he only knoweth how much it grieves me, for the due love I bear unto you) preſumed to ſing Maſſe in Pontificalibus, the holy daies immediately following, and alſo to miniſtrate to children the ſacrament of Confirmation, becauſe that one (being a member of the Divell) did ſomewhat comfort you ſo to do.

Thorneton Biſhop of Dover a great doer againſt the Pope and Sacrament of the Altar, in King Edwards time.

Oh my Lord, what honour ſhould it have been both to God and your ſelf, and alſo edification to all good people, (though all worldly men and Hereticks would therefore have laught you to ſcorn) if you conſidering your great offences toward God, and his goodneſſe again toward you, would like as you have offended in the face of the world, to the damnation of many, likewiſe have ſhewed your ſelf penitent in the face of the world, to the edification of many, and not only to have celebrate for vanitie Pontificaliter; but alſo for a time to have abſtained for reverence totaliter from the Altar, according to the old cuſtome of the Church. The which I have alſo ſeen obſerved of ſome honeſt men, not being thereto injoyned of any man. But that which is paſt cannot be called again. And I thought it not my part to leave your Lordſhip mine old friend and Maſter in the mire. Wherefore I ceaſed not to ſolicite your cauſe with my Lords Grace, till at the laſt I obtained of his Grace for your Lordſhip all the faculties, of the which I ſend you a Copy here incloſed, partly for your own conſolation, and partly for other, deſiring your Lordſhip to uſe them to the honour of God, that there come to me thereof no rebuke: not publiſhing them to any perſon, but to ſuch that you know will gladly receive them. For hitherto there is never a Biſhop in England, who hath granted him ſo great authority concerning thoſe which be under his cure. Only Maſter Archdeacon hath the like, and in one thing more great then be theſe your Lordſhips. Wherefore your Lordſhip ſhall do well to remit unto him all ſuch Prieſts as have cure of ſoul, whether they be beneficed men, or Pariſh Prieſts. For he hath not only authority to abſolve them as you have, but alſo to give them authority to abſolve ſuch as be underneath their cures. And thus I commit your Lordſhip to the protection of Almighty God. Written at Bruſſell the 16. of June, 1554.

Power to give abſolution granted to the biſhop of Dover from the Cardinall.

Your Lordſhips Beadman,
Thomas Goldwell.

And thus much concerning the Biſhop of Dover, by way of digreſſion. Now to return again to the examinations of Maſter Bland, let us hear his own report of his anſwers, as followeth.

Here followeth mine anſwer, as nigh as I can call to remembrance, every word, and ſentence; yet if any that was preſent can help to perfect it, I would be glad. But yet this dare I ſay, that there is never one ſentence, but it was openly ſpoken the ninth of March in the Chapterhouſe of Creechurch, in the preſence of as many as they had choſen, the Maior of the Citie being called to be aſſiſtant, and all other ſhut out.

The anſwer of Maſter Bland in his appearance before the Commiſſary, and other in the ſpirituall Court.

Maſter Collins ſaid; Maſter Bland, ye know that ye are preſented unto us as one ſuſpected of hereſie. How ſay ye, be ye contented to reform your ſelf to the Lawes of this Realm, and of the holy Church?

Bland. I deny that I am ſuſpected juſtly of hereſie; and that ye heard when I was preſented, that I denied the ſuſpicion to be juſt, but to defend the unjuſt puniſhment that I have ſuffered: neither can ye prove that any occaſion hath been given by me, whereby any man ſhould ſuſpect me therein. But if you have any law or authoritie to proceed againſt me for any thing done for a whole yeer ago and more, I will anſwer to it.

The anſwers of M. Bland to the Clergy men.

M. Bland unjuſtly ſuſpected of hereſie, and more unjuſtly puniſhed.

Collins. Ye were convented before Maſter Archdeacon and me, and matter of hereſie laid to your charge.

Bland. That matter was done and ſaid a whole yeer ago, and for that I have been in priſon this yeer and more. If ye have any thing againſt me by any law, I deſire you to let me know the law and the matter, and I will anſwer according to the law.

Then ſaid my Lord Suffragan; but that I am one of the Judges, I would riſe, and ſtand by thee, and accuſe thee to be a Sacramentary, and bring witneſſe to prove it; yea, and further, that thou haſt called the Maſſe an abominable Idoll.

Bland. You, my Lord, never heard me ſay ſo: But I heard you once ſay, that in your conſcience ye had abhorred the Maſſe three yeers. Thou lyeſt, quoth he, I never ſaid ſo.

The biſhop of Dover once abhorred the Maſſe.

Bland. My Lord, if they might be heard, I can bring witneſſe to approve it, with the day, time, and place; and I once did hear M. Collins at a viſitation in Wingham ſay, that Chriſt was a full ſatisfaction for all ſin preſent, paſt, and to come, contrary to that he ſaith now.

Collins the Commiſſary, profeſſed before the true Doctrine of free Juſtification by Chriſt.

And here we had more words of this matter, which I let paſſe for lack of good remembrance.

Maſter Collins ſaid, this is but a drift. You were better anſwer now, for elſe you ſhall to priſon again, and be called on Munday, and have Articles laid to you, and if ye then anſwer not directly, ye ſhall be condemned pro confeſſo, & that will be worſe for you.

Bland. Sir, I do not now, nor will not then deny to anſwer to any thing that ye can lay to my charge by the law; wherefore I truſt ye will let me have the benefit of the law.

Collins. This is the law, that if ye be required of the Ordinary, Reddere rationem fidei, then may ye not deny it. And that we do now.

Bland. To that then will I anſwer. For I beleeve in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, and in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord, with all the other Articles of the ſame Creed: And I beleeve all the Articles contained both in the Creed called the Maſſe Creed, and in the Creed of Athanaſius: And I do beleeve, that all the holy Scriptures, and all things therein contained, are moſt true.

M. Bland confeſſeth all the Articles of his Creede.

If the faith of the Sacrament be in the Scripture, and ſo neceſſary a thing, why did not the Apoſtles then put it in the Creed, and make thirteen Articles? If it be not in the Scripture, nor yet put in the Creed, why then doth the Pope ſo extremly binde us unto it?

Collins. This will not ſerve you: ye muſt anſwer to all ſuch Articles in all theſe as ſhall be laid to you, or asked of you.

Bland. Let me know the law that it is in that force (without any juſt cauſe of ſuſpicion proved againſt me) and I will anſwer.

Collins. How ſay ye, will ye anſwer?

Bland. Sir, I have anſwered you. Have him away, ſaid my Lord of Dover; he had better have anſwered.

Bland. My Lord, I am ready to anſwer, if ye have any thing againſt me by the law

Anno 1555.

B. Dover. Ye have preached many hereſies in Adeſham, where I am Parſon now; and therefore ye muſt make anſwer to them.

Bland. Lay them to my charge by the law, and I will anſwer them, if ye can approve, that I am bound to anſwer to that was done a yéer or more ago; for if ye may do that, ye may alſo lay to my charge, and compell me to anſwer to all things done in all my life I trow.

Collins. It is not a yéer ago ſince you were before Maſter Archdeacon and me.

M. Bland appeared at five Seſsions, and could not have his cauſe tried.

Bland. It is truth, it is a yéer and ten wéeks ſince the words were ſpoken; and I have béen a priſoner ever ſince, and have béen at five Seſſions, and never could have my cauſe tryed. We think your charities ſhould think it puniſhment enough, if I had béen guilty.

Collins. All this will not ſerve you; you muſt néeds anſwer, and it will be better for you to anſwer now, then another time. Will ye reforme your ſelf, and go to the Church, and worſhip Chriſt in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and be obedient unto all the Quéens laws?

M. Bland called before the ſpirituall Judges, not for any matter they had, but that they would have againſt him.

Bland. I pray you wherefore am I brought hither?

Collins. To anſwer to ſuch things as are demanded of you.

Bland. Sir, I thought ye had ſome matters againſt me by the law.

Collins. Well, on Munday at 9. of the clock ye ſhall ſée the law, and have articles laid unto you.

Then they had ſpied Maſter Coxe the Lawyer, and called him in, and ſaid; Here is a Lawyer can tell you are bound by the law to anſwer: and he ſaid, as they had ſaid.

Col. Do ye not beléeve, that after the conſecration of the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, there remaineth no ſubſtance of bread, but the ſubſtance of Jeſus Chriſt, both God and man?

M. Bland denieth the realty of Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament.

Bland. Maſter Commiſſary, I know not by any law why ye ſhould ask me that queſtion more then any other man here. And after a little talk, my Lord of Dover asked me this queſtion; Doeſt not thou beléeve, after the conſecration, that it is the body of Chriſt? And I ſaid, No, I do not ſo beléeve: for the Scriptures do not teach me, that there ſhould remain the fleſh of Chriſt, to eat as a man ſhould eat mans fleſh.

The Capernaites took Chriſt to ſpeak literally of his body, and ſo do the Papiſts, and not the Proteſtants.

Then Maſter Glaſier ſaid, that was the opinion of the Capernaites: there is no man here of that opinion, and ſpake long of cutting of Chriſts body, as men cut fleſh in the ſhambles.

Then M. Doctor Faucet ſaid; Maſter Bland, foraſmuch as you and I were brought up both in one houſe, and born both in one Pariſh, I would be as glad as any man alive to do you good: but ye may not thus ſtand againſt the Church. For Chriſt ſaith; Ye muſt humble your ſelf, and take up his croſſe, and follow him. And to humble your ſelf in this place, is to be content, and not ſtick to your own judgement, but to humble your ſelf to the holy Church, which hath determined, that after the conſecration there remaineth no bread, but the naturall body and blood of Chriſt.

Determination of the Church is to be followed ſo far as the Church determineth by the Scriptures.

Bland. Maſter Doctor, if ye take humbling of our ſelves in that place, to admit the determination of the Church, then muſt we know by the Scriptures, that the ſame Church determined nothing but according to the Scriptures, as this is not: and therefore I do not beléeve any ſuch tranſubſtantiation, nor never will, God willing. Then (quoth he) I have done with you: I will no more pray for you then for a dog.

Then ſaid Maſter Glaſier; How think ye? Did Paul when he ſaid; Is not the bread that we break a partaking of the body of Chriſt? Did he mean Bakers bread?

Bland. Though he did not mean Bakers bread, that doth not prove that he brake naturall and reall fleſh.

Queen Mary.

Glaſier. No, by Saint Mary, we ſay not ſo, but we ſay it is the naturall body glorified, under the formes of bread and wine.

Argument. Feſ- ti- no. The glorified body of Chriſt was not crucified. The Apoſtles did eat the body crucified: Ergo, the Apoſtles did not eat the glorified body of Chriſt.

Bland. Then the Apoſtles had it not as we have; or elſe his glorified body was crucified for us.

Glaſier. Tuſh, ye do not underſtand the Scriptures. For Chriſts body was ever glorified, in that it was ſo marvellouſly united to the Godhead: yea, and he ſhewed his body divers times glorified, as in the Mount Thabor: And when he walked on the water, we ſée he was light, and had no weight in him. Was not that then a glorified body?

Bland. Then belike Peters body was glorified, if walking on the water was the déed of a glorified body: and the iron that Elizeus made to ſwim upon the water.

Dover. Tuſh, quoth my Lord of Dover, that was done by prayer. But they made ſuch a noiſe with laughing, that I heard no more what my Lord ſaid.

It availeth not to reaſon with the Papiſts in time of their Kingdome.

Bland. Maſters, I know that it availeth us nothing to reaſon with you, no more then it booted you in the time of the Goſpel. For then neither the reaſon of Eckius, Cochlæus, nor yet of detection of the Divels ſophiſtry of my Lord Chancellors doing, could take any place. And it is known to ſome that be here, that ſomething I can ſay in them.

Dover. No, you know Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, and ſuch other.

Bland. Indéed, my Lord, I have ſéen part of their doings.

Dover. That is ſéen by thée to day.

Glaſier. I was glad, when I heard you ſay ye beléeved the Catholike Church; and now go you from it?

Bland. No that I do not.

The Church viſible.

Glaſier. Ye know that Chriſt ſaith; If thy brother have offended thee, go and reconcile him between thee and him. If he hear thee not, take two or three with thee, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all things may be eſtabliſhed. If he hear not them, Dic Eccleſiæ; If he hear not the Church, take him as an heathen. I pray you where could ye have found this Church of yours fifty yéers ago?

Bland. Ye know that the true Church did not at all times flouriſh, but was wonderfully perſecuted.

Bland commanded away.

Dover. Then my Lord cryed; No more, I command you to hold your peace. Have him away, and bring in another.

Collins. Ye ſhall come again on Munday, at nine of the clock, and in the mean time ye ſhall have whom ye will to confer withall: your friend D. Faucet, or M. Glaſier, if ye deſire them.

Bland. I will refuſe to talk with no man; as for any conference of your part, it is but weak lawes, eſtabliſhed as they are. But when there was no law, I did deſire conference. And ſo for that time I departed.

The Munday after we were brought forth to the ſame place again; and then Maſter Collins began to ſpeak to me, but after what manner, it is clean out of my minde: but the end was, that I would reform my ſelf. But as I did before, I demanded what they had to lay to my charge, and to ſée the law, which they ſaid before I ſhould ſée.

Dover. What néeds that? we have enough againſt you. * For ye denied to me tranſubſtantiation in the ſacrament.

* Yea but wh then did you priſon him a whole yéer before.

Bland. I did refuſe to anſwer, till ye promiſed that I ſhould ſée the law, whereby ye may compell me to anſwer.

Dover. My Lord took the Scribes Book, and read the anſwer that I made to Doctor Faucets reaſon, which I knew not that they had written.

Bland. My Lord, I made you no ſuch anſwer when ye asked me. I take M. Collins and M. Glaſier to witneſſe. Then they brought forth a Decretall, a Book of the Biſhop of Romes law, to binde me to anſwer, which my heart abhorred to look upon. The effect was, that the Ordinary had authority to examine, and that they ſo examined muſt needs anſwer. But I ſaid, that it meaned of ſuch as were juſtly ſuſpect, as I was not. And here we had much communication. For I charged them with unjuſt impriſonment, which they could not avoide.

The Popes key.

But M. Oxenden would have helped them, and ſaid, the Juſtices put me in priſon for a Sermon ſeditiouſly ſpoken, and for troubling a Prieſt at Maſſe.

M. Oxenden helpeth the Catholikes.

Bland. That is not true. For after I had been ten weeks in priſon, I was bayled, till I was caſt in again, and (as the Juſtice ſaid) for the diſobeying mine Ordinary, which I never did.

Collins. Will yee be content to conferre with ſome? It will be better for you; now we offer it you, becauſe ye would not deſire it.

Bland. As I did not refuſe before, no more will I now. But I did not perceive before, but that one thing might have come, without any leave-asking, to conferre the Scriptures: and therefore I looked that Doctor Faucet would have come to me without deſiring, if any commoditie to me had been in conference; for though I was never able to do him good, yet once I was his Tutor.

M. Bland was tutor to Doctor Faucet.

Collins. Are ye content to come to his chamber at afternoon?

Bland. Sir, I am a priſoner, and therefore it is meete that I obey, and come whither you will, and ſo departed. At this time we were three. But they tooke another to appear before them the Tueſday ſevennight after. And when he came, I knew not what was done, but that I hear they excommunicated him, and let him go. His name was Miller, a Clothier.

Theſe three belike were Bland, Sheterden, and Middleton. Miller a Clothier excommunicate, and let go.

Here followeth a certain confutation of Maſter Bland againſt falſe and manifeſt abſurditities, granted by Maſter Milles, Prieſt of Chriſts Church in Canterbury.

Milles. We ſay, that Chriſt is in or under the Sacrament really and corporally, which are the formes of bread and wine, and that there is his body contained inviſibly, and the qualities which we do ſee, as whiteneſſe and roundneſſe, be there without ſubſtance by Gods power, as quantity and weight be there alſo by inviſible meaſure.

The Popiſh faith of the Sacrament.

Bland. This is your own Divinity, to make accidents the Sacrament, and Chriſts reall body inviſibly contained in them, and ſo to deſtroy the Sacrament. And yet the Doctors ſay; * Materia Sacramenti eſt panis & vinum. And God by his power worketh no miracles with Hoc eſt corpus meum, ſo to change the ſubſtance of bread and wine into his body and bloud, in that he maketh accidents to be without their ſubſtance by inviſible meaſure. I am aſhamed to ſee you ſo deſtroy Chriſts Sacrament, contrary to your own Doctors, and trifle with Gods work.

* 1. The matter of the Sacrament is bread and wine.

Milles. To Chriſt is given all power in Heaven and in earth, ſo that by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be, and is where he liſteth, and is in the Sacrament really and corporally without occupying of place; for a glorified body occupieth no place.

If Chriſt be able to be where he liſt, and occupy no place: why then is not he able to be as well under the ſubſtance of bread, as under the accidents of bread, ſeeing he is omnipotent?

Bland. Mark your own reaſon. All power is given to Chriſt both in Heaven and Earth; by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he liſt: Ergo, he is in the Sacrament really and corporally, without occupying of place.

I deny your argument; for it followeth neither of your Maior nor Minor. And firſt I would learn of you, how you know that Chriſt liſteth to be preſent at every Prieſts liſt. For if the Prieſt liſt not to ſay your Maſſe, then Chriſt liſteth not to be there.

Chriſt may be where he liſt: Ergo, Chriſt is really in the Sacrament, without occupying of place. The antecedent is true, and the conſequence falſe.

Again, ye ſay, all power is given unto Chriſt both in Heaven and in Earth, ſo that that is the cauſe by your reaſon, that by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he liſt: and by that reaſon he had no power of his Godhead, till he had his humane body, and then he was not equall with the Father in divinity: for all power was not given to Chriſt, before the humanitie and the Godhead were knit together, neither was he Filius. Here is more danger then yee are ware of; if ye would ſtand to it with juſt Judges.

Milles. We eate Chriſts fleſh and bloud ſpiritually when we receive it with Faith and Charitie. And we alſo do eate it corporally in the Sacrament; and the body that we ſo receive hath life. For the Godhead is annexed thereto: which although it be received with the body of Chriſt, yet it is not viſible after a groſſe ſort, and the fleſh of Chriſt that we receive is lively; for it hath the Spirit of God joyned to it. And if a man be drunken, it is not by receiving of the bloud of Chriſt: for it is contrary to the nature of Chriſts bloud. If he be drunken, it is by the qualities and (a) quantities, without ſubſtance of bloud.

a Caſe being put that the Prieſt taking a great quantity in the Chalice, be made drunk, which of theſe three is it that maketh him drunk? the nature of bloud? the accidents only of wine? or elſe the true ſubſtance of wine? let any reaſonable man judge.

Bland. I am glad that you are ſo much againſt all men, to ſay that Chriſts body is alive in the Sacrament; it may fortune to bring you to the truth in time to come. Me think it is evill to keep Chriſts body alive in the Pixe, or elſe muſt yee grant, that he is alive in receiving, and dead in the Pixe. And ye ſay truth, that it is (b) not the naturall receiving of Chriſts bloud that maketh a man drunken; for it is the nature of wine that doth that, which ye deny not.

Argument. b Chriſts bloud hath not that quality to make a man drunk; receiving of that in the chalice can make a man drunk: Ergo, that in the chalice cannot be the bloud of Chriſt.

And a more truth ye confeſſe then ye did think, when ye ſaid; If a man be drunken, it is by the qualities and quantities, without the ſubſtance of bloud; for indeed bloud hath no ſuch qualities with it: by which it is evident that there is no naturall bloud.

If a man be drunken with wine conſecrated, it muſt be a miracle, as I think you will have it, that the ſaid accidents ſhould be without their naturall ſubſtance, and work all the operations of both ſubſtance and accidents: and ſo it followeth, that a man may be drunken by miracle. The body that ye receive, ye ſay, is alive, becauſe it is annexed to the Godhead, and the fleſh that ye receive is lively, becauſe it hath the Spirit of God joyned to it.

This diviſion is of your new inventions, to divide the body and the fleſh, the one alive by the Godhead, the other lively by Gods Spirit, and both one Sacrament: ye make of it a thing ſo fantaſticall, that ye imagine a body without fleſh, and fleſh without a body, as ye do qualities and quantities without ſubſtance, and a living body without qualities and quantities.

Fantaſticall abſurdities in the Popes doctrine to be noted.

Milles. If caſe ſo require, and there be a godly intent in the Miniſter to conſecrate, after the conſecration thereof there is preſent the body and bloud of Chriſt, and no other ſubſtance, but accidents without ſubſtance to a true beleever.

c Three inconveniences granted by the Papiſts.

1. That a Tun of Wine being conſecrated, nothing remaineth but accidents: which is falſe by the operation thereof.

2. Where he ſaith, that the Word of God doth not conſecrate without the intent of the Prieſt; which is againſt their own doctrine, ſaying, that the wickedneſſe of the Prieſt miniſheth not the Sacrament.

3. Where he ſaith, that to the unbeleever it is not the Sacrament as the Papiſts ſay, that the wicked receive the body.

Bland. Ye grant three abſurdities, c that in a tun of wine conſecrated is nothing but accidents: and to increaſe it withall, yee have brought in two inconveniences; Firſt, that it is not the Word of God that doth conſecrate, but the intent of the Prieſt muſt help it; and if that lack, yee ſeem to grant no conſecration, though the Prieſt ſpeak the Word; and yet your Doctors ſay, that the wickedneſſe of the Prieſt miniſheth not the Sacrament.

And to an unbeleever ye ſeem to ſay, that it is not the ſame that it is to the true beleever; and then muſt the beleever have ſomething to do in the conſecration. Incidit in ſcyllam qui vult vitare charibdim.

Milles. The ſubſtance of Chriſts body doth not fill the Mouſes belly. For although he doth receive the outward formes of bread and wine, yet he doth not receive the ſubſtance inwardly, but without violation. And a Mouſe doth not eats the body of Chriſt, to ſpeak properly; for it doth not feed him ſpiritually or corporally, as it doth man, becauſe he doth not receive it to any inducement of immortality to the fleſh.

Argument.

A contrario ſenſu.

d The Mouſe receiveth not the body inwardly, but without violation.

Ergo, with violation he receiveth the body inwardly.

Argument.

The Mouſe violateth not the body of Chriſt.

The Mouſe violateth the ſubſtance which he eateth:

Ergo, the Mouſe eateth no ſubſtance of Chriſts body.

e The Mouſe and the unbeleever receive the body of Chriſt both alike, by the Papiſts doctrine.

f Argument.

No Mouſe can live with accidents only without ſubſtance.

A Mouſe may live with conſecrated hoſts.

Ergo, conſecrated hoſts have not only accidents, but the ſubſtance of bread.

Bland. Ye make not your doctrine plain to be underſtood: we muſt know how a Mouſe can receive the ſubſtance inwardly and outwardly. Ye ſay, he doth not receive the ſubſtance d inwardly, but without violation: Ergo, with violation he receiveth the ſubſtance inwardly. Ye ſay that the Mouſe cannot violate Chriſts body; but he violateth the ſubſtance that he eateth. And this your proper ſpeech doth import as much, as that the Mouſe ſhould eat the Sacrament to as great effect, and the ſame thing, as doth the unworthy receiver. For if that be the cauſe that ſhe properly eateth not the body of Chriſt, becauſe ſhe doth not feed upon it ſpiritually nor corporally, nor receiveth it to any inducement of immortality, as ye ſay; then it followeth, that the unbeleever and the e Mouſe receive both one thing. And yet it cannot be denied, but the f Mouſe will live with conſecrated bread, and then ye muſt grant this abſurdity, that a ſubſtance is nouriſhed and fed only with accidents.

Milles. Mens bodies be fed with Chriſts body, as with immortall meate, by reaſon of the Godhead annexed to eternall life; but mens bodies be corporally nouriſhed with qualities and formes of Bread and Wine: and we deny, that by the Sacramentall eating any groſſe humour turned into bloud, is made miraculouſly in the body.

Another abſurdity, that mens bodies be nouriſhed naturally with accidents and qualities.

Bland. Where it cannot be denied that a man may live, and naturally be nouriſhed in his naturall body with the Sacramentall bread and Wine conſecrated; yee cannot avoide that: but then yee turn to the ſpirituall nouriſhing of mans body, by Chriſts body and Godhead annexed, which is nothing to put away the abſurdity, that either a mans naturall body ſhould be fed naturally with accidents, or elſe to have them changed into groſſe humours. But ye ſay, mens bodies be corporally nouriſhed with qualities and forms of Bread and Wine; and then muſt ye needs grant, that qualities and quantities muſt be made ſubſtance in man. For ex eiſdem ſunt & nutriuntur mixta, or elſe is all that is the nutriment in man accidents and no ſubſtance.

Milles. If the formes of Bread and Wine be burned, or wormes ingendred, it is no derogation to the body of Chriſt, becauſe the preſence of his body ceaſeth to be there, and no ſubſtance cometh again.

Another abſurdity, that ſubſtance is made of accidents, when aſhes or worms be made of the formes of bread and wine.

Bland. Ye grant here, that a ſubſtance may be made of accidents, as aſhes or wormes: but I think you will have it by your miracles, and this I count a more abſurdity then the other, that Chriſts body ſhould ceaſe to be there, and no ſubſtance to come again; for no word in all the whole Bible ſeems to ſerve you for the ceaſing of his preſence, though we granted you, which we do not, that it were there. God Almighty open your heart, if it be his will and pleaſure, to ſee the truth. And if I thought not my death to be at hand, I would anſwer you to all the reſt, in theſe and all other my doings.

I ſubmit my ſelf to our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and his holy Word, deſiring you in the bowels of Chriſt to do the ſame.

Your Orator in the Lord,
Iohn Bland.

The laſt appearance and examination of Maſter Bland.

Richard Thornton the bloudy biſhop of Dover.

Hitherto you have heard the troubleſome handling of this faithfull and bleſſed ſervant of God, John Bland, toſt to and fro, from priſon to priſon, from Seſſion to Seſſion. At laſt he was brought before the Biſhop of Dover, the Commiſſary, and the Archdeacon, at Canterbury, the 13. day of June. The name of this Biſhop was Richard Thornton. The Commiſſary was Robert Collins, whom the Cardinall by his Letters Patents had ſubſtitute to his factor, before his coming over to England. The Archdeacon was Nicholas Harpsfield. Under theſe a great ſort of innocent Lambs of Chriſt were cruelly intreated and ſlain at Canterbury, amongſt whom this foreſaid Maſter Bland was one of the firſt; who, as it is ſaid, being brought before the ſaid Biſhop, and Colleagues, which were John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, Thomas Thacker, Humfrey Middleton, William Coker, was examined of Articles. To whom it was objected by the Commiſſary, whether he beleeved that Chriſt is really in the Sacrament, or no, &c. To this he anſwered and ſaid, that he beleeved that Chriſt is in the Sacrament, as he is in all other good bodies; ſo that he judged not Chriſt to be really in the Sacrament.

The words of M. Bland at his examination.

Another appearance.

The laſt appearance of M. Bland before the Biſhop of Dover, and others.

Whereupon the day being Munday, he was bid to appear again upon Wedneſday next, and from thence he was deferred again to Munday following, being the twentith of June, in the ſame Chapterhouſe, then to hear further what ſhould be done, in caſe he would not relent to their minde. The which day and place he, appearing as before, was required to ſay his minde plainly and fully to the foreſaid Articles, being again repeated to him. Which Articles commonly and in courſe they uſe to object to their Examinates which be brought before them, as here now followeth, and need not much hereafter, ſpecially for that Country of Kent, to be repeated.

Articles miniſtred by Richard Biſhop of Dover, to Maſter Bland, and likewiſe to the reſt following after him.

Articles of courſe miniſtred againſt M. Bland.

1 First, that thou art of the Dioceſſe of Canterbury, and ſo ſubject to the juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop there.

2 Item, that thou art a Chriſten man, and doſt profeſſe the Laws of God, and Faith of Chriſts Catholike Church, and the determination of the ſame.

3. Item, that all Parſons which teach, preach, beleeve, affirm, hold, maintain, or ſay within the Dioceſſe of Canterbury, otherwiſe then our holy mother the Church doth, are excommunicate perſons, and hereticks, and as excommunicate and hereticks ought to be named, reputed, and taken.

4. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholike faith, and determination of our mother holy Church, within the Dioceſſe of Canterbury, haſt openly ſpoken, maintained, holden, affirmed, and beleeved, and yet doeſt hold, maintain, affirm, and beleeve, that in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, under the formes of bread and wine, there is not the very body and bloud of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in ſubſtance, but only a token, ſigne, and remembrance thereof, and that the very body and bloud of Chriſt is only in Heaven, and no where elſe.

5 Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholike faith, and determination of our mother holy Church, haſt within this Dioceſſe of Canterbury openly ſpoken, ſaid, maintained, holden, affirmed, and beleeved, and yet doſt hold, maintain, affirm and beleeve, that it is againſt Gods Word, that the Sacrament of Chriſts Church ſhould be miniſtred in an unknown tongue; and that no man ſafely and with a ſafe conſcience, or without perill of ſin, receiveth any ſacrament miniſtred in any tongue that he underſtandeth not.

6. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholike faith of our mother holy Church, haſt, and yet doſt hold opinion, and ſay, that it is againſt Gods Word, that the Sacrament of the Altar ſhould be miniſtred in one kinde; and that no man may with a ſafe conſcience ſo receive it.

7. Item, that the premiſſes be true, and that there is a common fame upon them within the Dioceſſe of Canterbury.

1 TO theſe Articles M. Bland, anſwering again in order as they were objected to him, ſaith to the firſt, granting the ſame, that he was a Prieſt, and of the Dioceſſe of Canterbury.

2. To the ſecond alſo he anſwereth affirmatively.

3. Item, to the third he anſwereth, that the Article is true, meaning the Catholike Church to be Chriſts Church.

4. Item, in the fourth Article, as touching the firſt part of the Article, he doth confeſſe, that he hath preached and taught it, as it is contained in the ſame. And as touching the ſecond part of the Article, he doth confeſſe, that he doth now alſo hold and ſay, as he preached and taught before.

5. Item, to the fifth Article he granteth.

6. To the ſixth he hath preached, held, and doth hold, as it is contained in the Article.

7. Item, to the laſt Article he granteth the ſame, &c,

This done, and his anſwers and confeſſion taken, reſpite was given him yet a few days to deliberate with himſelf. So the 25. day of the ſaid moneth of June he making his appearance again in the ſaid Chapter-houſe, there openly and boldly withſtood the authority of the Pope, whereupon his ſentence was read, and ſo he condemned and committed to the ſecular power. Touching the form and tenor of the ſentence, becauſe all their ſentences of courſe agree in one, read before in the hiſtory of M. Rogers.

M. Bland denieth the Pope. M. Bland condemned.

The prayer of M. Bland before his death.

A prayer of M. Bland.

THe Lord Jeſus, for whoſe love I do willingly leave this life, and deſire rather the bitter death of his croſſe, with the loſſe of all earthly things, then to abide the blaſphemy of thy holy name, or elſe to obey man in breaking of thy Commandements; thou ſeeſt, O Lord, that whereas I might live in worldly wealth to worſhip falſe gods, and honour thy enemy, I choſe rather the torments of this body, and loſſe of this my life, and have counted all things but vile duſt and dung, that I might win thee: Which death is more dear unto me, then thouſands of gold and ſilver. Such love O Lord haſt thou laid up in my breſt, that I hunger for thee, as the Deer that is wounded deſireth the ſoil. Send thy holy comfort, O Lord, to aide, comfort, and ſtrengthen this weak peece of earth, which is voide of all ſtrength of it ſelf. Thou remembreſt, O Lord, that I am but duſt, and not able to do any thing that is good. Therefore, O Lord, as thou of thy accuſtomed goodneſſe haſt bidden me to this banquet, and counted me worthy to drink of thine own cup amongſt thine elect; give me ſtrength againſt this element, that as it is to my ſight moſt irkſome and terrible, ſo to my minde it may be at thy commandement, as an obedient ſervant, ſweet and pleaſant; and through the ſtrength of thy holy Spirit, I may paſſe through the ſtrength of this fire into thy boſome, according unto thy promiſe, and for this mortality to receive immortality, and for this corruptible to put on incorruptible. Accept this burnt offering and ſacrifice, O Lord, not for the ſacrifice it ſelf, but for thy dear Sons ſake my Saviour; for whoſe teſtimony I offer this free-will offering with all my heart and with all my ſoul. O heavenly Father, forgive me my ſins, as I forgive the whole world. O ſweet Saviour, ſpread thy wings over me. O God, grant me thy holy Ghoſt, through whoſe mercifull inſpiration I am come hither. Conduct me unto everlaſting life. Lord, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit; Lord Jeſus receive my ſoul. So be it.

The hiſtory of John Frankeſh, Humfrey Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden.

July 12. John Frankeſh, Humfrey Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden, Martyrs.

HAving now paſſed over the examinations of Maſt. Bland, let us further proceed to the reſt of his fellows concaptives, being joyned the ſame time with him in the like cauſe and like affliction. The names of whom were John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, Humfrey Middleton, Thacker, and Cocker; of whom Thacker only gave back. The reſt conſtantly ſtanding to the truth, were altogether condemned by the Suffragan of Canterbury, the 25. day of June, the yeer above expreſſed. Touching whoſe examinations I ſhall not need long to ſtand, foraſmuch as the Articles miniſtred againſt them were all one; ſo in their anſwers they little or nothing diſagreed, as hereafter (by the Lords help) you ſhall hear. In the meantime, becauſe Nicholas Sheterden in his examinations had a little more large talk with the Archdeacon and the Commiſſary, I will firſt begin with the ſame.

The firſt examination or reaſoning of Nicholas Sheterden with Maſter Harpsfield Archdeacon, and M. Collins the Commiſſary, for the which they ſent him to priſon.

The talk of Nicholas Sheterden with the Archdeacon and Commiſſary about the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt.

FIrſt, the Archdeacon and Commiſſary affirmed, that the very words of Chriſt, when he ſaid, This is my body, did change the ſubſtance, without any other interpretation or ſpirituall meaning of the words.

Shet. Then belike when Chriſt ſaid, This cup is my bloud, the ſubſtance of the cup was changed into his bloud, without any other meaning, and ſo the cup was changed, and not the wine.

The Romiſh Catholikes cannot deny a figuratiue ſpeech in the cup, and yet will not grant the ſame in the bread.

Arch. Not ſo; for when Chriſt ſaid; This Cup is my Bloud, he meant not the cup, but the wine in the cup.

Shet. If Chriſt ſpake one thing, and meant another, then the bare words did not change the ſubſtance; but there muſt be a meaning ſought as well of the bread, as of the cup.

Arch. There muſt be a meaning ſought of the cup otherwiſe then the words ſtand. But of the bread it muſt be underſtood only as it ſtandeth, without any other meaning.

Shet. Then do yée make one half of Chriſts inſtitution a figure, or borrowed ſpéech, and the other half a plain ſpéech, and ſo ye divide Chriſts Supper.

Arch. Chriſt meant the wine, and not the cup, though he ſaid, This cup is my bloud.

Shet. Then ſhew me whether the words, which the Prieſts do ſpeak over the cup, do change the ſubſtance, or whether the minde of the Prieſt doth it?

Arch. The minde of the Prieſt doth it, and not the words.

If the minde, and not the words of the Prieſt doth it: how then is it that Duns and his fellows ſay, that the words be the forme and formall cauſe only that maketh the Sacrament?

Shet. If the minde of the Prieſt doth it, and not the words, if the Prieſt then do minde his harlot, or any other vain thing, that thing ſo minded was there made, and ſo the people do worſhip the Prieſts harlot in ſtead of Chriſts bloud: and again, none of the people can tell when it is Chriſt bloud, or when it is not, ſéeing the matter ſtandeth in the minde of the Prieſt. For no man can tell what the Prieſt meaneth, but himſelf; and ſo are they ever in danger of committing Idolatry.

Then was the Archdeacon ſomewhat moved, and ſate him down, and ſaid to the Commiſſary; I pray you Maſter Commiſſary ſpeak you to him another while; for they are unreaſonable and perverſe anſwers, as ever I heard of. Then ſtood up the Commiſſary, and ſaid:

Collins the Commiſſary taketh the Martyr in hand.

Com. Your argument is much againſt your ſelf; for ye grant that the bread is a figure of Chriſts Body; but the cup can be no figure of his Bloud, nor yet his very Bloud; and therefore Chriſt did not mean the cup, but the wine in the cup.

Shet. My argument is not againſt me at all; for I do not ſpeak it to prove that the cup is his bloud, nor the figure of his bloud, but to prove that the bare words being ſpoken of the Prieſt do not change the ſubſtance no more of the bread, then they do change the cup into bloud.

Commiſ. It could not be ſpoken of the cup, when he ſaid, This cup is my bloud; but he meant the wine in the cup.

Shet. Then it remaineth for you to anſwer my queſtion to the Archdeacon, that is, whether the minde of the Prieſt when he ſpeaketh over the cup, doth change it into bloud, or the bare words?

Commiſ. Both together doth it, the words and the minde of the Prieſt together; yea the intent and the words together doth it.

The Commiſſary brought to an abſurdity.

Shet. If the words and intents together do change the ſubſtance, yet muſt the cup be his bloud, and not the wine, foraſmuch as the words are, This cup is my bloud, and the intent ye ſay, was the wine; or elſe the words take none effect, but the intent only.

After, the Commiſſary in his chamber, ſaid, it was the intent of the Prieſt before he went to Maſſe, without the words; for the Prieſt did intend to do as holy Church had ordained, then the intent made the ſacrament to take effect.

The intent of the Prieſt maketh not the Sacrament.

Shet. If the Sacraments take effect of the intent of the Prieſt, and not of Gods Word, then many Pariſhes having a Prieſt that intendeth not well, are utterly deceived, both in baptizing, and alſo worſhipping that thing to be God, which is but bread, becauſe for lack of the Prieſts intent, the words do take none effect in it; ſo that by this it is ever doubtfull, whether they worſhip Chriſt, or bread, becauſe it is doubtfull what the Prieſts do intend.

Chriſts body, whether it may be in two places at once.

Commiſ. Then the Commiſſary would prove to me, that Chriſts Manhood was in two places at one time, by theſe words of Chriſt in John the third Chapter, where he ſaith; No man aſcendeth up to Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, that is to ſay, the Sonne of man which is in Heaven. By this he would prove, that Chriſt was then in Heaven, and in Earth alſo, naturally and bodily.

Shet. This place and other muſt néeds be underſtood for the unitie of the perſon, in that Chriſt was God and man, and yet the matter muſt be referred to the Godhead, or elſe ye muſt fall into great errour.

Commiſ. That is not ſo; for it was ſpoken of the manhood of Chriſt, foraſmuch as he ſaith, the Son of man which is in Heaven.

The Commiſſary brought to another inconvenience.

Shet. If ye will néeds underſtand it to be ſpoken of Chriſts manhood, then muſt ye fall into the errour of the Anabaptiſts, which deny that Chriſt took fleſh of the Virgin Mary; for if there be no body aſcended up, but that which came down, where is then his incarnation? For then he brought his body down with him.

Commiſ. Lo how you ſéek an errour in me, and yet ſée not how ye erre your ſelf. For it cannot be ſpoken of the Godhead, except ye grant that God is paſſible, for God cannot come down, becauſe he is not paſſible.

Shet. If that were a good argument, that God could not come down, becauſe he is not paſſible; then it might be ſaid by the like argument, that God could not ſit, and then Heaven is not his ſeat, and then ſay as ſome do, that God hath no right hand for Chriſt to ſit at.

Com. Then the Commiſſary affirmed plainly, that it was true, God hath no right hand indéed.

If God cannot come down, then Chriſt were not God: for Chriſt came from Heaven.

Shet. Oh what a ſpoil of Chriſts Religion will this be, that becauſe we cannot tell how God came down, therefore we ſhall ſay, that he came not down at all, and becauſe we cannot tell what manner of hand he hath, to ſay, that he hath no hand at all; and then he cannot reach the uttermoſt part of the Sea. O miſery: at length it will come to paſſe, that God cannot ſit, and then how can Heaven be his ſeat; and if Heaven be not his ſeat, then there is no Heaven, and then at length I doubt ye will ſay there is no God, or elſe no other God, but ſuch as the heathens gods are, which cannot go nor féel.

Gods hand is ſpirituall.

Commiſ. Why, doth not the Scripture ſay, that God is a Spirit? and what hand can a ſpirit have?

Shet. Truth it is, God is a Spirit, and therefore is worſhipped in ſpirit and truth; and as he is a ſpirit, ſo hath he a ſpirituall power, ſo hath he a ſpirituall ſeat, a ſpirituall hand, and a ſpirituall ſword; which we ſhall féel, if we go this way to work, as we begin. Becauſe we know not what God hath; therefore if we ſay he hath none, then it may as well be ſaid, there is no Chriſt.

Then the Commiſſary ſaid, he would talk no more with me, and ſo departed; and alſo the Commiſſary was compelled to grant, that Chriſts Teſtament was broken, and his inſtitution was changed from that he left it: but he ſaid they had power ſo to do.

My firſt anſwering, after their law was eſtabliſhed.

Declaration of the firſt examination of Sheterden, after the law was eſtabliſhed.

BEcauſe I know ye will deſire to hear from me ſome certainty of my eſtate, I was called before the Suffragon, and ſeven or eight of the chief Prieſts, and examined of certain articles, and then I required to ſee their Commiſſion.

Sheterden requireth to ſee the commiſſion

They ſhewed it to me, and ſaid, there it is, and the King and Queens letters alſo. Then I deſired to have it read: and ſo in reading I perceived, that on ſome notable ſuſpicion he might examine upon two articles; whether Chriſts reall preſence were in the Sacrament, and whether the Church of England be Chriſts Catholike Church.

Sheterden three quarters of a yeer in priſon before the law took place.

To that I anſwered, that I had been a priſoner three quarters of a yeer, and as I thought wrongfully: reaſon would therefore that I ſhould anſwer to thoſe things wherefore I was priſoner.

Suff, The Suffragan ſaid, his commiſſion was I muſt anſwer directly, yea or no.

Shet. This commiſſion, ſaid I, was not generall to examine whom he will, but on juſt ſuſpicion.

Suff. He ſaid, I was ſuſpected, and preſented to him.

Shet. Then I required that the accuſation might be ſhewed.

Suff. He ſaid, he was not bound to ſhew it, but he commanded me in the King and Queens name to anſwer directly.

Shet. And I as a ſubject do require of you juſtice for that I have done: I ask no favour.

Suff. He ſaid I was ſuſpected.

Shet. I bade him prove that ſuſpicion, or what cauſe he had to ſuſpect.

Suff. Thou waſt caſt into priſon for that cauſe.

The proceedings of the papiſts were againſt the law.

Shet. That was a pretty ſuſpicion, becauſe I had ſuffered impriſonment contrary to Gods Law and the Realm, that therefore I muſt now for amends be examined of ſuſpicion without cauſe, to hide all the wrong done to me before. For when I was caſt into priſon, there was no law but I might ſpeak as I did: therefore in that point I could be no more ſuſpect, than you which preached the ſame your ſelf not long before.

The Biſhop of Dover a proteſtant in King Edwards time.

Suff. That was no matter to thee what I preached.

Shet. Well, yet in the King and Queens name I muſt anſwer directly: and therefore I require as a ſubject, that ye do not extend beyond your Commiſſion, but prove me ſuſpect, more than you your ſelf.

Milles. Then ſaid M. Milles, I had written to my mother, and he did ſee the letter, wherein I perſwaded my mother to my opinions.

Shet. In that I did but my duty to certifie her, I was not in priſon for any evill. And that was before the law alſo, and therefore no more ſuſpicion was in me, than was in them which taught the like.

Milles. Well, ye are required here to anſwer directly, or no.

Shet. Firſt then I require of you to prove this ſuſpicion; and thus we toſſed it to and fro. At laſt the Biſhop ſaid he himſelf did ſuſpect me. I asked whereby?

Suff. Well, ſaid he, I my ſelf did ſuſpect thee, and it is no matter whereby.

Shet. But your Commiſſion doth not ſerve you ſo to do without cauſe of ſuſpicion.

Suff. Well, yet did I ſuſpect you.

Shet. It is not meet for you to be my accuſer, and my judge alſo, for that is too much for one man. And thus many words were multiplied, and they were much grieved.

Milles. If you were a Chriſtian man you would not be aſhamed of your faith being required.

Suff. I am not aſhamed indeed, I thank God, and if any man did come to me, either to teach or learn, I would declare it; but foraſmuch as I perceive you come neither to teach nor to learn, I hold it beſt not to anſwer you.

Milles. If you will not, then will we certifie the Kings Councell.

Upon this it appeareth the letters were written to the B. of Wincheſter, by whom he was ſent for after and examined.

Shet. I am therewith content that you ſhould certifie that I had ſuffered three quarters priſon wrongfully, and therefore I deſire to be juſtified or condemned, firſt for that I ſuffered ſuch impriſonment; and then I will not refuſe to anſwer your articles, though they were a buſhell of them. But to ſay that I would anſwer, whereby you ſhould heal all your wrong done to me againſt the Law of God and the Realm, I will not.

Sheterden refuſeth to anſwer before it be tried wherefore he was impriſoned.

Here much ado there was to prove that he had no wrong, and again, that it was not they that did it. But he, ſaid the Commiſſary, was one of them. He anſwered, No, it was the Archdeacon. He ſaid, you ſate with him, and he asked your counſell in it, and yet if it were he, it was your Church, except the Archdeacon and you be divided one from another. Well ſaid they, Will ye now deny that ye ſaid then, and promiſe here to ſubmit your ſelf henceforth, and ye ſhall be delivered?

Sheterden refuſeth to ſubmit himſelf.

Shet. I am not ſo much bound to you to grant any ſuch promiſe: and again you ſhall well know that I would not promiſe to go croſſe the ſtreet for you: but if I did at any time offend your law, let me have the puniſhment: I ask no favour.

Then ſaid they, that it was obſtinacy in him, that he would not anſwer, and a token that his faith was nought, ſeeing he was aſhamed to utter it.

Shet. Nay ſaid he, you ſhall well know I am not aſhamed of my faith: but becauſe you do ſo greedily ſeek blood, I will anſwer only to that you have againſt me.

Suff. Nay, you ſhall anſwer to the articles, or elſe be condemned upon ſuſpicion.

Shet. I am content with that, yet all men ſhall know that as ye ſuſpect and can prove no cauſe, ſo ſhall ye condemn me without a matter, and then ſhall all men know ye ſeek my blood, and no juſtice.

Suff. No, we ſeek not thy blood, but thy converſion.

Shet. That we ſhall ſee. For then ſhall you prove my perverſion firſt, before you condemn me on your ſuſpicion without proof of the ſame: and by that you I ſhall know whether you ſeek blood or no. Many other words were between them.

One Lovels a loveleſſe Lawyer.

At laſt ſtept up one Lovels a Lawyer, which would prove his impriſonment not to be wrong, but right, by old Statutes of Edward the fourth, and Henry, &c. but at laſt he was compelled to forſake thoſe Statutes from Michaelmas to Chriſtmas, and then he ſaid it was no wrong.

To this Nicholas ſaid, if he could prove that men might wrongfully impriſon before a law, and in the mean while make laws, and then under that hide the firſt wrong, then he ſaid true, or elſe not.

Thus he kept the Bandogs at ſtaves end, not as thinking to eſcape them, but that I would ſee, ſaid he, the Foxes leap above the ground for my blood if they can reach it (ſo it be the will of God) yet we ſhall ſee them gape, and leap for it. From Weſtgate in haſte,

By yours, Nicholas Sheterden.

Notes of Nicholas Sheterden, againſt the falſe worſhip and oblation of the Sacrament.

False worſhipping of the Sacrament.

The holy ſigne in ſtead of the thing ſignified is ſervile ſervitude, as Saint Auguſtine termeth it, when the bread in the ſacrament is by common and ſolemn error worſhipped in ſtead of the fleſh aſſumpted of the word of God.

There was no mention of worſhipping the creatures at the feaſt or firſt ſupper that Chriſt did celebrate: therefore the ſaying of Chriſt concerning divorce, may well be applyed to them; it was not ſo from the beginning, nor ſhall be to the end.

Againſt ſacramentall oblation.

The once made oblation of Chriſt is hereby derogate, when this Sacramentall oblation and offering of thankſgiving is beleeved to be propitiatory, and that it purgeth the ſoul as well of the living as of the dead, againſt this ſaying to the Hebrews, With one only oblation he hath made perfect for ever thoſe that are ſanctified. Again, Where is remiſſion, there is no more oblation for ſins, making us clean by him.

This word (by himſelf) hath a vehemency and pith, that driveth all Prieſts from authority to enterpriſe ſuch oblation, whereas what he himſelf doth by himſelf, he leaveth not for other to do. So ſeemeth our purgatory already paſt and done, not to come and remaining to be done.

His examination before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, then Lord Chancellor.

A note of the words or talk paſſed between Nicholas Sheterden, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

I Was called into a Chamber before the Lord Chancellor, the Suffragan, and other, Prieſts I think for the moſt part. He ſtandeth to the table, called me to him, and becauſe I ſaw the Cardinall was not there, I bowed my ſelf and ſtood neer.

Then ſaid he, I have ſent for you, becauſe I hear you are indited of hereſie; and being called before the Commiſſioners, ye will not anſwer nor ſubmit your ſelf.

Unjuſt impriſonment of Sheterden.

I ſaid, if it like you, I did not refuſe to anſwer; but I did plainly anſwer, that I had been in priſon long time, and reaſon it was that I ſhould be charged or diſcharged for that, and not to be examined of Articles to hide my wrong impriſonment, neither did I know any inditement againſt me. If there were any, it could not be juſt, for I was not abroad ſince the law was made.

Winch. Well, yet if ſuch ſuſpicion be of you, if you be a Chriſtian, ye will declare that it is not true, and ſo purge your ſelf.

Shet. I thought it ſufficient to anſwer to mine offences, &c. truſting that they would lay no ſuch burthen upon me, whereby the wrong done to me might be covered, but I would be proved to have wrong or right.

Winch. He ſaid, if thou wilt declare thy ſelf to the Church to be a Chriſtian, thou ſhalt go, and then have a writ of wrong impriſonment, &c.

Shet. I ſaid I was not minded to ſue now, but require to have right juſtice; but to make a promiſe I will not: but if I offend the law, then puniſh me accordingly. For it might be that my conſcience was not perſwaded, nor would be, in priſon; ſeeing theſe things which I have learned, were by Gods law openly taught and received by authority of the Realm. And he ſaid it was never received, that I might ſpeak againſt the Sacrament, I ſaid againſt ſome opinion of the Sacrament it was openly taught.

Wincheſt. maketh a miracle that there was no law in King Edwards time againſt the ſacrament of the Altar.

Winch. By no law, and that was notable to conſider, that all that while God preſerved that, ſo that no law could paſſe againſt it.

Shet. I ſaid their law did not only perſwade me, but this moſt; when they preached unto us, they took pain to ſet out the word of God in our tongue, ſo that we may reade and judge whether they ſay true or no, but now they take the light from us, and would have us beleeve it, becauſe they ſay ſo, which is to me a great perſwaſion.

The Catholikes ſtand upon the number.

Winch. It was not a few that could be your guide in underſtanding, but the Doctors and all the whole Church, now whom wouldeſt thou beleeve? either the few or the many?

The faithfull ſtand upon the word.

Shet. I did not beleeve for the few, nor for the many, but only for that he bringeth the word, and ſheweth it to me to be ſo according to the proceſſe thereof.

Winch. Well ſaid he, then if an Arrian come to thee with Scripture, thou wilt beleeve him, if he ſhew this Text, My Father is greater than I.

Shet. I anſwered, no my Lord, he muſt bring me alſo the contrary place, and prove them both true, where he ſaith, My Father and I am one.

Winch. Yea, ſaid he, that is by charity, as we be one with him.

Shet. I ſaid that gloſſe would not ſtand with the reſt of the Scripture, where he ſaid; I am the very ſame, that I ſay to you; He ſaid the truth, and the truth was God, &c. with much ſuch like. And here he made many words (but very gently) of the Sacrament: Likewiſe Chriſt ſaid (quoth he) it was his body; yea, (that is to ſay) a figure of his body, and how men did not conſider the word was God, and God the word, and ſo provoked me with ſuch temptation; but I let him alone, and ſaid nothing.

Wincheſter defendeth images.

So after many words he came to the Churches faith and comely orders of Ceremonies and images. And then I joyned to him again with the Commandements.

Winch. He ſaid, that was done that no falſe thing ſhould be made, as the Heathen would worſhip a Cat, becauſe ſhe killed Miſe.

Shet. I ſaid that it was plain that the Law forbade not only ſuch, but even to make an image of God to any manner of likeneſſe.

Winch. Where finde ye that?

No image of God to be made.

Shet. Forſooth in the Law where God gave them the Commandements: for he ſaid, Ye ſaw no ſhape, but heard a voice only: and added a reaſon why? leſt they ſhould after make images, and marre themſelves: ſo that God would not ſhew his ſhape, becauſe they would have no image of him which was the true God, &c.

Winch. He ſaid I made a goodly interpretation.

Shet. I ſaid no, it was the Text.

Then was the Bible called for, & when it came, He bade me finde it, and I ſhould ſtrait be confounded with mine own words; ſo that if there were any grace with me, I would truſt mine own wit no more; and when I looked, it was Latine.

Winch. Why, ſaid he, can ye read no Latine?

Shet. No. Then was the Engliſh Bible brought. He bade me finde it; and ſo I read it aloud, and then he ſaid; lo here thou mayſt ſee; this is no more to forbid the image of God, than of any other beaſt, fowl or fiſh (the place was Deut. 4.) I ſaid it did plainly forbid to make any of theſe as an image of God, becauſe no man might know what ſhape he was of. Therefore might no man ſay of any image, this is an image of God.

Deut. 4.

Winch. Well, yet by your leave, ſo much as was ſeen we may, that is, of Chriſt, of the holy Ghoſt; and the Father appeared to Daniel, like an old (a) man &c.

(a) But the Commandement ſaith: Deut 4. Thou ſhalt make no Image of God, either man or woman, &c.

The holy Ghoſt like a Dove in ſome qualities, but not in ſhape.

The qualities of this ſeemed here to want in Wincheſter.

Shet. That is no proof that we may make images contrary to the Commandement: for though the holy Ghoſt appeared like a Dove, yet was he not like in ſhape, but in certain qualities, and therefore when I ſaw the Dove which is Gods creature, indeed I might remember the ſpirit to be ſimple and loving, &c. and with that he was ſomewhat moved, and ſaid, I had learned my leſſon, and asked who taught me, with many words; and he ſaid he would prove how good and profitable images were to teach the unlearned, &c.

Shet. At the laſt I ſayd, my Lord, although I were able to make never ſo good a gloſſe upon the Commande-

Queen MARY.

Commandements, yet obedience is better than all our good intents, and much ado we had: at laſt he ſaw, he ſaid, what I was, and how he had ſent for me for charity ſake to talk with me, but now he would not meddle, and ſaid my wrong impriſonment could not excuſe me, but I muſt clear my ſelf.

Shet. I ſaid that was eaſie for me to do, For I had not offended.

Winch. He ſayd I could not ſcape ſo: there I was deceived.

Shet. Well, then I am under the law, &c.

How the Catholikes falſly ſlander the faithfull innocent.

Arch. The Archdeacon was there called in for me, and he laid to me, that with ſuch arrogancy and ſtoutneſſe, as never was heard, I behaved my ſelf before him, whereas he was minded with ſuch mercy towards me, &c. and many lyes he laid to me, that I was ſent home till another time; and I would not be contented, but went out of the Church with ſuch an out-cry as was notable.

Shet. I declared, that he falſly herein reported me, and brought in the Laws then in the Realm, and the Queens proclamation that none of her ſubjects ſhould be compelled till the Law were to compell, and that I rehearſed the ſame in the Court for me, and I did uſe him then (ſaid I) as I uſe your grace now, and no otherwiſe.

Winch. He ſaid that I did not uſe my ſelf very well now.

Shet. I ſaid, I had offered my ſelf to be bailed, and to confer with them, when and where they would.

Winch. He ſaid, I ſhould not confer, but be obedient. I ſaid, let me go, and I will not deſire to confer neither; and when I offended, let them puniſh me, and ſo departed.

By your Brother, Nicholas Sheterden, priſoner for the truth in Weſtgate.

The laſt examination with the condemnation of Maſter Bland, Iohn Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton.

The finall condemnation of the 4 godly Martyrs. Ex Regiſt. Cant.

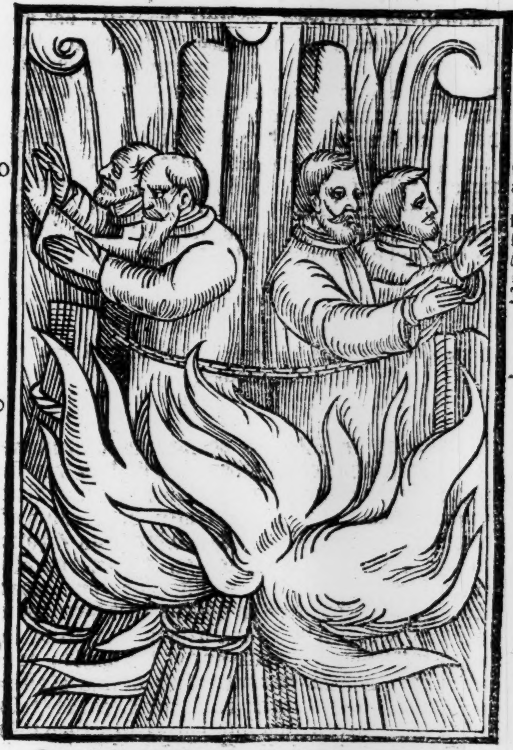
AND thus much touching the particular, and ſeverall examinations of Nicholas Sheterden, and of M. Bland. Now to touch ſomething alſo of the other Martyrs, which the ſame time were examined, and ſuffered with them together, to wit, Humfrey Middleton of Aſhford, and John Frankeſh, Vicar of Rolvynden, in the Dioceſſe of Kent above mentioned, here firſt would be declared the articles which publikely in their laſt examinations were jointly and ſeverally miniſtred unto them by the foreſaid Thorneton Biſhop of Dover. But foraſmuch as theſe articles, being ordinary and of courſe, are already expreſſed in the ſtory of M. Bland, as may appear before; It ſhall not therefore be needfull to make any new rehearſall thereof.

To theſe ſeven articles then being propounded to the five perſons above named, to wit, John Frankeſh, John Bland, Nicholas Sheterden, Humfrey Middleton, and one Thacker, firſt anſwered John Frankeſh ſomewhat doubtfully, deſiring further reſpite to be given him of fourteen dayes to deliberate with himſelf. Which was granted: Maſter Bland anſwered flatly and roundly, as before ye heard. Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton anſwered to the firſt and ſecond articles affirmatively. To the third concerning the Catholike Church after a ſort they granted. To the fourth and fift and ſixt touching the reall preſence, and the Sacrament to be miniſtred in the Latine tongue, and in one kinde, they refuſed utterly to anſwer. Sheterden ſaid he would not anſwer thereto before the cauſe were determined why he was impriſoned, and ſo ſtill remained priſoner, before the Laws of Parliament received, &c. Middleton added moreover and confeſſed, that he beleeved in his own God, ſaying, My living God, and no dead God, &c. Thacker only relented, and was content to take penance. Thus the foreſaid four upon theſe anſwers were condemned by the Biſhop of Dover, the 25 day of June, An. 1555.

Anno 1555.

Thacker recanted.

The burning of four Martyrs.



The Martyrdom of John Bland, John Frankeſh, Miniſters: Alſo of Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton, burned at two ſeverall ſtakes in Canterbury, Anno 1555. July 12.

And ſo being given to the ſecular power, they were burned at Canterbury, the 12 of July, at two ſeverall ſtakes, but all in one fire together, where they in the ſight of God and of his Angels, and before men, like true ſouldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, gave a conſtant teſtimony to the truth of his holy Goſpel.

The prayer of Nicholas Sheterden before his death.

A Chriſtian prayer of Nicholas Sheterden before his death.

O Lord my God and Saviour, which art Lord in heaven and earth, maker of all things viſible and inviſible, I am the creature and work of thy hands; Lord God look upon me, and other thy people, which at this time are oppreſſed of the worldly minded for thy Laws ſake: yea Lord, thy Law it ſelf is now troden under foot, and mens inventions exalted above it, and for that cauſe do I, and many thy creatures, refuſe the glory, praiſe, and commodity of this life, and do choſe to ſuffer adverſity, and to be baniſhed; yea to be burnt with the Books of thy Word, for the hopes ſake that is laid up in ſtore. For Lord thou knoweſt, if we would but ſeem to pleaſe men in things contrary to thy word, we might by their permiſſion enjoy theſe commodities that others do, as wife, children, goods, and friends, which all I knowledge to be thy gifts, given to the end I ſhould ſerve thee. And now Lord that the world will not ſuffer me to enjoy them, except I offend thy Laws, behold I give unto thee my whole ſpirit, ſoul and body, and lo, I leave here all the pleaſures of this life, and do now leave the uſe of them for the hopes ſake of eternall life purchaſed in Chriſts Blood, and promiſed to all them that fight on his ſide, and are content to ſuffer with him for his truth, whenſoever the world and the devill ſhall perſecute the ſame.

Sacrifice of thanks for redemption.

O Father, I do not preſume unto thee, in mine own righteouſneſſe, no, but onely in the merits of thy dear Sonne my Saviour. For the which excellent gift of ſalvation I cannot worthily praiſe thee, neither is my ſacrifice worthy, or to be accepted with thee, in compariſon of our bodies mortified, and obedient unto thy will: and now Lord, whatſoever rebellion hath been, or is found in my members, againſt thy will, yet do I here give unto thee my body to the death, rather than I will uſe any ſtrange worſhipping, which I beſeech thee accept at my hand for a pure ſacrifice: let this torment be to me the laſt enemy deſtroyed, even death, the end of miſery, and the beginning of all joy, peace and ſolace; and when the time of reſurrection cometh, then let me enjoy again theſe members then glorified, which now be ſpoiled and conſumed by the fire. O Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit into thy hands. Amen.

Sacrifice of the body.

Letters of Nicholas Sheterden; and firſt a Letter to his mother.

A letter of Nicholas Sheterden to his mother.

After my humble and bounden duty remembred, welbeloved mother, this ſhall be to wiſh you increaſe of grace and godly wiſdom, that ye may ſee and perceive the crafty bewitching of Sathan our mortall enemy, which, as I have divers times declared unto you, doth not openly ſhew himſelf in his own likeneſſe, but under colour of devotion deceiveth them that keep not a diligent eye upon him, but having confidence in mens traditions and cuſtomes of the world, leaving the Commandements of God, and Teſtament of his Son Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, do grow more into ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, than into wiſdom and true holineſſe. For this is moſt true, that Sathan, the enemy of ſouls, doth by his miniſters make many beleeve, that thoſe things, which they compell us unto for their bellies ſake, have many godly ſignifications, although they be moſt contrary to Gods will, as doubtleſſe they be, even as did the Serpent in Paradiſe to our firſt mother Eve. What (ſaid he) hath God commanded ye ſhall not eat of all the trees in the Garden? The woman ſaid of the fruits of the trees in the Garden we may eat: but of the tree in the middeſt of the Garden, ſaid God, ſee ye eat not leſt ye die. Even ſo our Miniſters now adayes, ſay, Hath God commanded ye ſhall not make you any image or likeneſſe of any thing? Yea forſooth. Tuſh, ſay they, what harm can they do? May we not remember God the better when we ſee his image or picture? For they are good books for the lay men; but indeed they be better for the Prieſts, becauſe they receive the offerings.

Sathan transformeth himſelf into an Angel of light.

As the ſerpent ſeduced Eve by an Apple, ſo Prieſts ſeduce the people by Images.

Images more profitable books for Prieſts than for lay men.

And look how truely the promiſe of the Serpent was kept with Eve, ſo is the perſwaſion of our Prieſts found true to us. For as Adam and Eve did become like God in knowing good and evill, ſo are we in remembring God by his image. For Adams eyes were ſo open, that he loſt both innocency and righteouſneſſe, and was become moſt miſerable of all creatures: and even ſo we remember Chriſt ſo well by images, that we forget his Commandements, and count his Teſtament confirmed in his blood for ſtark madneſſe or hereſie; ſo miſerably have we remembred him, that of all people we are moſt blinde: and this doth follow upon our preſumption, when we remember God by breaking of his law: and therefore ſurely except we repent, ſhortly God will remember us in his wrath, and reward us with his plagues; as ſure as there is a God it will come to paſſe.

Sheterden propheſieth of Gods plagues.

But I know the craftineſſe of them herein (I thank God) which will ſay; Where went he to ſchool? Is he wiſer than our great Doctors that ſtudied all their life? And lo, they ſay that it is good hay; although we ſmell it muſty our ſelves, yet muſt we beleeve it is ſweet, and then pay them well for their ſo ſaying, and all is ſafe. But I might ſay again; What ſir, be ye wiſer than Chriſt, and God his Father, or the holy Ghoſt? What, wiſer than the Prophets, and the holy Apoſtles, and all the holy Martyrs? I pray you Sir, where had you your high learning? Is it higher than God (being in heaven) is able to reach, or have ye ſet it lower in hell than ever Chriſt durſt to venter? For it is ſome ſtrange learning belike, that Chriſt and his Apoſtles could never attain to the knowledge of it. But vain men are never without ſome ſhift: for peradventure they will not be aſhamed to ſay, that Chriſts coming on his fathers meſſage, did forget half his errand by the way. For I dare ſay, the greater half of their ceremonies were never commanded by Chriſt: Yea I doubt it would be hard to finde one in the Church perfectly as he left it; ſo Romiſhly hath Antichriſt turned the Church upſidedown for lucres ſake.

Learning againſt or without Gods word is vain, and to no purpoſe.

Antichriſt hath turned the Church clean upſidedown.

Beloved mother, as I have oftentimes ſaid unto you, even ſo now I beſeech you from my very heart root in Chriſt, to conſider your own ſouls health is offered you, do not caſt it off: we have not long time here. Why ſhould we deceive our ſelves either for eaſe of our fleſh, or for the winning of this worlds treaſure? I know that ſome will ſay to you, why ſhould we condemn our fathers that lived thus? God forbid that we ſhould condemn any that did according to their knowledge. But let us take heed that they condemn not us: for if they had heard the Word as we have, and had been warned as we have, it is to be thought that they would more thankfully have received it than we do: yea, they were more faithfull in that they knew, than many now are. Therefore they ſhall be our condemnation, if we do not imbrace this grace offered us. And ſurely look how many of them God will accept and ſave, thoſe ſhall we never ſee, nor have any part among them: for our diſobedience is more great than their ignorance. Wherefore if we will meet our fathers in bliſſe and joy, let us not refuſe his mercy offered more largely to us than to them, even according to Chriſts promiſe, which ſaid, after ſuch great ignorance as to ſeek him from Country to Country, and finde him not; Yet ſhall the Goſpel (ſaith he) be preached in all the world, and then ſhall the end come.

The fathers that heard no better are not to be condemned, but rather will condemn us that hear and receive it not.

And now let us know the time of our viſitation, and not turn back again, ſeeing we are once delivered: for ſurely God will not bear it at our hands to turn backward. O remember Lots wife. God muſt needs puniſh out of hand our ſhamefull backſliding, either with induration and hardneſſe of heart, ſo that they ſhall perſecute his Church and his true ſervants, or elſe reward it with open vengeance and plagues. And therefore good mother, accept this my ſimple letter as a fruit of my love and obedience to you. Would God we might be ſo knit in faith and truſt in Gods word and promiſes here in this life, as we might together enjoy the bliſſe and conſolation of eternall life; which I deſire and ſeek above all worldly treaſure, as ye partly know. If I would ſeek the good will of men contrary to my conſcience, I could make ſome my friends, which now peradventure are jealous over me amiſſe.

Gods viſitation not to be refuſed.

Experience how Gods Martyrs ſeek not the world.

But I thank God, let them weigh the matter between God and their conſciences, and they have no juſt cauſe ſo to do: nevertheleſſe I would they would yet refrain and put their matter and mine into the ballance of Gods moſt holy word, there to be payed by the minde of the holy Ghoſt, expreſſed unto us by the holy Patriarks, and Prophets, and by Jeſus Chriſt our only Saviour and Mediator, and by his holy Apoſtles, and then I doubt not, but our matter ſhall be ended with peace, and joyfulneſſe of heart; which God grant us for his mercy ſake, Amen.

Your own childe, Nicholas Sheterden, priſoner for the truth in Weſtgate. 1555.

A Letter to his brother, Walter Sheterden.

My uncle hath been with me, and made great promiſes and great threats alſo.

I Wiſh you health in Chriſt, true knowledge of his word, and a faithfull obedient heart unto the ſame. It is ſhewed me my brother, that ye willed me by a letter made to a friend of yours to perſwade with me, that I ſhould be ruled by mine Uncle, which ſaith, he will beſtow his goods very largely upon me, if I ſhould not ſtand too high in mine own conceit. But my good brother, I truſt ye do not judge ſo evill of me, that I ſhould have a faith to ſell for money. For though he or you were able to give me the treaſure of the whole Country, yet I thank my Lord God, I do judge it but an heap of dung, in reſpect of the treaſure hid within; yet I do eſteem a buckle of your ſhoe, if it come with good will. And for to be counſelled and ruled by him or you, or any other my friends, I do not, neither have refuſed it, if they require no more of me than my power, and that which belongeth to mortall men. But if they require of me any thing which pertaineth to God only, there is neither high nor low, friend nor foe, I truſt in God, ſhall get it of me, nor yet the Angels in heaven.

No order nor reaſon in the Popes doctrine.

For though I be not learned (as the vain men of the world call learning) yet I thank my Lord God, I have learned out of Gods book, to know God from his creatures, and to know Chriſt from his Sacraments, and to put a difference between the merits of Chriſts paſſion and his ſupper, and a difference between the water of Baptiſme, and the holy Ghoſt, and not to mixe and mingle all things confuſedly together: ſo that if one ask me a queſtion or a reaſon of my faith, I muſt ſay thus; I beleeve as the holy Church beleeveth: if he ask me what is the order of that faith, I ſhould be ſo ignorant that I could not diſcern God from his creatures, nor Chriſt from his Sacraments; If I ſhould ſo monſtrouſly utter my faith, that I were not able to judge between Chriſts birth and his buriall, nor which were firſt, of his mortification, and his glorification, who would beleeve that my faith were ſound?

So ſhould we have two bodies at once, one glorified, and another mortall.

We are bound to beleeve what God hath expreſly willed, not what he is able to do.

For ſome affirm that Chriſt did not give to his Apoſtles a mortall and a paſſible body, but an immortall and glorified body, ſo that he ſhould have a glorified body before his death, and ſo his glorification was before his reſurrection; and that he was riſen before he was crucified, and crucified before his Baptiſme, and then they may as well ſay, he was baptiſed before his birth, and born before he was conceived, and conceived before he was promiſed, and that were even right Antichriſt to turn all things backward, and then ſay, Oh ye muſt beleeve, for God is almighty, he can do all things, &c. Truth it is, that God is almighty indeed, and yet I may not beleeve things contrary to his word, that Chriſts body was glorified before he died: for Gods Omnipotency doth not ſtand in things contrary to his will, but in performing his will at his pleaſure in time. Neither doth he require of us to judge or beleeve of his Almighty power, that he hath made the end of the world to come before the beginning, or yet the fruit to come before the bloſſome, and yet is he nevertheleſſe Almighty.

He ſpeaketh not againſt the true uſe of Logick.

But if peradventure you ſhall think with your ſelf, Why, they are learned; it were marvell but they ſhould know what is the truth, as well as other which never kept any ſuch ſtudy, &c. To that I anſwer, that if they had ſtudied Gods word, the author of truth, as they have done Logick, and Duns, with the Legend of lies, they ſhould have been as expert in the truth, as they be now in bald reaſons. But thus hath God fulfilled his promiſe, that ſuch ſhould be deluded with lies, which would not beleeve nor walk in his truth.

Why God taketh his word from Realms.

And again; this is a good cauſe to make us think ſurely, that this was the cauſe that God gave them over at the firſt to error, after the Apoſtles time by little and little, as they grew in ſin. For ſeeing we had his truth now among us a few yeers, becauſe we did not obey unto it, we ſee what a ſudden change God hath brought upon us for our ſins ſake. And why ſhould not we think that this and ſuch like diſobedience was the cauſe that God took his word from all Chriſtendom at the firſt, and caſt a darkneſſe upon them that would not walk in his light? For it is evident enough to ſee how unlike their doings be to Chriſts and his Apoſtles: and that ſeen, either we muſt judge Chriſts doings very ſlender, and theirs good, or elſe that indeed they be the very Antichriſts, which ſhould come and turn all things out of frame. Thus I have been bold to trouble you, which I truſt ſhall not be altogether in vain. Pray for me as I do for you.

Your Brother, Nicholas Sheterden, priſoner for the truth in Weſtgate.

GOd, which is the giver of all goodneſſe, and that freely for his love to us (not only without our deſerts, but contrary to the ſame) grant you my brother, ſuch increaſe of godly knowledge and love unto the vertues thereunto belonging, as may give you ſuch a taſte in heavenly things, that all treaſures of earthly things may ſavour to you, as indeed they are, moſt vain and uncertain, ſo ſhall ye never take them for better than they be. Yea, whether God take them from us, or give them unto us, we ſhall know our ſelves neither richer nor poorer before God. But if we lay up in our hearts the treaſure of his word, we ſhall not only enrich our ſelves againſt the time of need, but alſo arm our ſelves againſt the battell with weapons and harneſſe, which is invincible, and clothe our ſelves againſt the marriage. For behold, the Lord hath called us of long time to the feaſt, and blown the Trumpet to prepare the battell. Let us know the time of our viſitation, leſt the Lord ſitting on his mount, bewail our deſtruction, which he deſireth not, but becauſe he is juſt to puniſh ſuch as continue in ſin, even as he is mercifull to forgive the repentant that turn in time; for ſo is God that cannot deny himſelf.

Time of Gods viſitation to be received.

Let us therefore in this day, while it is called to day, hear his voyce, and not harden our hearts by reſiſtance of his will, leſt he ſwear in his wrath, that we ſhall not enter into his reſt. Let us count it ſufficient, that we have ſpent the time paſt (as Saint Peter ſaith) after the will of the Gentiles, in eating and drinking, chambering and wantonneſſe, and in abominable idolatry, &c. And now let us aſſay a new life, and trade our members in vertue another while, leſt peradventure we might run paſt any return in the contrary. But if we now return and lay hand of his word in deed and verity, as we have long time done in talk and liberty, then will God heap upon us ſuch certificate of conſcience, as ſhall kindle our conſolation in him, ſo that all treaſure ſhall be dung to the excellent knowledge of our Saviour. Dear brother, my hearts deſire and prayer to God is, that we may together enjoy the bliſſe of eternall inheritance by one ſpirituall regeneration and new birth, as we are joyned by nature. But alack the way and mean thereunto hath been much neglected of me (I will not ſay of you) for I had rather ye ſhould accuſe your ſelf: for no doubt the beſt of us both hath not ſought for wiſedom in Gods word, as ſome in the world whom we know have ſought for mony: therefore they ſhall be our Judges, if we do not learn by them: yea the very Emmet, as Salomon ſaith, doth teach us to provide for the time to come; for ſhe provideth in Summer againſt Winter.

The victory of truth.

This is the beſt token I have for you now, which though it be ſimple, yet ſhall it declare partly my hearts deſire to you ward, which is even as to mine own ſoul. Let nothing diſmay you for my cauſe: but be ye ſure I ſhall have victory in the truth, which truth is ſtronger than Kings, Wine, or Women. For as Zorobabel ſaith; Wine is unrighteous, the King is unrighteous, women are unrighteous, yea all the children of men are unrighteous, but the truth endureth, and is alwayes ſtrong, and conquereth for ever without end: Therefore this is to deſire you and all other my friends that wiſh me good, to pray that God will alwayes keep me in his truth, as he hath begun, which prayer, if it be of ſuch a minde as laboureth to depart from evill, ſhall be to me the greateſt pleaſure under heaven. For I deſire nothing in compariſon of Gods truth, I thank him of his mercy, which ſo hath wrought: for I take it as a ſure ſeal of the endleſſe joy which ſhall hereafter follow; which God bring us unto, when his will and pleaſure is, Amen. By yours, Nicholas Sheterden.

To his mother, another letter written the day before his death.

O My good Mother, whom I love with reverence in the Lord, and according to my duty, I deſire your favourable bleſſing and forgiveneſſe of all my miſdeeds towards you. Oh my good Mother, in few words, I wiſh you the ſame ſalvation, which I hope my ſelf to feel, and partly taſte of before this come to you to reade; and in the reſurrection, I verily beleeve to have it more perfectly in body and ſoul joyned together for ever: and in that day God grant you to ſee my face with joy: but dear mother then beware of that great Idolatry, and blaſphemous Maſſe. Oh let not that be your god, which mice and worms can devour. Behold I call heaven and earth to record, that it is no god, yea the fire that conſumeth it, and the moiſtneſſe that cauſeth it to mould, and I take Chriſts Teſtament to witnes, that it is none of his ordinances, but a meer invention of men, and a ſnare to catch innocents blood; and now that God hath ſhewed it unto you, be warned in time. Oh give over old cuſtomes, and become new in the truth. What ſtate ſoever your father be in, leave that to God; and let us follow the counſell of his word. Dear mother, imbrace it with hearty affection, reade it with obedience, let it be your paſtime; but yet caſt off all carnall affections, and love of worldly things: ſo ſhall we meet in joy at the laſt day, or elſe I bid you farewell for evermore: O farewell my friends and lovers all, God grant me to ſee your faces in joy. Amen.

The copy of a letter written to his wife.

Another letter of Nicholas Sheterden to his wife.

I Wrote unto you as one that longed more to hear of your health, than of all worldly treaſure, willing you to intreat Eſau the elder brother by nature gently, giving to him his own, yea, and offer him one of the droves, and ſay they be Jacobs, and are ſent for a preſent to my Lord Eſau, but he will not take it, &c. Now my beloved, ye know the bleſſing of our father is, that the elder ſhall ſerve the yonger, and wiſdom our mother hath taught us the ſame, and I know ye do complain of your (a) ſervant the fleſh, that he is rebellious, diſobedient, and untoward; unruly and crookedly ye think he doth his ſervice: but yet behold, how ſhall ye plead your cauſe before an indifferent Judge: for if it be true that his ſervice be not according to his duty, as it is many times found in ſervants; yet I ſay, can you ſhew your cauſe to no indifferent Judge, but he ſhall object againſt you that he is not kept like a ſervant, but he lacketh both meat and drink, and other neceſſaries meet and due for a ſervant: ſo ſhall ye take more ſhame of your own complaint, than remedy or vantage againſt your ſervant, and it ſhall be a cloak for him to hide all his rebellion and untoward ſervice, becauſe ye have miſuſed him.

(a) By this ſervant belike he meant her own body, which ſhe pinched too much with penury or faſting more than needed.

How a mans body is to be ordered with diſcretion.

And therefore my ſentence is, that ye patiently bear with him in ſmall faults, and amend your own great faults, as oppreſſion, cruelty, and covetouſneſſe, requiring more than a ſervant can do, ſpecially being tyred with labour, famined with hunger, and lamed with ſtripes. And theſe things amended, if he do his ſervice negligently (as no doubt ſometime he will) yet then ye may boldly correct him with diſcretion, and ſometime if he do not his task, ye may make him go to bed ſupperleſſe: but yet beat him not with durable ſtrokes, neither with-hold his meat in due time, and pinch him not by the belly continually, but (b) let him have ſomething to joy in: only watch him, and keep him from doing of harm. Though he be but a ſtranger in the life that is in God; yet be good to ſtrangers, for we are all ſtrangers in darkneſſe, and captives in ſin, as well ſoul and ſpirit, being in Egypt, as now the fleſh is yet unbaptized with the terrible red Sea of death, and remember that one law abideth for the ſtranger, I mean one reward abideth both for body and ſoul in the land of everlaſting reſt. And (c) therefore intreat him gently, and deal with him juſtly now: for the time will come that the yoke of bondage ſhall be taken from his neck, and he ſhall be a fellow heir with your younger brother.

(b) Corporis curam agite, non ad concupiſcentias.

(c) The body of man is redeemed as well as the ſoul.

Circumciſe him therefore, but do not miſuſe him, nor keep him from his own, but deal mercifully with the ſtranger, that he may ſay, Oh of what underſtanding heart is this people? Who hath God? Or where is God ſo nigh as to theſe? God make you wiſe and politick in heart, victorious in the field of this world, to rule the nations with a rod: but kill not the Gabaonites, with whom peace is taken; but let them draw water, and hew wood, but give them their meat and drink due for labourers, and be glad becauſe your diſeaſe is ſo remedied: for it is better and eaſier for a thirſty labouring man to drink, then for a drunken man to tell a ſober tale. Yea, it is a token that ye have earneſtly followed your labour, and not kept company with drunkards and belly gods: and therefore be glad I ſay, yea, and glad again; for great is your reward in heaven; yea bleſſed ſhall they be, that in this your zeal ſhall meet you, and withdraw your hand from revenging your ſelf upon that churliſh Naball: which thing I hope to doe now with theſe ſweet raiſons, and frailes of figges, I being of one houſe with your ſervant Naball, I dare ſay to you that churliſhneſſe is his name: but revenge not, for the Lord ſhall do it in his due time. Farewell mine owne heart.

The Gabaonites though they be but ſtrangers and not to be pampered, yet are they not to be caſt out.

Nicholas Sheterden.

The next day after the condemnation of theſe foreſaid, which was the 26. day of July, were alſo condemned for the ſame Articles, W. Coker, W. Hopper of Cambrook, Henry Laurence, Richard Wright of Aſhford, W. Stere of Aſhford. But becauſe the execution of theſe Martyrs pertaineth not to this moneth, more ſhall be ſaid, the Lord willing, of them, when we come to the moneth following of Auguſt.

Nicholas Hall, and Chriſtopher Waide, Martyrs.

July 19. Nich. Hall, and Chriſtopher Waid Martyrs.

The ſame moneth of July next after the ſuffering of the Kentiſhmen above named, followed the death and Martyrdome of Nicholas Hall Bricklayer, and Chriſtopher Waide of Dartford, which both were condemned by Maurice Biſhop of Rocheſter, about the laſt day of the month of June. The ſix Articles miniſtred to them, were of the ſame ordinary courſe and effect with the Articles of the other Martyrs before ſpecified, the brief ſum whereof were theſe.

A brief ſum of their Articles.

Articles objected againſt Nich. Hall and Chriſtopher Waid.

1 Firſt, that they were Chriſtian men, and profeſſed the Catholike determinations of our mother holy Church.

2. That they which maintain or hold otherwiſe then our holy mother the Catholike Church doth, are hereticks.

3 That they hold and maintain, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the formes of bread and wine, is not the very body and bloud of Chriſt. And that the ſaid very body of Chriſt is verily in heaven only, and not in the Sacrament.

4 Item, that they have and do hold and maintain, that the Maſſe, as it is now uſed in the Catholike Church, is naught and abominable.

5 Item, that they have been and be amongſt the people of that Juriſdiction vehemently ſuſpected upon the premiſſes, and thereupon indicted, &c.

Their anſwers.

Their anſwers.

To theſe Articles they anſwered, as commonly others uſed to do, which ſtand with Chriſt and his truth againſt theſe pretended Catholikes, and their ſiniſter doctrine. Firſt granting themſelves Chriſtian men, and acknowledging the determinations of the holy Church, that is, of the congregation or body of Chriſt; Save that Hall denied to call the Catholike and Apoſtolike Church his mother, because he found not this word, mother, in the Scripture.

This word mother Church is not found in the Scripture.

To the ſecond they granted. To the third Article as touching the very body and bloud of Chriſt to be under the formes of bread and wine in ſubſtance they would not grant, only affirming the very body of him to be in Heaven, and the Sacrament to be a token or remembrance of Chriſts death; Nicholas Hall adding moreover, and ſaying, that whereas before he held the Sacrament to be but only a token or remembrance of Chriſts death, now he ſaid, that there is neither token nor remembrance, becauſe it is now miſuſed and clean turned from Chriſts inſtitution, &c. And concerning the Maſſe in the fourth Article, to be abominable, Chriſtopher Waid with the other anſwered, that as they had confeſſed before, ſo would they now not go from that they had ſaid. To the fifth Article, for the peoples ſuſpicion they made no great accompt nor ſticking to grant to the ſame.

Anſwer of Nicholas Hall.
Anſwer of Chriſtopher Waid.

And thus much concerning the Articles and anſwers of theſe good men. Which being received, immediately ſentence of condemnation was pronounced by the ſaid Maurice the Biſhop againſt them, the copy of which ſentence, as it runneth much what after the common courſe in condemning all other like ſervants of Chriſt, ſo the ſame being exemplified before in the ſtory of Maſter Rogers, ſhall not greatly need heer again to be repeated; but rather may be referred over to the place above noted. Nicholas Hall was burned at Rocheſter about the 19. day of July.

Condemnation of Nicholas Hall and Chriſtopher Waid, Martyrs.

Ex Regiſtro.

Furthermore, with the foreſaid Hall and Waid, in the ſame moneth of July, three other more were condemned by Maurice Biſhop aforenamed, whoſe names were Joan Beach Widow, John Harpoll of Rocheſter, and Margery Polley. Of which Margery Polley, touching her examination and condemnation here followeth in ſtory.

The condemnation and Martyrdom of Margery Polley.

Ex Regiſtro.
Margery Polley Widow and Martyr.

Margery Polley widow, Wife ſome time of Richard Polley of Pepingbery, was accuſed and brought before the ſaid Maurice Biſhop of Rocheſter, about the beginning of the moneth of June. Which Biſhop according to the Pontificall ſolemnitie of that Church, riſing up out of the chair of his Majeſty, in the high ſwelling ſtile after his ordinary faſhion to daſh the ſilly poor woman, beginning in theſe words.

We Maurice, by the ſufferance of God, Biſhop of Rocheſter, proceeding of our meer office in a cauſe of hereſie, againſt thee Margery Polley, of the Pariſh of Pepingbery, of our Dioceſſe and Iuriſdiction of Rocheſter, do lay and object againſt thee all and ſingular theſe articles enſuing. To the which, and to every parcell of them, we require of thee a true, full, and plain anſwer, by vertue of thine oath thereupon to be given, &c.

Thus the oath firſt being miniſtred, and the articles commenced againſt her, which articles were the ſame that were miniſtred to Nicholas Hall and Waid before, ſhe ſo framed her anſwers again, eſpecially anſwering to the third and fourth article, that ſhe neither allowed the Deity of their Sacrament, nor the abſurdity of their Maſſe. For the which, ſentence was read againſt her about the beginning of June, and ſhe condemned for the ſame. But becauſe her death followed not upon the ſame, we will therefore deferre the tractation thereof to the due place and time, firſt ſetting down in order of hiſtory the execution of Chriſtopher Waid above mentioned.

The condemnation of Margery Polley.

The execution and Martyrdom of Chriſtopher Waid.

Chriſtopher Waid of Darford, in the County of Kent, Linnen-Weaver, was condemned by Maurice, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and appointed to be burned at Darford aforeſaid. At the day appointed for his execution, which was in the month of July, there was betimes in the morning carried out of the Town in a cart, a ſtake, and therewith many bundles of Reeds, to a place a quarter of a mile out of the Town, called the Brimth, into a gravell pit thereby, the common place of the execution of fellons. Thither alſo was brought a load of Broom faggot, with other faggots and talwood. Unto which place reſorted the people of the Country in great number, and there tarried his coming. Inſomuch as thither came divers Fruiterers with horſe-loads of cherries, and ſold them. About ten of the clock cometh riding the Sheriff, with a great many of other Gentlemen, and their retinue, appointed to aſſiſt him therein, and with them Waid, riding pinioned, and by him one Margery Polley of Tunbridge, both ſinging of a Pſalm; which Margery, as ſoon as ſhe eſpied afar off the multitude gathered about the place where he ſhould ſuffer, waiting his coming, ſhe ſaid unto him very loud and cheerfully; You may rejoyce Waid to ſee ſuch a company gathered to celebrate your marriage this day.

And ſo paſſing by the place, which joyned hard to the high-way, they were carried ſtraight down to the town, where ſhe was kept untill the Sheriff returned from Waides execution. And Waid being made ready, and ſtripped out of his clothes in an Inne, had brought unto him a fair long white ſhirt from his wife, which being put on, and he pinioned, was led up on foot again to the foreſaid place. And coming ſtraight to the ſtake, he took it in his arms, embracing it, and kiſſed it, ſetting his back unto it, and ſtanding in a pitch barrell, which was taken from the Beacon, being hard by; then a Smith brought a hoop of iron, and with two ſtaples, made him faſt to the ſtake under his arms.

As ſoon as he was thus ſetled, he ſpake, with his hands and eyes lifted up to heaven, with a cheerfull and loud voyce, the laſt verſe of the lxxxvi. Pſalm; Shew ſome good token upon me, O Lord, that they which hate me, may ſee it, and be aſhamed; becauſe thou Lord haſt helped me, and comforted me. Neer unto the ſtake was a little hill, upon the top whereof were pitched up four ſtaves, quadrangle wiſe, with a covering round about like a pulpit: into the which place, as Waid was thus praying at the ſtake, entred a Friar with a book in his hand, whom when Waid eſpied, he cried earneſtly unto the people, to take heed of the doctrine of the whore of Babylon, exhorting them to embrace the doctrine of the Goſpel preached in King Edwards dayes. Whom the Sheriffe, thus ſpeaking to the people, often interrupted, ſaying, be quiet Waid, and die patiently. I am (ſaid he) I thank God, quiet, Maſter Sheriffe, and ſo truſt to die. All this while the Friar ſtood ſtill looking over the coverlet, as though he would have uttered ſomewhat: but Waid very mightily admoniſhed the people to beware of that doctrine; which when the Friar perceived, whether he were amazed, or could have no audience of the people, with-drew himſelf out of the place immediatly, without ſpeaking any word, and went away down to the Town. Then the Reeds being ſet about him, he pulled them, and imbraced them in his arms, alwayes with his hands making a hole againſt his face, that his voyce might be heard, which they perceiving that were his tormentors, alway caſt faggots at the ſame hole, which notwithſtanding he ſtill, as he could, put off, his face bein ghurt with the end of a faggot caſt thereat. Then fire being put unto him, he cried unto God often, Lord Jeſus receive my ſoul; without any token or ſigne of impatiency in the fire, till at length, after the fire was once thorowly kindled, he was heard by no man to ſpeak, ſtill holding his hands up over his head together towards heaven, even when he was dead, and altogether roſted, as though they had bin ſtaid up with a prop ſtanding under them.

This ſigne did God ſhew upon him, whereby his very enemies might perceive, that God had according to his prayer ſhewed ſuch a token upon him, even to their ſhame and confuſion. And this was the order of this godly Martyrs execution, this was his end. Whereby God ſeemed to confound and ſtrike with the ſpirit of dumbneſſe the Friar, that Locuſt which was riſen up to have ſpoken againſt him; and alſo no leſſe wonderfully ſuſtained thoſe hands which he lifted up to him for comfort in his torment.

The apprehenſion, examination, condemnation, and burning of Diricke Carver, and Iohn Launder, who ſuffered Martyrdom for the teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

The 22 day of this month of July, was burned at Lewes, within the County of Suſſex, one Dirick Carver, late of the pariſh of Brighthamſted in the ſame County. And the next day (being the 23 day of the ſame moneth) was alſo burned at Stening, another named John Launder, late of Godſtone in the County of Surrey. Which two men were (with others) about the end of the moneth of October, Anno 1554. apprehended by Edward Gage, Gentleman, as they were at prayer within the dwelling houſe of the ſaid Diricke; and by him were ſent up unto the Queens Councell. Who, after examination, ſent them as priſoners to Newgate, there to attend the leiſure of Boner, Biſhop of London. From whence (upon the Biſhops receit of a letter from the Lord Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, now

Edward Gage Gentleman, perſecutor.

Carver and Launder appearing befo Biſhop Bon now Lord Treaſurer) they were brought by the keeper of the priſon, the 8. of June next after, into the Biſhops Chamber at his houſe in London; and there (being examined upon divers points of religion) they made their ſeverall confeſſions, ſubſcribing and ſigning them with their own hands. Which being read, the Biſhop objected unto them certain other Articles, cauſing them to ſwear truly and directly to anſwer thereunto; which Articles they confeſſed to be true, referring themſelves chiefly to their former confeſſions.

This done, after long perſwaſions and fair exhortations, they were demanded whether they would ſtand to their anſwers. To whom Launder ſaid, I will never go from theſe anſwers, ſo long as I live. The other alſo confirmed the ſame, and therefore they were commanded to appear again before the Biſhop in the Conſiſtory at Pauls, the tenth day of the ſame moneth next following. Which articles and confeſſions, with the aforementioned letter do here enſue.

A Letter from the Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, Lord Treaſurer, unto Boner Biſhop of London, touching the examination of the ſaid priſoners.

Theſe funerals were for the Kings grandmother the old Q. of Spain.

After my right hearty commendations to your good Lordſhip, I ſhall not forget your livery of black againſt this time; no more I ſhall Maſter Dean, to whom I wrote to make the Sermon, who muſt now aſſuredly do it: for my Lord of Chicheſter cannot attend it. To whom I have given like knowledge by my Letter now ſent, and your Lordſhip muſt command the Sextens of your Church to be in a readineſſe for ringing in the time of ſervice. And if ye be not furniſhed with black apparell for the Altar, and for the Prieſt, Deacon and Subdeacon, I muſt have knowledge thereof, that it be taken of the Queens ſtuffe, whereof I pray you let me be advertiſed.

A Significavit to be ſent to the Lord Treaſurer for burning of Bradford.

And ye have ſent Bradford to Newgate, as a man convicted of hereſie before you: but as I perceive ye have not ſent me a Significavit, and therefore you muſt ſend me one, that I may proceed with him, and that ſhall I do, as ſoon as I am anſwered of you.

He meaneth Dirick Carver and Joh. Launder.

Lord Treaſurer calleth upon Boner for examination of theſe two perſons.

There be divers like priſoners that came from Suſſex, that be not yet examined before you, lying now in Newgate, which muſt be examined by you, ſince they be come to London, and ſo I pray you they may be, and I certified of your proceedings, that I may follow, which I ſhall do, thanking your Lordſhip heartily for my Conies, truſting to recompence your Lordſhip again ſhortly with twice as many. From my houſe this ſeventh of June, 1555.

Your loving friend, Wincheſt.

The confeſſion of Dirick Carver, before Boner Biſhop of London.

Dirick Carver his confeſsion.

Dirick Carver Beer-brewer of Brighthampſted, in the County of Suſſex, where he hath dwelled by the ſpace of 8. or 9. yeers, born in the Village of Dilſon by Stockom in the land of Luke, 40. yeers of age, or thereabout, and now priſoner in Newgate, where he hath remained and continued at the Councels commandement, ſince Alhalown day laſt paſt, being examined concerning his faith and belief in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaith, that he hath, and doth beleeve, that the very ſubſtance of the body and bloud of Chriſt is not in the ſaid Sacrament, and that there is no other ſubſtance remaining in the ſaid Sacrament after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, but only the ſubſtance of bread and wine.

The materiall ſubſtance of the Sacrament denied to be the body of Chriſt really.

Item, being examined concerning the Maſſe in Latine now uſed in the Church of England, he beleeveth that there is no ſacrifice in the ſaid maſſe, and that there is in it no ſalvation for a Chriſtian man, except it ſhould be ſaid in the mother tongue, that he might underſtand it; and concerning the ceremonies of the Church, he ſaith and beleeveth, that they be not profitable to a Chriſtian man.

The uſe and ſacrifice of the Latine Maſſe denied.

Item, being examined concerning auricular confeſſion, he anſwereth, that he hath and doth beleeve, that it is neceſſary to go to a good Prieſt for good counſell; but the abſolution of the Prieſt, laying his hand upon any mans head, as is now uſed, is nothing profitable to a Chriſtian mans ſalvation. And further he ſaith, that he hath not been confeſſed, nor received the Sacrament of the Altar, ſince the coronation of the Queen that now is.

Auricular confeſſion and abſolution of the Prieſt rejected.

Item, concerning the faith and religion now taught, ſet forth and beleeved in the Church of England, he anſwereth and beleeveth, that the faith and doctrine now taught, ſet forth, and uſed in the ſaid Church of England, is not agreeable to to Gods Word. And furthermore he ſaith, that Biſhop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of their opinion, which were of late burned, were good Chriſtian men, and did preach the true doctrine of Chriſt, as he beleeveth; and ſaith that they did ſhed their bloud in the ſame doctrine, which was by the power of God, as he ſaith and beleeveth.

The faith of the Church of England in Q. Maries time reproved.

And further being examined he ſaith, that ſince the Queens coronation, he hath had the Bible and Pſalter in Engliſh, read in his houſe at Brighthamſted divers times, and likewiſe ſince his coming into Newgate: but the Keeper hearing thereof, did take them away; and ſaith alſo, that about a twelve moneth now paſt, he had the Engliſh proceſſion ſaid in his houſe, with other Engliſh prayers. And further ſaith, that Thomas Iveſon, John Launder, and William Veſie being priſoners with him in Newgate, were taken with this Examinate in his houſe at Brighthamſted, as they were hearing of the Goſpel, then read in Engliſh, a little before Allhalown day laſt paſt, and brought into the Court: and being examined thereupon by the Councell, were committed by them to priſon in Newgate.

Iveſon, Launder and Veſie, impriſoned for hearing the Goſpel.

The confeſſion of Iohn Launder, before Boner Biſhop of London.

John Launder his confeſſion.

John Launder Husbandman of the Pariſh of Godſtone, in the County of Surrey, of the age of 25. yeers, born at Godſtone aforeſaid, being examined, doth confeſſe and ſay, that about two dayes next before Alhalowntide laſt paſt, this Examinate and one Dirick Carver, Thomas Iveſon, William Veſie, with divers other perſons, to the number of twelve, (being altogether in their prayers, ſaying the ſervice in Engliſh, ſet forth in the time of King Edward the ſixth, in the houſe of the ſaid Dirick, ſituate at Brighthamſted in Suſſex) were apprehended by one M. Edw. Gage, and by him ſent up hither to London, to the King and Queens Councell, and by them (upon his examination) committed to Newgate, where he with his ſaid other fellows, hath ever ſince remained in priſon.

And further being examined, he doth confeſſe and ſay, that the occaſion of his coming to the ſaid Brighthamſted was upon certain buſineſſe there to be ſped for his Father: and ſo being there, and hearing that the ſaid Dirick was a man that did much favour the Goſpel, this Examinate did reſort to his houſe and company, whom before that time he did never ſee or know, and by reaſon of that his reſort, he was apprehended as before: And further doth confeſſe and beleeve,

The cauſe of the apprehenſion of John Launder.

Two Sacraments only.

Ceremonies abhorred.

that there is here in earth on whole and univerſall Catholike Church, whereof the members be diſperſed through the world, and doth beleeve alſo, that the ſame Church doth ſet forth and teach only two Sacraments, Videlicet, the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord. And whoſoever doth teach or uſe any more Sacraments, or yet any Ceremonies, he doth not beleeve that they be of the Catholike Church, but doth abhorre them from the bottome of his heart: And doth further ſay and beleeve, that all the ſervice, ſacrifices and ceremonies, now uſed in this Realm of England (yea, and in all other parts of the world, which hath been uſed after the ſame manner) be erroneous and naught, and contrary to Chriſts inſtitution, and the determination of Chriſts Catholike Church, whereof he beleeveth that he himſelf is a member.

The reall preſence of Chriſts body under the forms of bread and wine denied.

Alſo he doth confeſſe and beleeve, that in the Sacrament, now called the Sacrament of the Altar, there is not really, and truely contained, under the formes of bread and wine, the very naturall body and bloud of Chriſt in ſubſtance: but his belief and faith therein is as followeth, Videlicet, that when he doth receive the materiall bread and wine, he doth receive the ſame in a remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, and ſo receiving it, he doth eat and drink Chriſts body and bloud by faith, and none other ways as he beleeveth.

The Maſſe abominable.

And moreover he doth confeſſe, ſay, and beleeve, that the Maſſe now uſed in the Realm of England, or elſewhere in all Chriſtendome, is naught and abominable, and directly againſt Gods Word, and his Catholike Church; and that there is nothing ſaid or uſed in it good and profitable. For he ſaith, that albeit the gloria in excelſis, the Creed, Sanctus Pater noſter, Agnus, and other parts of the Maſſe be of themſelves good and profitable, yet the ſame being uſed amongſt other things that be naught and ſuperfluous in the Maſſe, the ſame good things do become naught alſo, as he beleeveth.

Auricular confeſſion not neceſſary.

Alſo he doth beleeve and confeſſe that auricular confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made to any Prieſt, or to any other creature, but every perſon ought to acknowledge and confeſſe his ſins only to God; and alſo that no perſon hath any authority to abſolve any man from his ſins; and alſo beleeveth that the right and true way (according to the Scripture) after a man hath falne from grace to ſin, to ariſe to Chriſt again, is to be ſorry for his offences, and to do the ſame or the like no more; and not to make any auricular confeſſion of them to the Prieſt, either to take abſolution for them at the Prieſts hands. All which his ſaid opinions he hath beleeved by the ſpace of theſe ſeven or eight yeers paſt, and in that time hath divers and many times openly argued and defended the ſame, as he ſaith, &c.

Articles objected by Boner Biſhop of London, againſt Dirick Carver, and Iohn Launder.

Articles laid to Dirick Carver and Iohn Launder.

1 First, I do object againſt you, and every of you, that ye and every of you, being within the ſaid priſon of Newgate, and within this ſaid Citie of London are of my juriſdiction (being Biſhop of London) and ſubject unto the ſame, offending and treſpaſſing within the ſaid priſon and Citie in matters of Religion, and concerning the Catholike faith and belief of the Church in any wiſe.

Sacraments of penance, and the altar.

2 Item, I do object againſt you, and every of you, that ye and every of you, ſince your firſt coming and entring into the ſaid priſon, and during your abode there, both there and in ſundry places within this Citie and Dioceſſe of London, have holden, maintained, and defended ſundry opinions againſt the Sacraments of the Church, eſpecially againſt the ſacrament of penance, and alſo againſt the ſacrament of the altar.

Reall preſence.

3 Item, I do likewiſe object that ye, and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, have (as concerning the ſacrament of the altar) holden, maintained and defended, to the beſt of your power, that in the ſaid ſacrament of the altar there is not the very ſubſtance of the body and blood of our Saviour Chriſt, but that in the ſacrament there is only the ſubſtance of naturall bread and wine, and no other ſubſtance.

The Latine Maſſe.

4. Item, I do likewiſe object that you, and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, have concerning the Maſſe in Latin now uſed in the Church, and the ſacrifice of the ſame, holden, maintained, and likewiſe defended, that the ſaid Maſſe is not good or profitable, and that there is no ſacrifice in the ſame.

Ceremonies.

5 Item, I do likewiſe object, that you and every of you, in all, or ſome of the places, have concerning the ceremonies of the Church, holden, maintained, and likewiſe defended, that the ſaid ceremonies are not profitable to a Chriſtian man, but hurtfull and evill.

Auricular confeſſion.

6 Item, I do likewiſe object, that you and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, have concerning the Sacrament of penance, holden, maintained, and likewiſe defended the auricular confeſſion (being a part thereof) albeit it may be made unto a good Prieſt for counſell, yet the abſolution of the Prieſt, laying his hand upon any mans head, and doing as is now uſually done in the Church, is nothing profitable to any mans ſalvation, and that therefore ye neither have been confeſſed to the Prieſt after the uſall manner of the Church, nor yet received the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar ſince the coronation of the Queens Majeſty, which is more then the ſpace of one whole yeer and a half.

The faith and doctrine of the Church of England.

7 Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, concerning the faith and religion now taught, ſet forth, uſed and beleeved in the Church of this Realm of England, and the doctrine of the ſame, have holden, beleeved and ſaid, that it is not agreeable to Gods Word, but clean contrary to the ſame.

Defending of Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, &c.

8 Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, in all, or ſome of the ſaid places, have beleeved, ſpoken, and ſaid, and to your power upholden, maintained, and ſaid, that Biſhop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of their opinion, which of late within this Realm were burnt for hereſie, were good Chriſtian men, in ſpeaking and holding againſt the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, and that they did preach nothing but the true doctrine of Chriſt, ſhedding their bloud for the maintenance of the ſaid doctrine.

Engliſh ſervice defending the religion uſed in King Edwards time.

9 Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, have earneſtly laboured and travelled, to the beſt and uttermoſt of your power, to have up again the Engliſh ſervice, and the Communion in all points, as was uſed in the latter days of K. Edward the ſixth, here in this Realm of England.

10 Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, have thought and do think firmely and ſtedfaſtly, and ſo have and do beleeve, that the faith, religion, and doctrine, ſet forth in the ſaid time of the foreſaid King Edward, was in all points good and godly, containing in it the true faith and religion of Chriſt, in every part.

Abſence from Popiſh ſervice.

11 Item, I do likewiſe object and ſay, that ye, and every of you (for your misbelief, offence, tranſgreſſion, and misbehaviour in the premiſſes, and for that alſo that you would not come to your ſeverall Pariſh Churches, and hear your divine ſervices there, as other Chriſtian people did, and do; but abſent your ſelves from the ſame; and have your private ſervice in your houſes, eſpecially in the houſe of Dirick Carver) were ſent up unto the King and Queens Majeſties privy Councell, and by them or ſome of them ſent afterward into the priſon of Newgat aforeſaid, having there by their authority remained as priſoners, during all the time ye have been there.

If their putting to death were lawfull by God, why do you excuſe it? If it were not lawfull, why do ye ſo at mans commandement?

12 Item, I do likewiſe object and ſay, that I the ſaid Biſhop of London was commanded by the authoritie of the ſaid Councell, to make proceſſe againſt you, and every of you, ſo that it was not my procuring or ſearching, that ye ſhould be commanded or called before me in this matter of hereſie, but partly by your demerits, and partly the commandement enforced me to call and ſend for you, to make anſwer herein, and hereof to ſhew you the ſaid Letters.

Their anſwers to the Articles.

Their Anſwers

UPon Munday, being the tenth day of June, theſe two perſons (with others) were brought by the Keeper unto the Biſhops Conſiſtory (as it was before commanded) at one of the clock in the afternoon, where the Biſhop firſt beginning with the ſaid Dirick Carver, cauſed his confeſſion with the Articles and Anſwers to be openly read unto him (which order he kept at the condemnation of every priſoner) asking him whether he would ſtand to the ſame. To whom the ſaid Dirick anſwered, that he would: for your doctrine, quoth he, is poyſon and ſorcery. If Chriſt were here, you would put him to a worſe death then he was put to before.

The words of Dirick Carver to Boner.

You ſay that you can make a god; ye can make a pudding as well. Your Ceremonies in the Church be beggery and poyſon. And further I ſay, that auricular confeſſion is contrary to Gods Word, and very poyſon: with divers other ſuch words.

The Biſhop ſeeing his conſtancy, and that neither his accuſtomed flatteries, nor yet his cruell threatnings could once move this good man to incline to their idolatry, pronounced his uſuall and generall bleſſing, as well towards this Dirick, as alſo upon the ſaid John Launder) although ſeverally): who (after the like manner of proceſſe uſed with him) remained in the ſame conſtancy, as did the other, and therefore were both delivered unto the Sheriffs, who were there preſent, but afterwards were conveyed to the places above named, and there moſt joyfully gave their bodies to be burned in the fire, and their ſouls into the hands of Almighty God, by Jeſus Chriſt, who hath aſſured them to a better hope of life.

Dirick Carver and John Launder, ſent down into the Country to be burned.

This Dirick was a man whom the Lord had bleſſed as well with temporall riches, as with his ſpirituall treaſures; which riches yet were no clog or let unto his true profeſſing of Chriſt, (the Lord by his grace ſo working in him:) of the which, there was ſuch havock made, by the greedy raveners of that time, that his poor Wife and children had little or none thereof. During his impriſonment, although he was well ſtricken in yeers (and as it were, paſt the time of learning) yet he ſo ſpent his time, that being at his firſt apprehenſion utterly ignorant of any letter of the Book, he could before his death reade perfectly any Printed Engliſh. Whoſe diligence and zeal is worthy no ſmall commendation, and therefore I thought it good not to paſſe it over in ſilence, for the good encouragement and example of others.

The cruell ſpoil of Diricks goods.

Dirick learned to read in the priſon.

Moreover, at his coming into the Town of Lewes to be burned, the people called upon him, beſeeching God to ſtrengthen him in the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. He thanked them, and prayed unto God, that of his mercy he would ſtrengthen them in the like Faith. And when he came to the ſigne of the Starre, the people drew neer unto him, where the Sheriff ſaid, that he had found him a faithfull man in all his anſwers. And as he came to the ſtake, he kneeled down and made his prayers, and the Sheriff made haſte.

Dirick burned at Lewes.

Then his Book was thrown into the barrell, and when he had ſtript himſelf (as a joyfull member of God) he went into the barrell himſelf. And as ſoon as ever he came in, he took up the Book, and threw it among the people, and then the Sheriff commanded in the King and Queens name, on pain of death, to throw in the Book again. And immediately, that faithfull member ſpake with a joyfull voyce, ſaying:

Diricks Book commanded in the Queens name to be thrown again into the fire.

Dear brethren and ſiſters, witneſſe to you all, that I am come to ſeal with my bloud Chriſts Goſpel, becauſe I know that it is true: it is not unknown unto all you, but that it hath been truly preached here in Lewes, and in all places of England, and now it is not. And becauſe that I will not deny here Gods Goſpel, and be obedient to mans Laws, I am condemned to dye. Dear brethren and ſiſters, as many of you as do beleeve upon the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, unto everlaſting life, ſee you do the works appertaining to the ſame. And as many of you as do beleeve upon the Pope of Rome, or any of his laws, which he ſets forth in theſe days, you do beleeve to your utter condemnation, and except the great mercy of God, you ſhall burn in hell perpetually.

The teſtimony of Dirick at the ſtake.

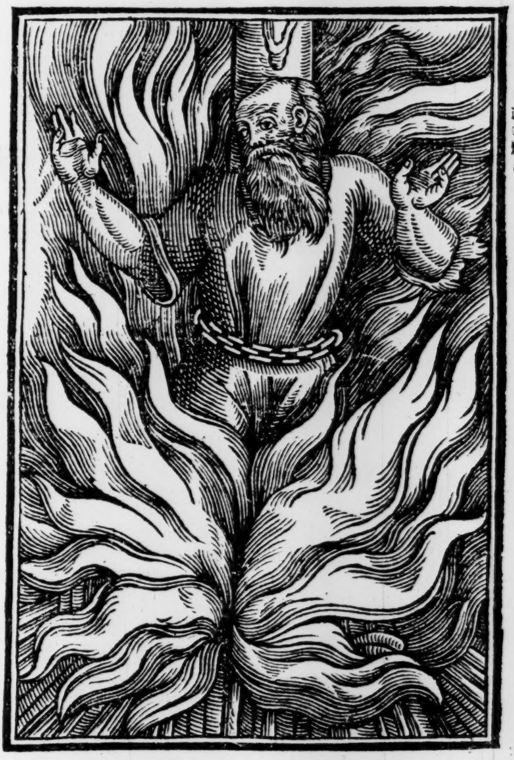
The exhortation of Dirick to the people.

Immediately the Sheriff ſpake unto him, and ſaid, If thou doſt not beleeve on the Pope thou art damned body and ſoul. And further the Sheriff ſaid unto him; ſpeak to thy God, that he may deliver thee now, or elſe to ſtrike me down to the example of this people; but this faithfull member ſaid, The Lord forgive you your ſayings.

Where finde you that in the Creed, to beleeve on the Pope.

Horrible provoking of Gods judgement.

The Martyrdome of Dirick Carver.



The martyrdom of Dirick Carver, at Lewes, Anno 1555. July 22.

And then ſpake he again to all the people there preſent, with a loud voyce, ſaying; Dear brethren, and all you whom I have offended in words or in deed, I ask you for the Lords ſake to forgive me, and I heartily forgive all you, which have offended me in thought, word, or deed. And he ſaid further in his prayer, Oh Lord my God, thou haſt written, He that will not forſake wife, children, houſe, and all that ever he hath, and take up thy croſſe and follow thee, is not worthy of thee. But thou Lord knoweſt, that I have forſaken all, to come unto thee: Lord have mercy upon me, for unto thee I commend my ſpirit; and my ſoul doth rejoyce in thee. Theſe were the laſt words of that faithfull member of Chriſt, before the fire was put to him. And after that the fire came to him, he cried, Oh Lord have mercy upon me, and ſprung up in the fire, calling upon the name of Jeſus, and ſo he ended.

Diricks prayer at his death.

Thomas Iveſon, Martyr.

Tho. Iveſon, or Everſon, apprehended with Dirick and others, and ſuffered at Chicheſter.

AT Chicheſter, about the ſame moneth was burned one Thomas Iveſon of Godſtone in the County of Surrey, Carpenter; whoſe apprehenſion, examination, and condemnation (for as much as it was at one time, and in one form with Dirick Carver, and John Lawnder) I do here omit, referring the Reader to their hiſtory and proceſſe before mentioned, ſaving only this his ſeverall confeſſion, and private anſwers made before Biſhop Boner at his laſt examination in the Conſiſtory, I thought not to pretermit, who being examined upon the foreſaid Articles, anſwered as followeth.

The anſwers of Thomas Iveſon to the objections of Biſhop Boner of London, in a chamber at his houſe, in the mouth of Iuly.

Anſwers of Tho. Iveſon.

1 FIrſt, that I beleeved, that there is but one Catholike, Univerſall and whole Church of Chriſt thorow the whole world, which hath & holdeth the true Faith, and all the neceſſary Articles of Chriſtian belief, and all the Sacraments of Chriſt, with the true uſe and adminiſtration of the ſame.

2 Item, that he is neceſſarily bounden to beleeve and give credit, in all the ſaid faith, Articles of the belief, Religion, and the Sacraments of Chriſt, and the adminiſtration of the ſame.

3 Item, that that Faith, Religion, and adminiſtration of Sacraments, which now is beleeved, uſed, taught, and ſet forth in this our Church of England, is not agreeing with the truth and Faith of Chriſt, nor with the faith of the ſaid Catholike and Univerſall Church of Chriſt.

4 Item, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, he beleeveth, that it is a very Idol, and deteſtable before God, as it is now miniſtred.

5 Item, that the Maſſe is naught, and not of the inſtitution of Chriſt, but that it is of mans invention: and being demanded whether any thing uſed in the Maſſe be good, he ſaid that he would anſwer no further.

6 Item, that he had not received the Sacrament of the Altar, ſince it had been miniſtred as now it is in England, neither was confeſſed at any time within theſe ſeven yeers: nor he hath not heard Maſſe by the ſame place.

7 Item, that auricular confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made to a Prieſt: for that he cannot forgive, nor abſolve him from ſins.

8 Item, concerning the Sacrament of Baptiſme, that it is a ſigne and token of Chriſt, as circumciſion was, and none otherwiſe, and he beleeveth that his ſins are " not waſhed away thereby, but his body only waſhed: for his ſins be waſhed away only by Chriſts bloud.

" He meaneth not by the meer vertue of the Element.

9 Item, that there be in the Catholike Church of Chriſt only two Sacraments, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord, and no more, which are not rightly uſed at this preſent time in England, and therefore be unprofitable.

Two Sacraments.

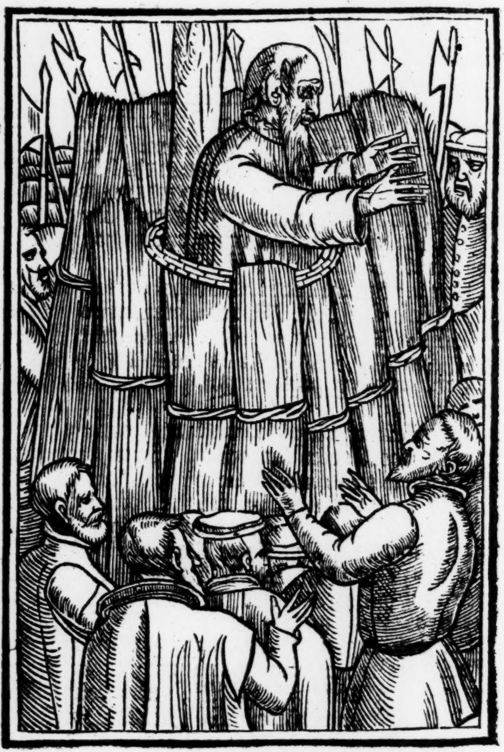
10 Item, he beleeveth, that all the ceremonies now uſed in the Church of England, are vain, ſuperfluous, ſuperſtitious and naught.

Againſt ceremonies

Furthermore, the ſaid Iveſon being earneſtly travelled withall to recant, ſaid in this wiſe; I would not recant and forſake my opinion and belief for all the goods in London: I do appeal to Gods mercy, and will be none of your Church, nor ſubmit my ſelf to the ſame: and that I have ſaid, I will ſay again. And if there came an Angel from Heaven, to teach me any other doctrine then that which I am in now, I would not beleeve him. Which anſwer thus made, he was condemned as an heretick, and with the ſame perſons was committed to the ſecular power (as they term it) and at the place above mentioned was burned; perſevering ſtill in his conſtant faith unto the end.

Tho. Iveſon condemned.

The Martyrdome of Thomas Iveſon.



The martyrdome of Tho. Iveſon, at Chicheſter, Anno 1555, July.

John Aleworth.

IN the latter end of this moneth of July, John Aleworth died in priſon, at the Town of Reading, being there in bonds for the cauſe and teſtimony of the truth of the Lords Goſpel. Whom although the Catholike Prelates (according to their uſuall ſolemnity) did exclude out of their Catholike buriall, yet we ſee no cauſe why to exclude him out of the number of Chriſts holy Martyrs and heirs of his holy Kingdom.

John Aleworth died in priſon.

James Abbes, a Martyr of bleſſed memory, ſuffering for the true cauſe of Chriſts Goſpel.

August.

AMong many that travelled in theſe troubleſome days to keep a good conſcience, there was James Abbes Martyr.

James Abbes relented.

was one James Abbes, a young man, which through compulſion of the tyranny then uſed, was enforced to have his part with his brethren in wandring, and going from place to place, to avoid the perill of apprehending. But when time came, that the Lord had another work to do for him, he was caught by the hands of wicked men, and brought before the Biſhop of Norwich, D. Hopton. Who examining him of his religion, and charging him therewith very ſore, both with threats and fair ſpeech, at the laſt the ſaid poor James did yeeld, and relented to their naughty perſwaſions, although his conſcience conſented not thereto.

Mony given to James Abbes by the Biſhop.

A notable example of ſting of conſcience.

James Abbes throweth to the Biſhop his mony again.

Now when he was diſmiſſed, and ſhould go from the Biſhop, the Biſhop calling him again, gave him a piece of money, either lx. d. or xx. d. whether I know not; which when the ſaid James had received, and was gone from the Biſhop, his conſcience began to throb, and inwardly to accuſe his fact, how he had diſpleaſed the Lord by conſenting to their beaſtly illuſions: In which combat with himſelf (being pitiouſly vexed) he went immediatly to the Biſhop again, and there threw him his ſaid mony, which he had received at his hand, and ſaid, it repented him that he ever gave his conſent to their wicked perſwaſions, and that he gave his conſent in taking of his mony.

James Abbes made ſtrong by his infirmity.

Now this being done, the Biſhop with his Chaplains did labour afreſh to win him again, but in vain: for the ſaid James Abbes would not yeeld for any of them all, although he had played Peter before through infirmity, but ſtood manfully in his Maſters quarrell to the end, and abode the force of the fire, to the conſuming of his body into aſhes, which tyranny of burning was done in Bury, the ſecond day of Auguſt. Anno 1555.

A diſcourſe of the apprehenſion, examination, and condemnation of John Denly, Gentleman, Iohn Newman, and Patrick Packingham, martyred for the teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

John Denly, Gentleman, John Newman, Patricke Packingham, Martyrs. Edmund Tyrell, Eſquire, Promoter.

IN the midſt of this tempeſtuous rage of malignant adverſaries, perſecuting and deſtroying the poor flock of Chriſt, many there were, which though they were not ſpirituall men, yet thought to help forward, for their parts, and as one would ſay, to heap up moe coals to this furious flame of perſecution, whether of a blinde zeal, or a paraſiticall flattery, I know not. Amongſt which, one was Edmund Tyrell Eſquire, and at that time a Juſtice of Peace within the County of Eſſex, an aſſiſter (as it ſeemeth) to cruell murtherers of Gods Saints. Who, as he came from the burning and death of certain godly Martyrs, met with John Denly, Gentleman, and one John Newman (both of Maidſton in Kent) travelling upon the way, and going to viſit ſuch their godly friends, as then they had in the ſaid County of Eſſex. And upon the ſight of them, as he yet braggeth, firſt upon ſuſpicion apprehended, and ſearched them; and at laſt, finding the confeſſions of their faith in writing about them, ſent them up unto the Queens Commiſſioners, directing alſo unto one of the ſame Commiſſioners, theſe his favourable letters in their behalf. The copy whereof here may appear as followeth.

A copy of Edmund Tyrels Letter, to one of the Queens Commiſſioners.

A letter of detection, written by Maſter Edmund Tyrel to a Commiſſioner, whom I gheſſe to be ſir Rich. Southwell.

SIr, with moſt hearty commendations unto you, theſe ſhall be to advertiſe you, that I have received a letter from ſir Nicholas Hare and you, and other of the King and Queens Majeſties Commiſſioners, by a ſervant of the King and Queens, called John Failes, for certain buſineſſe about S. Oſythes, the which I could not immediatly go about, for that I had received a letter from the Councell, to aſſiſt the Sheriffe for the execution of the hereticks, the one at Raleigh, and the other at Rochford, the which was done on Tueſday laſt.

M. Denly and John Newman by the way met and apprehended by M. Edmund Tyrell.

And as I came homeward, I met with two men: Even as I ſaw them, I ſuſpected them, and then I did examine them, and ſearch them, and I did finde about them certain letters which I have ſent you, and alſo a certain writing in paper, what their faith was. And they confeſſed to me that they had forſaken and fled out of their country for religions ſake; and ſince they have been in many countries, by their confeſſion, which I have ſent you: for the which I thought it good (for that they came from London, and that there might be more had of them than I yet have underſtood) to ſend them to you, whereby you and others of the King and Queens Commiſſioners there might trie them, ſo that their lewdneſſe might be thorowly known; for I think theſe have cauſed many to trouble their conſciences. So this hath been ſome let to me, wherefore I could not go about theſe matters expreſſed in your letters: but to morrow at noon I intend by Gods grace to accompliſh your letters, with as much diligence as I may. And thus the holy Trinity have you ever in his keeping. I beſeech you to be ſo good (Maſter) to diſcharge theſe poor men that bring theſe priſoners up, as ſoon as may be. And thus moſt heartily farewell, from Raimeſdon Park the 12. day of June, 1555.

By your aſſured to command,
Edmund Tyrel.

Forſomuch as in this letter mention is made of a certain writing in paper found about them of their faith; what this writing was, and what were the contents of it, the copy thereof here inſueth.

Certain notes collected and gathered out of the Scriptures by Iohn Denley, Gentleman, with a confeſſion of his faith, touching the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood, found about him ready written, at his apprehenſion.

Chriſt is in the Sacrament, as he is where two or three are gathered together in his Name.

M. Denleys notes touching matter of the Sacrament.

THe difference of doctrine between the faithfull and the Papiſts concerning the Sacrament is; that the Papiſts ſay, that Chriſt is corporally under or in the forms of bread and wine; but the faithfull ſay, that Chriſt is not there, neither corporally nor ſpiritually; but in them that worthily eat and drink the bread and wine, he is ſpiritually, but not corporally.

Figuratively, Spiritually, Really.

For figuratively he is in the bread and wine, and ſpiritually he is in them that worthily eat and drink the bread and wine; but really, carnally, and corporally he is only in heaven, from whence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead.

My belief in the Sacrament of the bleſſed Body and Blood of my Saviour Ieſus Chriſt.

The belief of M. Denley of the Sacrament of the body and blood of our Lord.

AS concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, my belief is this, that the bread and wine is appointed unto

How bread repreſenteth the body of Chriſt.

unto a Sacrament; and that after thanks be given to God the Father, then it doth repreſent unto me the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, not that the bread is the Body, or the wine the Blood, but that I in faith do ſee that bleſſed Body of our Saviour broken on the Croſſe, and his precious Blood plenteouſly ſhed for the redemption of my ſins. Alſo in faith I hear him call us unto him, ſaying; Come unto me all ye that labour and are laden, and I will refreſh you, Eſay 55. a. b.Matth.11, &c. In faith I come unto him, and I am refreſhed, ſo that I beleeve that all that do come unto the table of the Lord in this faith, fear, and love, being ſorry for his offences, intending earneſtly to lead a godly converſation in this vale of miſery, do receive the fruit of the death of Chriſt, which fruit is our ſalvation.

The fruit of Chriſts death, what it is, and how it is received in the Sacrament.

I do underſtand (ſpiritually) that as the outward man doth eat the materiall bread which comforteth the body, ſo doth the inward man (through faith) eat the body of Chriſt, beleeving that as the bread is broken, ſo was Chriſts body broken on the Croſſe for our ſins; which comforteth our ſouls unto life everlaſting, and ſignifying thereby, that even as that bread was divided among them, ſo ſhould his body and fruit of his paſſion be diſtributed unto as many as beleeved his words. But the bread broken and eaten in the Supper, moniſheth and putteth us in remembrance of his death, and ſo exciteth us to thankſgiving, to laud and praiſe God for the benefits of our redemption.

How Chriſt is received ſpiritually in the Sacrament.

And thus we there have Chriſt preſent; in the inward eye and ſight of our faith we eat his Body, and drink his blood, that is, we beleeve ſurely that his Body was crucified for our ſins, and his Blood ſhed for our ſalvation.

The groſſe errour of the Papiſts in the real being of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

Chriſts Body and Blood is not contained in the Sacramentall bread and wine, as the Papiſts have ſaid, and as ſome yet do ſay, as ye reade in theſe Scriptures following: Firſt reade in S. Matth.9. Luke 5. Matth.24, and 26. Mark 16. Luke 24. John 13. Luke 23. in the end. John 14. 15, 16, 17. Acts 1. 3. 7. 9. Rom.8. Pſal.8. 1 Corin. 10, 11. Exod. 12. Coloſſ.1. Epheſ.1.4. Phil.2.1. 1 Theſ.1.4. Hebr.1.5.8, 9, 10.12. 1 Pet.3. Pſal. 11.47.103.10.

Chriſts materiall Body is not in all places, as theſe Scriptures do teſtifie hereafter.

Chriſts body not in all places at once.

Firſt, reade St. Matthew the laſt, Marke the laſt, Luke the laſt, John 11.20, 21. Theſe places of the Scriptures do plainly declare, that his Body, that was born of the Virgin Mary, cannot be in moe places than one, and that is in heaven, on the right hand of God, and not in the Sacrament, nor in all places, as the Papiſts have affirmed, and yet do affirm.

Idolatry to the creatures of bread and wine

Therefore whoſoever they be that do worſhip the creatures of bread and wine, do commit Idolatry, and make abominable idols of them, and take the glory from God, and give it to his creatures, which is contrary to the minde of God, as theſe Scriptures hereafter do teſtifie, firſt in Exod.20. 22, 23, 24. John Denley.

M. Denley and his fellow priſoners ſent to Biſhop Boner.

Now to return to the Commiſſioners again: they receiving theſe priſoners afore mentioned, after they ſaw they could little prevail with their own perſwaſions, ſent them unto Biſhop Boner to be handled after his fatherly and charitable diſcretion. Which how diſcreet and favourable it was, as well the hiſtorie of others, as alſo the ſequele of this doth manifeſtly declare. For the 28 day of June then next following, he cauſed the ſaid Denley and Newman, with one Patrick Packingham, to be brought into his chamber within his houſe or palace, there examining them upon their Confeſſions (which Tyrel had found about them) objecting alſo unto them certain other articles of his own. To the which they all anſwered in effect one thing, although Denley anſwered more largely than the others, and therefore I thought it enough only to manifeſt his, as ſufficient, and in no part differing from the others, except that Pachingham had one article of no great force objected to him, which the reſt had not.

M. Denley, Newman, and Pachingham, had in examination before the Biſhop of London.

This done, the Biſhop uſed with them his accuſtomed perſwaſions, to the which Maſter Denley ſaid; God ſave me from your counſell, and keep me in the minde that I am in, for that you count hereſie, I take to be the truth: and thereupon they were commanded to appear in the Biſhops Conſiſtory the fifth of July then next coming, in the afternoon, where theſe articles were objected againſt them.

The words of M. Denley to Biſhop Boner.

The Articles objected by Edmund Boner, Biſhop of London, againſt Iohn Denley, Iohn Newman, and Patricke Pachingham, joyntly and ſeverally the 28 of Iune, 1555.

Articles objected.

First, that the ſaid N. now is of the Dioceſſe of London, and the juriſdiction of the Biſhop of London.

Slander of untruth.

Secondly, that the ſaid N. hath not beleeved, nor doth beleeve, that there is any Catholike Church of Chriſt here in earth.

Catholike Church.

Thirdly, that the ſaid N. hath not beleeved, nor doth beleeve, that this Church of England is any part or member of the ſaid Catholike Church.

Maſſe.

Fourthly, that the ſaid N. hath beleeved, and doth beleeve, that the Maſſe now uſed in this Realm of England, is naught, and full of Idolatry and evill, and plain againſt Gods word, and therefore he the ſaid N. hath not heard it, nor will hear it.

Auricular Confeſſion.

Fifthly, that the ſaid N. hath beleeved, and doth ſo beleeve, that auricular confeſſion uſed now in this Realm of England, is not good, but contrary to Gods word.

Popiſh abſolution.

Sixthly, that the ſaid N. hath beleeved, and doth ſo beleeve, that abſolution, given by the Prieſt hearing confeſſion, is not good, nor allowable by Gods word, but contrary to the ſame.

Mattins, Evenſong, Aneling, with other rites of the Popes Church.

Seventhly, that the ſaid N. hath beleeved, and doth ſo beleeve, that Chriſtning of Children, as it is now uſed in the Church of England, is not good, nor allowable by Gods word, but againſt it: likewiſe confirming of Children, giving of orders, ſaying of Mattins and Evenſong, annointing or aneling of ſick perſons, making of holy bread, and holy water, with the reſt of the Church.

Two Sacraments.

Eighthly, that the ſaid N. hath beleeved, and doth ſo beleeve, that there are but two Sacraments in Chriſts Catholike Church, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Altar.

Ninthly, that the ſaid N. hath beleeved, and doth ſo beleeve, that foraſmuch as Chriſt is aſcended up into heaven, therefore the very Body of Chriſt is not in the Sacrament of the Altar.

This articles was only objected againſt Patricke Pachingham.

Tenthly, that thou Patricke Packingham now being of the age of 21 at the leaſt, being within the houſe of the Biſhop of London at Pauls, and by him brought to the great Chappell to hear Maſſe there, the ſaid 23 day of June, the yeer of our Lord, 1555. didſt unreverendly ſtand in the ſaid Chappell, having thy cap on thy head all the Maſſe while; and didſt alſo refuſe to receive holy water, and holy bread at the Prieſts hands, there containing and deſpiſing both the Maſſe, and the ſaid holy water and holy bread.

The anſwer of Iohn Denley and the reſt, to the Articles objected.

Their anſwers.

TO the firſt article I anſwer, it is very true.

The true Catholike Church not denied.

To the ſecond article I anſwer, that it is not true: for I beleeve the holy Catholike Church which is builded upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt being the head, which holy Church is the congregation of the faithfull people, diſperſed thorow the whole world, the which Church doth preach Gods holy Word truly, and doth alſo miniſter the two Sacraments, that is to ſay, Baptiſm and the Supper of the Lord, according to his bleſſed Word.

A notice of the true Church.

The Church of England now is no member of the true Catholike Church, and the reaſon why.

To the third article I anſwer, that I do beleeve that this Church of England, uſing the faith and religion which is now uſed, is no part or member of the foreſaid Catholike Church, but is the Church of Antichriſt, the Biſhop of Rome being the head thereof: for it is plain, that they have altered the Teſtament of God, and ſet up a Teſtament of their own deviſing, full of blaſphemy and lies: for Chriſts Teſtament is, that he would have all things done to the edifying of the people, as it appeareth when he taught them to pray, Matth. 6. and alſo it appeareth by St. Paul, 1 Corinth. 14. for he ſaith; That he that propheſieth, ſpeaketh unto men for their edifying, for their exhortation, and for their comfort; he that ſpeaketh with the tongue, profiteth himſelf; he that propheſieth, edifieth the Congregation.

1 Cor. 14.

Alſo he ſaith, Even ſo likewiſe when ye ſpeak with tongues, except ye ſpeak words that have ſignification, how ſhall it be underſtood what is ſpoken? for ye ſhall but ſpeak in the ayr, that is as much to ſay, in vain, Alſo he ſaith, Thou verily giveſt thanks well, but the other is not edified. I thank my God, I ſpeak with tongues more than ye all: yet I had rather in the Congregation to ſpeak five words with underſtanding, to the information of other, than ten thouſand words with the tongue. Alſo he ſaith; Let all things be done to edification.

The Popes ſervice in a tongue which edifieth not the people.

Alſo it is written in the Pſalm 46. For God is King of all the earth: O ſing praiſes unto him with underſtanding, &c. So it doth appear, that this Church of England, now uſed, is not builded upon Chriſt, if S. Pauls words be true, and alſo the Pſalms; therefore this Church is not builded upon the Prophets, Apoſtles, nor Chriſt, as I have declared before.

The Maſſe abominable and idolatrous.

To this fourth article I anſwer, and I do beleeve (as I have afore ſaid) that the Maſſe, now uſed in this Realm of England, is naught, and abominable idolatry and blaſphemy againſt Gods Word; for Chriſt in his holy Supper inſtituted the Sacraments of bread and wine, to be eaten together in remembrance of his death till he come, and not to have them worſhipped, and make an idoll of them: for God will not be worſhipped in his creatures, but we ought to give him praiſes for his creatures, which he hath created for us. For he ſaith in the ſecond Commandement Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven image, nor the likeneſſe of any thing that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, thou ſhalt not bow down to them nor worſhip them. So it appeareth by this Commandement, that we ought not to worſhip the Sacrament of bread and wine, for it is plain idolatry; for he ſaith, No ſimilitude, therefore, Thou ſhalt not bow down to them nor worſhip them. I pray you what do you call kneeling down, holding up the hands, knocking of the breſt, putting off the cap, and making curteſie, with other like ſuperſtition? you would make men to be ſo blinde, that this is no worſhipping.

The Maſſe againſt Gods Commandement.

Objection of the Papiſts removed.

Peradventure you will object and ſay, you do not worſhip the bread and the wine, but Chriſts body which was born of the Virgin Mary, contained under the forms of bread and wine. But that is a very lye; for Chriſts body that was born of the Virgin Mary is in heaven, if S. Pauls words be true, as undoubtebly they are: for he ſaith in the 10 of the Hebrews; But this man, after he hath offered one ſacrifice for ſins, is ſet down for ever on the right hand of God, and from henceforth tarrieth till his foes be made his footſtool.

Heb. 10.

Alſo in the 9 chapter he ſaith; For Chriſt is not entred into holy places that are made with hands, which are ſimilitudes of true things, but is entred into very heaven, to appear now in the ſight of God for us, &c. Alſo Phil. 3. but our converſation is in heaven, from whence we look for the Saviour, even the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, &c. 1. Theſ. 1. For they themſelves ſhew of you, what manner of entring in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from Images, to ſerve the living God, and to look for his Son from heaven, whom he raiſed from death, even Ieſus which delivered us from the wrath to come, &c. Alſo John 16. I went out from the Father, and came into the world. Again, I leave the world, and go to the Father, &c. John 17. Now I am not in the world, and they are in the world, and I come to thee. All theſe places of the Scripture, with other moe, prove plainly to them that have ears to hear, that Chriſts body that was born of the Virgin Mary is in heaven, and not in the ſacramentall bread and wine; and therefore it is Idolatry to worſhip them, &c.

Againſt auricular confeſſion.

To this fifth article I anſwer, that I do beleeve as I have afore ſaid, that auricular confeſſion is not good, as it is now uſed. Touching my ſinnes wherein I have offended God, I muſt ſeek to him for remiſſion thereof, for our Saviour Chriſt ſaith in the 11 of S. Matthew, Come unto me all ye that labour and are laden, I will eaſe you, &c. The riotous ſon, Luke 15. ſaith, I will ariſe and go to my Father, and I will ſay to him; Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and before thee, and I am no more worthy to be called thy ſon, &c. Pſalm 31. I ſaid I will knowledge mine offences, and accuſe my ſelf unto the Lord, and ſo thou forgaveſt me the wickedneſſe of my ſinne, &c. Job 13. But I will reprove mine own wayes in his ſight: He ſhall make me whole, and there may no hypocrite come before him. Syrach 34. ſaith: Who can be cleanſed of the unclean? And there was but one of the ten Lepers that were cleanſed, that came to Chriſt to give him thanks. He asked for the other nine. But if I have offended my neighbour, I muſt reconcile my ſelf to my neighbour: And if I be a notorious ſinner, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, it ought to be declared to the congregation, and the Miniſter of the congregation hath power by the word to excommunicate me, and I am to be taken as an heathen perſon, not for a day, or 40 dayes, but unto ſuch time as I do openly in the congregation knowledge my fault, then the Miniſter hath power by the word to preach to me or them the remiſſion of our ſins in the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, as it is written in the 13 of the Acts of the Apoſtles, and Mat. 18. Other confeſſion I know none.

Remiſſion of ſinnes to be ſought only at the hands of Chriſt.

To this ſixth article, I the ſaid John Denley have anſwered in the fifth.

To this ſeventh article I anſwer, that as touching the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which is the Chriſtening of children, it is altered and changed; for S. John uſed nothing but the preaching of the word and the water, as it doth appear, when Chriſt required to be baptized of him, and others alſo which came to John to be baptized, as it appeareth, Matth. 3. Mark 1. Luke 3. And Acts 8. the Chamberlain ſaid; See here is water, what letteth me to be baptized? It appeareth here that Philip had preached unto him; for he ſaid, Here is water. We do not reade that he asked for any cream, nor oyl, not for ſpettle, nor conjured water, nor conjured wrae, nor yet croyſome, nor ſalt, for it ſeemeth that Philip had preached no ſuch things to him; for he would as well have asked for them as for water: and the water was not conjured, but even as it was afore. Alſo Act. 10. Then anſwered Peter, Can any man forbid water that theſe ſhould not be baptized? &c. Acts 16. And Paul and Silas preached unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his houſe: and he took them the ſame hour of the night, and waſhed their wounds, and ſo was he baptized, and all they of his houſhold ſtraightway. Where ye ſee nothing but preaching the word and the water. The like alſo is to be ſaid of the reſt of the ceremonies of your Church.

Acts 10.

Acts 16.

The Rainbow as good a ſacrament as ſome of the Popiſh ſacraments.

To the eigth article I anſwer ſhortly, that there be Sacraments no more but two; Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, except ye will make the Rain-bow a Sacrament: for there is no Sacrament but hath a promiſe annexed unto it.

To the ninth article I do anſwer you, that ye have my minde written already. For it was found about me when I was taken, and alſo ye know my minde in the fourth article, plainly expreſſed concerning the bodily preſence: For Chriſts body is in heaven, and will not be contained in ſo ſmall a piece of bread. And as the words which Chriſt ſpake are true indeed, ſo muſt they alſo be underſtood by other of the Scriptures which Chriſt ſpake himſelf, and alſo the Apoſtles after him. And thus I make an end, &c.

By me, Iohn Denley.

The firſt day of the moneth of July, the ſaid three priſoners were brought into the Conſiſtory in Pauls Church, where he proceeded againſt them after the uſuall form and manner of law, reading firſt their confeſſions, articles, and anſwers, and then tempting them, ſometime with fair promiſes, otherwhiles with threatnings, which were alwayes his chiefeſt arguments and reaſons to perſwade withall. In the end, ſeeing their unmoveable conſtancy, upon the fift of July he condemned them as hereticks, and gave them unto the Sheriffs of London, as to his common executioners, who kept them untill they were commanded by Writ to ſend them to their ſeverall places of ſuffering; which was for Maſter Denley, Uxbridge: where the eighth day of Auguſt he was burned. And being ſet in the fire with the burning flame about him, he ſung in it a Pſalm.

The ungentle dealing of D. Storie againſt M. Denley.

Then cruell Doctor Storie being there preſent, commanded one of the tormentors to hurl a faggot at him, whereupon being hurt therewith upon the face that he bled again, he left his ſinging, and clapt both his hands on his face. Truly, quoth Doctor Storie to him that hurled the faggot, thou haſt mard a good old ſong.

The ſaid John Denley being yet ſtill in the flame of the fire, put his hands abroad, and ſung again, yeelding at the laſt his ſpirit into the hands of God through his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

After the Martyrdom of Maſter Denley at Uxbridge, which was the 8 of Auguſt, ſuffered alſo not long after Patricke Packingham at the ſame town of Uxbridge, about the 28 of the ſaid moneth. This Packingham was charged of Boner (as ye heard in the tenth article before) for his behaviour ſhewed in the Biſhops Chappell; who at the Maſſe time there ſtanding, would not put off his cap, which was taken for a hainous offence. The ſaid Packingham alſo being much laboured by Boner to recant, proteſted in theſe words to the Biſhop, that the Church which he beleeved was no Catholike Church, but was the church of Sathan, and therefore he would never turn to it, &c.

Furthermore, as touching the other, which was John Newman, Pewterer, dwelling at Maidſtone in Kent, he was burned the laſt of Auguſt, at Saffron Walden in the county of Eſſex, whoſe examination and confeſſion of his faith and belief, for the which he was cruelly burnt and perſecuted, hereunder followeth.

The martyrdom of John Newman at Saffron Walden, An. 1555. Aug. 31.

The examination of Iohn Newman, Martyr.

The copy of Jo. Newmans words in writing to Doctor Thornton.

John Newman firſt was apprehended in Kent, dwelling in the town of Maidſtone, and there was examined before Doctor Thornetoṇ Suffragan, and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with Maſter Denley and Packingham, and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before ſtoried. But becauſe his examination and anſwers before the Suffragan came not then to my hands, I thought here in this place to beſtow them, rather than they ſhould utterly be ſuppreſſed. And firſt what his anſwer was by writing to the ſaid Suffragan, after his apprehenſion, you ſhall hear by the tenor of his own words, as follow.

IT may pleaſe you to underſtand, that for the ſpace of all the time of King Edwards raigne, we were diligently inſtructed with continuall ſermons, made by ſuch men, whoſe faith, wiſdom, learning, and vertuous living, was commended unto all men under the Kings hand and ſeal, and under the hands of the whole Councell. Theſe men taught diligently a long time, perſwading us by the allegations of Gods word, that there was no Tranſubſtantiation, nor corporall preſence in the ſacrament. Their doctrine was not beleeved of us ſuddenly, but by their continuall preaching, and alſo by our continuall prayer unto God, that we might never be deceived; but if it were true, that God would incline our hearts unto it: and if it were not true, that we might never beleeve it. We weighed that they laboured with Gods word, and we asked the advice of our friends, neither could we finde that they preached falſe doctrine. We conſidered alſo, as we did learne, that the Kings Grace and his Councell, and the moſt part of the whole Realme beleeved as they taught, becauſe no man preached the contrarie. Alſo wee know that the Preachers were commanded by the King and laws of the Realm, to preach unto us ſuch doctrine, as was to the authoritie of Gods word agreeable, and no other, and by their diligent ſetting forth of it by the Kings commandment, and the whole conſent of the whole Councell, and by the authoritie of the Parliament, we imbraced it, and received it as a verie infallible truth, taught unto us for the ſpace of ſeven yeers. Wherefore, untill ſuch time as our conſciences are otherwiſe taught and inſtructed by Gods word, we cannot with ſafeguard of our conſciences take it, as many ſuppoſe at this time. And wee truſt in God, that the Queenes mercifull Highneſſe, neither yet her moſt honourable counſell will in a matter of faith uſe compulſion nor violence, becauſe faith is the gift of God, and commeth not of man, neither of mans laws, neither at ſuch time as men require it, but at ſuch time as God giveth it.

The examination and anſwers of Iohn Newman, Martyr, before Doctor Thornton, and others.

The examination and anſwers of Iohn Newman.

FIrſt, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench, either the Archdeacon or Faucet, or ſome other, whoſe name Iohn Newman doth not expreſſe, beginneth, asking in this wiſe.

Doctor. How ſay you to this? This is my body which is given for you.

Newman. It is a figurative ſpeech, one thing ſpoken, and another meant, as Chriſt ſaith; I am a vine, I am a door, I am a ſtone, &c. Is he therefore a materiall ſtone, a vine, or a door?

Doct. This is no figurative ſpeech. For he ſaith; This is my body which is given for you, and ſo ſaith he not of the ſtone, vine, or doore; but that is a figurative ſpeech.

This cup is the new Teſtament, is a figurative ſpeech.

New. Chriſt ſaith, This Cup is the new Teſtament in my Blood: If ye will have it ſo meant, then let them take and eat the cup.

Doct. Nay, that is not ſo meant; for it is a common phraſe of ſpeech among our ſelves: We ſay to our friend drink a cup of drink, and yet we meant he ſhould drink the drink in the cup.

New. Why if ye will have the one ſo underſtood, ye muſt ſo underſtand the other.

Doct. Nay, it is a common uſe of ſpeech, to ſay drink a cup of Ale or Beer. And therefore it is no figurative ſpeech.

What is a figurative ſpeech?

New. The often uſing of a thing doth not make that thing otherwiſe than it is; but whereſoever one thing is ſpoken, and another meant, it is a figurative ſpeech.

Doct. Well, we will not ſtand hereabout. How ſay ye by the reall preſence? Is not Chriſts naturall body there that was born of the Virgin Mary?

New. No, I do not ſo beleeve, neither can I ſo beleeve; for the ſoul of men doth not feed upon naturall things as the body doth.

Doct. Why, how then doth it feed?

New. I think the ſoul of man doth feed as the Angels in heaven, whoſe feeding is onely the pleaſure, joy, felicity, and delectation that they have of God: and ſo the ſoul of man doth feed and eat, through faith, the Body of Chriſt.

Collins reaſoneth with Newman.

Collins. Yea, but if the body do not feed upon naturall things, the ſoul cannot continue with the body: therefore the body muſt needs feed upon naturall things, that both may live together.

New. I grant it to be true; but yet the ſoul doth live otherwiſe than the body which doth periſh: therefore naturall things do but feed the body onely. I pray you what did Iudas receive at the Supper?

Col. Marry, Iudas did receive the very body of Chriſt, but it was to his damnation.

New. Why? was the devill entred into him before? Then he had not the devill and Chriſt in him at one time.

Whether Iudas received the body of Chriſt, or no?

Col. Nay, the devill did enter into him afterward.

New. Yea, and before too: what do ye think? Had he but one devill: Nay I think he had rather a legion of devils at the latter end.

Col. Well, put caſe it be ſo: what ſay you to that?

New. Marry, if Chriſt and the devill were both in Iudas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Col. We grant that they were both in Iudas at that time: for Chriſt may be where the devill is, if he will; but the devill cannot be where Chriſt is, except it pleaſe Chriſt.

New. Chriſt will not be in an unclean perſon that hath the devill.

D. Thornton reaſoneth with Io. Newman.

Thornton. Why? will ye not beleeve that Chriſt was in hell? and ye will grant that the devill is there; and ſo might he be in Iudas, if it pleaſed him.

New. Chriſt would not ſuffer Mary Magdalen to touch him, which ſought him at his grave, and did love him intirely; much leſſe he will ſuffer an ungodly man to receive him into his unclean body.

Thorn. Yes, ſeeing God may do all things, he may do what he liſt, and be where he will. And doth not the Pſalm ſay; He is in hell, and in all places? Why ſhould we then doubt of his being there?

New. Though his Godhead be in all places, yet that is not ſufficient to prove that his humanity is in all places.

Thorn. No, do you not beleeve that God is Omnipotent, and may do all things?

New. I do beleeve that God is Almighty, and may do all that he will do.

The Omnipotency of Chriſt doth not prove him to be really in the Sacrament.

Thorn. Nay, but if he be Omnipotent, he may do all things, and there is nothing unpoſſible for him to do.

New. I know God is Almighty, and can do all that he will: but he cannot make his Son a lyer, he cannot deny himſelf, nor can he reſtore virginity once violated and defiled.

Thorn. What is that to your purpoſe? God doth not defile virginity; we ſpeak but of things that God doth.

New. Why, will ye have the humanity of Chriſt in all places as the deity is?

Thorn. Yea, he is in all places as the deity is, if it pleaſe him.

Abſurdity of the Popes doctrine.

New. I will promiſe you that ſeemeth to me a very great hereſie, for heaven and earth are not able to contain the divine power of God, for it is in all places, as here and in every place: and yet ye ſay, that whereſoever the deity is, there is alſo the humanity, and ſo ye will make him no body, but a fantaſticall body, and not a body indeed.

Thorn. Nay, we do not ſay he is in all places as the deity is; but if it pleaſe him he may be in all places with the deity.

The humanity of Chriſt may not be in all places.

New. I promiſe you, that ſeemeth to me as great an hereſie as ever I heard in my life, and I dare not grant it, leſt I ſhould deny Chriſt to be a very man, and that were againſt all the Scriptures.

Thorn. Tuſh, what ſhall we ſtand reaſoning with him? I dare ſay he doth not beleeve that Chriſt came out of his mother, not opening the matrice. Do you beleeve that Chriſt roſe from death, and came thorow the ſtone?

New, I do beleeve that Chriſt roſe from death; but I do not beleeve that he came thorow the ſtone, neither doth the Scripture ſo ſay.

Note the groſſe ignorance of this Suffragan.

Thorn. Lo, how ſay you, he doth not beleeve that Chriſt came through the ſtone; and if he doth not beleeve this, how ſhall he beleeve the other? If he could beleeve this, it were eaſie for him to beleeve the other.

New. The Scripture doth not ſay he went thorow the ſtone, but it ſaith the Angel of God came down, and rolled away the ſtone, and for fear of him the Keepers became even as dead men.

Thorn. A fool, fool, that was becauſe the women ſhould ſee that he was riſen again from death.

New. Well, the Scripture maketh as much for me, as it doth for you, and more too.

Thorn. Well, let us not ſtand any longer about this. Back again to the reall preſence. How ſay ye, is the Body of Chriſt really in the Sacrament, or no?

New. I have anſwered you already.

Thorn. Well, do ye not beleeve that he is there really.

New. No, I beleeve it not.

Thorn. Well, will ye ſtand to it?

New. I muſt needs ſtand to it, till I be perſwaded by a further truth.

Thorn. Nay, ye will not be perſwaded, but ſtand to your own opinion.

New. Nay, I ſtand not to mine own opinion, God I take to witneſſe, but only to the Scriptures of God, and that can all thoſe that ſtand here witneſſe with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witneſſe, that I do nothing of preſumption, but that that I do, is onely my conſcience, and if there be a further truth than I ſee, except it appear a truth to me, I cannot receive it as a truth. And ſeeing faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man; for it is not you that can give me faith, nor no man elſe: therefore I truſt ye will bear the more with me, ſeeing it muſt be wrought by God, and when it ſhall pleaſe God to open a further truth to me, I ſhall receive it with all my heart, and imbrace it.

Thornton had many other queſtions which I did not bear away; but as I do underſtand, theſe are the chiefeſt: as for taunts, fooliſh and unlearned, he lacked none. Praiſe God for his gifts, and God increaſe in us ſtrength.

The arguments of Iohn Newman.

Argument in the ſecond figure.

If the Body of Chriſt were really and bodily in the Sacrament, then whoſoever received the Sacrament, received alſo the body.

The wicked receiving the Sacrament, receive not the Body of Chriſt.

Ergo, the Body of Chriſt is not really in the Sacrament.

Argument.

Ca- They which eat the fleſh, and drink the Blood of Chriſt, dwell in him, and he in them.

meſ- The wicked dwell not in Chriſt, nor he in them.

tres. Ergo, the wicked eat not the Fleſh, nor drink the Blood of Chriſt.

Argument.

Ca- They that have Chriſt dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit, Iohn 15. He that dwelleth in me, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruit.

meſ- The wicked bring forth no fruit of goodneſſe.

tres. Ergo, they have not Chriſts Body dwelling in them.

Argument.

Argument in the third figure

Da- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the abſence thereof.

ti- Remembrance of Chriſts Body is in the Sacrament, Do this in remembrance of me, &c.

ſi. Ergo, Chriſts Body there is imported to be abſent.

Marry they will ſay, we ſee him not with our outward eyes, but he is commended under the forms of Bread and wine, and that we ſee is nothing but a quality or an accident. But let them ſhew me a quality or an accident without a ſubſtance, and I will beleeve them. And thus much concerning Newmans examinations and arguments.

The faith of Iohn Newman, dwelling at Maidſtone in Kent, who was by occupation a Pewterer.

The Lord is the Protector of my life. The juſt ſhall live by faith, and if he withdraw himſelf, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him. Abac.1. Heb,10.

My faith is, that there is one God, which is without beginning, and without ending. This God created all things viſible and inviſible. And after that he had made both heaven and earth, with all other creatures, he made man, and ſet him in the place which he had prepared for him, which place he called Eden: he gave to Adam his commandements and precepts, and ſaid, Whenſoever thou doſt the thing which I forbid, thou ſhalt ſurely die the death; yet did man for all this diſobey God his Creator, and after his ſinne, he fled from God, hid himſelf, and was in a miſerable deſperate caſe. But God ſeeing man in his miſerable eſtate, becauſe he and all his poſterity ſhould not continue in death, promiſed Adam that the womans ſeed ſhould break the Serpents head, whereby is meant, that the Sonne of God ſhould become man, and deſtroy the devill, which by his ſubtile perſwaſions had deceived Adam. Then did Adam, by faith, take hold of Gods promiſe, and became the ſervant of righteouſneſſe, through the faith which he had in the promiſe of the womans ſeed. So did Abel, Seth, Henoch, and Noah, with faithfull Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and the reſt of the faithfull untill Chriſts time, as St. Paul ſaith; They did eat all of one ſpirituall meat, and did all drink of one ſpirituall drink. They did drink of that ſpirituall rock that followed them, which rock was Chriſt that ſaveth us. And when the time was full come, God ſent his Sonne, made of a woman, that is, he took fleſh of the Virgin Mary, and became man; not the ſhadow of a man, nor a fantaſticall man, as ſome falſly feign, but a very naturall man in all points, ſinne onely excepted, which God and man is Chriſt the promiſed womans ſeed. This Chriſt was here converſant among men for the ſpace of 30 yeers and more, and then the time was come that he ſhould go to his Father, he gave unto us the myſtery of our Redemption, that we through faith ſhould eat his body, and drink his blood, that we might feed on him through faith to the end of the world. After this, Chriſt offered up his body on the Croſſe to pacifie his Father, and to deliver us from the thraldom of the devill, in the which we were through ſin originall and actuall. And with that one ſacrifice of his body, once offered on the Croſſe, he hath made perfect for ever all them that are ſanctified. He deſcended into hell, the third day he roſe again from death, and was converſant at certain times with his Diſciples for the ſpace of 40 dayes after he roſe from death. Then in the ſight of all his Diſciples he aſcended into heaven: and as his Diſciples ſtood looking upward, and beholding him how he went into heaven, two men ſtood by them in white apparell, which alſo ſaid; Ye men of Galile, why ſtand ye gazing up into heaven? This ſame Jeſus which is taken up from you into heaven, ſhall ſo come even as ye have ſeen him go into heaven. Saint Peter alſo ſaith, that the heavens muſt receive him, untill the time that all things which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his Prophets ſince the world began, be reſtored again, which is the latter day, when he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead. I do believe in the holy Ghoſt, which is the ſpirit of God, proceeding from the Father and the Son, which holy ſpirit is one God with them. I believe that there is an holy Church, which is the company of the faithfull and elect people of God, diſperſed abroad throughout the whole world, which holy Church or Congregation doth not look for Chriſt here, nor Chriſt there, neither in the deſert, nor in the ſecret places whereof Chriſt warneth us, but as S. Paul ſaith, in heaven; where he ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father: they ſet their affections on things that are above, and not on things that are on earth. For they are dead concerning the things of this world, and their life is hid with Chriſt in God: and when Chriſt, which is their life ſhall ſhew himſelf, then ſhall they alſo appear with him in glory. I believe that there is a communion of Saints, even the fellowſhip of the faithfull people which are diſperſed abroad thorowout all the whole world, and are of one minde: they follow Chriſt their head, they love one another as Chriſt loved them, and are knit together in one, even in Chriſt; which Church or Congregation hath forgiveneſſe of ſins through Chriſt, and ſhall enter without ſpot before the face of God into his glory. For as Chriſt, being their head, hath entred pure and clean, ſo they entring by him, ſhall be like him in glory. And I am certain and ſure, that all they which do die, ſhall riſe again and receive their bodies. In them ſhall they ſee Chriſt come in his glory, to judge the quick and the dead. At whoſe coming all men ſhall appear and give a reckoning of their doings: he ſhall ſeparate the good from the bad, he ſhall ſay to them which are his elect; Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the beginning; but to the other that have alwayes reſiſted his will, he ſhall ſay; Depart from me ye curſed into everlaſting fire, which is prepared for the devill and his angels.

Thus have I briefly declared my faith, which were no faith at all if I were in doubt of it. This faith therefore I deſire God to increaſe in me. Praiſe God for his gifts.

¶ And thus have ye the Martyrdom with the confeſſion of this bleſſed man, and witneſſe of the Lords truth, who for that gave his life, as is before declared.

Likewiſe Richard Hook about the ſame ſeaſon, and for the ſame matter gave his life at Chicheſter.

The examinations, anſwers, and condemnation of William Coker, William Hopper, Henry Laurence, Richard Colliar, Richard Wright, William Stere, before the Biſhop of Dover, and Harpsfield, Archdeacon of Canterbury.

Six Martyrs in Kent.

Thornton, Harpsfield, Richard Faucet, Rob. Collins, perſecutors.

Mention was made a little before in the ſtory of M. Bland and Nicholas Sheterden, of certain other Kentiſh-men, who being the ſame time with them called forth and examined by Thornton Biſhop of Dover, Nich. Harpsfield, Rich. Faucet, and Robert Collins: yet notwithſtanding, becauſe the condemnation and execution of them was deferred a little longer, till the later end of the month of Auguſt; coming therefore now to the time of their ſuffering, we will briefly touch ſome part of their examinations and anſwers, as we finde them in the Regiſters. The names of theſe were William Coker, Wil. Hopper, Henry Laurence, Rich. Colliar, Rich. Wright, Wil. Stere. What the articles objected to Maſter Bland and them were, ye heard before. To the which articles they anſwered for themſelves ſeverally, in effect as followeth.

Wil. Coker condemned.

First, William Coker ſaid, he would anſwer no otherwiſe than he had already anſwered; and being offered to have longer reſpite of ſix dayes after, he refuſed to take it, and ſo upon the ſame, ſentence of condemnation was read againſt him, the eleventh of July.

Wil. Hopper condemned.

William Hopper firſt ſeemed to grant to the faith and determination of the Catholike Church; after calling himſelf better to minde, conſtantly ſticking to the truth, he was condemned the next week after, the 16 of July.

The words of Hen. Laurence.

Henry Laurence examined the ſaid 16 of July, and partly deferred to the 2 of Auguſt, anſwered to the articles objected againſt him; firſt denying auricular confeſſion, and that he neither had nor would receive the Sacrament, becauſe, ſaith he, the order of the holy Scriptures is changed in the order of the Sacrament.

Ex Regiſt. Putting of his cap at the mention of the Sacrament.

Moreover, the ſaid Laurence was charged for not putting off his cap, when the Suffragan made mention of the Sacrament, and did reverence to the ſame: the ſaid Laurence anſwering in theſe words, What ſaid he? ye ſhall not need to put off your cap: for it is not ſo holy that you need to put off your cap thereunto.

Chriſt was ſo his body, as he ſaid he was a doore.

Further, being oppoſed concerning the verity of the Sacrament given to Chriſts Diſciples, he affirmed, that even as Chriſt gave his very body to his Diſciples, and confeſſed it to be the ſame, ſo likewiſe Chriſt himſelf ſaid, he was a door, &c. adding moreover, that as he had ſaid before, ſo he ſaith ſtill, that the Sacrament of the altar is an Idoll, and no remembrance of Chriſts paſſion, and contrary he knoweth not. At laſt required to put to his hand in ſubſcribing to his anſwers, he wrote theſe words under the bill of their examinations, Ye are all of Antichriſt, and him ye fol. And here his hand was ſtayed to write any further: belike he would have written out (ſo low) &c. And ſo upon the ſame, ſentence was given againſt him the ſecond of Auguſt.

The ſubſcription of Henry Laurence.

Richard Colliar of Aſhford.

Rich Colliar.

The words of Rich. Colliar. Onely in the ſubſtance he meaneth.

RIchard Colliar above mentioned, having the 16 of Auguſt to appear, examined of the ſacrament of the Popiſh altar, anſwered and ſaid, that he did not believe, that after the conſecration there is the reall and ſubſtantiall Body of Chriſt, but onely bread and wine, and that it is moſt abominable, moſt deteſtable, and moſt wicked to believe otherwiſe, &c. Upon this the ſentence was read againſt him, and he condemned the 16 of Auguſt. After his condemnation he ſang a Pſalm. Wherefore the Prieſts and their officers railed at him, ſaying, he was out of his wits.

Richard Wright.

Rich. Wright.

Rich Wright aſhamed to ſpeak of the ſacrament of the altar.

RIchard Wright the ſame place and day, being the 16 of Auguſt, appearing, and required of the Judge what he beleeved of the reall preſence in the ſacrament, anſwered again, that as touching the ſacrament of the Altar and the Maſſe, he was aſhamed to ſpeak of it, or to name it, and that he allowed it not, as it was uſed in the Church. Againſt whom the ſentence was alſo read the day and place aforeſaid.

William Stere.

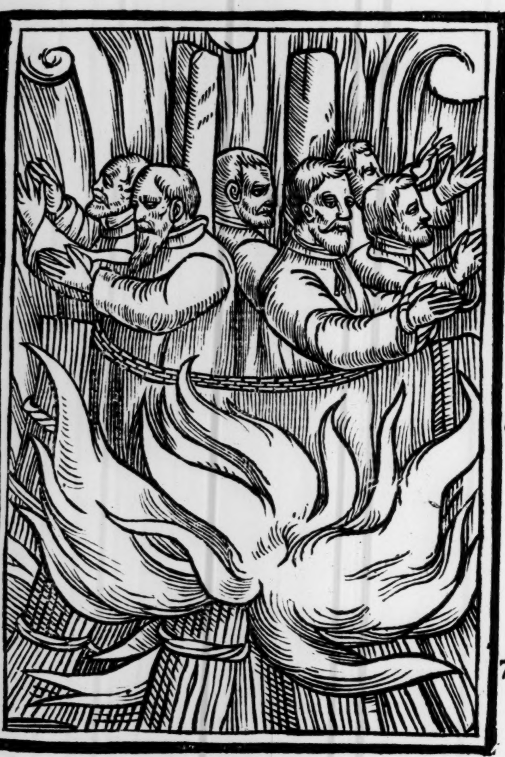
William Stere, Martyr

Dick of Dover, ſo they tearmed then Richard Thornton Biſhop of Dover.

He meaneth D. Cranmer impriſoned at Oxford.

WIlliam Stere of the foreſaid Pariſh of Aſhford, likewiſe detected and accuſed, was brought to appear the ſaid 16 day of Auguſt, where he in the ſaid Chapterhouſe of Canterbury, being required to make anſwer to the poſitions laid unto him by the Judge, made anſwer again, that he ſhould command his dogge, and not him: and further declared, that Dick of Dover had no authority to ſit againſt him in judgement, and asked where his authority was? Who then ſhewed him certain Buls and Writings from Rome, as he ſaid. William Stere denying that to be of ſufficient force, the ſaid Dick ſaid alſo he had authority from the Queen. Then the Martyr alleadging that the Biſhop of Canterbury (who then was in priſon) was his Dioceſan, urged him to ſhew his authority from the Archbiſhop, or elſe he denied his authority to be ſufficient. And as touching the ſacrament of the altar, he found it not (he ſaid) in the Scripture; and therefore he would not anſwer thereunto.

The burning of ſix godly Martyrs in one fire.



The Martyrdom of 6 Martyrs, M. Coker W. Hopper, Hen Laurence Rich. Colliar. Rich. Wright. Wil. Stere, at Canterbury, An. 1555. Aug.

Sentence againſt William Stere.

And moreover, the Judge ſpeaking of the ſacrament of the altar, with reverence thereof, and putting off his cap, he ſaid, That he needed not to reverence that matter ſo highly. And thus (ſaying to the Judge, that he was a bloody man, &c.) the ſentence was pronounced againſt him; after which ſentence being read, he ſaid, that the ſacrament of the altar was the moſt blaſphemous Idoll that ever was, &c.

And thus theſe ſix heavenly Martyrs and Witneſſe-bearers to the truth, being condemned by the bloody Suffragan and Archdeacon of Canterbury, Maſter Collins, and Maſter Faucet, were burned all together in the ſame town of Canterbury, at three ſtakes and one fire, about the later end of Auguſt.

The copy of their ſentence condemnatory, you may finde above in the ſtory of John Rogers; for the Papiſts in all their condemnations follow one manner of ſentence of courſe commonly againſt all that be condemned through their unmercifull tyranny.

Apoc. 22.

Saints of the Popes making.

AFter the burniug of theſe ſix above named, next followeth the perſecution of ten other true Servants and Saints of the Lord, not ſuch ſaints as the Pope maketh, or which are mentioned in Legenda Sanctorum, or in Vitis Patrum, or in the fabulous book De vita Sanctorum Wallenſium, &c. but ſuch as are ſpoken of in the holy Apocalyps, of whom it is written, Hij ſunt qui ſequutur Agnum quocunque ierit, quique lavarunt ſtolas ſuas in ſanguine Agni, i. Theſe be they that follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth, and which have waſhed their ſtoles in the blood of the Lamb, &c. Thus theſe Saints be not of the Popes making, or rather, to ſay the trueh, they are of the Popes making; of the Popes making (I ſay) in this reſpect, not that the Saints of God are made by the Pope, but that the Saints of God are tried and declared by the Pope: ſo, as by afflictions of Sathan Jobs patience was proved, by Pharaoh Gods power declared, and by Salinator Tarentum was won (as Tully writeth) for except he had loſt it before, M. Fabius could not have recovered it, ſo in like manner, unleſſe by Antichriſt good men had been deſtroyed, otherwiſe they had not been true Martyrs of Chriſt. The names of theſe were,

The Hiſtory of Elizabeth Warne Widow, burnt at Stratford Bowe.

Elizabeth Warne, martyr.

NOw ſeverally to proſecute the ſtories of theſe ten Martyrs aforenamed: firſt we will begin with the hiſtory of Elizabeth Warne, who in this moneth of Auguſt was burnt at Stratford Bowe, nigh unto London, widow, late the wife of Iohn Warne Upholſter, and Martyr, who alſo was burned in the end of the moneth of May laſt paſt, as before in his ſtorie is recorded. This Elizabeth had been apprehended amongſt others, the firſt day of Ianuarie, in a houſe in Bowe Churchyard in London, as they were gathered together in prayer, and at that preſent was carried to the Counter (as is alſo above ſpecified) where ſhe lay as priſoner untill the 11. day of Iune. At which time ſhe was brought into Newgate, and remained there in like caſe unto the ſecond day of Iuly. Then ſhe was ſent by the King and Queens Commiſſioners unto Boner Biſhop of London, who the ſixth day of the ſame moneth cauſed her with divers others (as Robert Smith, George Tankerfield, &c.) to be brought before him into his Palace, and there examined her upon ſundry articles, ſuch as of common order be miniſtred unto the poore Saints and Martyrs of God, as you may more plainly perceive by other more large and ample proceſſes, as well before, as hereafter mentioned.

Eliza. Warne brought to examination.

The chiefeſt objection that he uſed either towards her, or the moſt of thoſe, was touching the reall and corporall preſence of the body and bloud of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar, as the chiefeſt ground and profitableſt foundation for their Catholike dignitie. Many other matters he objected againſt them, as for not coming to the Church, for ſpeaking againſt the Maſſe, for deſpiſing their ceremonies and new found ſacraments, with divers other fond and trifling toyes, not worthy any mentioning.

The words of Eliza. Warne at her examination.

In the end, when ſhe had beene divers times brought before him and other his adherents, and there earneſtly exhorted to recant, ſhe ſayd; Do what ye will. For if Chriſt were in an errour, then am I in an errour. Upon which anſwer, ſhe was the 12. day of the ſame moneth of Iuly adjudged and condemned as an heretick, and ſo delivered unto the ſecular power, as they terme it, to be by them (yet at the Clergies appointment) put to death, which thing was accompliſhed in her the ſame moneth abovementioned.

A ſtory of Doc. Story written upon the report of D. Martins own words.

D. Story perſecuteth his kinſfolks.

The chiefe procurer of this her death was Doctor Story, being (as it is thought) of ſome alliance either to her the ſayd Elizabeth, or elſe to her late husband. Who, though he was at the firſt apprehenſion of his ſayd kinſwoman, a very earneſt ſuter for her deliverance to Doctor Martin, then one of the King and Queens Commiſſioners in matters of religion (himſelf being as yet not made Commiſſioner) and had by his ſute obtained her deliverance for that preſent, as Doctor Martin himſelfe (the author hereof) hath reported, yet afterwards, upon what occaſion God onely knoweth, except upon ſome burning charity, the ſaid D. Storie obtaining now the room of one of the Commiſſioners, cauſed not onely the ſaid Iohn Warn, but alſo his wife, and afterwards his daughter to be again apprehended, never leaving them untill he had brought them all to aſhes. Such was the rage of that devout Catholike, and white childe of the mother Church, that neither kindred nor any other conſideration could prevail with him, although it did (at his requeſt) with others, who in reſpect of him were but ſtrangers unto them. The Lord, if it be his will, turn his heart, or elſe rid his poor Church from ſuch an Hydra, as thanked be the Lord, now he hath.

George Tankerfield, a faithfull Martyr and Witneſſe of the Goſpel, conſtantly ſuffering for the teſtimony of the ſame.

The ſtory of George Tankerfield, Martyr.

GEorge Tankerfield of London, Cook, born in the City of York, about the age of 27. or 28 yeers, was in King Edwards dayes a very Papiſt, till the time Queen Mary came in, and then, perceiving the great cruelty uſed of the Popes ſide, was brought into a miſdoubt of their doings, and began (as he ſaid) in his heart to abhorre them. And as concerning the Maſſe, whereof he had but a doubtfull opinion before, and much ſtriving with himſelf in that caſe; at length he fell to prayer, deſiring God in mercy to open to him the truth, that he might be thorowly perſwaded therein, whether it were of God, or no: If not, that he might utterly hate it in his heart, and abhorre it; which according to his prayer the Lord mercifully heard, working daily more and more in him to deteſt and abhorre the ſame: and ſo he was moved to read the Teſtament, whereby (as is ſaid) the Lord lightned his minde with the knowledge of the truth, working lively faith in him to beleeve the ſame, and utterly to deteſt all Papiſtry, and ſo he came no more to their doings: And not onely that, but alſo this lively faith, ſaid he, kindled ſuch a flame in him, as would not be kept in, but utter it ſelf by confeſſion thereof, reproving his own former doings to his friends, exhorting them likewiſe to convert and turn to the truth with him, and thus he began to be ſmelled out among them, till at the laſt he was ſent for, as followeth.

Tankerfield prayeth to God to know whether the Maſſe be good, or no.

Tankerfield how he was firſt called to the knowledge of the Goſpel.

The order and manner how Tankerfield was firſt apprehended by Beard.

It pleaſed God to ſtrike him with ſickneſſe, whereby he lay long ſick; and on a certain day to take the ayr abroad, he roſe up, and went and walked into the Temple fields to ſee the ſhooters. In the mean ſeaſon came Beard home to his houſe, and inquired for him, pretending to his wife, that he came onely to have him to come and dreſſe a banquet at the Lord Pagets. The wife, becauſe of his apparell (which was very brave) took him to be ſome honeſt Gentleman, and with all ſpeed prepared her ſelf to fetch her husband, having a good hope he ſhould now earn ſome money: and leſt this Gentleman ſhould be noyed with tarrying, ſhe fetcht him a cuſhion to ſet him ſoft, and laid a fair napkin before him, and ſet bread thereon, and came to her husband. Who when he heard it, ſaid; A banquet woman? Indeed it is ſuch a banquet as will not be very pleaſant to the fleſh; but Gods will be done. And when he came home he ſaw who it was, and called him by his name, which when his wife perceived, and wherefore he came, like a tall woman would play Peters part, and inſtead of a ſword, took a ſpit, and had runne him thorow, had not the Conſtable, which Beard had ſent for by his man, come in withall, who reſcued him; yet ſhe ſent a brickbat after him, and hit him on the back. And ſo

A falſe Iudas part of Beard.

Beard and Simon Ponder troublers of Gods Saints. Sir Roger Chomley, Doctor Martin.

Tankerfield was delivered to the Conſtable, and brought to Newgate about the laſt day of February, Anno 1555. by the ſayd Beard Yeoman of the Guard, and Simon Ponder Pewterer, Conſtable of Saint Dunſtons in the Weſt, ſent in by Roger Chomley Knight, and by Doctor Martin.

Tankerfield thus being brought to priſon by his adverſaries, at length with the other above named was brought to his examination before Boner. Who, after his accuſtomed manner, ordered his articles and poſitions unto him; the copie and tenor of which his ordinary articles ye may reade above expreſſed.

Articles ordinary.

To theſe articles, as above rehearſed, he anſwered againe, conſtantly declaring his minde both touching auricular confeſſion, and alſo the ſacrament of the Popiſh Altar, and likewiſe of the Maſſe, &c. Firſt, that he was not confeſſed to any Prieſt five yeeres paſt, nor to any other but only to God: and farther, denying that he would hereafter be confeſſed to any Prieſt, for that he found it not in Chriſts booke, and tooke it only to be a counſell.

Auricular confeſsion.

And concerning the ſacrament, commonly called here in England of the Altar, he confeſſed that he neither had nor did beleeve, that in the ſayd ſacrament there is the reall body and bloud of Chriſt, becauſe that the bodie is aſcended into heaven, and there doth ſit at the right hand of God the Father.

Sacrament of the altar.

And moreover he ſayd, that the Maſſe now uſed in the Church of England was naught, and full of Idolatry and abomination, and againſt the word of God; affirming alſo, that there are but two ſacraments in the Church of Chriſt, Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord, &c. And to theſe aſſertions, he ſayd, he would ſtand: and ſo he did to the end.

The Maſſe abominable.

Two ſacraments.

And when at laſt the Biſhop began to reade the ſentence, exhorting him before with many words to revoke his profeſſed opinion (which they called damnable and hereticall) he notwithſtanding reſiſted all contrary perſwaſions, anſwering the Biſhop again in this forme of words; I will not, ſayd he, forſake mine opinions, except you (my Lord) can refell them by Scriptures; and I care not for your Divinitie: for you condemne all men, and prove nothing againſt them. And after many faire words of exhortation, which Boner then uſed (after his ordinary manner) to convert, or rather pervert him, he anſwered boldly againe, ſaying moreover; That the Church, whereof the Pope is ſupreme head, is no part of Chriſts Catholike Church: and adding thereunto, and pointing to the Biſhop, ſpake to the people, ſaying; Good people beware of him, and ſuch as he is, for theſe be the people that deceive you, &c.

Theſe with other words moe he ſpake; whereupon the Biſhop, reading the ſentence of his Popiſh condemnation, gave him to the ſecular power.

Tankerfield condemned.

And ſo this bleſſed ſervant of God was had to St. Albons, and there with much patience and conſtancy ended his life, the 26. day of Auguſt, for the defence of the truth, which at length will have the victorie.

The martyrdome of George Tankerfield at S. Albons an. 1555. Aug. 26.

Certain notes concerning George Tankerfield, after he came to ſuffer martyrdome at Saint Albons.

IN primis, he was brought unto St. Albons by the high Sheriffe of Hertfordſhire, Maſter Edward Brocket Eſquire, and one Pulter of Hitchen, which was under Sheriffe.

Item, their Inne was the croſſe-keyes, whereas there was great concourſe of people to ſee and hear the priſoner: among the which multitude ſome were ſorry to ſee ſo godly a man brought to be burned, others praiſed God for his conſtancie and perſeverance in the truth. Contrariwiſe, ſome there were which ſayd, it was pitie he did ſtand in ſuch opinions: and others, both old women and men cried againſt him; one called him Heretick, and ſayd it was pitie that he lived. But George Tankerfield did ſpeak unto them ſo effectually out of the word of God, in lamenting of their ignorance, and proteſting unto them his unſpotted conſcience, that God did mollifie their hardned hearts, inſomuch that ſome of them departed out of the chamber with weeping eyes.

Item, there came unto him a certain Schoolemaſter (which retained unto ſir Thomas Pope Knight) this man had certain communication with George Tankerfield the day before he was coming toward St. Albons, as touching their ſacrament of the altar, and other points of Papiſticall religion: but as he urged Tankerfield with the authority of the Doctors, wreſting them after his own will; ſo on the other ſide Tankerfield anſwered him mightily by the Scriptures, not wreſted after the mind of any man, but being interpreted after the will of the Lord Jeſus, &c. So that as he would not allow ſuch allegations as Tankerfield brought out of the Scriptures without the opinions of the Doctors; ſo again Tankerfield would not credit his doctrine to be true, except he could confirme it by the Scriptures. In the end Tankerfield prayed him that he would not trouble him in ſuch matters, for his conſcience was eſtabliſhed, &c. and ſo he departed from him, wiſhing him well, and proteſting that he meant him no more hurt than his own ſoule.

Item, when the houre drew on apace that he ſhould ſuffer, he deſired the wine-drawer, that he might have a pinte of Malmſey and a loafe, that he might eate and drink that in remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, becauſe he could not have it miniſtred unto him by others in ſuch manner as Chriſt commanded, and then he kneeled down, making his confeſſion unto the Lord with all which were in the chamber with him; and after that he had prayed earneſtly unto the Lord, and had read the inſtitution of the holy Supper by the Lord Jeſus out of the Evangeliſts, and out of St. Paul, he ſayd; O Lord, thou knoweſt it, I do not this to derogate authority from any man, or in contempt of thoſe which are thy Miniſters, but only becauſe I cannot have it miniſtred according to thy word, &c. and when he had ſpoken theſe and ſuch like words, he received it with giving of thanks.

Item, when ſome of his friends willed him to eat ſome meat, he ſayd he would not eat that which ſhould do others good that had more need, and that had longer time to live than he.

Item, he prayed his Hoſte to let him have a good fire in the chamber; he had ſo, and then he ſitting on a forme before the fire, put off his ſhooes and hoſe, and ſtretched out his legge to the flame, and when it had touched his foot, he quickly withdrew his legge, ſhewing how the fleſh did perſwade him one way, and the ſpirit another way. The fleſh ſayd, O thou foole, wilt thou burn and needeſt not? The ſpirit ſayd, Be not afraid, for this is nothing in reſpect of fire eternall. The fleſh ſaid, Do not leave the company of thy friends and acquaintance which love thee, and will let thee lack nothing. The ſpirit ſayd, The company of Jeſus Chriſt and his glorious preſence doth exceed all fleſhly friends. The fleſh ſayd, Do not ſhorten thy time, for thou mayeſt live if thou wilt much longer. The ſpirit ſayd, This life is nothing unto the life in heaven which laſteth for ever, &c And all this time the Sheriffes were at a certain Gentlemans houſe at dinner, not far from the Town, whither alſo reſorted Knights and many Gentlemen out of the Countrie, becauſe his ſonne was married that day, and untill they returned from dinner the priſoner was left with his Hoſte to be kept and looked unto. And George Tankerfield all that time was kindly and lovingly intreated of his Hoſte; and conſidering that his time was ſhort, his ſaying was, That although the day was never ſo long, yet at the laſt it ringeth to evening ſong.

Item, about two of the clock, when the Sheriffes were returned from dinner, they brought George Tankerfield out of his Inne unto the place where he ſhould ſuffer, which is called Romeland, being a græen place nigh unto the weſt end of the Abbey Church: unto the which when he was come, he knæled down by the ſtake that was ſet up for him, and after he had ended his prayers he aroſe, and with a joyfull faith he ſayd, that although he had a ſharp dinner, yet he hoped to have a joyfull ſupper in heaven.

Item, while the Fagots were ſet about him, there came a Prieſt unto him, and perſwaded him to believe on the Sacrament of the Altar, and he ſhould be ſaved. But George Tankerfield cried out vehemently, and ſaid; I defie the Whore of Babylon, I defie the Whore of Babylon: Fie of that abominable Idol: Good people do not believe him, good people do not believe him. And then the Maior of the Town commanded to ſet fire to the Heretick, and ſayd, If he had but one load of Fagots in the whole world, he would give them to burn him. There was a certain Knight by, who went unto Tankerfield, and tooke him by the hand, and ſayd, Good brother, be ſtrong in Chriſt, this he ſpake ſoftly; and Tankerfield ſayd, O ſir, I thanke you, I am ſo, I thanke God. Then fire was ſet unto him, and he deſired the Sheriffe and all the people that they would pray for him; the moſt part did ſo. And ſo imbracing the fire, he bathed himſelf in it, and calling on the name of the Lord Jeſus he was quickly out of pain, &c.

After the Martyrdome was ended, and that he was fallen aſlæep in the Lord, there were ſome ſuperſtitious old women who did blaſphemouſly ſay, that the Divell was ſo ſtrong with him and all ſuch Hereticks as he was, that they could not feel any pain almoſt, nor yet be ſorry for their ſinnes.

The Hiſtory and examinations of Robert Smith, conſtantly maintaining the truth of Gods word, and ſuffering for the ſame in the moneth of Auguſt.

Robert Smith of London, Martyr.

Robert Smith was brought unto Newgate the fifth of November, in the firſt and ſecond yeere of the King and Queen, by John Matthew Yeoman of the Guard of the Queens ſide, by the commandement of the Councell. This Smith firſt gave himſelf unto ſervice in the houſe of Sir Thomas Smith Knight, being then Provoſt of Eaton: from thence he was preferred to Windſor, having there in the Colledge a Clerkſhip of ten pound a yeere. Of ſtature he was tall and ſlender, active about many things, but chiefly delighting in the Art of painting, which many times, rather for his minds ſake than for any living or lucre, he did practiſe and exerciſe. In religion he was fervent, after he had once taſted the truth; wherein he was much confirmed by the preachings and readings of one Maſter Turner of Windſor, and others. Whereupon at the comming of Queen Marie he was deprived of his Clerkſhip by her Viſitors, and not long after he was apprehended, and brought to examination before Boner, as here followeth, written and teſtified with his own hand.

About 9. of the clock in the morning, I was among the reſt of my brethren brought to the Biſhops houſe; and I firſt of all was brought before him into his chamber, to whom the Biſhop ſayd as followeth, after he had asked my name.

Boner. How long is it ago ſince the time that ye were confeſſed to any Prieſt?

Confeſsion not needfull.

Smith. Never ſince I had yæers of diſcretion. For I never ſaw it næedfull, neither commanded of God to come to ſhew my faults to any of that ſinfull number, whom ye call Prieſts.

Boner. Thou ſheweſt thy ſelf even at the firſt chop to be a ranke heretick, which being weary of painting, art entred into Divinity, and ſo fallen, through thy departing from thy vocation into hereſie.

Smith. Although I have underſtanding in the ſayd occupation, yet (I praiſe God) I have had little næed all my life hitherto to live by the ſame, but have lived without the ſame in mine owne houſe as honeſtly in my vocation, as ye have lived in yours, and yet uſed the ſame better than ever you uſed the Pulpit.

Rejectio criminis ingenioſa & divina.

Boner. How long is it ago ſince ye received the ſacrament of the Altar, and what is your opinion in the ſame?

The ſacrament of the altar.

Smith. I never received the ſame ſince I had yæers of diſcretion, nor never will, by Gods grace; neither do eſtæem the ſame in any point, becauſe it hath not Gods ordinance, neither in name, nor in other uſage, but rather is ſet up and erected to mock God withall.

Bon. Do ye not believe that it is the very body of Chriſt that was born of the Virgin Mary, naturally, ſubſtantially, and really, after the words of conſecration?

Smith. I ſhewed you before it was none of Gods ordinances, as ye uſe it; then much leſſe to be God, or any part of his ſubſtance, but only bread and wine erected to the uſe aforeſayd: yet neverthelesse, if ye can approve it to be the body that ye ſpake of by the Word, I will believe it; if not, I will, as I do, account it a deteſtable Idol; not God, but contrary to God and his truth.

Bon. Then after many raging words and vain objections, he ſayd, there was no remedy but I muſt be burned.

Boners argument to prove the ſacrament.

Smith. Ye ſhall do no more unto me, than ye have done to better men than either of us both. But think not thereby to quench the ſpirit of God, neither thereby to make your matter good. For your ſore is too well ſæen to be healed ſo privily with bloud. For even the very children have all your dæeds in deriſion; ſo that although ye patch up one place with authority, yet ſhall it break out in forty to your ſhame.

Bon. Then after much ado, and many railing ſentences, he ſayd, throwing away the paper of mine examination; Well, even now, by my troth, even in good earneſt, if thou wilt go and be ſhriven, I will tear this paper in pieces.

Smith To which I anſwered; it would be too much to his ſhame to ſhew it to men of diſcretion.

After which anſwer, I was carried down to the garden with my Jayler, and there remained untill my brother Harwood was examined; and then being again brought up before the ſayd Boner, he demanded if I agreed with Harwood in his confeſſion, upon theſe articles following.

Ste. Harwood examined before the biſhop.

Bon. What ſay you to the Catholik Church? Doe ye not confeſſe there is one in earth?

Smith examined by the biſhop.

Smith. Yes verily, I beleeve that there is one Catholike Church, or faithfull congregation, which as the Apoſtle ſaith, is builded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt Jeſus being the head corner-ſtone: which Church in all her words and works maintaineth the word, and bringeth the ſame for her authoritie, and without it doth nothing, nor ought to do, of which I am aſſured I am by grace made a member.

Where was the viſible Church amongſt the Proteſtants? Where was the viſible Church amongſt the Apoſtles?

Bon. Ye ſhall underſtand, that I am bound when my brother offendeth, and will not be reconciled, to bring him before the congregation: now if your Church be the ſame, where may a man find it, to bring his brother before the ſame?

Smith. It is written in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that when the tyrannie of the Biſhops was ſo great againſt the Church in Jury, they were fain to congregate in houſes and privie places, as they now do; and yet were they neverthleſſe the Church of God: and ſeeing they had their matters redreſſed being ſhut up in a corner, may not we do the like now adaies?

Here he would not anſwer me to the Church of Jury, but flyeth to the Church of the Corint.

Bon. Yea, their Church was known full well. For S. Paul writ to the Corinthians, to have the man puniſhed and excommunicate, that had committed evill with his fathers wife. Whereby we may well perceive it was a known Church; but yours is not known.

Smith. Then could you not perſecute it as ye do: but as ye ſay the Church of God at Corinth was manifeſt both to God, and Paul; even ſo is this Church of God in England, whom ye perſecute, both known to God, and alſo even to the very wicked, although they know not, nor will not know their truth nor converſation; yea, and your ſinfull number have profeſſed their veritie, and maintained the ſame a long ſeaſon.

Bon. Well, thou ſayeſt that the Church of God was only at Corinth, when Paul writ unto them, and ſo will I put in writing, ſhall I?

How Boner layeth ſnares to catch the innocent.

Smith. I do marvell greatly, my Lord, that ye are not aſhamed to lay ſnares for your brethren on this manner. This is now the third ſnare you have layd for me. Firſt, to make me confeſſe that the Church of England is not the Church of Chriſt. Secondly, to ſay, it is not known. Thirdly, to ſay the Church of God is not univerſall, but particular: and this is not the office of a Biſhop. For if an innocent had come in your way, you would have done your beſt, I ſee, to have intangled him.

Harpſ. Well friend, quoth one of my Lords Chaplains, you are no innocent, as it appeareth.

Smith By the grace of God, I am that I am; and this grace in me, I hope, is not in vain.

Bon. Well, quoth my Lord, laughing; tell me, how ſayeſt thou of the Church?

The Church of Chriſt is not univerſally in one particular place.

Smith. I told you whereupon the true Church is builded, and I affirme in England to be the Congregation of God, and alſo in omnem terram, as it is written; Their ſound is gone forth into all lands, and that this is the afflicted and perſecuted Church, which ye ceaſe not to impriſon, ſlay, and kill. And in Corinth was not all the Congregation of God, but a number of thoſe holy and elect people of God. For neither Paul nor Peter were preſent at Corinth when they wrote, and yet were they of the Church of GOD as many thouſands moe, which alſo communicate in that holy Spirit.

Bon. What call ye Catholike, and what call you Church?

Smith. Catholike is univerſall, and Church is a Congregation knit together in unity.

Then after much like vain talke, it was layd to my charge, that my fellow and I ſpake one thing. Whereof I praiſed God, and was ſent again to a garden. Where after a while as my brother Harwood and I had been together, cometh one of my Lords Chaplaines, that much deſired to commune with me, demanding firſt if I were a priſoner.

Talk between Robert Smith and the biſhops Chaplaine.

Smith. I am in this fleſh a priſoner, and ſubject to my Maſter and yours; but I hope yet the Lords free man through Chriſt Jeſus.

Doct. I do much deſire to talk with you lovingly, becauſe ye are a man that I much lament, with many other ſweet words.

To which I anſwered; Sub melle latet venenum. And after much ado about his God, I compelled him to ſay, that it muſt needs enter into the belly, and ſo fall into the draught. To which he anſwered.

Abſurdity granted by the Catholikes, that the body of Chriſt goeth into the belly, and ſo into the draught.

Doct. What derogation was it to Chriſt, when the Jewes ſpit in his face?

Smith. If the Jewes, being his enemies, did ſpit in his face, and we being his friends throw him into the draught, which of us have deſerved the greateſt damnation? Then by your argument, he that doth injury to Chriſt, ſhall have a moſt plenteous ſalvation.

Compariſon between the Jewes that ſpit in Chriſts face, and Papiſts which let fall him into the draught.

Doct. Then ſtart he away, and would have his humanitie incomprehenſible, making a compariſon between our ſoul and the body of Chriſt, bringing in to ſerve his turn, which way Chriſt came in among his Diſciples, the doores being ſhut?

Note this Catholike doctrine, which reſembleth the body of Chriſt, to the incomprehenſible ſoul of man.

Smith. Although it be ſaid, that when he came the doores were ſhut, yet have I as much as to prove, that the doores opened at his coming, as ye have to prove he came through the doore. For that mighty GOD that brought the Diſciples out of priſon, which yet when ſearch came, were found ſhut, was able to let Chriſt in at the doore, although it were ſhut: and yet it maketh not for your purpoſe; for they ſaw him, heard him, and felt him, and ſo can we not ſay ye do, neither is he in more then in one place at once. At which anſwer when he had made many ſcoffings, he departed away from me, and we were carried unto my Lords hall, where we were baited of my Lords band, almoſt all the day, untill our Keeper ſeeing their miſorder, ſhut us up all in a fair chamber, while my Lord went into his Synagogue to condemne Maſter Denly and John Newman.

The queſtion is not what Chriſt is able to do in the ſacrament, but what he doth therein.

Then brought they up my Lord Maior to hear our matter above in the chamber, and I firſt of all was called into the chamber, where my Lord intended to ſup. Where my Lord Maior being ſet with the Biſhop and one of the Sheriffes, wine was walking on every ſide: I ſtanding before them as an out-caſt, which made me remember how Pilate and Herod were made friends, but no man was ſorry for Joſephs hurt. But after my Lord had well drunk, my Articles were ſent for and read, and he demanded whether I ſaid not, as was written?

Robert Smith brought again before the biſhop and the Lord Maior.

Smith. That I have ſaid, I have ſaid, and what I have ſaid, I do mean utterly.

Boner. Well, my Lord Maior, your Lordſhip hath heard ſomewhat, what a ſtout heretick this is, and that his Articles have deſerved death: Yet neverthleſſe forſomuch as they report me to ſeek bloud, and call me bloudy Boner, whereas God knoweth, I never ſought any mans bloud in all my life, I have ſtayed him from the Conſiſtory this day, whither I might have brought him juſtly: and yet here before your Lordſhip I deſire him to turn, and I will with all ſpeed diſpatch him out of trouble; and this I profeſſe before your Lordſhip and all this audience.

B. Boner excuſeth himſelf of bloudineſſe.

Smith. Why, my Lord, do ye put on this faire viſor before my Lord Maior, to make him beleeve that ye ſeek not my bloud, to cloak your murthers through my ſtoutneſſe, as ye call it?

B. Boner proved to be cruell and bloudy.

Have yee not had my brother Tomkins before you, whoſe hand when you had burned moſt cruelly, ye burnt alſo his body, and not only of him, but of a great many of the members of Chriſt, men that feared God, and lived vertuouſly, and alſo the Queens Majeſties moſt true Subjects, as their goods and bodies have made manifeſt? and ſeeing in theſe Saints yee have ſhewed ſo little mercy, ſhall it ſeem to my Lord and this audience, that yee ſhew me more favour? No, no, my Lord. But if ye mean as ye ſay, why then examine ye me of that I am not bound to anſwer you unto?

By this queſtion it may appear whether the Biſhop ſought bloud or no.

The Papiſts dead god, having body without bloud.

Boner. Well, what ſaiſt thou by the Sacrament of the Altar? is it not the very body of Chriſt, fleſh, bloud, and bone, as it was born of the Virgin?

Smith. I have anſwered, that it is none of Gods order, neither any Sacrament, but mans own vain invention, and ſhewed him the Lords inſtitution. But when he was ſo earneſt before the audience, declaring that we knew nothing, bringing out his Hoc eſt corpus meum, to lay in my diſh, I proved before the audience, that it was a dead God, declaring the deſtinction appointed between the two creatures of bread and wine, and that a body without bloud hath no life. At which Harpsfield found himſelf much offended, and took the tale out of my Lords mouth ſaying, Harpſ. I will approve by the Scriptures, that ye blaſpheme God in ſo ſaying: for it is given in two parts, becauſe there is two things ſhewed, that is to ſay, his body and his paſſion, as ſaith Saint Paul: and therefore is the bread his body, and the wine the repreſentation of his death and bloudſhedding.

Smith. Yee falſifie the Word, and rack it to ſerve your purpoſe. For the wine was not onely the ſhewing of his paſſion, but the bread alſo: for our Saviour ſaith, So oft as ye do this, do it in remembrance of me. And Saint Paul ſaith, So oft as ye eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, ye ſhall ſhew the Lords death till he come. And here is as much reverence given to the one, as to the other.

Even as the bread is the body, ſo is the cup the bloud.

Wherefore if the bread be his body, the cup muſt be his bloud, and as well ye make his body in the cup, as his bloud in the bread. Then up roſe my Lord, and went to the table, where my Lord Maior deſired me to ſave my ſoule. To whom I anſwered, I hope it was ſaved through Chriſt Jeſus, deſiring him to have pitty on his own ſoule, and remember whoſe ſword he carried.

Robert Smith commanded of Boner into Limbo.

At which I was carried into the garden, and there abode untill the reſt of my friends were examined, and ſo were we ſent away with many foule farewels to Newgate again, my Lord Biſhop giving the Keeper a charge to lay me in Limbo.

Another examination of Robert Smith before the ſaid Biſhop.

Another examination of R. Smith.

Boner beginneth with an untruth.

Upon Saturday at eight of the clock, I was brought to his chamber again, and there by him examined, as followeth.

Bon. Thou Robert Smith, &c. ſaiſt that there is no Catholike Church here on earth.

Smith. Ye have heard me both ſpeak the contrary, and ye have written it as a witneſſe of the ſame.

Bon. Yea, but I muſt aske thee this queſtion: how ſaiſt thou?

The Church.

Smith. Muſt ye of neceſſity begin with a lie? it maketh manifeſt that ye determine to end with the ſame. But there ſhall no liers enter into the Kingdome of God. Neverthеleſſe, if ye will be anſwered, ask mine Articles that were written yeſterday, and they ſhall tell you that I have confeſſed a Church of God, as well in earth as in heaven, and yet all one Church, and one mans members, even Chriſt Jeſus.

Bon. Well, what ſaiſt thou to auricular confeſsion? is it not neceſſary to be uſed in Chriſts Church, and wilt thou not be ſhriven of the Prieſt?

Auricular confeſsion is but a pick-purſe matter.

Smith. It is not needfull to be uſed in Chriſts Church, as I anſwered yeſterday. But if it be needfull for your Church, it is to pick mens purſes. And ſuch pick purſe matters is all the whole rabble of your ceremonies; for all is but money matters that ye maintain.

Boner. Why, how art thou able to prove that confeſsion is a pick-purſe matter? Art thou not aſhamed ſo to ſay?

The inconveniences of auricular confeſsion.

Smith. I ſpeak by experience. For I have both heard and ſeen the fruits of the ſame. For firſt it hath been, we ſee, a bewrayer of Kings ſecrets, and the ſecrets of other mens conſciences; who being delivered, and glad to be diſcharged of their ſinnes, have given to Prieſts great ſummes of money to abſolve them, and ſing Maſſes for their ſoules health.

A falſe practice of a Prieſt under confeſſion.

And for enſample, I began to bring in a Pageant, that by report was played at Saint Thomas of Acres, and where I was ſometime a childe waiting on a Gentleman of Norfolk, which being bound in conſcience through the perſwaſion of the Prieſt, gave away a great ſumme of his goods, and forgave unto Maſter Greſham a great ſumme of money, and to another as much. The Prieſt had for his part a ſumme, and the houſe had an annuity to keep him, the which thing when his brother heard, he came down to London, and after declaration made to the Councell, how by the ſubtilty of Prieſt he had robbed his wife and children, recovered a great part again, to the value of two or three hundred pounds of Maſter Greſham and his other friend; but what he gave to the houſe, could not be recovered. This tale began I to tell. But when my Lord ſaw it ſavored not to his purpoſe, he began to revile me, and ſaid; By the Maſſe, if the Queens Majeſty were of his minde, I ſhould not come to talke before any man, but ſhould be put into a ſack, and a dog tied unto the ſame, and ſo ſhould be thrown into the water.

Smith. To which I anſwered again, ſaying; I know you ſpeak by practice, as much as by ſpeculation: for both you and your predeceſſors have ſought all meanes poſsible to kill Chriſt ſecretly; record of Maſter Hunne, whom your predeceſſor cauſed to be thruſt in at the noſe with hot burning needles, and then to be hanged, and ſaid the ſame Hunne to have hanged himſelf: and alſo a good brother of yours, a Biſhop of your profeſſion, having in his priſon an innocent man, whom becauſe he ſaw he was not able by the Scriptures to overcome, he made him privily to be ſnarled, and his fleſh to be torne and plucked away with a paire of pinſers, and bringing him before the people, ſaid, the Rattes had eaten him. Thus according to your oath is all your dealing, and hath been; and as you, taking upon you the office, do not without oathes open your mouth, no more do you without murder maintain your traditions.

Example of terrible cruelty ſhewed upon a poore innocent.

Boner. Ah, ye are a generation of lyers; there is not one true word that cometh out of your mouthes.

Smith. Yes, my Lord, I have ſaid that Jeſus Chriſt is dead for my ſins, and riſen for my juſtification, and this is no lye.

Boner. Then made he his man to put in my tale of the Gentleman of Northfolke, and would have had me recite it again: which when I would not not do, he made his man to put in ſuch ſummes as he imagined. At the end of this commeth in Maſter Mordant Knight, and ſate down to hear my examination. Then ſayd my Lord, how ſaiſt thou Smith to the ſeven Sacraments? Beleeveſt thou not that they be Gods order, that is to ſay, the ſacrament of &c.

Sir John Mordant Knight.

2. Sacraments

Smith. I believe that in Gods Church are but two ſacraments, that is to ſay, the ſacrament of regeneration, and the ſacrament of the Lords Supper: and as for the ſacrament of the altar, and all your ſacraments, they may well ſerve your church, but Gods Church hath nothing to do with them, neither have I any thing to do to anſwer them, nor you to examine me of them.

Boner. Why, is Gods order changed in baptiſme? In what point do we diſſent from the word of God?

Baptiſme in what points it is abuſed by the Catholicks.

Smith. Firſt, in hallowing your water; in conjuring of the ſame; in baptizing children with annointing and ſpitting in their mouthes, mingled with ſalt, and with many other lewd ceremonies, of which not one point is able to be proved in Gods order.

Boner. By the Maſſe this is the moſt unſhamefaſte heretick that ever I heard ſpeak.

Smith. Well ſworn my Lord, ye keep a good watch.

Boner. Well, M. Controller, ye catch me at my words: but I will watch thee as well, I warrant thee.

Mordant. By my troth, my Lord, quoth Maſter Mordant, I never heard the like in all my life. But I pray you my Lord, marke well his anſwer for baptiſme. He diſalloweth therein holy oyntment, ſalt, and ſuch other laudable ceremonies, which no chriſtian man will deny.

Smith. That is a ſhamefull blaſphemy againſt Chriſt, ſo to uſe any mingle mangle in baptizing yong infants.

Boner. I believe, I tell thee, that if they die before they be baptized, they be damned.

Smith Ye ſhall never be ſaved by that beliefe. But I pray you my Lord, ſhew me, are we ſaved by water, or by Chriſt?

Boner. By both.

This was ſpoken more to confound the opinion of water, than to let children to have water.

Smith. Then the water dyed for our ſins; and ſo muſt ye ſay, that the water hath life, and it being our ſervant, and created for us, is our Saviour: this (my Lord) is a good doctrine, is it not?

Boner. Why, how underſtandeſt thou the Scriptures? Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of God.

And again, Suffer (ſaith our Saviour) theſe children to come unto me: and if thou wilt not ſuffer them to be baptized after the laudable order, thou letteſt them to come unto Chriſt.

Smith. Where ye alledge Saint John, Except a man, &c. and will thereby prove the water to ſave, and ſo the deed or worke to ſave and put away ſins, I will ſend you to Saint Paul, which asketh of the Galathians, Whether they received the Spirit by the deedes of the Law, or by the preaching of Faith? and there concludeth, that the holy Ghoſt accompanieth the preaching of faith, and with the word of faith entreth into the heart. So now if baptiſme preach to me the waſhing in Chriſts bloud, ſo doth the holy Ghoſt accompany it, and it is unto me as a Preacher, and not a Saviour. And where ye ſay, I let the children to come unto Chriſt, it is manifeſt by our Saviours words, that ye let them to come, that will not ſuffer them to come to him without the neceſſitie of water. For he ſaith, Suffer them to come unto me, and not unto water, and therefore if ye condemne them, ye condemne both the merits and words of Chriſt. For our Saviour ſaith, Except ye turn and become as children, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. And ſo brought I out many other enſamples, to make manifeſt, that Chriſt hath cleanſed originall ſin, bringing in enſamples out of Scriptures for the ſame.

The water of baptiſme a Preacher and not a Saviour.

Boner. Then thou makeſt the water of none effect, and then put away water.

The element of water in baptiſme, bringeth not the holy Ghoſt.

The holy Ghoſt received of ſome before Baptiſme.

Smith. It is not (ſaith Saint Peter) the waſhing away of the filth of the fleſh, but in that a good conſcience conſenteth unto God. And to prove that water onely bringeth not the holy Ghoſt, it is written in the 8 of the Acts, that Simon received water, but would have received the holy Ghoſt for money. Alſo that the holy Ghoſt hath come before Baptiſme; it is written that John had the holy Ghoſt in his mothers womb. Cornelius, Paul, and the Queen of Candaces ſervant, with many others, received the holy Ghoſt before Baptiſme. Yea, and although your generation have ſet at naught the Word of God, and like ſwine turned his Words upſide down, yet muſt his Church keep the ſame in that order which he left them, which his Church dare not break; and to judge children damned that be not baptized, it is wicked.

Mord. By our Lady ſir, but I believe that if my childe die without water, he is damned.

Boner. Yea, and ſo do I, and all Catholike men, good Maſter Mordant.

Smith. Well, my Lord, ſuch Catholike, ſuch ſalvation.

Boner. Well ſir, what ſay your to the ſacrament of orders?

The ſacrament of Orders.

Smith. Ye may call it the ſacrament of miſorders: for all orders are appointed of God. But as for your ſhaving, annointing, greaſing, poling, and rounding, there are no ſuch things appointed in Gods book, and therefore I have nothing to do to believe your orders. And as for you, my Lord, if ye had grace and intelligence, ye would not ſo disfigure your ſelf as ye do.

Boner ſhaveth himſelfe in anger of Robert Smith.

Boner. Saiſt thou ſo? now by my troth I will go ſhave my ſelf to anger thee withall: and ſo ſent for his Barber, which immediatly came. And before my face at the door of the next chamber he ſhaved himſelf, deſiring me before he went, to anſwer to theſe articles.

Holy bread. Holy water. Annointing.

Boner. What ſay you to the holy bread and holy water, to the ſacrament of annointing, and to all the reſt of ſuch ceremonies of the Church?

Smith. I ſay, they be bables for fools to play withall, and not for the children of God to exerciſe themſelves in; and therefore they may go among the refuſe. Then went away Maſter Mordant, and my Lord went to ſhaving, leaving there certain Doctors, as he called them, to aſſay what they could do, of whom I was baited for half an hour: of whom I alſo asked this queſtion, Where were all you in the dayes of King Edward, that ye ſpake not that which ye ſpeak now?

Talke between R. Smith and the Doctors.

Doct. We were in England.

Smith. Yea, but then ye had the faces of men, but now ye have put on Lions faces again, as ſaith S. John, Ye ſhew your ſelves now as full of malice as ye may be. For ye have for every time a vizor; yea, and if another King Edward ſhould ariſe, ye would then ſay, Down with the Pope, for he is Antichriſt, and ſo are all his Angels.

Then was I all to reviled, and ſo ſent away, and brought in again to come before theſe men; and one of them that baited me before, asked me if I diſallowed confeſſion?

Smith. To whom I anſwered, Look in mine articles, and they ſhall ſhew you what I allow.

Doct. Your articles confeſſe that you allow not auricular confeſſion.

Smith. I allow it not, because the word alloweth it not, nor commandeth it.

Doct. Why, it is written, thou ſhalt not hide thy ſinnes and offences.

Smith. No more do I when I confeſſe them to almighty God.

Doct. Why, ye cannot ſay that ye can hide them from God, and therefore you muſt underſtand the words are ſpoken to be uttered to them that do not know them.

Smith. Ye have made a good anſwer: then muſt the Prieſt confeſſe himſelf to me, as I to him. For I know his faults and ſecrets no more then he knoweth mine. But if ye confeſſe you to the Prieſt, and not unto God, ye ſhall have the reward that Judas had: for he confeſſed himſelf to the Prieſt, and yet went and hanged himſelf by and by; and ſo as many as do not acknowledge their faults to God, are ſaid to hide them.

Againſt auricular confeſſion.

Doct. What did they that came to John to be baptiſed?

Smith. They came and confeſſed their ſins unto almighty God.

Doct. And not unto John?

Smith. If it were unto John, as ye are not able to prove, yet was it to God, before John and the whole congregation.

Confeſsing unto John in the Wilderneſſe, was not to him, but before him to God.

Doct. Why, John was alone in the Wilderneſſe.

Smith. Why, and yet the Scriptures ſay he had many Diſciples, and that many Phariſees and Sadducees came to his baptiſme. Here the Scriptures and you agree not. And if they confeſſed themſelves to John, as ye ſay, it was to all the Congregation, as Saint Paul doth to Timothy, and to all that reade his Epiſtle, in opening to all the hearers, that he was not worthy to be called an Apoſtle, becauſe he had been a tyrant. But as for ear confeſſion, ye never heard it allowed by the Word. For the Prophet David maketh his confeſsion unto God, and ſaith, I will confeſſe my ſinnes unto the Lord. Daniel maketh his confeſsion unto the Lord; Judith, Toby, Jeremy, Manaſſeh, with all the forefathers did even ſo. For the Lord hath ſaid, Call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver thee. Knock, ask, ſeek, with ſuch like; and this is the Word of God. Now bring ſomewhat of the Word to help your ſelf withall. Then they raged, and called me dog, and ſaid I was damned.

Smith. Nay, ye are dogs, that becauſe holy things are offered, will ſlay your friends. For I may ſay with Saint Paul, I have fought with beaſts in the likeneſſe of men. For here I have been baited theſe two dayes, of my Lord and his great Buls of Baſan, and in his hall beneath have I been baited of the reſt of his band. With this came my Lord from ſhaving, and asked me how I liked him?

Smith. Forſooth, ye are even as wiſe as ye were before ye were ſhaven.

Boner. How ſtandeth it, Maſter Doctors, have ye done any good?

Doct. No, by my troth my Lord, we can do no good.

Smith. Then it is fulfilled which is written, How can an evill tree bring forth good fruit?

Boner. Nay, naughty fellow, I ſet theſe Gentlemen to bring thee home to Chriſt.

Smith. Such Gentlemen, ſuch Chriſts; and as truely as they have that name from Chriſt, ſo truly do they teach Chriſt.

Boner. Well, wilt thou neither hear them nor me?

Smith. Yes I am compelled to hear you; but ye cannot compell me to follow you.

Boner. Well, thou ſhalt be burned at a ſtake in Smithfield if thou wilt not turn.

Smith. And ye ſhall burn in hell, if ye repent not: but my Lord, to put you out of doubt, becauſe I am weary, I will ſtrain courteſie with you. I perceive you will not with your Doctors come unto me, and I am not determined to come unto you, by Gods grace. For I have hardened my face againſt you as hard as braſſe. Then after many railing ſentences I was ſent away. And thus have I left the truth of mine anſwers in writing (gentle Reader) being compelled by my friends to do it: that ye may ſee how the Lord hath according to his promiſe given me a mouth and wiſedom to anſwer in his cauſe, for which I am condemned, and my cauſe not heard.

The marvellous boldneſſe of Robert Smith, given him of God againſt Chriſts enemies.

The laſt examination of Robert Smith.

The twelfth of July I was with my brethren brought into the Conſiſtory, and mine articles read before my Lord Major and the Sheriffs, with all the aſſiſtants; to which I anſwered, as followeth.

The laſt examination of R. Smith before B. Boner, with his condemnation in the Conſiſtory.

Boner. By my faith, my Lord Major, I have ſhewed him as much favour as any man living might do: but I perceive all is loſt, both in him and all his company.

Smith. At this word which he coupled with an oath, came I in, and taking him with the manner, ſaid, My Lord, it is written, Ye muſt not ſwear.

Boner. Ah, maſter controller, are ye come? Loe, my Lord Major, this is Maſter Speaker, pointing to my brother Tankerfield, and this is Maſter Controller, pointing to me. And then beginning to read my articles, he perſevered till he came at my tale of the Gentleman of Northfolk, and then demanded of my Lord Major, if he heard of the ſame before. To which he anſwered, no. To whom I anſwered:

Smith. My Lord Major, will it pleaſe you to hear me recite it, as I heard it, and I told it, and then ſhall you hear the truth. For this tale that my Lord hath told, is untrue.

Boner. How ſay you good Maſter Mordant, ſpake he not this that is here, as it is written? were ye not by?

Mord. Yes, my Lord, that it is: I heard him ſay it.

Sir John Mordant came in after this ſtory was told.

Smith. How heard you me ſay it, and were not preſent when I ſpake it? ſhould ſuch a man make a lie? it is manifeſtly proved that the Prophet ſaith; Even as the King ſaith, ſo ſaith the Iudge, that he may do him a pleaſure again. And ſo was brought out my goaler for triall thereof, who there openly profeſſed, that neither Maſter Mordant nor the Doctors before mentioned were preſent when I ſpake it. At which maſter Mordant with bluſhing cheeks, ſaid, he heard them read, and heard me affirm the ſame, which was alſo not true. Then proceeded my Lord with the reſt of mine articles, demanding of me, if I ſaid not as was written. To which I anſwered, No: and turning to my Lord Major, I ſaid, I require you, my Lord Mayor, in Gods behalf, unto whom pertaineth your ſword and juſtice, that I may here before your preſence anſwer to theſe objections that are laid againſt me, and have the probation of the ſame; and if any thing that I have ſaid or will ſay, to be proved (as my L. ſaith) hereſie, I ſhall not onely with all my heart forſake the ſame, and cleave to the truth, but alſo recant whereſoever ye ſhall aſſigne me, and all this audience ſhall be witneſſes to the ſame.

The words of Rob. Smith to the Lord Major.

Major. Why Smith, thou canſt not deny, but this thou ſaidſt.

Smith. Yes my Lord, I deny that which he hath written, becauſe he hath both added to, and diminiſhed from the ſame: But what I have ſpoken, I will never deny.

Major. Why, thou ſpakeſt againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the altar.

Smith,

Here my brother Tankerfield recited the ſtory of my L. Biſhops Cook.

Smith. I denied it to be any Sacrament, and I do ſtand here to make probation of the ſame; and if my Lord here, or any of his Doctors be able to approve either the name, or uſage of the ſame, I will recant mine errour. Then ſpake my brother Tankerfield, and defended the probation of things, which they called hereſie: to the which the Biſhop anſwered.

Bon. By my troth, Maſter Speaker, ye ſhall preach at a ſtake.

Smith. Well ſworn, my Lord, ye keep a good watch.

Boner no Saint.

Boner. Well, Maſter Controller, I am no Saint.

Smith. No, my Lord, nor yet good Biſhop. For a Biſhop ſaith S. Paul, ſhould be faultleſſe, and a dedicate veſſell unto God; and are ye not aſhamed to ſit in judgement, and be a blaſphemer, condemning Innocents?

Bon. Well, Maſter Controller, ye are faultleſſe.

This Maior was Sir John Lion.

Here my brother Tankerfield pulled out of his boſome a Teſtament, requiring judgement by the ſame, but it would not be heard.

Smith. My Lord Maior, I require you in Gods name, that I may have Juſtice. We be here to day a great many of Innocents, that are wrongfully accuſed of hereſie. And I require you, if you will not ſeem to be partiall, let me have no more favor at your hands, then the Apoſtle had at the hands of Feſtus and Agrippa, which being Heathen and Infidels, gave him leave not onely to ſpeak for himſelf, but alſo heard the probation of his cauſe. This require I at your hands, which being a Chriſtian Judge, I hope will not deny me that right, which the Heathen have ſuffered: if ye do, then ſhall all this audience, yea, and the heathen ſpeak ſhame of your fact. For a City (ſaith our Saviour) that is builded on a hill cannot be hid: if they therefore have the truth, let it come to light. For all that well do, come to the light, and they that do evill hate the light.

This Sheriff was Maſter Woodrofe.

Juſtice required in the Biſhops conſiſtory but could not be had.

Then my Lord Maior hanging down his head, ſaid nothing, but the Biſhop told me, I ſhould preach at a Stake, and ſo the Sheriffe cryed, with the Biſhop, away with me.

Thus came I in before them foure times, deſiring Juſtice, but could have none: and at length my friends requiring with one voyce the ſame, and could not have it, we had ſentence, and then being carried out, were brought in again, and had it every man ſeverally given. But before the Biſhop gave me ſentence, he told me in deriſion of my brother Tankerfield, a tale between a Gentleman and his Cook. To which I anſwered, My Lord, ye fill the peoples eares with fantaſies and fooliſh tales, and make a laughing matter at bloud; but if ye were a true Biſhop, ye ſhould leave theſe railing ſentences, and ſpeak the words of God.

Boner. Well, I have offered to that naughty fellow M. Speaker, your companion the Cook, that my Chancellor ſhould here inſtruct him, but he hath here with great diſdain forſaken it. How ſayeſt thou, wilt thou have him inſtruct thee, and leade thee in the right way?

A lawfull requeſt not heard

Smith. My Lord, if your Chancellor ſhall do me any good, and take any paines, as ye ſay, let him take mine articles in his hands, that ye have objected againſt me, and either prove one of them hereſie, or any thing that you do to be good: and if he be able ſo to do, I ſtand here with all my heart to hear him; if not, I have no need, I praiſe God, of his Sermon: for I come to anſwer for my life, and not to hear a Sermon.

Then began the ſentence, In Dei nomine. To which I anſwered, that he began in a wrong name, requiring of him, where he learned in Scriptures to give ſentence of death againſt any man for his conſcience ſake. To the which he made no anſwer, but went forward to the end, and immediately cried, Away with me. Then I turned me to the Maior, and ſaid, Is it not enough for you my Lord Maior, and ye that are the Sheriffes, that ye have left the ſtraight way of the Lord, but that ye muſt condemn Chriſt cauſeleſſe?

The Biſhops ſentence beginneth with a wrong name. Where find the Catholikes in the Scripture to put any to death for their conſcience ſake?

Boner. Well, Maſter Controller, now ye cannot ſay, but I have offered you fair, to have inſtruction. And now I pray thee, call me bloudy Biſhop, and ſay, I ſeek thy bloud.

Smith. Well, my Lord, although neither I, nor any of this congregation do report the truth of your fact, yet ſhall theſe ſtones cry it out, rather then it ſhall be hidden.

Boner. Away with him, away with him.

Woodrofe. Away with him, take him away.

Robert Smith wrongfully condemned by the Biſhop.

The words of Robert Smith again to the Lord Maior.

Smith. Well, good friends, ye have ſeen and heard the great wrong that we have received this day, and ye are all records that we have deſired the probation of our cauſe by Gods Book, and it hath not been granted: but we are condemned, and our cauſe not heard. Neverthleleſſe my Lord Maior, for as much as here ye have exerciſed Gods ſword cauſeleſſe, and will not hear the right of the poor, I commit my cauſe to Almighty God, that ſhall judge all men according unto right, before whom we ſhall both ſtand without authority; and there will I ſtand in the right, and have true judgement, to your great confuſion, except ye repent, which the Lord grant you to do, if it be his will. And then was I with the reſt of my brethren carried away to Newgate.

Thus gentle Reader, as near as I can, I have ſet out the truth of my examination, and the verity of mine unjuſt condemnation for the truth, requiring God that it may not be laid to the charge of thee, O England, requiring your hearty prayers unto God for his grace and ſpirit of boldneſſe; with hope even ſhortly to ſet to my ſeale, at Uxbridge, the eighth of Auguſt, by Gods grace: pray that it may be to his honour, my ſalvation, and your conſolation, I pray you.

Da gloriam Deo.

Robert Smith.

Thus haſt thou (good Reader) not onely to note, but alſo to follow in this man a ſingular example of Chriſtian fortitude, which ſo manfully and valiantly did ſtand in the defence of his Maſters cauſe. And as thou ſeeſt him here boldly ſtand in examination before the Biſhop and Doctors; ſo was he no leſſe comfortable alſo in the priſon among his fellowes. Which alſo is to be obſerved no leſſe in his other priſon fellowes, who being there together caſt in an outward houſe within Newgate, had godly conference, with themſelves, with daily praying, and publike reading, which they to their great comfort uſed in that houſe together; amongſt whom this foreſaid Smith was chief doer. Whoſe induſtry was allwayes ſollicitous, not onely for them of his own company, but alſo his diligence was carefull for other priſoners, whom he ceaſed not to dehort and diſſwade from their old accuſtomed iniquity; and many he converted unto his Religion. Divers letters he wrote there in the priſon to ſundry his friends, partly in metre, partly in proſe. And firſt in metre as followeth.

Queen MARY.

O ye that love the Lord, ſee that ye hate the thing that is evill.

THe God that giveth life and light,
And leadeth into reſt:
That breaketh bonds and bringeth out
The poore that are oppreſt.
And keepeth mercy for the meek,
His treaſure and his ſtore:
Increaſe thy life in perfect love,
Both now and evermore.
That as thou haſt begun to ground
In faith and fervent love:
Thou maiſt be made a mighty mount,
That never may remove.
That thine enſample may be ſhewed
Among all thine encreaſe:
That they may live and learn the like,
And paſſe their time in peace.
Thy ſalutations that were ſent,
I heartily retain:
And ſend thee ſeventy times as much,
To thee and thine again.
And now becauſe I know the goale,
That thou doſt moſt deſire:
I ſend thee here a paper full,
Is fined in the fire:
In hope thou wilt accept it well,
Although it be but ſmall:
Becauſe I have none other good,
To make amends withall.
For all thy free and friendly facts,
Which thy good will hath wrought,
I ſend thee ſurely for a ſhift
The thing that coſt me nought.
Abſtain from all ungodlineſſe,
In dread direct your daies:
Poſſeſſe not ſin in any wiſe,
Beware of wicked wayes.
Hold faſt your faith unfainedly,
Build as you have begun:
And arm your ſelf in perfect faith,
To do as ye have done.
Leſt that the wicked make a mock,
That ye have taken in hand,
In leaving of the perfect rock,
To build upon the ſand.
Beware theſe filthy Phariſees,
Their building is in bloud:
Eat not with them in any wiſe:
Their leaven is not good,
Their ſalt is all unſavoury:
And under good intents
They maintain all their knaverie,
And murder Innocents.
They ſeek to ſit in Chriſts ſeat,
And put him out of place:
And make all means that may be made
His doings to deface.
They keep him down with bils and bats,
That made the blinde to ſee:
They make a god for Miſe and Rats,
And ſay the ſame is hee.
They ſhew like ſheep, and ſweat like Wolves,
Their baits be all for bloud:
They kill and ſlay the ſimple ſouls,
And rob them of their good.
The dark illuſions of the divell
Have dimmed ſo their eyes,
That they cannot abide the truth
To ſtirre in any wiſe.
And if ye keep the perfect path,

Anno 1555.

(As I have hope you do)
Ye ſhall be ſure to have ſuch ſhame,
As they may put you to.
  For, all that leade a godly life,
Shall ſurely ſuffer loſſe :
And eke the world will ſeek their ſhame,
And make them kiſſe the croſſe.
  Ye ſhall be killed all ſaith Chriſt,
Your ſorrowes ſhall not ceaſe :
And yet in your afflictions
I am your perfect peace.
  For in the world ye ſhall have wo,
Becauſe ye are unknown :
And eke becauſe ye hate the world,
The world will love his own.
  Be fervent therefore to the death,
Againſt all their decrees :
And God ſhall ſurely fight for thee
Againſt thine enemies.
  Commit your cauſe unto the Lord,
Revenge not any evill :
And thou ſhalt ſee the wicked want,
When thou ſhalt have thy will.
  For all afflictions that may fall,
That they can ſay or do :
They are not ſure of the wealth,
We ſhall attain unto.
  For I have ſeen the ſinners ſpread
Their branches like a bay :
And yet ere one could turn his head,
Were withered clean away.
  Beware that money make ye not
In riches to ariſe
Againſt the goodneſſe of the Lord,
Among the worldly wiſe.
  For many miſchiefes it hath made,
That may not be expreſt :
And many evils it hath begun,
Which may not be redreſt.
  For money maketh many one,
In riches to rebell :
And he that maketh gold a god,
He hath a ſoul to ſell.
  It maketh Kings to kill and ſlay,
And waſte their wits in warre :
In leaving of the Wolfe at home,
To hunt the Foxe afarre.
  And where they ſhould ſee juſtice done,
And ſet their Realm in reſt :
By money they be made a mean
To ſee the poore oppreſt.
  It maketh Lords obey the laws
That they do ill and nought :
It maketh Biſhops ſuck the bloud,
That God hath dearly bought.
  And where they ſhould be faithfull friends
And fathers to the flock :
By money they do turn about,
Even like a weather-cock.
  The Prieſt doth make a mony mean
To have againe his whoors,
To put away his wedded wife,
And children out of doors.
  It holdeth back the Husbandman,
Which may not be forborn :
And will not ſuffer him to ſow,
And caſt abroad his corn.
  In like caſe it doth let again,
When that the ſeed they ſow :
It choketh up the corn again,
So that it cannot grow.
  The husband he would have a wiſe,
With nobles new and old :
The wife would have the husband hang'd,
That ſhe might have his gold.
  It maketh murtherers many a one,
And beareth much with blood :
The child would ſee the parents ſlain,
To ſeiſe upon their good.
  And though it be a bleſſed thing,
Created in the kinde :
It is a neceſſary evill,
Annexed to the minde.
  For whoſo playeth with the pitch,
His fingers are defiled :
And he that maketh gold a god,
Shall ſurely be beguiled.
  Be friendly to the fatherleſſe,
And all that are oppreſt :
Aſſiſt them alwaies out of hand,
And ſee them ſet at reſt.
  In all your doings and your deeds
Let mercie ſtill remain :
For with the meaſure that ye mete,
Shall ye be met again.
  Be alwayes lowly in your life,
Let love enjoy her own :
The higheſt trees are ſeldome ſure,
And ſooneſt overthrown.
  The Lyons lack and ſuffer ſore,
In hunger and in thirſt :
And they that do oppreſſe the poore,
Continue ſtill accurſt.
  The Bee is but a little beaſt
In body or in ſight :
And yet ſhe bringeth more increaſe,
Than either Crow or Kite.
  Therefore beware in any wiſe,
Keep well your watch alway :
Be ſure of oyl within your lamp,
Let not your light decay.
  For death deſpiſeth them that lack,
And hateth them that have :
And treadeth down the rich and poore
Together in the grave.
  Exhort your children to be chaſte,
Rebuke them for their ill :
And let them not at any wiſe
Be wedded to their will.
  Laugh not with them, but keep them low,
Shew them no merrie chear :
Leſt thou do weep with them alſo,
But bring them up in fear.
  And let your light and living ſhine,
That ye be not ſuſpect
To have the ſame within your ſelf,
For which they are correct.
  Be meek and modeſt in a mean
Let all your deeds be done :
That they which are without the Law,
May ſee how right ye run.
  Keep well the member in your mouth,
Your tongue ſee that ye tame :
For out of little ſparks of fire,
Proceedeth out a flame.
  And as the poiſon doth expreſſe
The natures of the Tode :
Even ſo the tongue doth maniſeſt
The heart that feareth God.
  For therewith bleſſe we God above,
And therewith curſe we men :
And thereby murders do ariſe,
Through women now and then.
  And ſeeing God hath given a tongue
And put it under power :
The ſureſt way it is to ſet
A hatch before the door.
  For God hath ſet you in a ſeat,
Of double low degree :
Firſt unto God, and then to man
A ſubject for to be.
  I write not that I ſee in you
Theſe things to be ſuſpect :
But only ſet before your face,
How ſin ſhould be correct.
  For fleſh and bloud I know ye are,

As other women be :
And if ye dwell in fleſh and blood,
There is infirmity.
Receive a warning willingly,
That to thy teeth is told :
Accompt the gift of greater price,
Than if he gave thee gold.
A wiſe man ſaith Solomon,
A warning will embrace :
A fool will ſooner (as ſaith he)
Be ſmitten on the face.
And as your members muſt be dead,
From all things that are vain :
Even ſo by baptiſme ye are borne
To live with Chriſt again.
Thus farewell free and faithfull friend :
The Lord that is above
Increaſe in thee a perfect faith,
And lead thee in his love.
And as I pray with perfect love,
And pour out bitter tears
For you and all that are at large,
Abroad among the briers :
Even ſo I pray thee to prefer
My perſon and my bands,
Vnto the everlaſting God,
That hath me in his hands.
That I may paſſe out of this pond,
Wherein I am oppreſt :
Incloſed in a clod of clay,
That here can have no reſt.
That as he hath begun in me
His mercies many one,
I may attain to overtake,
My brethren that be gone.
That when the death ſhall do his worſt
Where he ſhall point a place,
I may be able like a man
To look him in the face.
For though he catch away my cloke,
My bodie into duſt :
Yet am I ſure to have a ſoul,
When death hath done his worſt.
And though I leave a little duſt
Diſſolved without blood :
I ſhall receive it ſafe again,
When God ſhall ſee it good.
For my Redeemer I am ſure
Doth live for evermore,
And ſitteth high upon the heavens,
For whom I hunger ſore.
Even as the Deer with deadly wounds,
Eſcaped from the ſpoyl,
Doth haſte by all the means he may,
To ſeek unto the ſoyl,
Of whom I hope to have a crown,
That alwaies ſhall remain :
And eke enjoy a perfect peace,
For all my wo and pain.
The God that giveth all encreaſe,
And ſeeketh ſtill to ſave,
Abound in thee that perfect peace,
Which I do hope to have.
And I beſeech the living God,
To hold thee in his hands :
And wiſh thee even with all my heart,
The bleſſing of my bands.
Which I eſteem of higher price,
Than pearle or precious ſtone :
And ſhall endure for evermore,
When earthly things are gone.
For though the fire do conſume
Our treaſure and our ſtore :
Yet ſhall the goodneſſe of the Lord,
Endure for evermore.
And where thou art a friend to him,
That is to me full dear,
That God of might make thee amends,
When all men ſhall appear.
That hath ſhewed mercy to the meek,
And rid them out of pain.
And thus the Lord poſſeſſe thy ſpirit,
Till we do meet again.

If thou wilt have a recompence,
Abide ſtill in obedience.

The exhortation of Robert Smith, unto his children commonly ſet out in the name of Maſter Rogers.

Give ear my children to my words,
Whom God hath dearly bought : Pro. 5.
Lay up my law within your heart,
And print it in your thought.
For I your father have foreſeen
The frail and filthy way,
Which fleſh and blood would follow fain,
Even to their own decay.
For all and every living beaſt,
Their crib do know full well :
But Adams heirs, above the reſt, Eſay 1.
Are ready to rebell :
And all the creatures on the earth,
Full well can keep their way :
But man above all other beaſts,
Is apt to go aſtray. Sap. 2.
For earth and aſhes is his ſtrength,
His glory and his raign :
And unto aſhes at the length,
Shall he return again.
For fleſh doth flouriſh like a flower, Gen. 3.
And grow up like a graſſe,
And is conſumed in an houre,
As it is brought to paſſe.
In me the image of your years,
Your treaſure and your truſt :
Whom ye do ſee before your face,
Diſſolved into duſt.
For as you ſee your fathers fleſh,
Converted into clay :
Even ſo ſhall ye my children deare,
Conſume and wear away 1 Pet. 3.
The ſun and moon and eke the ſtars
That ſerve the day and night :
The earth and every earthly thing
Shall be conſumed quite.
And all the worſhip that is wrought Sap. 13.
That have been heard or ſeen,
Shall clean conſume and come to nought,
As it had never been.
Therefore that ye may follow me,
Your father and your friend,
And enter into that ſame life, John 7.
Which never ſhall have end.
I leave you here a little book,
For you to look upon :
That you may ſee your fathers face,
When I am dead and gone. 1 Cor. 2.
Who for the hope of heavenly things,
While he did here remain,
Gave over all his golden years,
In priſon and in pain.
Where I among mine iron bands,
Encloſed in the dark
Not many dayes before my death,
Did dedicate this work
To you mine heirs of earthly things
Which I have left behinde :
That ye may read and underſtand,
And keep it in your minde.
That as you have been heires of that,
Which once ſhall weare away :
Even ſo ye may poſſeſſe the part,
Which never ſhall decay.

1 Tob.11. In following of your fathers foot,
In truth and eke in love:
That ye may alſo be his heirs,
For evermore above.
And in example to your youth,
To whom I wiſh all good,
I preach you here a perfect faith,
And ſeal it with my blood.
Have God alwayes before your eyes,
In all your whole intents:
John 9. Commit not ſin in any wiſe,
Keep his commandements.
Abhor that arrant whore of Rome,
Apoc.14. And all her blaſphemies:
And drink not of her decretals,
Nor yet of her decrees.
Give honour to your mother dear,
Exod.22. Remember well her pain:
Matth.15. And recompence her in her age,
In like with love again.
Be alwaies aiding at her hand,
And let her not decay:
Remember well your fathers fall,
That ſhould have been her ſtay.
Give of your portion to the poor,
Matth.25. As riches doth ariſe:
And from the needy naked ſoul,
Turn not away your eys.
For he that will not hear the cry
Of ſuch as are in need:
2 Cor.9. Shall cry himſelf and not be heard,
When he would hope to ſpeed.
If God have given you great increaſe,
And bleſſed well your ſtore:
Luke 12. Remember ye are put in truſt,
To miniſter the more.
Beware of foul and filthy luſt,
Let whoredome have no place:
John 2. Keep clean your veſſels in the Lord,
1 Cor.6. That he may you embrace.
Ye are the temples of the Lord,
For ye are dearly bought:
And they that do defile the ſame,
Shall ſurely come to nought.
Poſſeſſe not pride in any caſe,
Build not your neſts too high:
But have alwayes before your face,
That ye be born to dye.
Defraud not him that hired is,
Your labours to ſuſtain:
But give him alwayes out of hand,
His penny for his pain.
And as ye would that other men
Matth 7. Againſt you ſhould proceed:
Do ye the ſame again to them,
When they do ſtand in need.
And part your portion with the poor,
In money and in meat:
Heb.13. And feed the fainted feeble ſoul,
Deut.13. With that which ye ſhould eat.
That when your members lacketh meat
And clothing to your back:
Ye may the better think on them
That now do live and lack.
Ask counſell alſo at the wiſe,
Matth.6. Give ear unto the end:
Refuſe not you the ſweet rebuke
Of him that is your friend.
Be thankfull alwaies to the Lord,
Matth.6. With prayer and with praiſe:
Deſire you him in all your deeds,
Eke to direct your waies:
And ſin not like that ſwiniſh ſort,
Whoſe bellies being fed,
Conſume their years upon the earth
From belly unto bed
Pro.4. Seek firſt I ſay the living God:
Set him alwaies before:
And then be ſure that he will bleſſe
Your basket and your ſtore.

Sirac.30. And thus if you direct your daies,
According to this book,
Then ſhall they ſay that ſee your waies;
How like me you do look.
And when you have ſo perfectly,
Tob.2. Upon your fingers ends,
Poſſeſſed all within your book,
Then give it to your friends.
And I beſeech the living God,
Replenish you with grace,
That I may have you in the heavens,
And ſee you face to face.
And though the ſword have cut me off,
Contrary to my kinde,
That I could not enjoy your love,
According to my minde:
Yet I do hope when that the heavens
Shall vaniſh like a ſcrole:
I ſhall receive your perfect ſhape,
In bodie and in ſoule.
2 Pet.3. And that I may enjoy your love,
And ye enjoy the land,
I do beſeech the living God
To hold you in his hand.
Farewell my children from the world
Where ye muſt yet remain:
The Lord of hoſts be your defence,
Till we do meet again.
Farewell my love, and loving wife,
My children and my friends:
I hope to God to have you all,
When all things have their ends.
And if you do abide in God,
As ye have now begun:
Your courſe I warrant will be ſhort,
Ye have not far to run.
God grant you ſo to end your yeers
As he ſhall think it beſt:
That ye may enter into heaven,
Where I do hope to reſt.

Written at the requeſt of a Ladie in her book.

IF you will walk the way,
That Chriſt hath you aſſign'd:
Then learn this little verſe,
Which I have left behind.
Be fervent in the truth,
Although it bear the blame:
And eke apply your youth,
To ſtick unto the ſame.
That when the age is come,
And death begins to call:
The truth may be your ſtaffe,
To ſtay you up withall.
And though it bring rebuke,
And cauſe you kiſſe the croſſe:
Yet is it a reward,
To all that ſuffer loſſe.
For here we do lay out
The things that be but vain:
But we are ſure to reap
The things that do remain.
For all that ye do loſe,
Is but a ſinfull ſlime,
And like unto a roſe,
That tarrieth but a time.
But if ye carry Chriſt,
And walk the perfect way,
Ye ſhall poſſeſſe the gold,
That never ſhall decay.
And all your fathers goods
Shalbe your recompence:
If ye confeſſe the word,
With double diligence.

Not onely for to hear
His pure and perfect word:
But alſo to embrace
The fire and eke the ſword.
And if ye keep this path,
And do not run a crook,
Then ſhall ye meet the man,
That writ this in your Book,
In that eternall joy,
That alwayes ſhall remain:
Thus farewell faithfull friend,
Till we do meet again.

Legem pone.

TEach me O Lord to walk thy wayes,
My living to amend:
And I ſhall keep it all my dayes,
Even to my lives end.
Give me a minde to underſtand,
So ſhall I never ſtart:
But I ſhall keep all thy precepts,
Even wholly with my heart.
Make me to go a perfect pace
In that I have begun:
For all my love and my delight,
Is in thy wayes to run.
Encline my heart unto thy wayes,
Set thou thereon my thought:
And let me not conſume my dayes,
To covet that is naught.
O quicken me in all thy wayes,
The world now to deſpiſe:
And from all fond and fooliſh toyes,
Turn thou away mine eyes.
O plant in me thy perfect Word,
Which is to me ſo dear:
Lay up thy Lawes within my heart,
To keep me ſtill in fear.
And rob me of that great rebuke
Which I do fear full ſore:
For all thy judgements and thy law
Endure for evermore.
Behold O Lord in thy precepts,
Is all my whole delight:
O quicken me in all thy wayes,
That I may walk aright.

To his brother.

AS nature doth me binde,
Becauſe thou art my bloud,
According to my kinde
To give me of my good,
That thou mayeſt have in minde
How I have run my race,
Although thou bide behinde
But for a little ſpace.
I give thee here a pearl,
The price of all my good,
For which I leave my life,
To buy it with my bloud.
More worth then all the world,
Or ought that I can note,
Although it be yclad,
In ſuch a ſimple cote.
For when I had obtained
This pearl of ſuch a price,
Then was I ſure I gained
The way for to be wiſe.
It taught me how to fight,
My fleſh for to deſpiſe,
To ſtick unto the light,
And eke to leave the lies.
In ſending out my ſeed
With bonds and bitter teares,
That I might reap with joy
In everlaſting yeers.
And have for all my loſſe
My travaile and my pain,
A thouſand times and more
Of better goods again.
And for becauſe the good
That hath been got and gained,
And that the Lords elect
Hath evermore obtained,
Is cloſed in this book
Which I do give to thee:
Wherein I have my part,
As thou thy ſelf mayſt ſee.
In which I hope thou haſt
A ſtock alſo in ſtore:
And wilt not ceaſe to ſail
Till God have made it more.
I will thee to beware,
Be ſure thou keep it well:
For if thou do it loſe,
Thy part ſhall be in hell.
And here I teſtifie
Before the living God,
That I deteſt to do
The things that are forbod.
And as my judgement is,
My body to be brent,
My heart is ſurely ſet
Therewith to be content.
And ſith it is his will,
To put in me his power,
Vpon his holy hill
To fight againſt this whore,
Full well I am content,
If he allow it ſo,
To ſtand with all my might
The whore to overthrow.
Even with a willing minde,
The death I will outface:
And as I am aſſured,
The battell to embrace.
That they which hear the truth,
How I have paſt the pike,
May ſet aſide their youth,
And learn to do the like.
And though it be my lot, to let her ſuck my bloud,
Yet am I well aſſured, it ſhall do her no good.
For ſhe is ſet to kill the things ſhe thinks accurſt,
And ſhall not have her fill, of bloud untill ſhe burſt.
And when as thou ſhalt ſee, or hear of my deceaſe,
Pray to the living God, that I may paſſe in peace.
And when I am at reſt, and rid out of my pain:
Then will I do the like for thee to God again.
And to my wofull wife, and widow deſolate,
Whom I do leave behinde, in ſuch a ſimple ſtate,
And compaſſed with tears, and mournings many one;
Be thou her ſtaying ſtaffe, when I am dead and gone.
My mouth may not expreſſe, the dolors of my minde:
Nor yet my heavineſſe, to leave her here behinde.
But as thou art my bone, my brother and my bloud,
So let her have thy heart, if it may do her good.
I took her from the world, and made her like the (croſſe:
But if ſhe hold her own, ſhe ſhal not ſuffer loſſe.
For where ſhe had before, a man unto her make,
That by the force of fire, was ſtrangled at a ſtake,
Now ſhall ſhe have a King, to be her helping hand:
To whom pertain all things, that are within the land.
And eke my daughter dear, whom I bequeath to thee,
To be brought up in fear, and learn the A B C.
That ſhe may grow in grace, and ruled by the rod:
To learn and lead her life, within the fear of God.
And alwayes have in minde, thy brother being dead,
That thou art left behinde, a father in my ſtead.
And thou my brother dear, and eke my mothers ſon,
Come forth out of all fear, and do as I have done,
And God ſhall be thy guide, and give thee ſuch increaſe,
That in the flames of fire, thou ſhalt have perfect peace,
Into eternall joy, and paſſe out of all pain:
Where we ſhall meet with mirth, and never part again.

If thou wilt do my daughter good,
Be mindefull of thy brothers bloud.

To all which love God unfainedly,and intend to leade a godly life according to his Goſpel; and to perſevere in his truth unto the end : grace, and peace from God the Father , and from our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

This letter is thought of ſome to be M. Hoopers, partly for that in one copy amongſt divers, it is intituled unto him : and alſo by the phraſe and manner of writing, it may be well conjectured ſo to be.

BE not afraid, moſt dearly beloved in our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, at theſe moſt perillous dayes, wherein by the ſufferance of God, the Prince of darkneſſe is broken looſe, and rageth in his members againſt the elect of God with all cruelty, to ſet up again the Kingdom of Antichriſt : againſt whom, ſee that ye be ſtrong in faith to reſiſt his moſt divelliſh doctrine with the pure Goſpel of God, arming your ſelves with patience, to abide whatſoever ſhall be laid to your charge for the truths ſake, knowing that thereunto ye be called, not onely to beleeve in him, but alſo to ſuffer for him. Oh how happy are yee that in the ſight of God are counted worthy to ſuffer for the teſtimony of Chriſt ? Quiet therefore your ſelves (O my loving brethren) and rejoyce in him for whom ye ſuffer : for unto you do remain the unſpeakable joyes, which neither the eye hath ſeen, nor the ear hath heard, neither the heart of man is able to comprehend in any wiſe. Be not afraid of the bodily death, for your names are written in the Book of life. And the Prophets do record, that in the ſight of the Lord, precious is the death of his Saints. Watch therefore and pray, that ye be not prevented in the day of temptation. Now cometh the day of your triall, wherein the waters rage, and the ſtormy windes blow. Now ſhall it appear, whether yee have builded upon the fleeting ſand, or upon the unmoveable rock Chriſt, which is the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets: whereon every houſe that is builded, groweth into an holy Temple of the Lord, by the mighty working of the holy Ghoſt. Now approacheth the day of your battell, wherein it is required that ye ſhew your ſelves the valiant Souldiers of Chriſt Jeſus, with the armour of God, that ye may be able to ſtand faſt againſt all the crafty aſſaults of the Divell. Chriſt is your Captain, and ye be his ſouldiers, whoſe cogniſance is the Croſſe, to the which he willingly humbled himſelf even unto the death, and thereby ſpoiled his enemies, and now triumpheth he over them in the glory of his Father, making interceſſion for them that here do remain to ſuffer the afflictions that are to be fulfilled in his myſticall body. It behooveth therefore every one that will be counted his ſcholler, to take up his own Croſſe, and follow him, as ye have him for enſample : and I aſſure you that he being on your ſide, nothing ſhall be able to prevail againſt you. And that he will be with you even to the worlds end, ye have his promiſe in the 28. of Matthew. He will go forth with his hoſt as a conquerer to make a conqueſt. He is the man that ſitteth on the white horſe, crowned with immortality, and ye, brethren, are his fellowſhip whereof he is the head. He hath your heart in his hand as a bow bent after his godly will; he ſhall direct the ſame according to the riches of his glory, into all ſpirituall and heavenly cogitations. He is faithfull, and will not ſuffer you to be further aſſaulted, then he will give you ſtrength to overcome, and in the moſt danger he will make a way, that ye may be able to bear it.

Shrink not therefore dear hearts, when ye ſhall be called to anſwer for the hope that is in you : for we have the comforter, even the Spirit of truth which was ſent from the Heavens to teach us: He ſhall ſpeak in us, he ſhall ſtrengthen us : what is he then that ſhall be able to confound us ? Nay, what tyrant is he that now boaſteth himſelf of his ſtrength to do miſchief, whom the Lord ſhall not with the ſame ſpirit, by the mouth of his ſervants, ſtrik down to hell fire ? Yea, ſuddenly will the Lord bring down the glory of the proud Philiſtimes, by the hands of his ſervant David: Their ſtrength is in ſpear and ſhield, but our help is in the name of the Lord which made both heaven and earth. He is our buckler and our wall, a ſtrong tower of defence. He is our God, and we are his people. He ſhall bring the Councels of the ungodly to nought. He ſhall take them in their own net. He ſhall deſtroy them in their own inventions. The right hand of the Lord ſhall work this wonder. His power is known among the children of men. Their fathers have felt it, and are confounded. In like manner ſhall they know that there is no counſell againſt the Lord, when their ſecrets are opened to the whole world, and are found to be againſt the living God. Work they never ſo craftily, build they never ſo ſtrongly; yet down ſhall their rabble fall, and the builders themſelves ſhall then be ſcattered upon the face of the earth, as accurſed of God. The juſt ſhall ſee this and be glade, and praiſe the name of the Lord, that ſo marvellouſly hath dealt with his ſervants, as to bring their enemies under their feet. Then ſhall the fearfull ſeed of Cain tremble and quake. Then ſhall the mocking Iſmaelits be caſt out of door. Then ſhall the proud Nembroth ſee his labour loſt. Then ſhall the beaſt of Babylon be troden under foot. Then ſhall the Scribes and Phariſees for madneſſe fret and rage. Then ſhall their painted wiſdome be known, for extreme folly. Then ſhall the bloudy Dragon be void of his prey. Then ſhall the whore of Babylon receive double vengeance. Then ſhall they ſcratch their crowns for the fall of their Miſtreſſe harlot, whom they now ſerve for filthy lucre; when no man will buy their wares any more. Then ſhall the Popiſh Prieſthood cry weale away with care, even when the Lord ſhall help his ſervants ; which day is not far off, the day wherein the Kingdom of Antichriſt ſhall have an end, and never riſe any more. In the mean time, abide in certain and ſure hope, cleaving unto the promiſes of God, which in their own time ſhall be fulfilled.

Acquit your ſelves like men againſt the enemies of God in all humblenes of mind, be ſtrong in ſpirit to acknowledge one God, one holy Savior Jeſus Chriſt, one only, everlaſting and ſufficient ſacrifice for the remiſſion of ſins, even the precious Body of the Lord Jeſus once offered for all and for ever. Which now ſitteth on the right hand of God, & from thence ſhal he come to judge both the quick and the dead at the laſt day ; and untill that time, occupieth the bleſſed Body none other place to dwell in, to be kept in, to be incloſed in, but onely in the heavens, even in the glorious Majeſty of God, perſonally abiding there in the fleſh, not coming down from thence till the laſt hour. And as he never ceaſeth to be man, ſo doth he never loſe the ſimilitude of man ; his body there hath his lineaments, he leaveth them not, ſo hath that body there his Higheneſſe, and ſhrinketh not, and his manly ſhape he altereth not at any time. He is, in that he took of the Virgin Mary, a naturall man in all conditions, except ſin.

fer cake baken in an oven, or between a pair of irons. As he is in heaven very man, one onely Mediator between God and man, even the man Chriſt Jeſus, he it is that is the propitiation for our ſins. Be bold therefore to confeſſe this moſt pure and Apoſtolicall doctrine: and alſo that all favour, mercy, and forgivenes cometh only by him. He only of God the Father was made for us all wiſedom, righteouſnes, ſanctification and redemption. All theſe are the gifts of God the Father, freely given unto us by Chriſt Jeſus God and man, through faith in his blood, and not by the merits of men; Gifts they are, I ſay, freely given unto us of favour, without our deſert by believing, and not by deſerving. To this do the Law and the Prophets bear witneſſe.

This Doctrine have all the bleſſed Martyrs of Chriſt Church witneſſed with their blood to be true. To this truth, have all the conſciences of all true beleevers ſubſcribed ever ſince the aſcenſion of Chriſt. This witneſſe is not of man, but of God. What better quarrell can ye then have to give your lives for, than the truth it ſelf? That man that giveth his life for the truth, taketh the readieſt way to life. He that hath the Popes curſe for the truth, is ſure of Chriſts bleſſing. Well then my brethren, what ſhall now let, but that ye go forward as ye have begun? Nay rather run with the runners that ye may obtain the appointed glory. Hold on the right way, look not back, have the eye of your heart fixed upon God, and ſo run, that ye may get hold of it. Caſt away all your worldly pelf, and worldly reſpects, as the favour of friends, the fear of men, ſenſuall affection, reſpect of perſons, honour, praiſe, ſhame, rebuke, wealth, poverty, riches, lands, poſſeſſions, carnall fathers and mothers, wife and children, with the love of your own ſelves; and in reſpect of that heavenly treaſure ye look for, let all theſe be denied, and utterly refuſed of you, ſo that in no condition they doabate your zeal, or quench your love towards God. In this caſe make no accompt of them, but rather repute them as vile, in compariſon of everlaſting life. Away with them as thorns that choke the heavenly ſeed of the Goſpel, where they be ſuffered to grow. They are burdens of the fleſh, which encumber the ſoul. Exchange them therefore for advantage. Doth not he gain, that findeth heavenly and immortall treaſure, for earthly and corruptible riches? Loſeth that man any thing, which of his carnall father and mother is forſaken, when therefore he is received of God the Father to be his childe and heir in Chriſt? Heavenly for earthly, for mortall immortall, for tranſitory things permanent, is great gains to a Chriſtian conſcience.

Therefore, as I beganne, I exhort you in the Lord, not to be afraid. Shrink not my brethren, miſtruſt not God, be of good comfort, rejoyce in the Lord, hold faſt your faith, and continue to the end. Deny the world, and take up your croſſe, and follow him which is your leadſman, and is gone before. If you ſuffer with him, you ſhall raign with him. What way can you glorifie the Name of your heavenly Father better, than by ſuffering death for his Sons ſake? What a ſpectacle ſhall it be to the world to behold ſo godly a fellowſhip as you ſervants of God, in ſo juſt a quarrell as the Goſpel of Chriſt is, with ſo pure a conſcience, ſo ſtrong a faith, and ſo lively a hope, to offer your ſelves to ſuffer moſt cruell torments at the hands of Gods enemies, and ſo to end your dayes in peace, to receive in the reſurrection of the righteous, life everlaſting?

Heb.6.
1 Cor.2.
Heb.11.

Be ſtrong therefore in your battell. The Lord God is on your ſide, and his truth is your cauſe; and againſt you be none, but the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt, as the Serpent and his ſeed, the Dragon with his tail, the marked men of the beaſt, the off-ſpring of the Phariſees, the congregation malignant, the generation of Vipers, Murderers, as their father the devill hath been from the beginning. To conclude, ſuch are they as the Lord God hath alwayes abhorred, and in all ages reſiſted and overthrown. God, from whom nothing is hid, knoweth what they are. He that ſearcheth the hearts of men, he hath found out them to be crafty, ſubtile, full of poyſon, proud, diſdainfull, ſtiffenecked, devourers, raveners, and barkers againſt the truth, filthy and ſhameleſſe: and therefore doth the Spirit of God, by the mouths of his holy Prophets and Apoſtles, call them by the names of Foxes, Serpents Cockatrices, Lions, Leopards, Buls, Bears, Wolves, Dogs, Swine, Beaſts, teaching us thereby to underſtand, that their naturall inclination is, to deceive, poiſon, and deſtroy (as much as in them lieth) the faithfull and elect of God. But the Lord with his right arm ſhall defend his little flock againſt the whole rabblement of theſe worldlings, which have conſpired againſt him: he hath numbred all the hairs of his childrens head, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh without his fatherly will. He keepeth the ſparrows, much more will he preſerve them whom he hath purchaſed with the blood of the immaculate Lamb. He will keep them unto the hour appointed, wherein the Name of God ſhall be glorified in his Saints. In the mean time let them work their wills, let them envy, let them maligne, let them blaſpheme, let them curſe, ban, betray, whip, ſcourge, hang, and burn: for by theſe means God will try his elect as gold in the furnace; and by theſe fruits, ſhall they alſo bring themſelves to be known what they be, for all their ſheeps ſkins. For as he that in ſuffering patiently for the Goſpel of God, is thereby known to be of Chriſt; even ſo likewiſe is the perſecutor of him known to be a member of Antichriſt. Beſides this, their extreme cruelty ſhall be a mean the ſooner to provoke God to take pity upon his ſervants, and to deſtroy them that ſo tyrannouſly entreat his people; as we may learn by the hiſtories, as well in the bondage of Iſrael under Pharaoh in Egypt, as alſo in the miſerable captivity of Judah in Babylon: Where, when the people of God were in moſt extreme thraldome, then did the Lord ſtretch forth his mighty power to deliver his ſervants. Though God for a time ſuffer them to be exalted in their own pride, yet ſhall they not ſcape his vengeance. They are his rods, and when he hath worn them to the ſtumps, then will he caſt them into the fire; this ſhall be their finall reward. Our duty is the mean while patiently to abide the will of God, which worketh all things for the beſt.

By this means ſeeketh he his ſheep that were loſt, to bring them hom to the fold again. Let us therefore earneſtly repent, and bring forth the worthy fruits of repentance. Let us ſtudie to be his, then ſhall we not need to fear what theſe hypocrites do againſt us, which with their pretenſed holineſſe deceive the hearts of the ſimple, and abuſe the authoritie of God in his Princes, causing them (by their procurement) to teſtifie their ambitious Prelacie, and to erect up their Idol again with the Romiſh Maſſe. God, in whoſe hands are the hearts of Kings, open the heart of the Queens Highneſſe to eſpy them out what they be, and ſo to weed them out, that they no longer be ſuffered to trouble the Congregation of God, and to poyſon the Realm with Pope-holy Doctrine. God almighty for his Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake deliver the Queens Highneſſe and this her Church and Realm, from theſe proud Prelates, which are as profitable in the Church of Chriſt as a Polecat in the middeſt of a warren of Conies.

To conclude my brethren, I commit you to God, and to the power of his word: which is able to eſtabliſh you in all truth. Whom ſee that ye love, ſerve, dread, and obey, above all worldly powers, and for nothing under the heavens defile your conſcience before God. Diſſemble not with his word; God will not be mocked, nay they that diſſemble with him, deceive themſelves. Such ſhall the Lord deny, and caſt out at the laſt day: ſuch, I ſay, as bear two faces in one hood, ſuch as play on both hands; ſuch as deny the known truth; ſuch as obſtinately rebell againſt him. All ſuch with their partakers ſhall the Lord deſtroy. God defend you from all ſuch, and make you perfect unto the end. Your ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy.

THe God and Father eternall, which brought again from death our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, keep thee dear wife now and ever, Amen, and all thy Parents and friends. I praiſe God for his mercy, I am in the ſame ſtate that ye left me in, rather better than worſe, looking dayly for the living God, before whom I hunger full ſore to appear, and receive the glory, of which I truſt thou art willing to be a partaker. I give God moſt hearty thanks therefore, deſiring thee of all loves to ſtand in that faith which thou haſt received, and let no man take away the ſeed that Almighty God hath ſown in thee, but lay hands of everlaſting life which ſhall ever abide, when both the earth and all earthly friends ſhall periſh, deſiring them alſo to receive thankfully our trouble which is momentany and light, and as S. Paul ſaith, not worthie of the things which ſhall be ſhewed on us; that we patiently carrying our croſſe, may attain to the place where our Saviour Chriſt is gone before, to the which I beſeech God of his mercy bring us ſpeedily. I have been much troubled about your deliverance, fearing much the perſwaſions of worldlings, and have found a friend, which will (I truſt) finde a mean for you if you be not alreadie provided, deſiring you in any caſe to abide ſuch order, as thoſe my friends ſhall appoint in God. And bear well in mind the words which I ſpake at our departing, that as God hath found us, and alſo elected us worthy to ſuffer with him; we may endeavour our ſelves to follow uprightly in this our vocation, deſiring you to preſent my hearty commendations to all our friends, and in eſpeciall to your Parents, keeping your matter cloſe in any wiſe. Give moſt hearty thanks to my friend, which only for our cauſe is come to Windſore. Continue in prayer. Do well. Be faultleſſe in all things. Beware abominations. Keep you clean from ſin. Pray for me, as I do for you. I have ſent you a piece of gold for a token, and moſt entirely deſire you to ſend me word if ye lack any thing. The Lord Jeſus preſerve you and yours, Amen. By your husband here and in heaven, Robert Smith.

The martyrdome and comfortable death of Rob. Smith at Urbridge, An. 555. Aug. 8.

This foreſayd Robert Smith the valiant and conſtant Martyr of Chriſt, thus repleniſhed, as ye have heard with the fortitude of Gods ſpirit, was condemned at London by Boner their Biſhop, the 12. day of July, and ſuffered at Urbridge the 8. day of Auguſt, who as he had been a comfortable inſtrument of God before to all them that were in priſon with him: ſo now alſo being at the ſtake, he did no leſſe comfort the people, there ſtanding about him, willing them to think well of his cauſe, and not to doubt but that his bodie dying in that quarrell, ſhould riſe again to life. And ſayd he, I doubt not but that God will ſhew you ſome token thereof. At length he being well-nigh half burnt and all black with fire, cluſtered together as in a lump like a blacke cole, all men thinking him for dead, ſuddenly roſe upright before the people, lifting up the ſtumps of his arms, and clapping the ſame together, declaring a rejoycing heart unto them; and ſo bending down again, and hanging over the fire, ſlept in the Lord, and ended this mortall life.

A token of comfort and reſurrection given by R Smith at his martyrdome.

Letters.

A letter of R. Smith to his wife, full of ghoſtly inſtruction.

SEeke firſt to love God, deare wife, with your whole heart, and then ſhall it be eaſie to love your neighbour.

Be friendly to all creatures, and eſpecially to your own ſoule.

Be alwaies an enemy to the divel and the world, but ſpecially to your own fleſh.

In hearing of good things joyn the ears of your head and heart together.

Seek unity and quietnes with all men, but ſpecially with your conſcience; for he will not eaſily be intreated.

Love all men, but ſpecially your enemies.

Hate the ſins that are paſt, but eſpecially thoſe to come.

Be good to the enemie.

Be as ready to further your enemy, as he is to hinder you, that ye may be the child of God.

Defile not that which Chriſt hath cleanſed, leſt his blood be layd to your charge.

A double hedge to the tongue.

Remember that GOD hath hedged in your tongue with the teeth and lips, that it might ſpeak under correction.

Caſt out the mote in thine own eye firſt.

Be ready at all times to look to your brothers eie, but eſpecially in your own eie. For he that warneth other of that he himſelfe is faulty, doth give his neighbor the cleer wine, and keepeth the dregs for himſelfe.

Covet not to be rich.

Beware of riches and worldly honor: for without underſtanding, prayer, and faſting, it is a ſnare, and alſo poverty, all which are like to conſuming fire, of which if a man take a little, it will warme him, but if he take too much, it will conſume him. For it is hard for a man to carry fire in his boſome, and not be burnt.

Bleſſed be the mercifull.

Shew mercy unto the Saints for Chriſts ſake, and Chriſt ſhall reward you for the Saints ſake. Among all other priſoners viſit your own ſoule: for it is incloſed in a perillous priſon.

If you will love God, hate evill, and ye ſhall obtain the reward of well doing.

Thus fare you well good Anne. Have me heartily commended to all that love the Lord unfainedly. I beſeech you have me in your prayer while I am living, and I am aſſured the Lord will accept it. Bring up my children and yours in the fear of God, and then ſhall I not fail but receive you together in the everlaſting Kingdome of God, which I go unto.

Your husband, Robert Smith.

If ye will meet with me again,
Forſake not Chriſt for any pain.

Another letter ſent to his wife Anne Smith.

The grace of Almighty God be alwayes with you and comfort, ſtrengthen, and ſtabliſh you in all things, that what his bleſſed will is, ye may follow faithfully, to his honour, my comfort, and your own ſalvation, and the good enſample to our poſterity.

Commendation of Peter the Keeper.

I have received your Letter, and I praiſe God, without any danger: neverthéleſſe, if Gods marvellous goodneſſe had not brought it to my hands by Peter the Keeper, there might have riſen a great trouble upon the ſame. For will ye know George is a wicked man, utterly without all fear of God; and if he had gotten it, the Councell ſure had ſeen it. But Peter like an honeſt man never opened it. Wherefore I deſire you from henceforth let your letters be delivered at Chauncery-lanes end to my ſiſter Tankerfield, and ſhe may deliver them ſafe into my hand. We are very ſtraitly kept, I praiſe God of his mercy. Neverthéleſſe Almighty God is alwayes with us. I have ſent you that ye wrote for. The two Nutmegs that ſhould have gone by Nicholas to our friends, I ſend now, and deſire them to accept them as a poore priſoners gift, untill God give more largely. Thomas Iveſon ſendeth you a peny, I pray you give him thankes for the ſame, and Dirick alſo. I have ſent you of that little that I have two peeces of Spaniſh money. The Lord Ieſus have you in his cuſtody, and ſend you good ſpeed. In any caſe keep your ſelf cloſe, I doubt much of your walkings. Have my hearty commendations to your parents, and deſire them with you to have me in their prayers. Be fervent in prayer, pray, pray, pray, that God would of his mercy put up his ſword and look on his people. Tell my brother, with commendations, that the next comer ſhall bring up the Epiſtle and exhortation I have written all this fortnight for my Lady, yea, and almoſt done nothing elſe. I would have ſent him the Articles of William Flower, and my talk with him, if I could have delivered it from the priſon. The holy Ghoſt keep you. I would ye could make a meanes, for your money, to ſend a cheeſe to Peter, for I finde much kindneſſe at his hands. Ye ſhall alwayes hear of me at Tankerfields houſe. All the congregation ſalute you. Fare you moſt heartily well.

I have not yet (tell my brother) ſpoken with the perſon. There hath come ſo ſtrait a commandement, that no man might come to us, becauſe Tooly curſed the Pope at the gallowes. They thought it to be our counſell.

Yours, and ever yours,
Robert Smith.

Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Ieſus Chriſt be with you dear Wife, now and ever, Amen: and prevent your wayes through his holy Spirit, that ye may in all your words and works pleaſe God, and eſchew evill, to his honour and your ſalvation, that they which ſee your converſation may in all things learn to do like, even to the utter ſhame and confuſion of the wicked and ungodly, Amen.

Behold here the communion of Saints.

I ſent you by Maſter Alexander a purſe with money. I have certain tokens for you, ſent by my priſon fellows to you, that is, from M. Haukes 12.d. from Maſter Simſon 12.d. from his Wife 4.d. from Maſter Wats five new groats, from M. Ardeley 12.d. from Maſter Bradford 12.d. which men be all gone to death, except Maſter Bradford, he abideth ſtill. There is alſo gone to death Nicholas Chamberlaine, Thom. Oſmund, William Bamford. There is alſo condemned this Munday Dirick Carver, Thomas Iveſon, Iohn Launder, and William Vaſſy is repreeved. Pray to God to have mercy upon his people, and bid my Brother, if he can conveniently, come down on Munday next; if he cannot well do it, let him abide at home. Have me heartily commended to your parents. I have ſent each of them a token, a bowed groat, and deſire them for Gods ſake to help us with their prayers. Have little Katherine in minde. Commend me unto all good friends. Continue in prayer. Beware of vanity. Let not God be diſhonoured in your converſation, but like a good Matron, keep your veſſell in holineſſe. The peace of God reſt with you for ever, Amen.

My brother Iveſon ſendeth to you a token, to your mother a token, and to Katherine a token, three pence. Iohn Launder ſendeth you a peece of Spaniſh money. Father Herault a peece of ſixe pence. W. Androwes ſendeth you a raſe of Ginger, and I ſend your mother one, and a Nutmeg. I ſend Katherine comfits, for a token, to eat. I have ſent you a key-clog for a token.

Your husband, Robert Smith.

A letter ſent to his friend.

Another letter of Rob. Smith to a friend of his.

The eternall God keep you in his fear. I have hearty commendations unto you and your husband, beſeeching Almighty God to preſerve you in well doing, and in perfect knowledge of his Chriſt, that ye may be found faultleſſe in the day of the Lord. I have heard ſay, that my friend is given over to vanity; it breaketh my heart, not onely to hear that he ſo doth, but alſo teacheth other, that it is unhurtfull to go to all abomination, which now ſtand in the Idols temples: Neverthéleſſe, dear friend, be ye not moved to follow ſinners; for they have no inheritance with God and Chriſt. But look, that by going into the Idoll temple, ye defile not the temple of God; for light hath no fellowſhip with darkneſſe. But look what the Lord hath commanded, that do. For if not going to Church were without perſecution, they would not learn you that leſſon. But all things that is ſweet to the fleſh, is allowed of the fleſhly. The Lord ſhall reward every man according to his works, and he that leadeth into captivity, ſhall go into captivity, and he that by the fleſhly man is led in the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption. The Lord Ieſus give thee his holy Spirit, Amen.

I have ſent thee an Epiſtle in metre, which is not to be laid up in my coffer, but in thy heart.

Seek peace, and inſue it. Feare God, love God with all thy heart, with all thy ſoul, and with all thy ſtrength.

Thy friend and all mens in Chriſt Ieſus, Robert Smith.

Scribled in much haſte from N. the twelfth of May.

Robert Smith to all faithfull ſervants of Chriſt, exhorting them to be ſtrong under perſecution.

Content thy ſelf with patience,
With Chriſt to bear the croſſe of pain:
Which can and will thee recompence,
A thouſand fold with joyes again.
Let nothing cauſe thy heart to quail,
Launch out thy boat, hale up thy ſail,
Put from the ſhore:
And be thou ſure thou ſhalt attain,
Vnto the port that ſhall remain
For evermore.

The burning of Stephen Harwood, and Thomas Fuſt, martyred for the teſtimony of the Goſpel.

Stephen Harwood, Thomas Fuſt, Martyrs.

ABout this time dyed alſo by cruell fire theſe two Martyrs of God, that is to ſay, Stephen Harwood at Stratford, and Thomas Fuſt at Ware. Which both two, as they were about one time burned with the forementioned Robert Smith and George Tankerfield, although in ſundry places; ſo were they alſo examined and openly condemned together with them. Their proceſſe, becauſe it was joyned all in one with the proceſſe of Robert Smith, and other of the ſame company above mentioned, I thought it ſuperfluous again to repeate the ſame; ſave that of Thomas Fuſt this is to be added, that whereas he in his laſt appearing the 12. of July, was moved by the Biſhop to revoke his opinion, thus he anſwered; No (ſaid he) my Lord, for there is no truth cometh out of your mouth, but all lies. Ye condemn men, and will not hear the truth. Where can ye finde any annointing or greaſing in Gods Book? I ſpeak nothing but the truth, and I am certain that it is the truth that I ſpeak. This anſwer of him onely I finde noted by the Regiſter; although how ſlenderly theſe Regiſters have dealt in uttering ſuch matters, that is, in omitting thoſe things which moſt worthy were to be known, by their doings it is eaſie to be ſeen. But to be ſhort, after their anſwers made, both he and Thomas Fuſt were for their faithfull perſeverance condemned together by the Biſhop in his accuſtomed pity, as Heretickes to be burned, and ſo (as before ye have heard) finiſhed they their martyrdome, the one at Stratford, and the other at Ware, in the moneth of Auguſt and yeer aboveſaid.

William Hale Martyr.

OF the ſame company of theſe ten above recorded, which were ſent up to Biſhop Boner, by Sir Nicholas Hare and other Commiſſioners, in the company of George Tankerfield and Robert Smith, was alſo William Hale of Thorpe in the County of Eſſex, who likewiſe being examined with the reſt, the 12. of July, received with them alſo the ſentence of condemnation. Giving this exhortation withall to the lookers on: Ah good people, ſaid he, beware of this Idolater, and this Antichriſt, pointing unto the Biſhop of London, and ſo was he delivered to the Sheriffs as an Heretick to be burned, who ſent him to Barnet, where about the later end of Auguſt he moſt conſtantly ſealed up his faith with the conſuming of his body by cruell fire, yeilding his ſoul unto the Lord Jeſus his onely and moſt ſure Redeemer.

Three Martyrs ſickned in priſon, and buried in the fields.

YE heard before of ten ſundry perſons ſent out of Newgate by Maſter Hare and other Commiſſioners, to be examined of Boner Biſhop of London. Of whom ſix already have been executed in ſeverall places, as hath been ſhewed; whoſe names were Elizabeth Warn, George Tankerfield, Robert Smith, Stephen Harwood, Thomas Fuſt, and William Hale. Other three, to wit, George King, Thomas Leyes, and John Wade ſickning in Lollards Tower, were ſo weak that they were removed into ſundry houſes within the City of London, and there departed, and caſt out into the fields, and there buried by night of the faithfull brethren, when none in the day durſt do it, propter metum Iudæorum. The laſt that remained of this foreſaid company was Joan Layſh or Layſhford, the daughter-in-law to John Warn and Elizabeth Warn, Martyrs: but becauſe ſhe was repreived to a longer day, her ſtory and Martyrdome we will deferre till the moneth of January the next yeer following.

William Andrew buried in the fields.

THe like Catholike charity was alſo ſhewed upon William Andrew of Horſley, in the County of Eſſex, Carpenter, who was brought to Newgate the firſt day of April, Anno 1555. by John Motham Conſtable of Mauldon in Eſſex. The firſt and principall promoter of him was the Lord Rich, who ſent him firſt to priſon. Another great doer againſt him alſo ſeemeth to be Sir Richard Southwell Knight, by a letter written by him to Boner, as by the Copy hereof appeareth.

ſend up unto the Councell, one William Andrew of Thorp, within the County of Eſſex, an arrogant Heretick. Their pleaſure was to command me to commit him unto Newgate, where he remaineth ; and as I am informed, hath infected a number in the priſon with his hereſie. Your Lordſhip ſhall do very well, if it pleaſe you to convent him before you, and to take order with him, as his caſe doth require. I know the Councell meant to have writ herein unto your Lordſhip, but by occaſion of other buſineſſe, the thing hath been omitted. Wherefore knowing their good pleaſure, I did adviſe the Keeper of Newgate to wait upon you with theſe few lines. And ſo referring the reſt to your vertuous conſideration, I remain your good Lordſhips to command, this 12 of Iune, 1555.

W. Andrew twice before B. Boner.

W. Andrew through ſtrait handling died in Newgate.

W. Andrew buried in the fields.

This William Andrew being twice brought before Boner to examination, there manfully ſtood in the defence of his religion. At length through ſtraight handling in the priſon of Newgate, there he loſt his life, which elſe his adverſaries would have taken away by fire: and ſo after the Popiſh manner he was caſt out into the field, and by night was privily buried by the hands of good men and faithfull brethren.

The Martyrdom of Robert Samuel, Preacher, ſuffering for the true defence of Chriſts Goſpel.

Maſter Foſter Juſtice perſecutor of Chriſts people.

MAſter Foſter, Juſtice, dwelling at Cobdock in the County of Suffolk, and a little from Ipſwich, being in continuall hatred againſt the truth and the profeſſors of the ſame, did not onely not ceaſe day nor night to ſtudy how to bring thoſe in thrall and captivity, that were honeſt and godly inclined to religion; but alſo whatſoever they were that once came in his claws, they eaſily eſcaped not without clog of conſcience, or elſe loſſe of life, ſo greedy was he of blood. Among many whom he had troubled, there was one Samuel, in King Edwards dayes a very godly and right faithfull Preacher of Gods Word, who for his valiant and conſtant behaviour in his Sermons, ſeemeth worthy of high admiration. He was Miniſter at Barfolde in Suffolk, where he taught faithfully and fruitfully that flock which the Lord had committed to his charge, ſo long as the time would ſuffer him to do his duty.

Rob. Samuel in K. Edwards dayes a godly Preacher.

Rob. Samuel removed from the Miniſtry.

At the laſt being removed from the Miniſtry, and put from his Benefice (as many other good Paſtors were beſide) when he could not avoid the raging violence of the time, yet would he not give over his care that he had for his flock, but would teach them privily and by ſtealth, when he could not openly be ſuffered ſo to do. At what time order was taken by the Queen, to be publiſhed by the Commiſſioners, that all Prieſts which had married in King Edwards dayes, putting their wives from them, ſhould be compelled to return again to their chaſtity and ſingle life. This Decree would not Samuel ſtand unto, for that he knew it to be manifeſtly wicked and abominable; but determining with himſelf that Gods Laws were not to be broken for mans traditions, kept his wife ſtill at Ipſwich, and gave his diligence in the mean time to the inſtructing of other which were about him, as occaſion ſerved. At laſt Maſter Foſter having intelligence hereof, being a great doer in thoſe quarters, foreſlacked

Rob. Samuel would not conſent to the wicked decree of Q. Mary to put away his wife.

no time nor diligence, but eftſoons ſendeth out his eſpials abroad, laying hard wait for Samuel, that if he came home to his wife at any time, they might apprehend him, and carry him to priſon.

In concluſion, when ſuch as ſhould betray him eſpied him at home with his wife, they bringing word to the Officer, came immediatly flocking about his houſe, and beſet it with a great company, and ſo took him in the night ſeaſon, becauſe they durſt not do it in the day time; for fear of trouble and tumult, although good Samuel did nothing withſtand them at all, but meekly yeilded himſelf into their clouches of his own accord. When they had thus caught him, they put him into Ipſwich Jayl, where he paſſed his time meekly among his godly brethren, ſo long as he was permitted to continue there. Howbeit not long after, being taken from thence, he was carried (through the malice of the wicked ſort) to Norwich, where the ſaid Biſhop Doctor Hopton (whether he or Doctor Dunnings his Chancellor) full like unmercifull Prelates exerciſed great cruelty againſt him, as indeed they were men in that time of perſecution, as had not their matches for ſtraitneſſe and cruell tormenting the bodies of the Saints among all the reſt beſide, and ſpecially through the procuring of Dunnings. For although the other were ſharp enough in their generation; yet could they be ſatisfied with impriſonment and death, and could go no farther. Neither did I ever yet hear of any beſides theſe, which ſo farre exceeded all bounds of pity and compaſſion in tormenting their poor brethren, as this Biſhop did; in ſuch ſort, that many of them he perverted, and brought quite from the truth, and ſome from their wits alſo.

Rob. Samuel apprehended in his houſe by night.

Rob. Samuel put in Ipſwich Jayl.

Rob. Samuel removed to Norwich.

The cruelty of Dunnings the bloody Chancellor.

The Biſhop therefore, or elſe his Chancellor, thinking that he might as eaſily prevail with Samuel, as he had done with the other before, kept him in a very ſtrait priſon at his firſt coming, where he was chained bolt upright to a great poſt, in ſuch ſort, that ſtanding onely on tiptoe, he was fain to ſtay up the whole poiſe or weight of his body thereby. And to make amends for the cruelty or pain that he ſuffered, they added a farre more grievous torment, keeping him without meat and drink, whereby he was unmercifully vexed through hunger and thirſt; ſaving that he had every day allowed two or three mouthfuls of bread, and three ſpoonfuls of water, to the end rather that he might be reſerved to farther torment, than that they would preſerve his life. O worthy conſtancy of the Martyr. O pitileſſe hearts of Papiſts, worthy to be complained of, and to be accuſed before God and nature. O the wonderfull ſtrength of Chriſt in his members: Whoſe ſtomack, though it had been made of Adamant ſtone, would not have relented at the intollerable vexations, and extreme pains above nature? How oftentimes would he have drunken his own water? but his body was ſo dried up with his long emptineſſe, that he was not able to make one drop of water?

The cruell handling of Rob. Samuel in priſon.

Rob. Samuel famiſhed in priſon.

Rob. Samuel deſirous to drink his own water, and could not.

At the laſt, when he was brought forth to be burned, which was but a trifle in compariſon of thoſe pains that he had paſſed, certain there were that heard him declare what ſtrange things had happened unto him during the time of his impriſonment: to wit, that after he had been famiſhed or pined with hunger two or three dayes together, he then fell into a ſleep, as it were one half in a ſlumber, at which time one clad all in white ſeemed to ſtand before him, which miniſtred comfort unto him by theſe words; Samuel, Samuel, be of good chear, and take a good heart unto thee. For after this day ſhalt thou never be either hungry or thirſty. Which thing came even to paſſe accordingly; for ſpeedily after he was burned, and from that time till he ſhould ſuffer, he felt neither hunger nor thirſt. And this declared he to the end, as he ſaid, that all men might behold the wonderfull works of God. Many moe like matters concerning the great comfort he had of Chriſt in his afflictions, he could utter, he ſaid, beſides this, but that ſhamefaſtneſſe and modeſty would not ſuffer him to utter it. And yet if it had pleaſed God, I would he had been leſſe modeſt in that behalf, that the love and care that Chriſt hath of his might have the more appeared thereby unto us by ſuch preſent arguments, for the more plentifull comfort of the godly, though there be ſufficient teſtimonies of the ſame in the holy Scriptures already.

Samuel brought to burning.

Strange viſions that happened to Samuel.

Great comforts miniſtred by the Lord to Samuel in his painfull impriſonment.

No leſſe memorable it is, and worthy alſo to be noted concerning the three ladders which he told to divers he ſaw in his ſleep, ſet up toward heaven; of the which there was one ſomewhat longer than the reſt, but yet at length they became one joyning (as it were) all three together. This was a forewarning revealed unto him, declaring undoubtedly the Martyrdom firſt of himſelf, and then the death of two honeſt women, which were brought forth, and ſuffered in the ſame town anon after.

Another memorable viſion of Samuel in priſon.

As this godly Martyr was going to the fire, there came a certain maid to him, which took him about the neck and kiſſed him, who being marked by them that were preſent, was ſought for the next day after to be had to priſon and burned, as the very party her ſelf informed me: Howbeit, as God of his goodneſſe would have it, ſhe eſcaped their fiery hands, keeping her ſelf ſecret in the town a good while after. But as this maid, called Roſe Nattingham, was marvellouſly preſerved by the providence of God; ſo there were other two honeſt women did fall into the rage and fury of that time. The one was a Brewers wife, the other was a Shoomakers wife, but both together now eſpouſed to a new huſband Chriſt.

The name of this maid was Roſe Nattingham.

Two godly women, the one a Brewers wife, the other a Shoomakers wife, apprehended.

With theſe two was this maid aforeſaid very familiar and well acquainted, who on a time giving counſell to the one of them, that ſhe ſhould convey her ſelf away while ſhe had time and ſpace, ſeeing ſhe could not away with the Queens unjuſt proceedings, had this anſwer at her hands again: I know well, ſaith ſhe, that it is lawfull enough to flie away, which remedy you may uſe, if you liſt. But my caſe ſtandeth otherwiſe. I am tied to an huſband, and have beſide a ſort of young children at home; and then I know not how my huſband, being a carnall man, will take my departure from him; therefore I am minded for the love of Chriſt and his truth to ſtand to the extremity of the matter.

This godly wife exhorted to flie, would not do ſo, having huſband and children to ſtick to.

And ſo the next day after Samuel ſuffered, theſe two godly wives, the one called Anne Potten, the other called Joane Trunchfield, the wife of Michael Trunchfield, Shoomaker of Ipſwich, were apprehended and had both to priſon together. Which as they were both by ſexe and nature ſomewhat tender; ſo were they at firſt leſſe able to indure the ſtraitneſſe of the priſon, and eſpecially the Brewers wife was caſt into marvellous great agonies and troubles of minde thereby. But Chriſt beholding the weak infirmity of his ſervant, did not fail to help her when ſhe was in this neceſſity. So at the length they both ſuffered after Samuel, Anno 1556. Febr. 19. as ſhall be by the Lords grace declared hereafter. And theſe, no doubt, were thoſe two Ladders, which being joyned with the third, Samuel ſaw ſtretched up into heaven. This bleſſed Samuel, the ſervant of Chriſt, ſuffered the 31 of Auguſt, Anno 1555.

Eccleſ. 9.

Eccleſ. 4.

A Man knoweth not his time, but as the fiſh is taken with the angle, and as the birds are caught with the ſnare; even ſo are men caught and taken in the perillous time when it cometh upon them. The time cometh; the day draweth neer. Ezechiel 7. Better it were to die (as the Preacher ſaith) then to live and ſee the miſerable works which are done under the Sunne; ſuch ſudden and ſtrange mutation, ſuch wofull, hainous, and lamentable diviſions ſo faſt approach, and none or very few thoroughly repent. Alas for this ſinfull nation, a people of great iniquity and ſeed of ungraciouſneſſe, corrupting their wayes. They have forſaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy one of Iſrael to anger, and are gone backward. Who now liveth not in ſuch ſecurity and reſt, as though all dangers were clean overpaſt? Who now blindeth and buffeteth not Chriſt, with ſeeſt me, and ſeeſt me not? Yea, who liveth not now in ſuch felicity, worldly pleaſures and joyes, wholly ſeeking the world, providing and craftily ſhifting for the earthly clod and all carnall appetites, as though ſinne were clean forgotten, overthrown, and devoured? Like hoggiſh Gergeſites now are we more affraid and aſhamed of Chriſt our Meſſias, fearing the loſſe of our filthy pigs, I mean our tranſitory goods, and diſquieting of our ſinfull and mortall bodies in this ſhort, uncertain, and miſerable life, then of a legion of Devils, ſeducing and driving us from hearing, reading, and beleeving Chriſt Gods eternall Sonne, and his holy Word, the power to ſave our ſoules, unto vanities, lies, and fables, and to this bewitching world.

Oh perillous abundance of goods, too much ſaturity of meats, wealth, and quietneſſe, which deſtroyed with ſo many ſoules, thoſe goodly Cities Sodome and Gomorrah. Jeroboam, ſo long as he was but a poore man, not yet advanced to his dignity, lived in the lawes of God without reprehenſion; but brought once to wealth and proſperous ſtate, he became a wicked and moſt ſhamefull Idolater. And what made the covetous young man ſo loath to follow Chriſt, when he was bidden to forſake but worldly wealth which he then enjoyed? Wo be unto theſe falſe illuſions of the world, baites of perdition, hooks of the Divell, which have ſo ſhamefully deceived and ſeduced full many from the right path unto the Lord, into the high-wayes of confuſion and perpetuall perdition.

1 Cor. 4.

We might now worthily (dear Chriſtians) lament and bewaile our heavy ſtate, miſerable condition, and ſorrowfull chance: yea, I ſay, we might well accuſe our ſelves, and with Job curſe theſe our troublous, wicked, and bloudy laſt dayes of this world, were it not that we both ſee and beleeve, and finde in Gods ſacred Book, that a remnant God hath in all ages reſerved, I mean the faithfull, as many as have been from the beginning of the world, exerciſed, whetted, and poliſhed with divers afflictions, troubles, and toſſings, caſt and daſhed againſt all perils and dangers, as the very droſſe and outcaſts of the earth, and yet will in no wiſe halt between God and Baal; for God verily abhorreth two men in one: he cannot away with them that are between both, but caſteth them away as a filthy vomit. Chriſt will not part ſpoile with his mortall enemy the Divel; he will have all, or loſe all: he will not permit the Divell to have the ſervice of the body, and he to ſtand contented with the heart and minde: but he will be glorified both in your bodies and in your ſpirits, which are his, as Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 6. For he hath made, bought all, and dearly paid for all, as Saint Peter ſaith; With his own immaculate body hath he clean diſcharged your bodies from ſin, death, and hell, and with his moſt precious bloud paid your ranſome and full price once for all and for ever.

Two men in one, God abhorreth.

1 Pet. 1.

Now what harme, I pray you, or what loſſe ſuſtaine you by this? Why are you, O vaine men, more affraid of Jeſus your gentle Saviour, and his Goſpel of ſalvation, then of a legion of cruell Divels, going about with falſe deluſions utterly to deſtroy you both bodies and ſoules? Think you to be more ſure then under your Captaine Chriſt? Do you promiſe your ſelves to be more quiet in Satans ſervice, then in Chriſts religion? Eſteem you more theſe tranſitory and pernicious pleaſures, then God and all his heavenly treaſures? Oh palpable darkneſſe, horrible madneſſe, and wilfull blindneſſe, without compariſon, too much to be ſuffered any longer. We ſee and will not ſee; we know and will not know; yea, we ſmart and will not feele, and that our conſcience well knoweth. Oh miſerable and brainleſſe ſoules, which would for fooliſh pleaſures and ſlippery wealth loſe the royall Kingdome and permanent joyes of God, with the everlaſting glory which he hath prepared for them that truly love him, and renounce the world. The children of the world live in pleaſure and wealth; and the Divell, who is their God and Prince of this world, keepeth their wealth which is proper unto them, and letteth them enjoy it. But let us which be of Chriſt ſeek and inquire for heavenly things, which by Gods promiſe and mercy in Chriſt ſhall be peculiar unto us. Let, I ſay, the Tranſitory pleaſures of this life not to be paſſed upon.

Cretians, Epicures, and ſuch other beaſtly Belials and carnall people, paſſe for things that be pleaſant for the body, and do appertain to this tranſitory life: Yet ſhall they once (as the Kingly Prophet ſaith) run about the City of God, to and fro howling like dogs, deſiring one ſcrap of the joyes of Gods elect, but all too late, as the rich Glutton did.

Luke 16.

Let us therefore paſſe for thoſe things that do pertain to the ſpirit, and be celeſtiall, We muſt be here (ſaith Paul) not as inhabiters, and home dwellers, but as ſtrangers: not as ſtrangers onely, but after the minde of Paul, as painfull ſouldiers appointed of our governour to fight againſt the governour of darkneſſe of this world, againſt ſpirituall craftineſſe in heavenly things. The time is come; we muſt to it; the judgement muſt begin firſt at the houſe of God. Began they not firſt with the green and ſappy tree? and what followed then on the dry branches? Jeremy ſpeaking in the perſon of God, ſaith; In the City wherein my Name is invocate, will I begin to puniſh: but as for you (meaning the wicked) ſhall you be as innocents, and not once toucht. Nay, the dregges of Gods wrath, the bottome of all ſorrows, are reſerved unto them in the end: but Gods houſhold ſhall drink the flower of the cup of his mercy. And therefore let us ſay with Ezechias; Play the men, and ſhrink not: Let us comfort our ſelves, for the Lord is with us our helper, and fighteth for us. Jerem.25.
2 Par.3.

Wherefore we ought not to be diſmayed, or diſcourage our ſelves, but rather to be of good comfort; not to be ſad, but merry; not ſorrowfull, but joyfull, in that God of his goodneſſe will vouchſafe to take us as his beloved children, to ſubdue our ſinfull luſts, our wretched fleſh and blood unto his glory, the promoting of his holy Word, and edifying of his Church. What if the earthly houſe of this our habitation (Paul meaning the body) be deſtroyed? We know aſſuredly we ſhall have a building of God not made with hands, but everlaſting in heaven, with ſuch joyes as faith taketh not, hope toucheth not, and charity apprehendeth not. They paſſe all deſires and wiſhes. Gotten they may be by Chriſt; eſteemed they cannot be. Wherefore the more affliction and perſecution the Word of God bringeth, the more felicity and greater joy abideth in heaven. But the worldly peace, idle eaſe, wealthy pleaſure, and this preſent and pleaſant tranſitory life and felicity, which the ungodly fooliſhly imagine to procure unto themſelves by perſecuting, and thruſting away the Goſpel, ſhall turn unto their own trouble, and at laſt unto horrible deſtructions and mutations of Realms and Countries, and after this life, if they repent not, unto their perpetuall infelicity, perdition, and damnation. For they had rather with Nabal and his temporall pleaſures deſcend to the devill, than with poor Chriſt and his bodily troubles, aſcend unto the Kingdom of God his Father. But an unwiſe man (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) comprehendeth them not, neither doth the fooliſh underſtand them: that is, theſe bloody perſecutors grow up and flouriſh like the flower and graſſe in the field. But unto this end do they ſo flouriſh, that they might be cut down and caſt into the fire for ever. For as Job ſaith, Their joy laſteth but the twinkling of an eye, and death ſhall lie gnawing upon them, as doth the flock upon the paſture; yea, the cruell worm, late repentance, (as S. Mark ſaith) ſhall lie gnawing, tormenting, and accuſing their wretched conſcience for evermore.

Mark 9.

Let us therefore (good Chriſtians) be conſtant in obeying God rather then men. For although they ſlay our ſinfull bodies (yea, rather our deadly enemies) for Gods verity; yet they cannot do it, but by Gods ſufferance and good will, to his praiſe and honour, and to our eternall joy and felicitie. For our bloud ſhed for the Goſpel ſhall preach it with more fruit, and greater furtherance, then did our mouthes, lives, and writings, as did the bloud of Abel, Steven, with many other more. What though they laugh Chriſt and his Word to ſcorn, which ſit in the chair of perverſe peſtilent ſcorners? To whom, as to the wiſe Gentiles of the world, the Goſpel of Chriſt is but fooliſhneſſe, as it was to the Jewes, a ſlander and a ſtumbling ſtone, whereat they now being faln; have provoked the wrath and vengeance of God upon them.

The bloud of Gods martyrs preacheth with more fruit then did their mouthes.

Theſe are the dayes of vengeance, ſaith Luke, that all things written may be fulfilled. And ſurely it ſhall be no leſſe then a huge ſtorm of evils that ſhall come upon us, becauſe that a long and curſed obſtinate maliciouſneſſe of us hath gone before, crying in the ears of the Lord God of hoſtes, who ſo many times and ſo many wayes have been provoked with the unſpeakable riches of his goodneſſe, his patience and long ſuffering, to amendment, and have nevertheleſſe contemned the ſame, and proceeded forward to worſe and worſe, provoking and ſtirring the preſence of Gods majeſtie unto anger.

Luke 2.
God long looketh for repentance, and we ware worſe and worſe.

Now therefore ſaith God by the mouth of his Prophet, I will come unto thee, and I will ſend my wrath upon thee: Upon thee (I ſay) O England, and puniſh thee according to thy wayes, and reward thee after all thine abominations. Thou haſt kindled the fire of Gods wrath, and haſt ſtirred up the coales. For thou waſt once lightned, and hadſt taſted of the heavenly gift, and waſt become partaker of the holy Ghoſt, and hadſt taſted of the good Word of God: Yea, it is yet in thy mouth, ſaith the Prophet. Alas, O England, thou kneweſt thy Lord and Maſters will, but didſt nothing thereafter; Thou muſt therefore, ſaith he, ſuffer many ſtrips, and many ſharp ſtrokes, and walk on the glittering and hote flame of thine own fire, and in the coales that thou haſt kindled. This cometh to thee from my hand, ſaith the Lord, namely, That thou ſhalt ſleep in ſorrow, yea, even ſo thou ſhalt. The plain truth telleth the tale, the immutable juſtice of the everliving God, and the ordinary courſe of his plagues from the beginning confirmeth the ſame. The joy of our heart, ſaith Jeremy, is gone, our glory is fallen away, our merry ſinging is turned into mourning, the garland of our head is fallen: Alas and weal away that ever we ſinned ſo ſore: Wo worth all abominations and wickedneſſe; wo worth cloaked hypocriſie; wo worth our carnall liberty; wo worth our moſt curſed Idolatry. For, becauſe of theſe things, ſaith the Lord, ye ſhall periſh with ſword, hunger, and peſtilence.

Wherefore, let all the wicked enemies of Chriſt, and all the unbeleevers, look to be tormented and vexed with all helliſh Furies, and clean without hope of Gods accounting day, which know not God in Chriſt to be their very righteouſneſſe, their life, their only ſalvation and alone Saviour, nor beleeve in him. They muſt, ſaith Saint John, needs abide and periſh with their ſinnes in death and in eternall damnation. But we be the children of Saints, as the elder Toby did anſwer, and look for another life, which God ſhall give to all them which change not their faith, nor ſhrink not from him. Rejoyce therefore ye Chriſtian afflicted brethren, for they cannot take our ſoules and bodies out of the hands of the Almighty, which be kept as in the boſome of our moſt ſweet and loving Father: and if we abide faſt in Chriſt, and turn not away like Weather-cockes, ſurely we ſhall live for ever. Chriſt affirmeth the ſame, ſaying; My ſheep hear my voyce, I know them, they hearken unto me, and to no ſtrangers, and I give them everlaſting life; for they ſhall not be loſt, and no man ſhall pluck them out of my hands: no, nor yet this flattering world with all his vain pleaſures, nor any tyrant with his great threats and ſtout brags can once move them out of the way of eternall life. What conſolation and comfort may we have more pleaſant and effectuous then this? God is on our ſide, and fighteth for us; he ſuffereth, he ſmarteth, and is afflicted with us. As the world can do nothing againſt his might, neither in taking away, or deminiſhing of his glory, nor putting him from his celeſtiall throne; ſo can it not harme nor hurt any one of his children without his good will. For we are members of his body, out of his fleſh and of his bones, and as dear to him as the apple of his eye.

Epheſ. 5.

Let us therefore with an earneſt faith ſet faſt hold and ſure feeling upon the promiſes of God in the Goſpel, and let us not be ſundred from the ſame by any temptation, tribulation, or perſecution. Let us conſider the verity of God to be invincible, inviolable, and immutable, promiſing and giving us his faithfull ſouldiers life eternall. It is he onely that hath deſerved it for us: it is his onely benefit, and of his onely meer mercy, and unto him onely muſt we render thankes. Let not therefore the vain fantaſies and dreams of men, the fooliſh gauds and toys of the world, nor the crafty deluſions of the Divell, drive and ſeparate us from our hope of the Crown of righteouſneſſe, that is laid up in ſtore for us againſt the laſt day. Oh that happy and merry laſt day, I mean to the faithfull, when Chriſt by his covenant ſhall grant and give unto them that overcome, and keep his words to the end, that they may aſcend and ſit in ſeate with him, as he hath aſcended and ſitteth on throne with his Father. The ſame body and ſoule that is now with Chriſt afflicted, ſhall then be with Chriſt glorified: now in the Butchers hands as ſheep appointed to dye, then ſitting at Gods table with Chriſt in his Kingdom, as Gods honourable and dear children; where we ſhall have for earthly poverty, heavenly riches; for hunger and thirſt, ſaturity of the pleaſant preſence of the glory of God; for ſorrowes, troubles, and cold irons, celeſtiall joyes, and the company of Angels; and for a bodily death, life eternall. Oh happy ſoules! Oh precious death and evermore bleſſed, right dear in the eyes of God; to you the ſpring of the Lord ſhall ever be flouriſhing. Then (as ſaith Iſaiah) the redeemed ſhall return and come again into Sion, praiſing the Lord, and eternall mercies ſhall be over their heads: they ſhall obtain mirth and ſolace; ſorrow and wo ſhall be utterly vanquiſhed, Yea, I am he, ſaith the Lord, that in all things giveth you everlaſting conſolation. To whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be glory and praiſe for ever, Amen.

Conſidering with my ſelf theſe perillous times, periſhing dayes, and the unconſtant and miſerable ſtate of man, the decay of our faith, the ſiniſter report and falſe ſlander of Gods moſt holy Word, theſe urgent cauſes in conſcience do conſtrain me to confeſſe and acknowledge my faith and meaning in Chriſts holy religion, as S. Peter teacheth me, ſaying, be ready alwayes to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, and that with meekneſſe and fear, having a good conſcience, that when they backbite you as evill doers, they may be aſhamed, foraſmuch as they have falſly accuſed your good converſation in Chriſt.

As touching my doctrine, for that little Talent that God hath given me, God I take to record, mine own conſcience and mine auditory knoweth, that I neither in doctrine nor manners willingly taught any other thing then I received of the holy Patriarcks, Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. For it were not onely ſin, but alſo the very part of a curſed miſcreant, to deny, bely, or betray the innocency of that heavenly doctrine, or to be aſhamed to confeſſe and ſtand to the defence of the ſame; ſeeing that Chriſt planted it with his moſt precious bloud, and all good men have more eſteemed the true and infallible Word of God, then all this tranſitory world, or their own mortall lives. And I beleeve this doctrine of the Patriarcks, Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, to be ſufficient and abſolutely perfect to inſtrnct and teach me, and all the holy Church of our duties towards God, the Magiſtrates, and our neighbours.

Mark 8.

Firſt, and principally I do aſſuredly beleeve, without any doubting, that there is one Diety or divine eſſence, and infinite ſubſtance; which is both called, and is indeed God everlaſting, unbodily, unpartible, unmeaſurable in power, wiſedome, and goodneſſe, the maker and preſerver of all things, as well viſible as inviſible; and yet there be three diſtinct perſons, all of one Godhead or divine being, and all of one power, coequall, conſubſtantiall, coeternall, the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt.

I beleeve in GOD the Father Almighty, &c. As touching God the Father of Heaven, I beleeve as much as holy Scripture teacheth me to beleeve. The Father is the firſt perſon in Trinity, firſt cauſe of our ſalvation, which hath bleſſed us with all manner of bleſsings in Heavenly things by Chriſt; which hath choſen us before the foundations of the world were laid, that we ſhould be holy and without blame before him; who hath predeſtinate us and ordained us to be his children of adoption, through Chriſt Jeſus; in him, as it is ſaid, we live, we move, and have our being; he nouriſheth, feedeth, and giveth meate to every creature.

I beleeve in the holy Ghoſt, coequall with God the Father and the Son, and proceeding from them both; by whoſe vertue, ſtrength, and operation, the true Catholike Church, which is the communion and ſociety of Saints, is guided in all truth and verity, and kept from all errours and falſe doctrine, the Divell, and all power of ſin. Which Church is ſanctified and hallowed with the precious bloud and Spirit of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; which hath alſo her ſigne and mark, that ſhe heareth and followeth the voice of her onely and true Paſtor Chriſt, and no ſtrangers. This Church alſo is the houſe of God, the congregation of the living God, the Pillar of truth, the lively body of Chriſt, a Church both in name and in deed.

Remiſsion of ſins only by the merits of Chriſt apprehended by faith.

I beleeve the remiſsion of ſinnes, by the onely means and merits of Chriſts death and paſſion; who is made unto us of God, that onely ſacrifice and oblation offered once for all and for ever, for all them that be ſanctified.

I beleeve the reſurrection of the body, whereby in the laſt day all men ſhall riſe again from death, the ſoules joyned again to the bodies, the good to everlaſting life, the wicked to everlaſting pain and puniſhment. And nothing may more certainly ſtabliſh and confirme our faith, that we ſhall riſe again immortall both in body and ſoul, then the reſurrection of Chriſt our Saviour, and firſt fruits of the dead. Now that Chriſt our head is riſen, we being his body and members muſt follow our head. Death, hell, and ſin cannot ſunder nor pluck us from him. For as the Sonne cannot be divided nor ſundred from the Father, nor the holy Ghoſt from them both, no more may we, being the faithfull members of Chriſt, he ſeparated from Chriſt. And for a confirmation of our reſurrection, Chriſt would be ſeen after his reſurrection in his moſt glorious body, his wounds being handled and felt, ſpeaking and teaching, eating and drinking, &c. We look (ſaith Saint Paul) for Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour. which ſhall transfigure our vile bodies, and conforme them to his glorious body by the ſame power and vertue, wherewith he is able to ſubdue all things: even like as the grain of Wheat ſown in the ground is firſt putrified and brought as into a thing of nought, yet after that it ſpringeth up freſhly with a more goodly colour, form, and beauty then it had before. The body is ſown in corruption, and riſeth in incorruption; it is ſown in diſhonour, and riſeth in honour.

Thus I verily know, and aſſuredly beleeve the reſurrection of our bodies, and to have life eternall by Chriſt, and for Chriſts ſake. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you (ſaith Chriſt) he that heareth my Word, and beleeveth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into damnation, but is eſcaped from death to life. It is Chriſt that died once for our ſinnes, and is riſen again, never more to die: it is he that ſwallowed up death, and hath caſt it under his feet for ever. What now can death do unto us? Verily nothing elſe, but for a little time ſeparate our precious ſoules from our wretched bodies, that divine ſubſtance from a maſſe of ſin, that eternall life from a body of death, and ſo ſend our ſoules out of this miſerable, wretched, and ſorrowfull life, cumbred with all calamities, unto that moſt bleſſed felicity and joyes eternall.

His confeſsion touching the Sacraments.

As concerning the holy and reverend Sacraments of Chriſts Church, which be in number two, the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord; I beleeve them to be as Saint Paul calleth them, confirmations or ſeales of Gods promiſes, which have added to them a promiſe of grace; and therefore they are called viſible ſignes of inviſible grace.

Sacraments are confirmations of Gods grace and acceptation.

The Sacrament of Baptiſme.

The Sacrament of Baptiſme is a mark of Chriſts Church, a ſeal and confirmation of our acception into the grace and favour of God for Chriſts ſake. For his innocency, his righteouſneſſe, his holineſſe, his juſtice, is ours, given us of God, and our ſins and unrighteouſneſſe, by his obedience and abaſing of himſelf to the death of the croſſe, are his, whereof Baptiſme is the ſigne, ſeal, and confirmation.

Baptiſme is alſo a ſigne of repentance, to teſtifie that we be borne to the waves of perils, and changes of life, to the intent that we ſhould die continually as long as we live from ſinne, and riſe again like new men unto righteouſneſſe, Rom. 6.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

The other Sacrament, which is the Supper and holy Maundy of our Saviour Chriſt, whereby the Church of Chriſt is known, I beleeve to be a remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, a ſeal and confirmation of his moſt precious body given unto death, even to the vile death of the Croſſe, wherewith we are redeemed and delivered from ſin, death, hell, and damnation. It is a viſible Word, becauſe it worketh the ſame thing in the eyes, which the Word worketh in the ears. For like as the Word is a mean to the ears, whereby the holy Ghoſt moveth the heart to beleeve, Rom. 10 ſo this Sacrament is a mean to the eyes, whereby the holy Ghoſt moveth the heart to beleeve: it preacheth peace between God and man; it exhorteth to mutuall love and all godly life, and teacheth to contemn the world for the life to come, when as Chriſt ſhall appear, which now is in Heaven, and no where elſe as concerning his humane body.

Gods Word to the ear, Gods Word to the eye.
Acts 1. 3.

Chriſts body preſent in the Sacrament to our ſpirituall eyes.

Yet do I beleeve aſſuredly, that his very body is preſent in his moſt holy Supper at the contemplation of our ſpirituall eyes, and ſo verily eaten with the mouth of our faith. For as ſoon as I hear theſe moſt comfortable and heavenly words ſpoken and pronounced by the mouth of the Miniſter; This is my body which is given for you: when I hear (I ſay) this heavenly harmony of Gods unfallible promiſes and truth: I look not upon, neither do I behold bread and wine; for I take and beleeve the words ſimply and plainly, even as Chriſt ſpake them. For hearing theſe words, my ſenſes be rapt and utterly excluded; for faith wholly taketh place, and not fleſh, nor the carnall imaginations of our groſſe, fleſhly, and unreverent eating after the manner of our bodily food, which profiteth nothing at all, as Chriſt witneſſeth, Joh. 6. but with a ſorrowfull and wounded conſcience, an hungry and thirſty ſoul, a pure and faithfull minde do fully embrace, behold, and feed, and look upon that moſt glorious body of Chriſt in Heaven, at the right hand of God the Father, very God and very man, which was crucified and ſlain, and his bloud ſhed for our ſinnes, there now making interceſsion, offering and giving his holy body for me, for my body, for my ranſome, for my full price and ſatisfaction, who is my Chriſt, and all that ever he hath; and by this ſpirituall and faithfull eating of this lively and heavenly bread, I feel the moſt ſweet ſap and taſte of the fruits, benefits, and unſpeakable joyes of Chriſts death and paſſion, fully digeſted into the bowels of my ſoul. For my minde is quieted from all worldly adverſities, turmoilings, and troubles, my conſcience is pacified from ſinne, death, hell, and damnation; my ſoul is full, and hath even enough, and will no more; for all things are but loſſe, vile dung, and droſſe, vain vanity, for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord and Saviour.

John 6.

Thus now is Chriſts fleſh my very meat indeed, and his bloud my very drink indeed, and I am become fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones. Now I live, yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: yea, I dwell in him, and he in me; for through faith in Chriſt, and for Chriſts ſake we are one, that is, of one conſent, minde, and fellowſhip with the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, Joh. 17. Thus am I aſſured and fully perſwaded, and on this rock have I builded by Gods grace my dwelling and reſting place for body and ſoul, life and death. And thus I commit my cauſe unto Chriſt the righteous and juſt Judge, who will another day judge theſe debates and controverſies; whom I humbly beſeech to caſt his tender and mercifull eyes upon the afflicted and ruinous Churches, and ſhortly to reduce them into a godly and perpetuall concord, Amen.

William Allen, Martyr.

William Allen, Martyr.

NExt after the ſuffering of Robert Samuel, about the beginning of September, was burned William Allen in Walſingham, labouring man, ſervant ſometime to John Houghton of Somerton. He being brought before the Biſhop, and asked the cauſe why he was impriſoned; anſwered, that he was put in priſon, becauſe he would not follow the Croſſe, ſaying, that he would never go on proceſſion.

Then being willed by the Biſhop to return again to the Catholike Church; he anſwered, that he would turn to the Catholike Church, but not to the Romiſh Church: and ſaid, that if he ſaw the King and Queen, and all other follow the Croſſe, or kneel down to the Croſſe, he would not. For the which, ſentence of condemnation was given againſt him the 12. of Auguſt, and he burned at Walſingham about the beginning of September, who declared ſuch conſtancy at his Martyrdome, and had ſuch credit with the Juſtices, by reaſon of his upright and well tried converſation among them, that he was ſuffered to go untied to his ſuffering, and there being faſtened with a chain, ſtood quietly without ſhrinking untill he died.

Roger Coo, Martyr.

Talk between Roger Coo and Hopton biſhop of Norwich.

ROger Coo brought before the Biſhop, firſt was asked why he was impriſoned.

Coo. At the Juſtices commandement.

Biſh. There was ſome cauſe why.

Coo. Here is my accuſer, let him declare.

And his accuſer ſaid, that he would not receive the Sacrament.

Biſh. Then the Biſhop ſaid, that he thought he had tranſgreſſed a law.

Coo. But Coo anſwered that there was no law to tranſgreſſe.

Biſh. The Biſhop then asked, what he ſaid to the law that then was?

Coo. He anſwered how he had been in priſon a long time, and knew it not.

No, ſaid his accuſer, nor will not. My Lord, aske him when he received the Sacrament.

Roger Coo to his accuſer.

Coo. When Coo heard him ſay ſo, he ſaid; I pray you my Lord let him ſit down and examine me himſelf.

Biſh. But the Biſhop would not hear that, but ſaid; Coo, why? will ye not receive.

The Biſhop of Rome.

Coo. He anſwered him, that the Biſhop of Rome had changed Gods ordinances, and given the people bread and wine in ſtead of the Goſpel, and the belief of the ſame.

Biſh. How prove you that?

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Coo. Our Saviour ſaid; My fleſh is meat in deed, and my bloud is drink in eeed. He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud abideth in me, and I in him, and the bread and wine doth not ſo.

Biſh. Well Coo, thou doſt ſlander our holy fathers. Did not Chriſt take bread, give thanks, and brake it, and ſaid; This is my body?

Coo. Yes, ſaid he, and ſo he went further with the text, ſaying, Which ſhall be given for you: do this in remembrance of me.

Biſh. You have ſaid the truth.

Coo. Then Coo replied further, and ſaid, Chriſt willed to do this in remembrance of him, and not to ſay this in remembrance of him, neither did the holy Ghoſt ſo leade the Apoſtles, but taught them to give thankes, and to break bread from houſe to houſe, and not to ſay as the Biſhop ſaid.

Biſh. How prove you that?

Coo. It is written in the ſecond of the Acts.

Then the Biſhops Chaplain ſaid it was true.

Biſh. The Biſhop asked him if he could his belief,

Coo. He anſwered yea, and ſo ſaid part of the Creed, and then after he ſaid, he beleeved more; for he beleeved the ten Commandements, that it was meet for all ſuch as look to be ſaved, to be obedient unto them.

Biſh. Is not the holy Church to be beleeved alſo?

Coo. Yes, if it be builded upon the Word of God.

Biſh. The Biſhop ſaid to Coo, that he had charge of his ſoul.

Coo. Have ye ſo my Lord? Then if ye go to the Divell for your ſins, where ſhall I become?

Biſh. Do you not beleeve as your father did? Was not he an honeſt man?

Daniel 9.

Coo. It is written, that after Chriſt hath ſuffered, There ſhall come a people with the Prince that ſhall deſtroy both City and Sanctuary. I pray you ſhew me whether this deſtruction was in my fathers time, or now?

Biſh. The B. not anſwering his queſtion, asked him whether he would not obey the Kings laws?

Coo. As farre as they agree with the Word of God, I will obey them.

(a) Well ſpoken and like the Popes Clerk.

Biſh. (a) Whether they agree with the Word of God or not, we be bound to obey them, if the King were an Infidell.

Coo. If Sydrach, Myſaac, and Abednago had ſo done, Nabuchodonoſor had not confeſſed the living God.

Biſh. Then the Biſhop told him, that theſe 22. yeers we have been governed with ſuch Kings.

Coo. My Lord, why were ye then dumbe, and did not ſpeak or bark?

Biſh. I durſt not for fear of death: and thus they ended.

But after this done, it was reported that I railed; wherefore I called it to memory, and wrote this my railing, that light ſhould not be taken for darkneſſe, nor ſin for holineſſe, and the Divell for God, who ought to be feared and honoured both now and ever, Amen.

Examination of Thomas Cob.

Who being brought and examined by Michael Dunnings the bloudy Chancellor of Norwich; firſt, whether he beléeved that Chriſt is really and ſubſtantially in the Sacrament of the Altar, anſwered, that the body of Chriſt, borne of the bleſſed Virgin, was in heaven, and otherwiſe (he ſaid) he would not anſwer, becauſe he had read it in the Scripture, that Chriſt did aſcend, and did never deſcend ſince; and therefore ſaid, that he had not learned in the Scripture, that Chriſt ſhould be in the Sacrament.

The reall preſence of Chriſt only in heaven.

Furthermore, being demanded whether he would obey the lawes of the Realm of England, made for the unity of faith, or no: he anſwered, that his body ſhould be at the King and Quéens commandment ſo farre as the law of God would ſuffer, &c. In fine, the ſaid Thomas Cob being condemned the ſame 12. day of Auguſt, with the other his Fellow-Martyrs, was burned in the Town of Thetford, An. 1555. Menſ. Septemb.

The Martyrdome of Thomas Cob at Thetford, An. 1555. Septem.

The Martyrdome of George Catmer, Robert Streater, Anthony Burward, George Brodbridge, and James Tutty.

NOw from Northfolk and Suffolk, to return again into the Dioceſſe of Canterbury, we have to intreat of five worthy Martyrs, whoſe bloud in the ſame yéer and moneth of September was ſpilt for the true teſtimony of Chriſt, and his Goſpels cauſe. The names of the which five Martyrs were theſe:

George Catmer, of Hith.
Robert Streater, of Hith.
Anthony Burward, of Calete.
George Brodbridge, of Bromfield.
James Tutty, of Brenchley.

Examinations of theſe five Martyrs.

Who upon the third day of Auguſt were brought before Thornton the foreſaid Biſhop of Dover and his complices, and there were both joyntly and ſeverally examined upon certain Articles, touching the Sacrament of their Altar, auricular confeſſion, and other ſuch like.

Examination and anſwers of Catmer.

To the which the ſaid Catmer (being firſt examined) made anſwer on this wiſe; Chriſt (quoth he) ſitteth in Heaven on the right hand of God the Father; and therefore I do not beléeve him to be in the Sacrament of the Altar: but he is in the worthy receiver ſpiritually, and the Sacrament, as you uſe it, is an abominable Idoll.

Examination and anſwers of Streater.

Next unto him was called forth Robert Streater, who being alſo asked, whether he did beléeve the reall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaid, that he did not ſo beléeve; for you do maintain Hereſie and Idolatry (quoth he) in that ye teach to worſhip a falſe God in the Sacrament, encloſed in a box. It is you that are the malignant Church; for in your Church there are twenty things uſed againſt the Law of God.

Burward examined.

The like objection was articulate alſo againſt Anthony Burward, who alſo ſaid, that their ſacrament was made an Idoll.

Brodbridge examined.

After him was George Brodbridge demanded what he ſaid to thoſe Articles. Who anſwered, that he would not be confeſſed of a Prieſt, becauſe he could not forgive his own ſins. And further ſaid, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the reall Body of our Saviour Chriſt, but bread given in the remembrance of him. Moreover, as for your holy bread, your holy water, and your Maſſe, I do (quoth he) utterly defie them.

James Tutty examined, with his anſwer to the ſame.

And laſt of all, did alſo James Tutty make and confirm their ſaid former anſwers.

And therefore they were all five condemned to be burned as hereticks, and ſo were they all, in one fire at Canterbury aforeſaid, about the ſixth day of September then next following.

Thomas Hayward and Iohn Goreway, Martyrs.

Thomas Hayward, John Goreway, Martyrs.

ALthough the rage and vehemency of this terrible perſecution in Quéen Maries dayes did chiefly light in London, Eſſex, Northfolk, Suffolk, and Kent, as hath béen partly already declared; yet notwithſtanding, beſides the ſame, we finde but few parts of this Realm frée from this fatall ſtorme, but ſome good Martyrs or other there ſhed their bloud. And firſt to begin with the Dioceſſe of Liechfield and Coventry, there we finde theſe two to be condemned and alſo burned about the midſt of the ſaid moneth of September at the Town of Liechfield: whoſe names were Thomas Hayward and John Goreway.

The perſecution and ſtory of Maſter Robert Glover Gentleman, and of Iohn Glover his brother, in the Dioceſſe of Liechfield.

The ſtory of Maſter Robert Glover, Martyr, and of M. John Glover his brother.

UNto this preſent time and moneth of September, pertaineth alſo the memorable Martyrdome of Maſter Robert Glover Gentleman, in the Dioceſſe of Liechfield and Coventry. Of whoſe apprehenſion and troubles, becauſe I cannot well intreate, but I muſt alſo intermixe ſome mention of his brother John Glover, forſomuch as this privy Commiſſion was chiefly ſent down for the ſaid John, and not for Robert Glover, (albeit it pleaſed Almighty God, that John eſcaped, and Robert in his ſtead was apprehended) I thought therefore in one ſtory to comprehend them both, in deſcribing ſome part of their vertuous inſtitution and order of life: and firſt to begin with John the eldeſt brother. Who being a Gentleman, and heir to his Father, dwelling in the town of Mancetor, was endued with fair poſſeſsions of worldly goods, but yet much more plentifully enriched with Gods heavenly grace and inward vertues. Which grace of God ſo working in him, he with his two other brethren, Robert and William, not onely received and embraced the happy light of Chriſts holy Goſpel, but alſo moſt zealouſly profeſſed, and no leſſe diligently in their living and converſation followed the ſame; much unlike unto our table-Goſpellers now adayes, Virtutem qui verba putant, ut lucum ligna, as Horace ſaith.

John Glover, Rob. Glover, Wil. Glover, three godly brethren, and zealous profeſſors of the Goſpel.

And as touching this foreſaid John Glover (who through his manifold afflictions ſeemed to have a deeper taſte and contemplation of ſpirituall things, joyned with mortification from all worldly cares more then the other had) although ſufficient relation be made before in our firſt edition to be ſeen; yet concerning his ſpirituall conflicts, and the Lords gracious working in him, becauſe the conſideration thereof is both worthy of memory, and the example may work experience peradventure to the comfort of the godly, it ſhall not be hurtfull to rehearſe ſome part of the ſame. So it pleaſed God to lay his heavy hand of inward afflictions and grievous paſſions upon this man, that though he ſuffered not the paines of the outward fire, as his brother and other Martyrs did; yet if we conſider what inwardly in ſpirit and minde this man felt and ſuffered, and that of ſo long time, he may well be counted with his brother Robert for a Martyr, being no leſſe deſirous with him of the ſame Martyrdome; yea, and in compariſon may ſeem to be Chronicled for a double Martyr.

Touching further mention of M. John Glover, read in the firſt edition.

The inward conflicts and exerciſes of M. John Glover.

John Glover a double Martyr.

For as the ſaid Robert was ſpeedily diſpatched with the ſharp and extreme torments of the fire in a ſhort time; ſo this no leſſe bleſſed Saint of God, what and how much more grievous pangs, what ſorrowfull torments, what boiling heats of the fire of hell in his ſpirit inwardly he felt and ſuſtained, no ſpeech outwardly is able to expreſſe. Being young, I remember I was once or twice with him, who partly by his talk I perceived, and partly by mine own eyes ſaw to be ſo worne and conſumed by the ſpace of five yeers, that neither almoſt any brooking of meat, quietneſſe of ſleep, pleaſure of life, yea and almoſt no kinde of ſenſes was left in him. And doubtleſſe I have greatly wondred oftentimes at the marvellous works and operation of Chriſt ſhewed upon him, who unleſſe he had relieved betimes his poor wretched ſervant ſo far worne, with ſome opportune conſolation now and then betwixt, it could not poſſible be, that he ſhould have ſuſtained ſo intolerable pains and torments. And yet the occaſion thereof was not of ſo great moment and weight. But this we ſee common among holy and bleſſed men, how the more devout and godly they are, having the fear of God before their eies, the more ſuſpicion and miſtruſt they have of themſelves; whereby it cometh to paſſe, that often they are ſo terrified and perplexed with ſmall matters, as though they were huge mountains; whereas contrary others there be whom moſt haynous and very ſore crimes indeed do nothing touch or ſtirre at all.

A heavy croſſe of inward torments laid upon John Glover.

The better conſcience the ſooner diſquieted.

The occaſion of this was, that he being firſt called by the light of the holy Spirit to the knowledge of the Goſpel, and having received a wonderous ſweet feeling of Chriſts heavenly Kingdome, his minde, after that falling a little to ſome cogitation of his former affaires belonging to his vocation, began by and by to miſdoubt himſelf upon the occaſion of theſe words written in the ſeventh to the Hebrewes: For it cannot be that they which were once illumined, and have taſted the heavenly gift, &c. Upon the conſideration of which words he fully perſwaded himſelf, that he had ſinned verily againſt the holy Ghoſt: even ſo much, that if he had been in the deepeſt pit of hell, he could almoſt have deſpaired no more of his ſalvation. Here readily every good man may judge of himſelf, what terrors, boilings, and convulſions turmoiled in the mean time in his wofull breaſt: although it be hard for any man to judge the grievouſneſſe thereof, unleſſe he which hath experience of the like.

The firſt occaſion of John Glovers inward affliction.

Heb. 7.

In comparing now the torments of all Martyrs with his paines, I pray you what pains, puniſhment, and flames would not he willingly have ſuffered, to have had ſome refocillation and time of refreſhing? Who in ſuch intolerable griefs of minde, although he neither had, nor could have any joy of his meat, yet was he compelled to eat againſt his appetite, to the end to deferre the time of his damnation, ſo long as he might, thinking with himſelf no leſſe, but that he muſt needs be thrown into hell, the breath being once out of the body. Albeit Chriſt he thought did pitie his caſe, and was ſorry for him; yet he could not (as he imagined) help, becauſe of the verity of the word, which ſaid, It cannot be, &c.

No grief like to the grief of conſcience.

Heb. 7.

And this I rehearſe of him, not ſo much to open his wounds and ſorrows, as for that by his example all we with him may glorifie the Sonne of God, who ſuffereth none to be tempted above his ſtrength, but ſo tempereth and ſeaſoneth the aſperity of evils, that what ſeemeth to us intolerable, not onely he doth allienate the ſame, that we may bear it, but alſo turneth it to our further commodity then we can think. Which well appeared in this good ſervant of God, in no man more. Who albeit (as we have ſaid) he ſuffered many yeers ſo ſharpe temptations and ſtrong buffetings of Satan; yet the Lord, who graciouſly preſerved him all the while, not onely at laſt did rid him out of all diſcomfort, but alſo framed him thereby to ſuch mortification of life, as the like lightly hath not been ſeen, in ſuch ſort as he being like one placed in Heaven already, and dead in this world, both in word and meditation led a life altogether celeſtiall, abhorring in his minde all prophane doings. Neither was his talk any thing diſcrepant from the fruits of his life, throwing out never any idle, vile, or vaine language. The moſt part of his lands he diſtributed to the uſe of his brethren, and committed the reſt to the guiding of his ſervants and officers, whereby the more quietly he might give himſelf to his godly ſtudy, as to a continuall Sabbath reſt. This was about the later end of King Henries reign, and continued a great part of the time of King Edward the ſixth.

Chriſt a mercifull helper in temptations and hard diſtreſſes.

John Glover by the grace of Chriſt reſtored again to perfect tranquility.

After this, in the perſecuting dayes of Queen Mary, as ſoon as the Biſhop of Coventry heard the fame of this John aforeſaid, being ſo ardent and zealous in the Goſpel of Chriſt, effſoones he wrote his letter to the Maior and Officers of Coventry to apprehend him as ſoon as might be. But it chanced otherwiſe by Gods holy providence, diſpoſing all things after his own ſecret pleaſure, who ſeeing his old and truſty zealouſly loved the confeſſion of thy word, ſo ever thought I my ſelf to be moſt unworthy to be partaker of the affliction for the ſame.

M. Glover counſelled to put in bonds. Rob. Glover refuſeth to enter into bonds.

Not long after, came unto me M. W. Braſbrige, M. C. Phinees, M. N. Hopkins, travelling with me to be diſmiſſed upon bonds. To whom my anſwer was (to my remembrance) after this ſort: for as much as the Maſters have impriſoned me, having nothing to burthen me withall, if I ſhould enter into bonds, I ſhould in ſo doing accuſe my ſelf; and ſeeing they have no matter to lay to my charge, they may as well let me paſſe without bonds, as with bonds.

Worldly perſwaſions not received.

Secondarily, if I ſhall enter bonds, covenant, and promiſe to appear, I ſhall do nothing but excuſe, colour and cloke their wickedneſſe, and indanger my ſelf nevertheleſſe, being bound by my promiſe to appear. They alleadged many worldly perſwaſions to me to avoid the preſent perill, and alſo how to avoid the forfeiture, if I brake promiſe. I ſaid unto them, I had caſt my penny-worth by Gods help. They undertook alſo make the bond eaſie.

M. Glover again viſited with Gods holy comfort.

And when they were ſomewhat importune, I ſaid to Maſter Hopkins, That liberty of conſcience was a precious thing, and took as it were a pauſe, lifting up my heart to God earneſtly for his aid and help, that I might do the thing that might pleaſe him. And ſo when they had let their ſuit fall, my heart (me thought) was wonderfully comforted. Maſter Dudley communed with me in like manner; whom I anſwered in effect as I did before.

M. Glover reaſoning with himſelf.

Afterward debating the matter with my ſelf, theſe conſiderations came into my head; I have from time to time with good conſcience (God I take to record) moved all ſuch as I had conference withall to be no dalliers in Gods matters, but to ſhew themſelves, after ſo great a light and knowledge, hearty, earneſt, conſtant, and ſtable in ſo manifeſt a truth, and not to give place one jot contrary to the ſame. Now thought I, if I ſhall withdraw my ſelf, and make any ſhifts to pull my own neck out of the coller, I ſhall give great offence to my weak brethren in Chriſt, and advantage to the enemies to ſlander Gods Word. It will be ſaid, he hath been a great boldner of others to be earneſt and fervent, to fear no worldly perils or dangers, but he himſelf will give no ſuch example.

M. Glover taketh courage, all fear and danger ſet aſide.

Wherefore I though it my bounden duty both to God and man, being (as it were) by the great goodneſſe of God marvellouſly called and appointed hereunto, to ſet aſide all fear, perils and dangers, all worldly reſpects and conſiderations, and like as I had heretofore, according to the meaſure of my ſmall gift within the compaſſe of my vocation, and calling, from the bottome of my heart unfainedly moved, exhorted and perſwaded all that profeſſe Gods Word, manfully to perſiſt in the defence of the ſame, not with ſword and violence, but with ſuffering and loſſe of life, rather than to defile themſelves again with the whoriſh abomination of the Romiſh Antichriſt; ſo the hour being come, with my fact and example to ratifie, confirm, and proteſt the ſame to the hearts of all true believers: and to this end by the mighty aſſiſtance of Gods holy Spirit) I reſolved my ſelf, with much peace of conſcience, willingly to ſuſtain whatſoever the Romiſh Antichriſt ſhould do againſt me, and the rather becauſe I underſtood the Biſhops coming to be at hand, and conſidered that poor mens conſciences ſhould be then ſharply aſſaulted. So remained I priſoner in Coventry by the ſpace of 10 or 11 dayes, being never called to my anſwer of the Maſters, contrary to the Laws of the Realm, they having neither ſtatute, law, proclamation, letter, warrant, nor commandement for my apprehenſion. They would have laid all the matter upon the Sumner. Who being examined, denied it before their faces (as one of my friends told me) ſaying, that he had no commandment concerning me, but for my elder brother. God lay not their extreme doings againſt me to their charge at the great day.

M. Glover reſolved in himſelf to abide the uttermoſt for the Goſpels cauſe.

The Papiſts proceed with M. Glover againſt the laws of the Realm.

Commandement given to the Sumner againſt John Glover, and not againſt R. Glover.

This Biſhops name was Doctor Banes.

M. Warren of Coventry perſecutor of Rob. Glover.

The ſecond day after the Biſhops coming to Coventry, M. Warren came to the Guildhall, and willed the chief Jaylor to carry me to the Biſhop. I laid to Maſter Warrens charge the cruell ſeeking of my death; and when he would have excuſed himſelf, I told him he could not wipe his hands ſo; he was as guilty of my blood before God, as though he had murdered me with his own hands.

A Leſſon for all perſecutors.

And ſo he departed from me, ſaying, I needed not to fear if I would be of his belief. God open his eyes if it be his will, and give him grace to beleeve this, which he and all of his inclination ſhall finde (I fear) too true for their parts; that is, that all they which cruelly, maliciouſly, and ſpitefully perſecute, moleſt, and afflict the members of Chriſt for their conſcience ſake, and for the true teſtimony of Chriſts Word, and cauſe them moſt unjuſtly to be ſlain and murthered, without ſpeedy repentance, ſhall dwell with the devill and his angels, in the fierce lake everlaſtingly, where they ſhall wiſh and deſire, cry and call, but in vain (as their right companion Epulo did) to be refreſhed of them, whom in this world they contemned, deſpiſed, diſdained, as ſlaves, miſers, and wretches.

Luke 16

When I came before the Biſhop in one Dentons houſe, he began with this proteſtation, that he was my Biſhop for lack of a better, and willed me to ſubmit my ſelf.

R. Glover brought before Banes, Biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry. M. R. Glover M. of Art in Cambridge. Rob. Glover charged for not coming to the Church.

I ſaid to him, I am not come to accuſe my ſelf; what have you to lay to my charge?

He asked me whether I was learned? I anſwered ſmally learned.

Maſter Chancellor ſtanding by, ſaid, I was a Maſter of Art.

Then my Lord laid to my charge my not coming to the Church.

Here I might have dallied with him, and put him to his proofs, foraſmuch as I had not been for a long ſeaſon in his Dioceſſe, neither was any of the Citizens able to prove any ſuch matter againſt me. Notwithſtanding I anſwered him through Gods mercifull help, that I neither had nor would come at their Church as long as their Maſſe was uſed there, to ſave (if I had them) five hundred lives. I willed him to ſhew me one jot or tittle in the Scriptures for the proof and defence of the Maſſe.

He anſwered, he came to teach, and not to be taught.

I was content (I told him) to learn of him, ſo farre as he was able to teach me by the Word of God.

Biſh. Who ſhall judge the Word?

Glover. Chriſt was content that the people ſhould judge his doctrine by ſearching the Scriptures, and ſo was Paul; me thinketh ye ſhould claim no further priviledge nor preeminence then they had.

The Biſhop refuſeth to be judged by the Primitive Church.

Thus ſpake Robert Glover, offering him further, that he was content the Primitive Church next to the Apoſtles time, ſhould judge betwixt the Biſhop and him. But he refuſed alſo to be judged by that. Then he ſaid he was his Biſhop, and therefore he muſt beleeve him.

Glover. If you ſay black is white, my Lord, (quoth Glover) muſt I alſo ſay as you ſay, and beleeve the ſame becauſe you ſay it is ſo? Maſter Chancellor here noted mee to bee arrogant, becauſe I would not give place to my Biſhop.

Glover. If you will be beléeved becauſe you be a Biſhop, why find you fault with the people that beléeved Maſter Latimer, Maſter Ridley, Maſter Hooper, and the reſidue of them that were Biſhops?

Biſh. Becauſe they were heretikes.

Glover. And may not you erre (quoth I) as well as they? I looked for learning at my Lords hand to perſwade me, and he oppreſſed me only with his authority. He ſaid I diſſented from the Church, and asked me where my Church was before King Edwards time.

Where was the Church before King Edwards time? The B. could not ſhew where Gods Church was in Iſrael, nor where any Prophet was in all Iuda in Helias time.

I deſired him to ſhew me where their Church was in Helias time, and what outward ſhew it had in Chriſts time.

Biſh. Helias complaint was onely of the tenne Tribes that fell from Davids houſe, whom he called heretikes.

Glover. You be not able to ſhew any Prophets that the other two Tribes had at that ſame time.

My Lord making no anſwer to that, Maſter Rogers, one of the Maſters of the City cometh in the mean ſeaſon, taking upon him as though he would anſwer to the Text. But my Lord forthwith commanded me to be committed to ſome Tower if they had any beſides the common gaole, ſaying, He would at the end of his viſitation of his Dioceſſe, weed out ſuch wolves. M. Rogers willed him to content himſelf for that night, till they had taken further order for me. Even where it pleaſeth you, ſaid I to my Lord, I am content; and ſo I was returned at that time to the common Gaole againe from whence I came.

On the Friday morning being the next day after, I had warning by one of the priſoners to prepare my ſelfe to ride with my fellow priſoners the ſame day to Lichfield, there to be beſtowed at the Biſhops pleaſure. Which tydings at the firſt ſomething diſcouraged me, fearing leſt I ſhould by the means of my great ſickneſſe, through extreme handling (which I looked for) have died in the Priſon before I ſhould come to my anſwer. But I rebuked immediately with Gods word this infidelitie in my ſelfe, and by the ſame corrected mine own miſtruſt and fantaſie after this manner. What make I of God? is not his power as great in Lichfield, as in Coventry? Doth not his promiſe extend as well to Lichfield as to Coventry? Was he not with Abacuck, Daniell, Miſaach, and Ieremy, in their moſt dangerous impriſonments? He knoweth what things we have need of. He hath numbred all the hairs of our head. The Sparrow falleth not on the ground, without our heavenly fathers will: much more will he care for us if we be not faithleſſe, whom he hath made worthy to be witneſſes of his truth. So long as we put our truſt in him, we ſhall never be deſtitute of his help, neither in priſon, neither in ſickneſſe, nor in health, neither in life, nor in death, neither before Kings, nor before Biſhops; not the Divell himſelf, much leſſe one of his miniſters ſhall be able to prevaile againſt us. With ſuch like meditations I waxed chéerfull, of good conſolation and comfort: ſo that hearing one ſay that they could not provide horſes enow for us, I ſayd, let them carry us in a dung-cart for lack of horſes, if they liſt; I am well content for my part.

R. Glover ſomewhat diſcouraged at the firſt hearing that he ſhould be removed from Coventry to Lichfield.

R. Glover comforted againe with the meditation of the Scripture, and Gods promiſe.

M. Glover waxeth chéerefull again and bold.

R. Glover requireth to make his anſwer at Coventry.

Notwithſtanding, at the requeſt of my friends, I wrote to Maſter Maior, and his brethren, briefly requiring them that I might make anſwer here to ſuch things as ſhould be layd to my charge: The contents of which letter were theſe.

A letter of Maſter Robert Glover, to the Maior of Coventry, and his Brethren.

The contents of M. Glovers letter ſent to the Maior of Coventry and his brethren.

I Beſéech you to underſtand, that it is not unknown as well to the Kéeper of the Goale, as to the inhabitants about me where I dwell, that I am a man ſubject to very great ſickneſſe, and have béen by the ſpace of ſeven years and more, ſo that it is not like that I ſhall be removed without perill and danger of life. And becauſe I was here committed to ward by your appointment, I would gladly here anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be layd to my charge. If I may obtain this of you, I have cauſe thankfully to reknowledge your indifferencie; if otherwiſe, I pray God it be not layd to your charge at the great day, where every man ſhall have juſt judgement without reſpect of perſon.

Your priſoner in the Lord, alwaies
mindfull of you in my poore prayer,
Robert Glover.

But I received no anſwers of my letters to nor fro. I conjectured, that when the Biſhop and the Chancellor had ſéen them, it moved them the rather to have me away, being more deſirous (as I ſuppoſe) to have had me diſpatched privily in Priſon, then to come openly to my anſwer. The manner of intreating and uſing me at my firſt coming to priſon, did partly declare the ſame.

R. Glover and his fellow priſoners removed from Coventry to Lichfield in the face of the open market.

Certain Sergeants and Conſtables of Coventry, being appointed to have the conveying of us to Lichfield, to be delivered there to one Iephcot the Chancellors man ſent from Coventry with us for the ſame purpoſe, we were commanded to horſebacke about xj. or xij. of the clocke on Friday, being Market day, that we might be the more gazed and wondred at: and to kindle the peoples hearts more againſt us, they did proclaim a letter concerning a Proclamation made for calling in, and diſanulling of all ſuch bookes as truly expound and interpret the Scriptures. We came to Lichfield about 4. of the clocke at night, and had leave to repoſe our ſelves for our Supper time. We Inned at the ſigne of the Swan, where we were entertained friendly and gently.

Iephcot the Chancellors ſervant.

After Supper Iephcot repaired to us, whom we intreated that upon ſureties we might reſt our ſelves that night, being unprovided of any thing to help our ſelves withall in the priſon at that preſent. He was content at the firſt (as he ſéemed) but afterwards, whether it was by perſwaſion, or rather (as it ſéemed to me) he did but of policie put off the time till he had gathered a multitude to ſtare and wonder upon us, and alſo that we ſhould provide nothing to eaſe our ſelves withall, he revoked his promiſe, and ſo by conſent we were had to the priſon, the multitude wondring at us. I willed Iephcot before to execute his office with mercy, telling him that they ſhould have judgement without mercy, that ſhewed no mercy. And this mercy I found at his hand.

Papiſts keep no promiſe.

He put me into a Priſon that ſame night, where I continued till I was condemned, in a place next to the dungeon, narrow of roomes, ſtrong of building, and very cold, with ſmall light, and there allowed he me a bundle of ſtraw, in ſtead of my bed, without chair, forme, or any other thing elſe to eaſe my ſelfe withall. God of his mercy gave me great patience through prayer that night, ſo that if it had béen his pleaſure, I could have béen contented to have ended my life: But Iephcot and one Perſey the Biſhops man, which afterwards was my continuall Kéeper for the moſt part, came to me in the morning, to whom I ſaid, This is

Iephcot and Perſey cruell and ſtraight againſt Maſter Glover.

ſervant ſo many yeers with ſo extreme and many torments broken and dried up, would in no wiſe heap too many ſorrows upon one poor ſilly wretch: neither would commit him to the flames of fire, who had been already baked and ſcorched with the ſharp fires of inward affliction, and had ſuſtained ſo many burning darts, and conflicts of Sathan ſo many yeers: God therefore of his Divine providence, thinking it too much that one man ſhould be ſo much overcharged with ſo many plagues and torments, did graciouſly provide, that Robert his brother being both ſtronger of body, and alſo better furniſhed with helps of learning to anſwer the adverſaries (being a Maſter of Art in Cambridge) ſhould ſuſtain that conflict, and even ſo it came to paſſe, as ye ſhall hear.

The Major of Coventry ſendeth a privy watch-word to John Glover.

For as ſoon as the Major of Coventry had received the Biſhops letters for the apprehending of M. John Glover, he ſent forthwith a privy watch-word to the ſaid John to convey away himſelf: Who with his brother William was not ſo ſoon departed out of his houſe, but that yet in the ſight of the Sheriff and other, the ſearchers came and ruſhed in to take him, according to the Biſhops commandement.

M. Robert Glover apprehended lying ſick in his chamber.

But when the ſaid John could in no place be found, one of the Officers going into an upper chamber, found there Robert the other brother lying on his bed, and ſick of a long diſeaſe; who was by him incontinent brought before the Sheriff. Which Sheriff notwithſtanding favouring Robert and his cauſe, would indeed fain have diſmiſſed him, and wrought what means he could, ſaying, that he was not the man for whom they were ſent: Yet nevertheleſſe being feared with the ſtout words of the Officer, contending with him to have him ſtayed till the Biſhops coming, he was conſtrained to carry him away againſt his will, and ſo laid him faſt while the Biſhop came. And thus much by the way of preamble firſt concerning the worthy remembrance of Maſter John Glover.

Now to enter the matter which principally we have in hand, that is, to conſider the ſtory and Martyrdom of M. Robert Glover, forſomuch as the whole narration of the ſame by his own record and teſtimony in writing was ſent unto his wife, concerning the manner of his ordering and handling: it ſhall therefore ſeem beſt for the more credit of the matter, to exhibite the ſaid his own Letter, the words and contents whereof here enſue as followeth.

A Letter of M. Robert Glover to his wife, containing the whole diſcourſe and deſcription of his troubles ſuſtained in priſon, and of his ſundry conflicts between the Biſhop and him about Religion.

To my entirely beloved wife, Mary Glover.

A letter of M. Robert Glover to his wife, certifying his troubles ſince his firſt apprehenſion.

The peace of conſcience which paſſeth all underſtanding, the ſweet conſolation, comfort, ſtrength, and boldneſſe of the holy Ghoſt be continually increaſed in our heart, through a fervent, earneſt, and ſtedfaſt faith in our moſt dear and onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

I thank you heartily (moſt loving wife) for your letters ſent unto me in my impriſonment. I read them with tears more than once or twice, with tears (I ſay) for joy and gladneſſe, that God had wrought in you ſo mercifull a work; firſt, an unfained repentance; ſecondly, an humble and hearty reconciliation, thirdly, a willing ſubmiſſion and obedience to the will of God in all things. Which when I read in your letters, and judged them to proceed from the bottome of your heart; I could not but be thankfull to God, rejoycing with tears for you, and theſe his great mercies poured upon you.

Theſe your letters, and the hearing of your moſt godly proceedings and conſtant doings from time to time, have much relieved and comforted mee at all times, and ſhall bee a goodly teſtimony with you at the great day, againſt many worldly and dainty dames, which ſet more by their owne pleaſure and pelfe in this world, than by Gods glory, little regarding (as it appeareth) the everlaſting health of their owne ſoules or others. My prayer ſhall be whileſt I am in this world, that God, which of his great mercy hath begun his good work in you, will finiſh it to the glory of his Name, and by the mighty power and inſpiration of his holy Spirit ſo ſtrengthen, ſtabliſh, and confirme you in all his wayes to the end, that we may together ſhew forth his praiſes in the world to come, to our unſpeakeable conſolation everlaſtingly, Amen.

1 Tim. 2.

Ghoſtly leſſons and precepts of Chriſtian life.

So long as God ſhall lend you continuance in this miſerable world, above all things give your ſelf continually to prayer, lifting up, as Saint Paul ſaith, clean or pure hands without anger, wrath, or doubting, forgiving (as he ſaith alſo) if you have any thing againſt any man, as Chriſt forgiveth us. And that we may be the better willing to forgive, it is good often to call to remembrance the multitude and greatneſſe of our ſinnes, which Chriſt daily and hourely pardoneth and forgiveth us, and then we ſhall, as Saint Peter affirmeth, be ready to cover and hide the offences of our brethren, be they never ſo many. And becauſe Gods Word teacheth us, not onely the true manner of praying, but alſo what we ought to do or not to do in the whole diſcourſe and practice of this life, what pleaſeth or diſpleaſeth God, and that, as Chriſt ſaith, The Word of God that he hath ſpoken ſhall judge in the laſt day: Let your prayer be to this end ſpecially, that God of his great mercy would open and reveal more and more daily to your heart the true ſenſe, knowledge, and underſtanding of his moſt holy Word, and give you grace in your living, to expreſſe the fruits thereof.

1 Pet. 4.

Iohn 12.

And foraſmuch as it is, as the holy Ghoſt calleth it, the word of affliction, that is, it is ſeldome without hatred, perſecution, perill, danger of loſſe of life and goods, and whatſoever ſeemeth pleaſant in this world, as experience teacheth you in this time: call upon God continually for his aſſiſtance alwayes, as Chriſt teacheth, caſting your accounts what it is like to coſt you, endeavouring your ſelf, through the help of the holy Ghoſt by continuance of prayer, to lay your foundation ſo ſure, that no ſtorme or tempeſt ſhall be able to overthrow or caſt it down; remembring alwayes (as Chriſt ſaith) Lots wife, that is, to beware of looking back to that thing that diſpleaſeth God. And becauſe nothing diſpleaſeth God ſo much as Idolatry, that is falſe worſhipping of God, otherwiſe then his Word commandeth: Look not back (I ſay) nor turn not your face to their idolatrous and blaſphemous maſſing, manifeſtly againſt the word, practice, and example of Chriſt; as it is moſt manifeſt to all that have any taſte of the true underſtanding of Gods Word, that there remaineth nothing in the Church of England at this preſent, profitable or edifying to the Church and Congregation of the Lord, all things being done in an unknown tongue, contrary to the expreſſe commandement of the holy Ghoſt.

They object that they be the Church, and therefore they muſt be beleeved. My anſwer was, the Church of God knoweth and reknowledgeth no other head but Jeſus Chriſt the Sonne of God, whom ye have refuſed, and choſen the man of ſin,

The firſt note proving the Church of the Papiſts not t be the true Church.

the ſon of perdition, enemie to Chriſt, the divels deputie and lievetenant, the Pope.

2 Note. John 10.

Chriſt Church heareth, teacheth, and is ruled by his word, as he ſaith, My ſheep hear my voice. If you abide in me, and my word in you, you be my diſciples. Their Church repelleth Gods word, and forceth all men to follow their traditions.

3 Note. Acts 7.

Chriſts Church dare not adde or diminiſh, alter or change his bleſſed Teſtament; but they be not afraid to take away all that Chriſt inſtituted, and go a whoring (as the Scripture ſaith) with their own inventions, Et lætari ſuper operibus manuum ſuarum, i. To glory and rejoyce in the works of their own hands.

4 Note to know the Church.

The Church of Chriſt is, hath been, and ſhall be in all ages under the croſſe, perſecuted, moleſted, and afflicted, the world ever hating them, becauſe they be not of the world. But theſe perſecute, murther, ſlay, and kill ſuch as profeſſe the true doctrine of Chriſt, be they in learning, living, converſation and other vertues never ſo excellent.

5 Note. John 5.

Chriſt and his Church reſerved the triall of their doctrine to the word of God, and gave the people leave to judge thereof by the ſame word, Search the Scriptures: But this Church taketh away the word from the people, and ſuffereth neither learned nor unlearned, to examine or prove their doctrine by the word of God.

6 Note to know the Church.

The true Church of God laboureth by all means to reſiſt and withſtand the luſts, deſires, and motions of the world, the fleſh, and the divell: theſe for the moſt part give themſelves to all voluptuouſneſſe, and ſecretly commit ſuch things, which (as S. Paul ſaith) it is ſhame to ſpeak of.

Epheſ. 5. Compare the proceedings and doings of the Popes church, with the true members of Chriſts Church, and you ſhall ſee what they are. The Church of the valiant Papiſts compared to Nemrod, and why? The Popes church ſtandeth all in lying and murdering.

By theſe and ſuch like manifeſt probations they do declare themſelves to be none of the Church of Chriſt, but rather of the Synagogue of Sathan. It ſhall be good for you oftentimes to conferre and compare their proceedings and doings with the practiſe of thoſe whom the word of God doth teach to have been true members of the Church of God, and it ſhall work in you both knowledge, erudition, and boldneſſe to withſtand with ſuffering their doings. I likened them therefore to Nemrod, whom the Scripture calleth a mightie hunter, or a ſtout champion, telling them that that which they could not have by the word, they would have by the ſword, and be the Church whether men will or no, and called them with good conſcience, as Chriſt called their forefathers, the children of the divell; and as their father the divell is a lyar and a murtherer, ſo their Kingdome and Church (as they call it) ſtandeth by lying and murthering.

Have no fellowſhip with them therefore, my dear wife, nor with their doctrine and traditions, leſt you be partaker of their ſinnes, for whom is reſerved a heavie damnation, without ſpeedie repentance. Beware of ſuch as ſhall advertiſe you ſomething to bear with the world as they do, for a ſeaſon. There is no dallying with Gods matters, It is a fearfull thing (as Saint Paul ſaith) to fall into the hands of God. Remember the Prophet Helias, Why halt ye on both ſides? Remember what Chriſt ſaith, He that putteth his hands to the plough, and looketh back, is not worthie of me. And ſeeing God hath hitherto allowed you as a good ſouldier in the foreward, play not the coward, neither draw back to the rereward. Saint John numbreth among them that ſhall dwell in the fierie lake, ſuch as be fearfull in Gods cauſe. Set before your eyes alwaies the examples of ſuch as have behaved themſelves boldly in Gods cauſe, as Stephen, Peter, Paul, Daniel, the three children, the widows ſons, and in your dayes, Anne Askew, Laurence Saunders, John Bradford, with many other faithfull witneſſes of Chriſt. Be afraid in nothing (ſayth Saint Paul) of the adverſaries of Chriſts doctrine, the which is to them the ſigne of perdition, but to you of everlaſting ſalvation. Chriſt commandeth the ſame, ſaying, Feare them not. Let us not follow the example of him which asked time firſt to take leave of his friends. If we ſo do, we ſhall find few of them that will encourage us to go forward in our buſineſſe, pleaſe it God never ſo much. We read not that James, and John, Andrew, and Simon, when they were called, put off the time till they had known their fathers and friends pleaſure. But the Scripture ſayth, They forſook all, and by and by followed Chriſt. Chriſt likened the Kingdome of God to a precious pearle, the which whoſoever findeth, ſelleth all that he hath to buy it. Yea, whoſoever hath but a little taſte or glimmering how precious a treaſure the Kingdome of heaven is, will gladly forgo both life and goods for the obtaining of it. But the moſt part now adayes be like to Eſops cock, which when he had found a precious ſtone, wiſhed rather to have found a barley corn. So ignorant be they how precious a jewell the Word of God is, that they chooſe rather the things of this world, which being compared to it, be leſſe in value than a barley corne.

3 Reg. 18. Luke 9.

The Popes church under pain of damnation is to be avoyded. Apoc. 2.

Phil. 1. He exhorteth to be bold in Chriſt.

Matth. 13.

Worldly Chriſtians reſembled to Eſops cocke.

Worldly allurements and motions of drawing back, by Gods grace withſtanded.

If I would have given place to worldly reaſons, theſe might have moved me: Firſt, the foregoing of you and my children; the conſideration of the ſtate of my children, being yet tender of age, and young, apt and inclinable to vertue, and learning, and ſo having the more need of my aſſiſtance, being not altogether deſtitute of gifts to help them withall; poſſeſſions above the common ſort of men; becauſe I was never called to be a Preacher, or Miniſter; and (becauſe of my ſickneſſe) fear of death in impriſonment before I ſhould come to my anſwer, and ſo my death to be unprofitable.

Experience of the Lords aſſiſtance in confirming his ſervants.

But theſe and ſuch like, I thank my heavenly father (which of his infinite mercy inſpired me with his holy Ghoſt, for his Sons ſake my onely Saviour and Redeemer) prevailed not in me: but when I had by the wonderfull permiſſion of God, fallen into their hands, at the firſt ſight of the Sheriffe, nature a little abaſhed; yet ere ever I came to the priſon, by the working of GOD, and through his goodneſſe, fear departed. I ſayd to the Sheriffe at his coming unto me; What matter have you Maſter Sheriffe to charge me withall? He anſwered, You ſhall know when you come before the Maſters; and ſo taking me with him, I looked to have been brought before the Maſters, and to have heard what they could have burdened me withall: but contrary to my expectation, I was committed forthwith to the goale, not being called to my anſwer, little juſtice being ſhewed therein. But the leſſe juſtice a man findeth at their hands, the more conſolation in conſcience ſhall he find from God; for whoſoever is of the world, the world will love him.

M. Glover committed to the goale before any cauſe was declared. Gods mighty conſolation upon Rob. Glover in priſon.

M. Glover weepeth for joy in priſon.

After I came into priſon, and had repoſed my ſelf there a while, I wept for joy and gladneſſe, my belly full, muſing much of the great mercies of God, and (as it were) ſaying to my ſelf after this ſort; O Lord, who am I, on whom thou ſhouldeſt beſtow this thy great mercy, to be numbred among the Saints that ſuffer for the Goſpel ſake? And ſo beholding and conſidering on the one ſide my imperfection, unableneſſe, ſinfull miſerie, and unworthineſſe, and on the other ſide the greatneſſe of Gods mercie, to be called to ſo high promotion, I was as it were amazed and overcome for a while with joy and gladneſſe, concluding thus with my ſelf in my heart; O Lord, thou ſheweſt power in weakneſſe, wiſedome in fooliſhneſſe, mercy in ſinfulneſſe; who ſhall let thee to chooſe where and whom thou wilt? As I have zealouſly loved the confeſſion of thy word, ſo ever thought I my ſelf to be moſt unworthy to be partaker of the affliction for the ſame.

M. Glover counſelled to put in bonds. Rob. Glover refuſeth to enter into bonds.

Not long after, came unto me M. W. Braſbrige, M. C. Phinees, M. N. Hopkins, travelling with me to be diſmiſſed upon bonds. To whom my anſwer was (to my remembrance) after this ſort: for as much as the Maſters have impriſoned me, having nothing to burthen me withall, if I ſhould enter into bonds, I ſhould in ſo doing accuſe my ſelf; and ſeeing they have no matter to lay to my charge, they may as well let me paſſe without bonds, as with bonds.

Worldly perſwaſions not received.

Secondarily, if I ſhall enter bonds, covenant, and promiſe to appear, I ſhall do nothing but excuſe, colour and cloke their wickedneſſe, and indanger my ſelf nevertheleſſe, being bound by my promiſe to appear. They alleadged many worldly perſwaſions to me to avoid the preſent peril, and alſo how to avoid the forfeiture, if I brake promiſe. I ſaid unto them, I had caſt my penny-worth by Gods help. They undertook alſo make the bond eaſie.

M. Glover again viſited with Gods holy comfort.

And when they were ſomewhat importune, I ſaid to Maſter Hopkins, That liberty of conſcience was a precious thing, and took as it were a pauſe, lifting up my heart to God earneſtly for his aid and help, that I might do the thing that might pleaſe him. And ſo when they had let their ſuit fall, my heart (me thought) was wonderfully comforted. Maſter Dudley communed with me in like manner; whom I anſwered in effect as I did before.

M. Glover reaſoning with himſelf.

Afterward debating the matter with my ſelf, theſe conſiderations came into my head; I have from time to time with good conſcience (God I take to record) moved all ſuch as I had conference withall to be no dalliers in Gods matters, but to ſhew themſelves, after ſo great a light and knowledge, hearty, earneſt, conſtant, and ſtable in ſo manifeſt a truth, and not to give place one jot contrary to the ſame. Now thought I, if I ſhall withdraw my ſelf, and make any ſhifts to pull my own neck out of the coller, I ſhall give great offence to my weak brethren in Chriſt, and advantage to the enemies to ſlander Gods Word. It will be ſaid, he hath been a great boldner of others to be earneſt and fervent, to fear no worldly perils or dangers, but he himſelf will give no ſuch example.

M. Glover taketh courage, all fear and danger ſet aſide.

M. Glover reſolved in himſelf to abide the uttermoſt for the Goſpels cauſe.

Wherefore I though it my bounden duty both to God and man, being (as it were) by the great goodneſſe of God marvellouſly called and appointed hereunto, to ſet aſide all fear, perils and dangers, all worldly reſpects and conſiderations, and like as I had heretofore, according to the meaſure of my ſmall gift within the compaſſe of my vocation, and calling, from the bottome of my heart unfainedly moved, exhorted and perſwaded all that profeſſe Gods Word, manfully to perſiſt in the defence of the ſame, not with ſword and violence, but with ſuffering and loſſe of life, rather than to defile themſelves again with the whoriſh abomination of the Romiſh Antichriſt; ſo the hour being come, with my fact and example to ratifie, confirm, and proteſt the ſame to the hearts of all true believers: and to this end by the mighty aſſiſtance of Gods holy Spirit) I reſolved my ſelf, with much peace of conſcience, willingly to ſuſtain whatſoever the Romiſh Antichriſt ſhould do againſt me, and the rather becauſe I underſtood the Biſhops coming to be at hand, and conſidered that poor mens conſciences ſhould be then ſharply aſſaulted. So remained I priſoner in Coventry by the ſpace of 10 or 11 dayes, being never called to my anſwer of the Maſters, contrary to the Laws of the Realm, they having neither ſtatute, law, proclamation, letter, warrant, nor commandement for my apprehenſion. They would have laid all the matter upon the Sumner. Who being examined, denied it before their faces (as one of my friends told me) ſaying, that he had no commandment concerning me, but for my elder brother. God lay not their extreme doings againſt me to their charge at the great day.

The Papiſts proceed with M. Glover againſt the laws of the Realm.

Commandement given to the Sumner againſt John Glover, and not againſt R. Glover.

This Biſhops name was Doctor Banes.

M. Warren of Coventry perſecutor of Rob. Glover.

The ſecond day after the Biſhops coming to Coventry, M. Warren came to the Guildhall, and willed the chief Jaylor to carry me to the Biſhop. I laid to Maſter Warrens charge the cruell ſeeking of my death; and when he would have excuſed himſelf, I told him he could not wipe his hands ſo; he was as guilty of my blood before God, as though he had murdered me with his own hands.

A Leſſon for all perſecutors.

And ſo he departed from me, ſaying, I needed not to fear if I would be of his belief. God open his eyes if it be his will, and give him grace to believe this, which he and all of his inclination ſhall finde (I fear) too true for their parts; that is, that all they which cruelly, maliciouſly, and ſpitefully perſecute, moleſt, and afflict the members of Chriſt for their conſcience ſake, and for the true teſtimony of Chriſts Word, and cauſe them moſt unjuſtly to be ſlain and murthered, without ſpeedy repentance, ſhall dwell with the devill and his angels, in the fierce lake everlaſtingly, where they ſhall wiſh and deſire, cry and call, but in vain (as their right companion Epulo did) to be refreſhed of them, whom in this world they contemned, deſpiſed, diſdained, as ſlaves, miſers, and wretches.

Luke 1

When I came before the Biſhop in one Dentons houſe, he began with this proteſtation, that he was my Biſhop for lack of a better, and willed me to ſubmit my ſelf.

R. Glover brought before Banes Biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry. M. R. Glover M. of Art in Cambridge. Rob. Glover charged for not coming to the Church.

I ſaid to him, I am not come to accuſe my ſelf; what have you to lay to my charge?

He asked me whether I was learned? I anſwered ſmally learned.

Maſter Chancellor ſtanding by, ſaid, I was a Maſter of Art.

Then my Lord laid to my charge my not coming to the Church.

Here I might have dallied with him, and put him to his proofs, foraſmuch as I had not been for a long ſeaſon in his Dioceſſe, neither was any of the Citizens able to prove any ſuch matter againſt me. Notwithſtanding I anſwered him through Gods mercifull help, that I neither had nor would come at their Church as long as their Maſſe was uſed there, to ſave (if I had them) five hundred lives. I willed him to ſhew me one jot or tittle in the Scriptures for the proof and defence of the Maſſe.

He anſwered, he came to teach, and not to be taught.

I was content (I told him) to learn of him, ſo farre as he was able to teach me by the Word of God.

Biſh. Who ſhall judge the Word?

Glover. Chriſt was content that the people ſhould judge his doctrine by ſearching the Scriptures, and ſo was Paul; me thinketh ye ſhould claim no further priviledge nor preeminence then they had.

The Biſhop refuſeth to be judged by the Primitive Church.

Thus ſpake Robert Glover, offering him further, that he was content the Primitive Church next to the Apoſtles time, ſhould judge betwixt the Biſhop and him. But he refuſed alſo to be judged by that. Then he ſaid he was his Biſhop, and therefore he muſt believe him.

Glover. If you ſay black is white, my Lord, (quoth Glover) muſt I alſo ſay as you ſay, and believe the ſame becauſe you ſay it is ſo? Maſter Chancellor here noted mee to bee arrogant, becauſe I would not give place to my Biſhop.

Glover. If you will be beleeved becauſe you be a Biſhop, why find you fault with the people that beleeved Maſter Latimer, Maſter Ridley, Maſter Hooper, and the reſidue of them that were Biſhops?

Biſh. Becauſe they were heretikes.

Glover. And may not you erre (quoth I) as well as they? I looked for learning at my Lords hand to perſwade me, and he oppreſſed me only with his authority. He ſaid I diſſented from the Church, and asked me where my Church was before King Edwards time.

Where was the Church before King Edwards time? The B. could not ſhew where Gods Church was in Iſrael, nor where any Prophet was in all Juda in Helias time.

I deſired him to ſhew me where their Church was in Helias time, and what outward ſhew it had in Chriſts time.

Biſh. Helias complaint was onely of the tenne Tribes that fell from Davids houſe, whom he called heretikes.

Glover. You be not able to ſhew any Prophets that the other two Tribes had at that ſame time.

My Lord making no anſwer to that, Maſter Rogers, one of the Maſters of the City cometh in the mean ſeaſon, taking upon him as though he would anſwer to the Text. But my Lord forthwith commanded me to be committed to ſome Tower if they had any beſides the common gaole, ſaying, He would at the end of his viſitation of his Dioceſſe, weed out ſuch wolves. M. Rogers willed him to content himſelf for that night, till they had taken further order for me. Even where it pleaſeth you, ſaid I to my Lord, I am content; and ſo I was returned at that time to the common Gaole againe from whence I came.

On the Friday morning being the next dey after, I had warning by one of the priſoners to prepare my ſelfe to ride with my fellow priſoners the ſame day to Lichfield, there to be beſtowed at the Biſhops pleaſure. Which tydings at the firſt ſomething diſcouraged me, fearing leſt I ſhould by the means of my great ſickneſſe, through extreme handling (which I looked for) have died in the Priſon before I ſhould come to my anſwer. But I rebuked immediately with Gods word this infidelitie in my ſelfe, and by the ſame corrected mine own miſtruſt and fantaſie after this manner. What make I of God? is not his power as great in Lichfield, as in Coventry? Doth not his promiſe extend as well to Lichfield as to Coventry? Was he not with Abacuck, Daniell, Miſaach, and Jeremy, in their moſt dangerous impriſonments? He knoweth what things we have need of. He hath numbred all the hairs of our head. The Sparrow falleth not on the ground, without our heavenly fathers will: much more will he care for us if we be not faithleſſe, whom he hath made worthy to be witneſſes of his truth. So long as we put our truſt in him, we ſhall never be deſtitute of his help, neither in priſon, neither in ſickneſſe, nor in health, neither in life, nor in death, neither before Kings, nor before Biſhops; not the Divell himſelf, much leſſe one of his miniſters ſhall be able to prevaile againſt us.

R. Glover ſomewhat diſcouraged at the firſt hearing that he ſhould be removed from Coventry to Lichfield.

R. Glover comforted againe with the meditation of the Scripture, and Gods promiſe.

With ſuch like meditations I waxed cheerfull, of good conſolation and comfort: ſo that hearing one ſay that they could not provide horſes enow for us, I ſayd, let them carry us in a dung-cart for lack of horſes, if they liſt; I am well content for my part.

M. Glover wareth cheerefull again and bold.

R. Glover requireth to make his anſwer at Coventry.

Notwithſtanding, at the requeſt of my friends, I wrote to Maſter Maior, and his brethren, briefly requiring them that I might make anſwer here to ſuch things as ſhould be layd to my charge: The contents of which letter were theſe.

A letter of Maſter Robert Glover, to the Maior of Coventry, and his Brethren.

I Beſeech you to underſtand, that it is not unknown as well to the Keeper of the Goale, as to the inhabitants about me where I dwell, that I am a man ſubject to very great ſickneſſe, and have been by the ſpace of ſeven years and more, ſo that it is not like that I ſhall be removed without perill and danger of life. And becauſe I was here committed to ward by your appointment, I would gladly here anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be layd to my charge. If I may obtain this of you, I have cauſe thankfully to reknowledge your indifferencie; if otherwiſe, I pray God it be not layd to your charge at the great day, where every man ſhall have juſt judgement without reſpect of perſon.

Your priſoner in the Lord, alwaies
mindfull of you in my poore prayer,
Robert Glover.

The contents of M. Glovers letter ſent to the Maior of Coventry and his brethren.

But I received no anſwers of my letters to nor fro. I conjectured, that when the Biſhop and the Chancellor had ſeen them, it moved them the rather to have me away, being more deſirous (as I ſuppoſe) to have had me diſpatched privily in Priſon, then to come openly to my anſwer. The manner of intreating and uſing me at my firſt coming to priſon, did partly declare the ſame.

Certain Sergeants and Conſtables of Coventry, being appointed to have the conveying of us to Lichfield, to be delivered there to one Jephcot the Chancellors man ſent from Coventry with us for the ſame purpoſe, we were commanded to horſebacke about xj. or xij. of the clocke on Friday, being Market day, that we might be the more gazed and wondred at: and to kindle the peoples hearts more againſt us, they did proclaim a letter concerning a Proclamation made for calling in, and diſanulling of all ſuch bookes as truly expound and interpret the Scriptures. We came to Lichfield about 4. of the clocke at night, and had leave to repoſe our ſelves for our Supper time. We Inned at the ſigne of the Swan, where we were entertained friendly and gently.

R. Glover and his fellow priſoners removed from Coventry to Lichfield in the face of the open market.

After Supper Jephcot repaired to us, whom we intreated that upon ſureties we might reſt our ſelves that night, being unprovided of any thing to help our ſelves withall in the priſon at that preſent. He was content at the firſt (as he ſeemed) but afterwards, whether it was by perſwaſion, or rather (as it ſeemed to me) he did but of policie put off the time till he had gathered a multitude to ſtare and wonder upon us, and alſo that we ſhould provide nothing to eaſe our ſelves withall, he revoked his promiſe, and ſo by conſent we were had to the priſon, the multitude wondring at us. I willed Jephcot before to execute his office with mercy, telling him that they ſhould have judgement without mercy, that ſhewed no mercy, And this mercy I found at his hand.

Jephcot the Chancellors ſervant.

Papiſts keep no promiſe.

He put me into a Priſon that ſame night, where I continued till I was condemned, in a place next to the dungeon, narrow of roomes, ſtrong of building, and very cold, with ſmall light, and there allowed he me a bundle of ſtraw, in ſtead of my bed, without chair, forme, or any other thing elſe to eaſe my ſelfe withall. God of his mercy gave me great patience through prayer that night, ſo that if it had been his pleaſure, I could have been contented to have ended my life: But Jephcot and one Perſey the Biſhops man, which afterwards was my continuall Keeper for the moſt part, came to me in the morning, to whom I ſaid, This is a great extremity, God ſend us patience, and no more.

Jephcot and Perſey cruell and ſtraight againſt Maſter Glover.

Then they were content that I ſhould have a bed of mine own procurement. But I was allowed no help, neither night nor day, nor company of any man, notwithſtanding my great ſickneſſe, nor yet paper, pen nor ink, or books, ſaving my new Teſtament in Latine, and a prayer book which I privily ſtole in.

Talk between M. Glover, and the Chancellor in priſon.

Within two dayes after, Maſter Chancellor, and one Temſey a Prebendary there, came to me into my priſon. Maſter Chancellor exhorted me to conform my ſelf to my Lord and to the Church. He wiſhed to my ſoul no more hurt than to his own, belike becauſe I had laid to his charge at Coventry the ſeeking of my blood unjuſtly and wrongfully.

Now thus the ſecond time I anſwered Maſter Chancellor to his exhortation, that I refuſed not to be ruled by that Church that was content to be ordered and governed by the Word of God.

Chan. He asked me how I knew the Word of God, but by the Church.

“ The Church giveth witneſſe which be the true books and writings of the Apoſtles: as alſo the old Synagogue of the Jews doth witneſſe which be the true Books of the holy Prophets: yet it followeth not thereby, that the Jews have authority over the Scriptures.

Glover. “ The Church ſheweth which is the Word of God, therefore the Church is above the Word of God. This is no good reaſon in learning, ſaid I to Maſter Chancellor,. For it is like unto this; John ſhewed the people who was Chriſt; Ergo, John was above Chriſt. Or elſe, I have a man that knoweth not the King, and I tell him who was the King: am I therefore above the King?

Maſter Chancellor ſaid, he came not to reaſon with me, and ſo departed. So remained I without any further conference of any man by the ſpace of eight dayes, and till the Biſhops coming: In the which time I gave my ſelf continually to prayer, and meditation of the mercifull promiſes of God, made unto all, without exception of perſon, that call upon the Name of his dear Sonne Jeſus Chriſt. I found in my ſelf daily amendment of health of body, increaſe of peace in conſcience, and many conſolations from God, by the help of his holy Spirit, and ſometimes as it were a taſte and glimmering of the life to come; all for his onely Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake: to him be all praiſe for ever and ever.

The comforts and ſweet feeling of M. Glover in priſon.

M. Glover aſſaulted by the enemy in priſon concerning unworthineſſe.

The enemy ceaſed not many times ſundry wayes to aſſault me, oftentimes objecting to my conſcience mine own unworthineſſe, through the greatneſſe of the benefit to be counted among the number of them that ſhould ſuffer for Chriſt, for his Goſpels ſake. Againſt him I replied with the Word of God on this ſort, What were all thoſe whom God had choſen from the beginning, to be his witneſſes, and to carry his Name before the world? Were they not men, as Paul and Barnabes ſaid, Similiter obnoxii peccato, as well ſubject to wickedneſſe, ſinne, and imperfections, as other men be? Even ſuch were Noah, Abraham, David and all the reſt. Quis prior dedit illi, as Paul ſaith, Who gave firſt unto him? And alſo ſpeaking to every man, What haſt thou that thou receivedſt not? Likewiſe John, All have received of his fulneſſe; they were no bringers of any goodneſſe to God, but altogether receivers. They choſe not God firſt, but he choſe them. They loved not God firſt, but he loved them firſt. Yea, he both loved and choſe them when they were his enemies, full of ſinne and corruption, and void of all goodneſſe. Eſt Dominus omnium, dives in omnes & ſuper omnes invocantes eum. He is and will be ſtill the ſame God, as rich in mercy, as mighty, as able, as ready, as willing to forgive ſinnes without reſpect of perſon, to the worlds end, of all them that call upon him. Propè eſt Dominus omnibus invocantibus eum: God is neer, he is at hand, he is with all, with all (I ſay) and refuſeth none, excepteth none that faithfully in true repentance call upon him, in what hour, what place, or what time ſoever it be. It is no arrogancy nor preſumption in any man, to burthen God (as it were) with his promiſe, and of duty to claim and challenge his aid, help, and aſſiſtance in all our perils, dangers and diſtreſſe, calling upon him not in the confidence of our own godlineſſe, but in the truſt of his promiſes made in Chriſt, in whom, and by whom, and for whoſe ſake, whoſoever boldly approacheth to the mercy ſeat of the father, is ſure to receive whatſoever is expedient, or neceſſary, either for body or ſoul, in more ample wiſe and large manner, than he can well wiſh, or dare deſire. His Word cannot lye, Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will hear thee, and thou ſhalt praiſe me.

R. Glover replieth againſt the tentation of the enemy in that he is a ſinner.

I anſwered the enemy alſo on this manner; I am a ſinner, and therefore unworthy to be a witneſſe of this truth. What then? Muſt I deny his Word, becauſe I am not worthy to profeſſe it? What bring I to paſſe in ſo doing, but adde ſinne to ſinne? What is greater ſinne than to deny the truth of Chriſts Goſpel? as Chriſt himſelf beareth witneſſe, He that is aſhamed of me or of my words, of him I will be alſo aſhamed before my Father and all his Angels. I might alſo by like reaſon forbear to do any of Gods Commandements.

When I am provoked to pray, the enemy may ſay to me, I am not worthy to pray, therefore I ſhall not pray: and ſo in like manner of all the commandements, I ſhall not forbear ſwearing, ſtealing, murdering, becauſe I am not worthy to do any Commandement of God. Theſe be the deluſions of the Devil, and Sathans ſuggeſtions, which muſt be overcome by continuance of prayer, and with the Word of God applied, according to the meaſure of every mans gift, againſt all aſſaults of the devill.

M. Glover brought againe before the Biſhop.

At the Biſhops firſt coming to Lichfield, after mine impriſonment, I was called into a bychamber next to my priſon, to my Lord. Before whom, when I came and ſaw none but his officers, chaplains and ſervants, except it were an old Prieſt, I was partly amazed, and lifted up my heart to God for his mercifull help and aſſiſtance.

Reaſoning between M. Glover and the Biſhop.

My Lord asked me how I liked my impriſonment, I gave him no anſwer touching that queſtion. He proceeded to perſwade me to be a member of his Church, which had continued ſo many yeers. As for our church (as he called it) it was not known he ſaid, but lately in King Edwards time.

I profeſſe my ſelf to be a member of that Church (ſaid I) that is builded “ upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt being the head corner ſtone; and ſo alleadged the place of S. Paul to the Epheſ. And this Church hath been from the beginning (ſaid I) though it bear no glorious ſhew before the world, being ever, for the moſt part under the croſſe and affliction, contemned, deſpiſed and perſecuted; My Lord on the other ſide, contended that they were the Church.

Glover. So cried all the Clergie againſt the Prophets of Jeruſalem, ſaying; Templum Domini, Templum Domini, The Church, the Church, &c.

Biſhop. And alwayes when I was about to ſpeak any thing, my Lord cried, Hold thy peace I command thee by the vertue of obedience to hold thy peace, calling me a proud arrogant heretick.

“ The true Church is alwayes builded upon the doctrine of the Apoſtles: which though it appear not alwayes alike in outward ſight, the fault is in the time, not in the Church. Times did alter, and with the times the outward face of the Church may alter, ſometimes appearing more, ſometimes leſſe, ſometimes very little, ſometimes nothing at all, according as the perſecution is. Nevertheleſſe, the tenth of the Church abideth always one. Neither doth it goe by number of men, but by ſoundnes of truth. Many agreeing in one make an unity: but the verity of the word maketh the Church, whether it be in few, or in many.

Glover. I willed my Lord to burthen me with ſome ſpecialties, and then to convince me with ſome Scriptures and good learning.

Then my Lord began to move certain queſtions. I refuſed to anſwer him in corners, requiring that I might make my anſwer openly. He ſaid I ſhould anſwer him there. I ſtood with him upon that point untill he ſaid I ſhould to priſon again, and there have neither meat nor drink till I had anſwered him.

Then I lifted up my heart to God, that I might ſtand and agree with the Doctrine of his moſt holy Word.

The firſt queſtion.

Biſh. The firſt queſtion was this, How many Sacraments Chriſt inſtituted to be uſed in the Church?

Glover. The Sacrament of Baptiſme, ſaid I, and the Sacrament that he inſtituted at his laſt Supper.

Biſh. No more, ſaid he?

Power by Gods Word in the Miniſtery, to remit ſin.

Glover. To all thoſe that declare a true and unfained repentance, a ſure hope, truſt and confidence in the death of Chriſt, to ſuch Miniſters (I grant) that they have authority to pronounce by the power of Gods Word, the remiſſion of ſins.

Here interrupting me, he would needs bear me in hand that I called this a Sacrament. I would not greatly contend with him in that point, becauſe that matter was of no great weight or importance; although he in ſo doing did me wrong, for I called it not a ſacrament.

2 Queſtion.

He asked me further, whether I allowed their confeſſion?

I anſwered, no.

3 Queſtion.

Biſh. Then he would know my minde what I thought of the preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament?

Glover. I anſwered, that their Maſſe was neither ſacrifice nor ſacrament, becauſe (ſaid I) you have taken away the true inſtitution, which when you reſtore again, I will tell you my judgement concerning Chriſts Body in the Sacrament.

And thus much did this worthy Martyr of God leave behinde him by his own hand in writing concerning the manner of his uſing and intreating in priſon, and alſo of his conflicts had with the Biſhop and his Chancellor. Moe examinations he had (no doubt) with the Biſhop in the publike Conſiſtory, when he was brought forth to be condemned, which alſo he would have left unto us, if either length of life, or leaſure of time, or haſte of execution had permitted him to finiſh that he intended; but by reaſon of the writ of his burning being come down from London, lack of time neither did ſerve him ſo to do, neither yet could I get the Records of his laſt examinations, whereſoever they are become.

Onely this which I could learn by relation of one Auſten Bernher, a Miniſter, and a familiar friend of his, concerning the going to his death; I can report, that the ſaid bleſſed ſervant of the Lord, Maſter Robert Glover, after he was condemned by the Biſhop, and was now at a point to be delivered out of this world, it ſo happened, that two or three dayes before, his heart being lumpiſh and deſolate of all ſpirituall conſolation, felt in himſelf no aptneſſe nor willingneſſe, but rather a heavineſſe and dulneſſe of ſpirit, full of much diſcomfort to bear the bitter croſſe of Martyrdom ready to be laid upon him.

R. Glover deſtitute for a time of the Lords comfort.

Whereupon fearing in himſelf leſt the Lord had utterly withdrawn his wonted favour from him, made his moan to this Aſten his friend above remembred, ſignifying unto him how earneſtly he had prayed day and night unto the Lord, and yet could receive no motion nor ſenſe of any comfort from him.

Unto whom the ſaid Auſten anſwering again, willed and deſired him patiently to wait the Lords pleaſure, and howſoever his preſent feeling was, yet ſeeing his cauſe was juſt and true, he exhorted him conſtantly to ſtick to the ſame, and to play the man, nothing miſdoubting but the Lord in his good time would viſit him, and ſatiſfie his deſire with plenty of conſolation, whereof (he ſaid) he was right certain and ſure, and therefore deſired him whenſoever any ſuch feeling of Gods heavenly mercies ſhould begin to touch his heart, that then he ſhould ſhew ſome ſignification thereof, whereby he might witneſſe with him the ſame, and ſo departed from him.

The Lord for a time may withdraw his comforts, but at length he viſiteth his ſervants.

The next day when the time came of his Martyrdom, as he was going to the place, and was now come to the ſight of the ſtake, although all the night before praying for ſtrength and courage he could feel none, ſuddenly he was ſo mightily repleniſhed with Gods holy comfort and heavenly joyes, that he cried out, clapping his hands to Auſten, and ſaying in theſe words, Auſten, he is come, he is come, &c. and that with ſuch joy and alacrity, as one ſeeming rather to be riſen from ſome deadly danger to liberty of life, than as one paſſing out of the world by any pains of death. Such was the change of the marvellous working of the Lords hand upon that good man.

R. Glover receiveth again comfort of the Lord.

Cornelius Bongey, fellow Martyr with Maſter Robert Glover.

IN the ſame fire with him was burned alſo Cornelius Bongey, a Capper of Coventry, and condemned by the ſaid Radulph, Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield. As concerning the articles which were to him objected, the effect thereof was this.

Cornelius Bongey, Martyr.

Firſt, it was articulate againſt him, that theſe three yeers laſt, in the City of Coventry and Lichfield, and other places about, he did hold, maintain, argue and teach, that the Prieſt hath no power here to abſolve any ſinner from his ſins.

Articles objected to Cornelius Bongey.

Secondly, that by Baptiſme ſins be not waſhed away, becauſe he ſaid that the waſhing of the fleſh purgeth the fleſh outwardly, and not the ſoul.

Thirdly, that there be in the Church onely two Sacraments, that is, Baptiſme and the Lords Supper.

Fourthly, that in the ſacrament of their Popiſh altar, was not the reall Body and Blood of Chriſt, but the ſubſtance of bread and wine there remaining ſtill, becauſe St. Paul calleth it bread and wine, &c.

Fifthly, that he within the compaſſe of the ſaid yeers and time, did hold, maintain, and defend, that the Pope is not the head of the viſible Church here on earth, &c.

Sixthly, that he was of the Dioceſſe and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, &c.

Seventhly, that the premiſſes are true, manifeſt and notorious, and that upon the ſame there hath been and is a publike voyce and fame, as well in the places above rehearſed, as in other quarters alſo about, &c.

His Anſwer.

Unto the which Articles he anſwered again, to the firſt he granted, and to every part thereof, meaning after the Popiſh manner of abſolution.

His anſwers to the articles.

To the ſecond he granted firſt, after revoked the ſame.

To the third alſo he granted, adding withall that in Scripture there be no more contained.

To the fourth, touching the ſacrament, he granted, and to every part thereof.

To the fifth, concerning the Pope likewiſe.

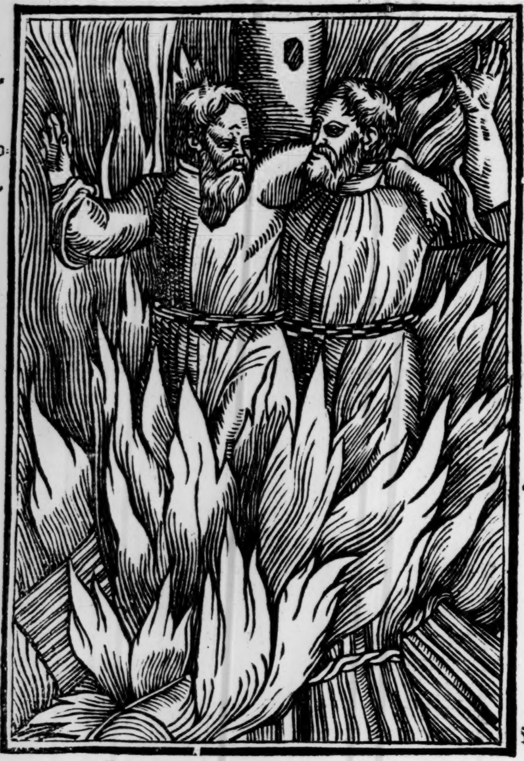
Alſo to the ſixth he granted, and likewiſe to the ſeventh.

Upon theſe articles and his anſwers to the ſame, the ſaid Radulph the Biſhop read the ſentence, and ſo committed him alſo after the condemnation of Maſter Robert Glover, to the ſecular power.

Thus this foreſaid Cornelius, falſely condemned by the Biſhop before mentioned, ſuffered at the ſame ſtake with the Chriſtian Martyr Maſter Robert Glover at Coventry, about the xx day of September.

The burning of Maſter Robert Glover, and Cornelius Bongey, at Coventry.

The Martyrdom of Rob. Glover, and Cornelius Bongey at Coventry. Anno 1555. Sept. 20.



Here followeth the ſtory of Iohn Glover and William Glover, how they were excommunicate and caſt out after their death, and buried in the fields.

John Glover and William Glover after their death condemned and caſt out for hereticks.

Now that we have diſcourſed the ſtory of M. Robert Glover, ſomething alſo would be touched of his other two brethren, John and William Glover. Who albeit they were not called to finiſh their courſe by like kinde of Martyrdom in the fire, as the other did; yet becauſe for their conſtant profeſſion of Gods Goſpel unto the later end, they were exempted after their death, and caſt out of the ſame Church, as the other was, I thought them not unworthy therefore in the ſtory to be joyned together, which in one cauſe and the ſame profeſſion were not ſundred one from the other.

And firſt concerning Maſter John Glover the eldeſt Brother, what inward ſtorms and agonies he ſuſtained by the ghoſtly enemy, partly ye heard before deſcribed: now what his bodily enemies wrought againſt him, remaineth to be declared. Whoſe rage and malice although God ſo reſtrained, that they could little prevail againſt him ſo long as his life endured, yet after his deceaſe, having power upon him, what they did ye ſhall now underſtand.

After the Martyrdom of Maſter Robert Glover, although John Glover ſeeing his brother to be apprehended for him, had ſmall joy of his life for the great ſorrow of his heart, wherewith he was ſore oppreſſed, and would gladly have put himſelf in his brothers ſtead, if friends had not otherwiſe perſwaded him, ſhewing that in ſo doing he might intangle himſelf, but ſhould do his brother no good: He thus in great care and vexation endured, yet notwithſtanding rubbed out as well as he could, till at length about the later end of Queen Mary there was a new ſearch made for the ſaid John Glover.

A new ſearch made for John Glover.

Whereupon the Sheriffs with their under officers and ſervants, being ſent to ſeek him, came into his houſe where he and his wife were. It chanced as he was in the chamber by himſelf, the Officers bruſting into the houſe, and ſearching other rooms, came to the chamber door where this John Glover was, who being within, and holding the latch ſoftly with his hand, perceived and heard the Officers buskeling about the door, amongſt whom, one of the ſaid Officers having the ſtring in his hand, was ready to draw and pluck at the ſame.

The providence of God again in ſaving John Glover. Agnes Glover wife to John Glove, apprehended.

In the mean time another coming by (whoſe voice he heard and knew) bade them come away, ſaying they had been there before. Whereupon they departing thence, went to ſearch other corners of the houſe, where they found Agnes Glover his wife, who being had to Lichfield, and there examined before the Biſhop, at length after much adoe was conſtrained to give place to their tyranny: John Glover in the mean time, partly for care of his wife, partly through cold taken in the woods where he did lie, took an Ague, whereupon not long after he left his life, which the cruell Papiſts ſo long had ſought for.

D. Dracot not ſuffering John Glover to be buried in the Churchyard.

Thus by the mighty protection of the Almighty Lord, how John Glover was delivered and defended from the hands of the perſecuting enemies during all the time of his life, ye have heard. Now what befell after his death both to him and William his brother, it is not unworthy to be remembred. Who after that he was dead, and buried in the Churchyard without Prieſt or Clerk, D. Dracot then Chancellor, ſix weeks after, ſent for the Parſon of the town, and demanded how it chanced that he was there buried. The Parſon anſwered that he was then ſick, and knew not of it. Then the Chancellor commanded the Parſon to go home, and to cauſe the body of the ſaid John Glover to be taken up, and to be caſt over the wall into the high way: The Parſon again anſwered, that he had bin ſix weeks in the earth, and ſo ſmelled, that none was able to abide the ſavour of him. Well, quoth D. Dracot, then take this bill, and pronounce him in the pulpit a damned ſoul, and a twelve moneth after take up his bones (for then the fleſh will be conſumed) and caſt them over the wall, that Carts and Horſes may tread upon them, and then I will come and hallow again that place in the Church-yard where he was buried. Recorded by the Parſon of the Town, who told the ſame to Hugh Burrows, dwelling at Fynden in Darbiſhire, and to M. Robert Glovers wife, by whoſe credible information we received the ſame.

John Glover after his death judged of D. Dracot to be a damned ſoule.

Teſtimony of the ſtory.

The manner of handling the body of Will. Glover after his death.

Not much unlike uſage was practiſed alſo by theſe Catholike children of the mother Church, upon the body of William the third brother. Whom after it had pleaſed Almighty God about the ſame ſeaſon to call out of this vale of miſery, the good diſpoſed people of the Town of Weme in Shropſhire, where he died, brought the body unto the Pariſh Church, intending there to have it buried.

Bernard a Popiſh Curate of Weme.

buried. But one Bernard being then Curate of the ſaid Church (and yet is as I hear ſay to this day) to ſtop the buriall thereof, rode to the Biſhop named Rauſe Bane, to certifie him of the matter, and to have his advice therein. In the mean time the body lying there a whole day, in the night time one Richard Morice a Taylor, would have enterred him. But then came John Thorlyne of Weme with other mo, and would not ſuffer the bodie to be buried; expreſſing to us the contrarie examples of good Tobie: for as he was religious in burying the dead, ſo this man putteth religion in not burying the dead: ſo that after he had laine there two dayes and one night, cometh the foreſaid Bernard the Curate with the Biſhops letter, the contents of which letter being copied out word for word, here followeth.

Io. Thorlyne againſt the burying of William Glovers brother.

A copie of the Biſhops letter written to the Pariſh of Weme.

The letter of Rauſe Baine B. of Cheſter, for the not burying of W. Glovers body.

Vnderſtanding that one Glover an heretick, is dead in the Pariſh of Weme, which Glover hath for all the time of my being in this countrey been known for a rebell againſt our holy faith and religion, a contemner of the holy Sacraments and ceremonies uſed in holy Church, and hath ſeparate himſelfe from the holy communion of all good Chriſtian men, and never required to be reconciled to our mother holy Church, nor in his laſt daies did call for his ghoſtly father, but dyed without all rites belonging to a chriſtian man; I thought it good not only to command the Curate of Weme, that he ſhould not be buried in chriſtian mans buriall, but alſo will and command all the Pariſh of Weme, that no man procure, help, nor ſpeak to have him buried in holy ground: but I do charge and command the Church-wardens of Weme in ſpeciall, and all the Pariſh of the ſame, that they aſſiſt the ſaid Curate in defending and letting, and procuring that he be not buried either in the Church, or within the wanybles of the church-yard: and likewiſe I charge thoſe that brought the bodie to the place, to carry it away again, and that at their charge, as they will anſwer at their peril. At Eccleſch this ſixth of September Anno 1558.

By your Ordinarie, Radulph Coventry and Lichfield.

By the vertue of this foreſaid letter, ſo it fell out, that they which brought the corps thither, were faine at their own charges to carry it backe again. But for ſo much as the bodie was corrupted and ſmelt ſo ſtrongly that unneth any man might come neere it, they were forced to draw it with horſes into a broome field, and there was he buried.

The dead corps of W. Glover dragged with horſe into the fields.

Witneſſes of the godly end of the ſayd Willam Glover, dying in the true faith and confeſſion of Chriſt, Maſter Nowell Deane of Lichfield, George Wileſtone and his Wife, Thomas Conſtantine, Roger Wydhouſe, Iohn Prynne, George Torpelley, &c.

The like example of charitable affection in theſe Catholike Church-men, is alſo to be ſeene and noted in the burying of one Maſter Edward Burton Eſquire, who in the ſame Dioceſſe of Cheſter, departing out of this world the very day before Queen Elizabeth was crowned, required of his friends, as they would anſwer for it, that his body ſhould be buried in his Pariſh Church (which was S. Chaddes in Shreſburie) ſo that no Maſſemonger ſhould be preſent thereat. Which thing being declared to the Curate of that Pariſh, named Sir John Marſhall, and the bodie being withall brought to the buriall, upon the ſame day when the Queen was crowned, the Curate being therewith offended, ſayd plainly, that he ſhould not be buried in the Church there. Whereunto one of his friends named George Torpelley anſwering againe, ſayd, that God would judge him in the laſt day, &c. Then the Prieſt, judge God (ſaith he) or Divell, the body ſhall not come there. And ſo they buried him in his own Garden, where he is no doubt as neere the Kingdome of Heaven, as if he had been buried in the middeſt of the Church.

M. Edward Burton not ſuffered to be buried in chriſtian buriall, the ſame day when Queene Elizabeth was crowned.

Moreover, in the ſayd County of Salop, I find that one Oliver Richardine of the Pariſh of Whitchurch, was burned in Hartford Weſt, Sir John Pgone being Sheriffe the ſame time, which ſeemeth to be about the latter year of King Henry the Eighth. Whoſe name becauſe it was not mentioned before, I thought here to give ſome little touch of him, having now in hand to ſpeak of the perſecution within the Dioceſſe of Coventrie and Lichfield.

Oliver Richardine in Hartford Weſt, Martyr.

The Matyrdome of William Wolſey, and Robert Pygot Painter.

After the ſuffering of Maſter Robert Glover, and Cornelius Bongey at Coventry, followeth next the condemnation of other two bleſſed Martyrs, which were judged and condemned at Elie, by John Fuller the Biſhops Chancellor of Elie, Doctor Sharton his Suffragane, Robert Steward Dean of Elie, John Chriſtopherſon Dean of Norwich, &c. Anno 1555. October 9. the names of which Martyrs, were William Wolſey, and Robert Pygot, dwelling both in the Town of Wisbich, which William Wolſey being a Conſtable, dwelling and inhabiting in the Town of Well, was there brought to death by the means and procurement of one Richard Everard Gentleman, a Juſtice appointed for thoſe dayes, who extremely handled the ſame William Wolſey, and bound him to the good abearing, cauſing him to put in ſureties upon his good behaviour, untill the next generall Seſſions holden within the Ile of Elie: and ſo the ſayd Wolſey being diſpatched of his office, and brought in trouble, removed his houſe and dwelling place, coming to dwell in the Town of Wisbich. Then being called again at the next Seſſions, he was ſtill conſtrained to put in new ſureties, which at the length he refuſed to do, and ſo was commanded to the Jayle, at the Siſe holden at Elie in Lent.

W. Wolſey, and R. Pygot Martyrs.

R. Everard extreme againſt W. Wolſey.

W. Wolſey commanded to the Jayle.

In the Eaſter weeke following, their repaired to conferre with him, D. Fuller, the Chancellor, with Chriſtopherſon, and one D. Yong, who layd earneſtly to his charge that he was out of the catholike faith, willing him to meddle no further with the Scriptures, than it did become ſuch a Lay-man as he was, to do. The ſayd William Wolſey ſtanding ſtill a great while, ſuffering them to ſay their pleaſures, at the laſt anſwered in this wiſe; Good Maſter Doctor, what did our Saviour Chriſt mean, when he ſpake theſe words written in the 23. Chapter of S. Mathews Goſpel, Wo be unto you Scribes and Phariſees, ye hypocrites, for ye ſhut up the Kingdome of Heaven before men: ye your ſelves go not in, neither ſuffer ye them that come to enter in?

D. Fuller, Chriſtopherſon and D. Yong come to confer with Wolſey.

Wolſey putteth a queſtion to the Doctors.

Yea, ſaith Doctor Fuller, you muſt underſtand, that Chriſt ſpake to the Scribes and Phariſees.

Nay Maſter Doctor (ſaith Wolſey) Chriſt ſpake even to you, and your fellowes here preſent, and to all other ſuch like as you be.

Away Maſter Doctor (ſayd Chriſtopherſon) for you can do no good with this man. Yet ſaith D. Fuller, I will leave thee a book to read, I promiſe thee of a learned mans doing, that is to ſay of D. Watſons doing (who was then B. of Lincolne,)

D. Watſons book of Sermons or Homilies.

D. Fuller again reſorteth to William Wolſey.

Wolſey receiving the ſame book, did diligently read it over, which in many places did manifeſtly appear contrary to the known truth of Gods word. At the length, a fortnight or three weeks following, the ſayd D. Fuller, reſorting again to the priſon houſe to conferre with the ſayd Wolſey, did aſk him how he liked the ſayd book (thinking that he had wone him by the reading of the ſame:) who anſwered him and ſayd, Sir, I like the book no otherwiſe than I thought before I ſhould finde it. Whereupon the Chancellor taking his book, departed home.

At night when D. Fuller came to his chamber to look on it, he did find in many places, contrary to his mind, the book raced with a pen by the ſayd Wolſey. The which he ſeeing, and being vexed therewith, ſayd, Oh this is an obſtinate heretick, and hath quite marred my book.

The Chancellor giveth leave to Wolſey to depart.

Then the Siſe holden at Wisbich drawing nigh, Doctor Fuller commeth againe to the ſayd Wolſey, and ſpeaketh unto him on this manner; Thou doeſt much trouble my conſcience, wherefore I pray thee depart, and rule thy tongue, ſo that I heare no more complaint of thee, and come to the Church when thou wilt, and if thou be complained upon, ſo far as I may, I promiſe thee I will not hear of it.

Maſter Doctor (quoth Wolſey) I was brought hither by a law, aud by a law I will be dolivered.

W. Wolſey laid in the Caſtle of Wiſbich

Then being brought to the Seſſions before named, Wolſey was layd in the Caſtle at Wisbitch, thinking to him and all his friends, that he ſhould have ſuffered there at that preſent time, but it proved nothing ſo.

Robert Pygot Painter preſented for not comming to the Church.

Then Robert Pygot the Painter, being at liberty, was there preſented by ſome evill diſpoſed perſons (ſworn men as they called them) for not comming to the Church

Talk between Sir Clement Higham Judge and Robert Pygot.

The ſayd Pygot being called in the Seſſions, would not abſent himſelf, but there did plainly appear before Sir Clement Hygham being Judge, who ſayd unto him; Ah, are you the holy father the Painter? how chance ye came not to the Church? Sir, quoth the Painter, I am not out of the Church I truſt in God.

No Sir, ſaid the Judge? this is no Church, this is a Hall. Yea ſir, ſayd Pygot, I know very well it is a Hall: but he that is in the true faith of Jeſus Chriſt, is never abſent, but preſent in the Church of God.

Robert Pygot brought to the Jayle, where W. Wolſey lay.

Wolſey and Pygot returned to Ely to priſon.

Ah Sirra, ſayd the Judge, you are too high learned for me to talk withall: wherefore I will ſend you to them that be better learned than I, ſtraightwayes commanding him to the Jayle where Wolſey lay. So the Seſſions being broken up and ended, the ſayd Wolſey and Pygot were carried again to Elie into priſon, where they both did remain till the day of their death.

In the mean time certain of their neighbors of Wisbich aforeſayd, being at Elie, came to ſee how they did.

Tho. Goodrick Biſhop of Ely. The Biſhops Chaplaine a Frenchman confirmeth the priſoners in the truth.

There came thither alſo a Chaplain of Biſhop Gooderikes a Frenchman borne, one Peter Valentius, who ſayd unto the ſayd Wolſey and Pygot; My brethren, according to mine office I am come to talk with you, for I have been Amner here this xx. years and above. Wherefore I muſt deſire you my brethren to take it in good part that I am come to talk with you, I promiſe you, not to pull you from your faith. But I both require and deſire in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, that you ſtand to the truth of the Goſpel and word, and I beſeech the Almighty God for his Sonne Jeſus Chriſts ſake to preſerve both you and me in the ſame unto the end. For I know not my ſelfe (my brethren) how ſoon I ſhall be at the ſame point that you now are. Thus with many other like words he made an end, cauſing all that were there preſent to water their cheeks, contrary to the hope they all had in him, God be prayſed therefore.

Pygot and Wolſey called to judgement in the Biſhops conſiſtory.

Then within ſhort time after, Pygot and Wolſey were called to judgement about the ix. day of October, before Doctor Fuller then Chancellor, with old Doctor Sharton, Chriſtopherſon, and others in Commiſſion, who laid earneſtly to their charge for their beliefe in divers articles, but eſpecially of the ſacrament of the altar. Whereunto their anſwer was, that the Sacrament of the altar was an Idol, and that the naturall body and blood of Chriſt was not preſent really in the ſayd Sacrament, and to this opinion they ſayd they would ſtick, beleeving perfectly the ſame to be no hereſie that they had affirmed, but the very truth, whereunto they would ſtand. Then ſayd the Doctors, that they were out of the Catholike faith.

The words of Nicholas Sharton to the Martyrs.

Wolſeys anſwer to Sharton.

Then Doctor Sharton ſayd unto them; Good brethren remember your ſelves, and become new men, for I my ſelfe was in this fond opinion that you are now in, but I am now become a new man.

Ah, ſaid Wolſey, are you become a new man? Woe be to thee thou wicked new man, for God ſhall juſtly judge thee.

D. Fuller then ſpake, ſaying, this Wolſey is an obſtinate fellow, and one that I could never do good upon. But as for the Painter he is a man quiet and indifferent (as far as I perceive) and is ſoon reformed, and may very well be delivered for any evill opinion I finde in him.

M. Chriſtopherſon writeth what he would have Pygot confeſſe of the ſacament.

Then Chriſtopherſon called for pen and inke, and wrote theſe words following; I Robert Pygot do beleeve, that after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, there remained no more bread and wine, but the very body and blood of Chriſt really and ſubſtantially, the ſelfe ſame that was borne of the Virgin Mary; and reading it to the Painter, he ſayd thus; Doſt thou beleeve all this according as it is written?

Pygot refuſeth to ſubſcribe to Chriſtopherſons faith.

Pygot. No ſir, ſayd the Painter, that is your faith, and not mine.

M. Peacock appointed to preach at the burning of Wolſey and Pygot.

Chriſtopher. Lo, Maſter D. Fuller, you would have let this fellow go, he is as much an heretike as the other. And ſo immediately judgement was given upon them to dye. Which done, after the ſentence read, they were ſent again to the priſon, where they did lie till the day of their death. At which day, one Peacock Batchelor of Divinitie being appointed to preach, took his text out of the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Corinth. 5. chapt. of one that had lived unordinately, by abuſing his fathers wife; likening the ſayd Pygot, and Wolſey to the ſame man, oftentimes ſaying, that ſuch members muſt be cut off from the congregation, moſt maliciouſly reporting the ſayd Wolſey to be clean out of the faith, and in many places quite denying the Scripture.

So his Sermon being ended, the forenamed Pygot and Wolſey being brought to the place of execution, and ſo bound to the ſtake with a chaine, thither commeth one ſir Rich. Collinſon a Prieſt, at that time deſtitute of any biding place or ſtay of benefice, who ſayd unto Wolſey; brother Wolſey, the Preacher hath openly reported in his Sermon this day, that you are quite out of the Catholike faith, and deny baptiſme, and that you do erre in the holy Scripture; wherefore I beſeech you for the certifying of my conſcience with others here preſent, that you declare in what place of the Scripture you do erre or find fault.

W. Wolſey cleareth himſelfe to be found in all points of the Scripture belonging to his ſalvation.

Wolſey. I take the eternall and everlaſting God to witneſſe, that I do erre in no part or point of Gods book the holy Bible, but hold and beleeve in the ſame to be moſt firme and ſound doctrine in all points moſt worthy for my ſalvation, and for all other Chriſtians to the end of the world. Whatſoever mine adverſaries report by me, God forgive them therefore. With that cometh one to the fire with a great ſheet knit full of books to burn, like as they had been new Teſtaments. O ſaid Wolſey, give me one of them, and Pygot deſired another, both of them clapping them cloſe to their breſts, ſaying the 106 Pſalm, deſiring all the people to ſay, Amen, and ſo received the fire moſt thankfully.

The Martyrdom of Will. Wolſey and Rob. Pygot at Ely, 1555. Octob. 16.

Concerning the ſtory of William Wolſey, I received moreover from the Univerſity of Cambridge by a credible perſon, and my faithfull friend William Fulke, this relation which I thought in this place not unmeet to be notified unto the Reader in order and form as followeth.

There were burned at Ely two godly Martyrs, the one called Wolſey, the other Pygot. In theſe two appeared a divers diſpoſition of ſpirit. Pygot was milde, humble and modeſt, promiſing that he would be conformable to his perſecutors, if they could perſwade him by the Scripture. The other, Wolſey was ſtout, ſtrong, and vehement, as one having πληροφορίαν of the ſpirit, and deteſted all their doings, as of whom he was ſure to receive nothing but cruelty and tyranny. He was wonderfull jealous over his companion, fearing leſt his gentle nature would have been overcome by the flattering enticements of the world, and therefore the ſame day that they were burned, when they would have talked with him alone, he pulled him away from them almoſt by force. He was ſo deſirous to glorifie God with his ſuffring, that being wonderfull ſore tormented in the priſon with the tooth-ake, he feared nothing more than that he ſhould depart before the day of execution (which he called his glad day) were come.

Wolſey calleth the day of his Martyrdom his glad day.

This Wolſey being in priſon at Ely, was viſited by Thomas Hodilo Beer-Brewer in Ely. To him he delivered certain money to be diſtributed (as he appointed) part to his wiſe, and part to his kinsfolks and friends, and eſpecially ſix ſhillings eight pence to be delivered to one Richard Denton, Smith, dwelling at Wells in Cambridge-ſhire, within the Juriſdiction of the Ile of Ely, with his commendation, that he marvelled that he tarried ſo long behinde him, ſeeing that he was the firſt that delivered him the book of Scripture into his hand, and told him that it was the truth, deſiring him to make haſte after as faſt as he could.

Tho. Hodilo, Beer-Brewer in Ely witneſſe of the ſtory.

Rich. Denton firſt converter of Wolſey.

This Thomas Hodilo, both to avoid the danger of the time, and to have a witneſſe of his doings herein, delivered the ſaid ſumme of money to one Maſter Laurence Preacher in Eſſex (who then reſorted often to his houſe) to be diſtributed as Wolſey had appointed; which thing he performed, riding from place to place. And when this ſix ſhillings eight pence was delivered to Richard Denton with the commendation aforeſaid, his anſwer was this; I confeſſe it is true, but alas I cannot burn. This was almoſt one whole year after Wolſey was burned. But he that could not burn in the cauſe of Chriſt, was afterward burned againſt his will, when Chriſt had given peace to his Church. For in the year of our Lord 1564. on Tueſday being the eighteenth of April, his houſe was ſet on fire, and while he went in to ſave his goods, he loſt his life, with two other that were in the ſame houſe.

and William Fulke.

Not much unlike to this, was alſo the example of M. Weſt, Chaplain to Biſhop Ridley, who refuſing to die in Chriſts cauſe with his Maſter, ſaid Maſſe againſt his conſcience, and ſoon after died.

Doctor Nicholas Ridley, and Maſter Hugh Latimer, both Biſhops, Preachers, and Martyrs of Chriſt, with their doings, conferences, and ſufferings deſcribed.

The ſame year, moneth and day in which the foreſaid two Martyrs, William Wolſey and Thomas Pygot ſuffered at Ely, the which was, Anno 1555. Octob. 16. followed alſo at Oxford the ſlaughter of two other ſpeciall and ſingular Captains and principall Pillar of Chriſts Church, Maſter Ridley Biſhop of London, and Maſter Hugh Latimer, Biſhop ſometime of Worceſter, of whoſe famous doings and memorable learning, and incomparable ornaments and gifts of grace, joyned with no leſſe commendable ſincerity of life, as all the Realm can witneſſe ſufficiently; ſo it needeth not greatly that we ſhould ſtand exactly at this time in ſetting forth a full deſcription of the ſame, but onely to comprehend briefly in a few words touching the order of their lives, ſo much as neceſſarily ſerveth to the due inſtruction of the Reader, and maketh to the uſe of this preſent hiſtory, in declaring firſt their beginning and bringing up, then their ſtudies and acts in the Univerſity, their preferments alſo by their ſtudies to higher dignity, at laſt their trouble and travell in ſetting forth Religion, and in maintaining the ſame to the ſhedding of their blood. And firſt to begin with the life of M. Ridley, whoſe ſtory here enſueth.

D. Nicholas Ridley, martyr.

AMong many other worthy and ſundry hiſtories and notable acts of ſuch as of late dayes have been turmoiled, murthered, and martyred for the true Goſpel of Chriſt in Queen Maries raign, the tragicall ſtory and life of Doctor Ridley, I thought good to commend to Chronicle, and leave to perpetuall memory; beſeeching thee (gentle Reader) with care and ſtudy well to peruſe, diligently to conſider, and deeply to print the ſame in thy breſt, ſeeing him to be a man beautified with ſuch excellent qualities, ſo ghoſtly inſpired and godly learned, and now written doubtleſſe in the book of life, with the bleſſed Saints of the Almighty, crowned and throned amongſt the glorious company of Martyrs. Firſt deſcending of a ſtock right worſhipfull, he was born in Northumberlandſhire, who being a childe learned his Grammar with great dexterity in Newcaſtle, and was removed from thence to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he in ſhort time became ſo famous, that for his ſingular aptneſſe, he was called to higher functions, and offices of the Univerſity, by degree attaining thereunto, and was called to be Head of Pembroke Hall, and there made Doctor of Divinity. After this, departing from thence, he travelled to Paris, who at his return was made Chaplain to King Henry the eighth, and promoted afterwards by him to the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter; and ſo from thence tranſlated to the See and Biſhoprick of London in King Edwards dayes.

Nicholas Ridley born in Northumberland.
Nich. Ridley learned at Newcaſtle.
Nich. Ridley Maſter of Pembroke hall in Cambridge.
Nich. Ridley made Doctor of Divinity.
Nich. Ridley K. Henries Chaplain.
Nich. Ridley made Biſhop of Rocheſter.
Nich. Ridley made Biſhop of London.

In which calling and offices he ſo travelled and occupied himſelf by preaching and teaching the true and wholſome Doctrine of Chriſt, that never good childe was more ſingularly loved of his dear parents, than he of his flock and Dioceſſe. Every holy-day and Sunday he lightly preached in ſome one place or other, except he were otherwiſe letted by weighty affairs and buſineſſe, to whoſe Sermons the people reſorted ſwarming about him like Bees, and coveting the ſweet flowers and wholſome juyce of the fruitfull Doctrine, which he did not onely preach, but ſhewed the ſame by his life, as a glittering Lantern to the eyes and ſenſes of the blinde, in ſuch pure order and chaſtity of life (declining from evill deſires and concupiſcences) that even his very enemies could not reprove him in any one jot thereof.

The fruitfull diligence of B. Ridley in preaching Gods Word.

Beſides this, he was paſſingly well learned, his memory was great, and he of ſuch reading withall, that of right he deſerved to be comparable to the beſt of this our age, as can teſtifie as well divers his notable works, pithy Sermons, and ſundry his diſputations in both the Univerſities, and alſo his very adverſaries, all which will ſay no leſſe themſelves.

B. Ridley of great memory and Reading.

Beſides all this, wiſe he was of counſell, deep of wit, and very politick in all his doings. How mercifull and carefull he was to reduce the obſtinate Papiſts from their erroneous opinions, and by gentleneſſe to winne them to the truth, his gentle ordering and courteous handling of Doctor Heath, late Archbiſhop of York, being priſoner with him in King Edwards time in his houſe one yeer, ſufficiently declareth. In fine, he was ſuch a Prelate, and in all points ſo good, godly, and ghoſtly a man, that England may juſtly rue the loſſe of ſo worthy a treaſure. And thus hitherto concerning theſe publike matters.

Now will I ſpeak ſomething further particularly of his perſon and conditions. He was a man right comely and well proportioned in all points, both in complexion and lineaments of the body. He took all things in good part, bearing no malice nor rancor from his heart, but ſtraightwayes forgetting all injuries and offences done againſt him. He was very kinde and naturall to his kinsfolk, and yet not bearing with them any thing otherwiſe than right would require, giving them alwayes for a generall rule, yea to his own brother and ſiſter, that they doing evill ſhould ſeek or look for nothing at his hand, but ſhould be as ſtrangers and aliens unto him, and they to be his brother and ſiſter, which uſed honeſty, and a godly trade of life.

B. Ridley comely of proportion and complexion.

The fair conditions of B. Ridley, tender to his kindred, yet no otherwiſe than truth and right required.

He uſing all kindes of wayes to mortifie himſelf, was given to much prayer and contemplation: For duely every morning, ſo ſoon as his apparell was done upon him, he went forthwith to his bed-chamber, and there upon his knees prayed the ſpace of half an hour; which being done, immediately he went to his ſtudy (if there came no other buſineſſe to interrupt him) where he continued till tenne of the clock, and then came to the common prayer, daily uſed in his houſe. The prayers being done, he went to dinner, where he uſed little talk, except otherwiſe occaſion by ſome had been miniſtred, and then was it ſober, diſcreet and wiſe, and ſometime merry, as cauſe required.

Biſhop Ridley a great mortifier of himſelf.

The order of his ſtudy and diet.

The dinner done, which was not very long, he uſed to ſit an hour or thereabouts talking, or playing at the Cheſſe: That done, he returned to his ſtudy, and there would continue, except ſuters or buſineſſe abroad were occaſion of the contrary, untill five of the clock at night, and then would come to common prayer, as in the fore-noon: which being finiſhed, he went to ſupper, behaving himſelf there as at his dinner before. After ſupper, recreating himſelf in playing at Cheſſe the ſpace of an hour, he would then return again to his ſtudie; continuing there till 11 of the clock at night, which was his common hour to go to bed, then ſaying his prayers upon his knees as in the morning when he roſe. Being at his Manor of Fulham, as divers times he uſed to be, he read daily a lecture to his family at the common prayer, beginning at the Acts of the Apoſtles, and ſo going thorow all the Epiſtles of Saint Paul, giving to every man that could read a New Teſtament, hiring them beſides with money to learn by heart certain principall Chapters, but eſpecially the xiii Chapter of the Acts, reading alſo unto his houſhold oftentimes the 101 Pſalm, being marvellous carefull over his family, that they might be a ſpectacle of all vertue and honeſty to others. To be ſhort, as he was godly and vertuous himſelf, ſo nothing but vertue and godlineſſe raigned in houſe, feeding them with the food of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

His order after ſupper.

The carefull diligence of B. Ridley in inſtructing his family.

Now remaineth a word or two to be declared of his gentle nature and kindely pity in the uſage of an old woman called Miſtris Boner, Mother to Doctor Boner ſometime Biſhop of London; which I thought good to touch, as well for the rare clemency of Doctor Ridley, as the unworthy immanity and ingratefull diſpoſition again of D. Boner. Biſhop Ridley being at his Manor of Fulham, alwayes ſent for this ſaid Miſtreſſe Boner, dwelling in an houſe adjoyning to his houſe, to dinner and ſupper, with one Miſtreſſe Mungey, Boners ſiſter, ſaying, Go for my Mother Boner, who coming, was ever placed in the chair at the tables end, being ſo gently intreated, welcomed, and taken, as though he had been born of her own body, being never diſplaced of her ſeat, although the Kings Councell had been preſent, ſaying, when any of them were there (as divers times they were) by your Lordſhips favour, this place of right and cuſtome is for my mother Boner. But how well he was recompenced for this his ſingular gentleneſſe, and pitifull pity after, at the hands of the ſaid Doctor Boner, almoſt the leaſt childe that goeth by the ground can declare. For who afterward was more enemy to Ridley, than Boner and his? Who more went about to ſeek his deſtruction than he? recompenſing this gentleneſſe with extreme cruelty. As well appeared by the ſtrait handling of Ridleys own naturall ſiſter, and George Shipſide her husband, from time to time: whereas the gentleneſſe of the other did ſuffer Boners mother, ſiſter, and other of his kindred, not onely quietly to enjoy all that which they had of Boner, but alſo entertained them in his houſe, ſhewing much courteſie and friendſhip daily unto them: whereas on the other ſide, Biſhop Boner being reſtored again, would not ſuffer the brother and naturall ſiſter of Biſhop Ridley, and other his friends not onely not to enjoy that which they had by the ſaid their brother Biſhop Ridley, but alſo curriſhly without all order of law or honeſty, by extort power wreſted from them all the livings they had.

Boner unkinde and churliſh to B. Ridleys ſiſter, and ſeeketh the death of his brother in law.

And yet being not therewith ſatisfied, he ſought all the means he could to work the death of the foreſaid Shipſide, ſaying, that he would make twelve Godfathers to go upon him; which had been brought to paſſe indeed, at what time he was priſoner at Oxford, had not God otherwiſe wrought his deliverance by means of Doctor Heath, then Biſhop of Worceſter. Teſte Georgio Shipſidio.

Whereby all good indifferent Readers notoriouſly have to underſtand, what great diverſity was in the diſpoſition of theſe two natures. Whereof as the one excelled in mercy and piety, ſo the other again as much or more excelled in churliſh ingratitude, and deſpitefull diſdain. But of this matter enough.

B. Ridley firſt converted by Bertrams book.

Now concerning Gods vocation, how Doctor Ridley was firſt called to the ſavouring and favouring of Chriſt and his Goſpel, partly by his diſputation before, and other his Treatiſes it may appear, that the firſt occaſion of his converſion, was by reading of Bertrams book of the Sacrament, whom alſo the conference with Biſhop Cranmer, and with Peter Martyr did not a little confirm in that behalf. Who now by the grace of God, being thorowly won and brought to the true way, as he was before blinde and zealous in his old ignorance, ſo was he as conſtant and faithfull in the right knowledge which the Lord had opened unto him (as well appeared by his preachings and doings during all the time of King Edward) and ſo long did much good, while authority of extern power might defend and hold up the peace of the Church, and proceedings of the Goſpel. But after that it ſo pleaſed the heavenly will of the Lord our God, to bereave us of our ſtay, and to call from us King Edward that precious Prince, as the whole ſtate of the Church of England was left deſolate and open to the enemies hand: ſo this Biſhop Ridley, after the coming in of Queen Mary, eftſoon and with the firſt was laid hands upon, and committed to priſon, as before hath ſufficiently been expreſſed: firſt in the Tower, then after tranſlated from thence with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Maſter Latimer to Oxford, was with them incloſed in the common Jayl, and priſon of Bocardo, while at length, being diſſevered from them, he was committed to cuſtody in the houſe of one Iriſh, where he remained till the laſt day of his death and Martyrdom, which was from the yeer of our Lord, 1554, till the yeer 1555. and 16 day of October.

B. Ridley one of the firſt in trouble after the death of K. Edward.

B. Ridley in the Tower. B. Ridley removed to the priſon of Bocardo in Oxford.

Furthermore, as touching his diſputations and conflicts had at Oxford, and alſo of his determination had at Cambridge, alſo his travels in perſwading and inſtructing the Lady Mary before ſhe was Queen, his reaſons and conference likewiſe had in the Tower at the Lievtenants board, enough hath been ſaid already. Beſides this, other conferences he had in priſon both with D. Cranmer, and M. Latimer, as here followeth to be read.

A Conference had betwixt Maſter Ridley, and Maſter Latimer in priſon, upon the objection of Antonian, meaning by that name ſome popiſh Perſecutor, as Wincheſter, alluding thereby to the ſtory of Victor. lib. 3. De perſecut. Aphri.

M. Ridley.

In writing again ye have done me an unſpeakable pleaſure, and I pray that the Lord may requite it you in that day. For I have received great comfort at your words: but yet I am not ſo filled withall, but that I thirſt much more now than before, to drink more of the cup of yours, wherein ye mingle unto me profitable with pleaſant. I pray you good father let me have one draught more to comfort my ſtomack. For ſurely except the Lord aſſiſt me with his gracious aid, in the time of his ſervice, I know I ſhall play but the part of a white livered Knight. But truely my truſt is in him, that in mine infirmity he ſhould trie himſelf ſtrong, and that he can make the coward in his cauſe to fight like a man.

Sir, now I daily look when Diotrephes with his warriors ſhall aſſault me: wherefore I pray you good father, for that you are an old Souldier, and an expert Warriour, and God knoweth I am but a yong ſouldier, and as yet of ſmall experience in theſe fits, help me, I pray you, to buckle my harneſſe. And now I would have you to think, that theſe darts are caſt at my head of ſome one of Diotrephes, or Antonins ſouldiers.

M. Ridleys anſwer. Luke 9. Gal. 2.

Becauſe no man that layeth hand on the plough and looketh back is fit for the Kingdom of God, and alſo for the ſelf ſame cauſe why Saint Paul would not ſuffer Titus to be circumciſed, which is that the truth of the Goſpel might remain with us uncorrupt, Galat. the ſecond: And again, If I build again the things which I deſtroyed, I make my ſelf a Treſpaſſer. This is alſo another cauſe, leſt I ſhould ſeem by outward fact to allow the thing, which I am perſwaded is contrary to ſound doctrine, and ſo ſhould be a ſtumbling ſtock unto the weak. But woe be unto him by whom offence cometh: it were better for him that a millſtone were hanged about his neck, and he caſt into the midſt of the Sea.

Matth. 18. Mark 9.

H. Latimer. John 15.

Except the Lord help me, ye ſay. Truth it is. For without me, ſaith he, ye can do nothing, much leſſe ſuffer death of our adverſaries, through the bloody law now prepared againſt us. But it followeth, If you abide in me, and my word abide in you, ask what you will, and it ſhall be done for you. What can be more comfortable? Sir, you make anſwer your ſelf ſo well, that I cannot better it. Sir, I beginne now to ſmell what you mean by travelling thus with me, you uſe me as Bilney did once, when he converted me, pretending as though he would be taught of me, he ſought wayes and means to teach me, and ſo do you. I thank you therefore moſt heartily. For indeed you miniſter armour unto me, whereas I was unarmed before and unprovided, ſaving that I give my ſelf to prayer for my refuge.

Anton. object. 2.

What is it then that offendeth you ſo greatly in the Maſſe that you will not vouchſafe once either to hear it or ſee it? And from whence cometh this new religion upon you? have not you uſed in times paſt to ſay Maſſe your ſelf?

Nich. Ridleys anſwer. He meaneth his own confeſſion openly in preaching. Matth. 26. 1 Tim. 1.

I confeſſe unto you my fault and ignorance; but know you that for theſe matters I have done penance long ago, both at Pauls Croſſe, and alſo openly in the pulpit at Cambridge, and I truſt God hath forgiven me this mine offence: for I did it upon ignorance. But if you be deſirous to know, and will vouchſafe to hear what things do offend me in the Maſſe, I will rehearſe unto you thoſe things which be moſt clear, and ſeem to repugne moſt manifeſtly againſt Gods Word, and they be theſe: the ſtrange tongue; the want of the ſhewing of the Lords death; the breaking of the Lords Commandment of having a Communion; the Sacrament is not communicated to all, under both kindes, according to the Word of the Lord; the ſigne is ſervilely worſhipped for the thing ſignified; Chriſts Paſſion is injured, foraſmuch as this Maſſe ſacrifice is affirmed to remain for the purging of ſins; to be ſhort, the manifold ſuperſtitions, and trifling fondneſſe which are in the Maſſe, and about the ſame.

H. Latimer. John 19. 1 Cor. 15. 1 Tim. 3. John 15. Coloſ. 1.

Better a few things well pondered, than to trouble the memory with too much; you ſhall pregail more with praying, than with ſtudying, though mixture be beſt, for ſo one ſhall alleviate the tediouſneſſe of the other. I intend not to contend much with them in words, after a reaſonable account of my faith given: for it ſhall be but in vain. They will ſay, as their fathers ſaid, when they have no more to ſay: We have a Law, and by our Law he ought to die. Be ye ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, ſaith Saint Paul: and again, Perſiſtito, Stand faſt. And how oft is this repeated, If ye abide, if ye abide, &c. But we ſhall be called obſtinate, ſturdy, ignoront, heady, and what not? ſo that a man hath need of much patience, having to do with ſuch men.

Anton. object. 3.

But you know how great a crime it is to ſeparate your ſelf from the communion or fellowſhip of the Church, and to make a ſchiſme, or diviſion. You have been reported to have hated the Sect of the Anabaptiſts, and allwayes to have impugned the ſame. Moreover this was the pernicious error of Novatus, and of the Heretikes called (Cathari) that they would not communicate with the Church.

N. Ridleys anſwer. 1 Cor. 11.

I know that the unity of the Church is to be retained by all means, and the ſame to be neceſſary to ſalvation. But I do not take the Maſſe, as it is at this day, for the communion of the Church, but a Popiſh device, whereby both the Commandement and Inſtitution of our Saviour Chriſt, for the oft frequenting of the remembrance of his death, is eluded, and the people of God are miſerably deluded. The Sect of the Anabaptiſts, and the hereſie of the Novatians ought of right to be condemned, foraſmuch as without any juſt or neceſſary cauſe they wickedly ſeparated themſelves from the communion of the Congregation, for they did not alleadge that the Sacraments were unduely miniſtred, but turning away their eyes from themſelves, wherewith according to Saint Pauls rule they ought to examine themſelves, and caſting their eyes ever upon others, either Miniſters, or Communicants with them, they allwayes reproved ſomething for the which they abſtained from the Communion, as from an unholy thing.

H. Latimer. Hilarius contra Axen. Rom. 15.

I remember that Calvin beginneth to confute the Interim after this ſort with this ſaying of Hilary, The name of peace is beautifull, and the opinion of unity is fair: but who doubteth that to be the true and onely peace of the Church, which is Chriſts? I would you had that little book, there ſhould you ſee how much is to be given to unity. Saint Paul when he requireth unity, he joyneth ſtraight withall, ſecundum Ieſum Chriſtum, according to Jeſus Chriſt, no further. Diotrephes now of late did ever harp upon unity, unity. Yea Sir (quoth I) but in verity, not in Popery. Better is diverſity, than an unity in Popery. I had nothing again but ſcornfull jeers, with commandment to the Tower.

Anton. object. 4. Cypr. l. 1. ep. 2. Aug. ep. 1, 2.

But admit there be in the Maſſe that peradventure might be amended, or at leaſt made better: yea, ſeeing you will have it ſo, admit there be a fault; if you do not conſent thereto, why do you trouble your ſelf in vain? do you not know both by Cyprian and Auguſtine that communion of Sacraments doth not defile a man, but conſent of deeds?

N. Ridleys anſwer.

If it were any one trifling ceremony, or if it were ſome one thing of it ſelf indifferent (although I would wiſh nothing ſhould be done in the Church, which doth not edifie the ſame) yet for the continuance of the common quietneſſe I could be content to bear it. But foraſmuch as things done in the Maſſe tend openly to the overthrow of Chriſts Inſtitution, I judge that by no means either in word or deed I ought to conſent unto it. As for that which is objected out of the Fathers, I acknowledge it to be well ſpoken, if it be well underſtood. But it is meant of them which ſuppoſe they are defiled if any ſecret vice be either in the Miniſters, or in them that communicate with them, and is not meant of them which do abhorre ſuperſtition, and wicked traditions of men, and will not ſuffer the ſame to be thruſt upon themſelves, or upon the Church inſtead of Gods Word and the truth of the Goſpel.

H. Latimer.

The very marrow bones of the Maſſe are altogether deteſtable, and therefore by no means to be born withall: ſo that of neceſſity the mending of it is to aboliſh it for ever. For if you take away oblation and adoration, which do hang upon conſecration and tranſubſtantiation, the moſt Papiſts of them all will not ſet a button by the Maſſe, as a thing which they eſteem not, but for the gain that followeth thereon. For if the Engliſh Communion, which of late was uſed, were as gainfull to them, as the Maſſe hath been heretofore, they would ſtrive no more for their Maſſe; from thence groweth the grief.

Anton. object. 5. Aug. lib. 1. de Simb. [illegible] contra Donat.

Conſider into what dangers you caſt your ſelf, if you forſake the Church; and you cannot but forſake it, if you refuſe to go to maſſe. For the Maſſe is the Sacrament of unity; without the Ark there is no ſalvation. The Church is the Ark and Peters Ship. Ye know this ſaying well enough; He ſhall not have God to be his Father, which acknowledgeth not the Church to be his Mother. Moreover without the Church (ſaith S. Auguſtine) be the life never ſo well ſpent, it ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of heaven.

N. Ridleys anſwer. 1 Tim. 3. Apoc. 21. Epheſ. 1. Gal. 6. Phil. 3.

The holy Catholike or univerſall Church, which is the communion of Saints, the houſe of God, the City of God, the Spouſe of Chriſt, the body of Chriſt, the pillar and ſtay of the truth; this Church I believe, according to the Creed. This Church I do reverence, and honor in the Lord. But the rule of this Church is the Word of God, according to which rule we go forward unto life. And as many as walk according to this rule, I ſay with S. Paul, Peace be upon them, and upon Iſrael which pertaineth unto God. The guide of this Church is the holy Ghoſt. The marks wherby this Church is known unto me in this darke world, and in the midſt of this crooked and froward generation, are theſe;

The ſincere preaching of Gods holy Word, the due adminiſtration of the Sacraments, charity, and faithfull obſerving of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, according to the Word of God. And that Church or congregation which is garniſhed with theſe markes, is in very deed that heavenly Jeruſalem, which conſiſteth of thoſe that be borne from above. This is the mother of us all, and by Gods grace I will live and and die the childe of this Church. Forth of this (I grant) there is no ſalvation; and I ſuppoſe the reſidue of the places objected are rightly to be underſtood of this Church only. In times paſt (ſaith Chryſoſtome) there were many wayes to know the Church of Chriſt, that is to ſay, by good life, by miracles, by chaſtity, by doctrine, by miniſtring the Sacraments. But from that time that hereſies did take hold of the Church, it is onely known by the Scriptures which is the true Church. They have all things in outward ſhew, which the true Church hath in truth. They have temples like unto ours.

1.Cor. 10.

And in the end concluded. Wherefore onely by the Scriptures do we know which is the true Church. To that which they ſay, that the Maſſe is the ſacrament of unity, I anſwer; The bread which we break, according to the inſtitution of the Lord, is the Sacrament of the unity of Chriſts miſticall body. For we being many, are one bread and one body, forſomuch as we all are partakers of one bread. But in the Maſſe the Lords inſtitution is not obſerved; for we are not all partakers of one bread, but one devoureth all, &c. So that (as it is uſed) it may ſeeme a Sacrament of ſingularity, and of a certain ſpeciall priviledge for one ſect of people, whereby they may be diſcerned from the reſt, rather then a Sacrament of unity, wherein our knitting together in one is repreſented.

H. Latimer.

Yea, what fellowſhip hath Chriſt with Antichriſt? Therefore is it not lawfull to beare the yoke with Papiſts. Come forth from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves from them, ſaith the Lord. It is one thing to be the Church indeed, another thing to counterfeit the Church. Would God it were well known what is the forſaking of the Church. In the Kings daies that dead is, who was the Church of England? The King and his fautors, or Maſſemongers in corners? If the King and the fautors of his proceedings, why be not we now the Church abiding in the ſame proceedings? If clanculary Maſſemongers might be of the Church, and yet contrary to the Kings proceedings, why may not we as well be of the Church contrarying the Queens proceedings? Not all that be covered with the title of the Church, are the Church indeed. Separate thy ſelf from them that are ſuch, ſaith S. Paul; from whom? The text hath before. If any man follow other doctrine, &c. he is puft up, and knoweth nothing, &c. Weigh the whole text, that ye may perceive what is the fruit of contentious diſputations. But wherefore are ſuch men ſaid to know nothing, when they know ſo many things? You know the old Verſes,

That is, This is to be ignorant, to know many things without Chriſt. If thou knoweſt Chriſt well, thou knoweſt enough, though thou know no more. Therefore would S. Paul know nothing but Jeſus Chriſt crucified, &c. As many as are Papiſts and Maſſemongers, they may well be ſaid to know nothing. For they know not Chriſt, foraſmuch as in their maſſing they take much away from the benefit and merit of Chriſt.

1 Cor. 2.

Anton. object. 6.

That Chriſt which you have deſcribed unto me is inviſible, but Chriſts Church is viſible and known. For elſe why would Chriſt have ſaid, Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell it unto the Church. For he had commanded in vaine to go unto the Church, if a man cannot tell which it is.

M. Ridleys anſwer.

The Church which I have deſcribed is viſible, it hath members which may be ſeen, and alſo I have afore declared, by what markes and tokens it may be known. But if either our eyes are ſo dazeled, that we cannot ſee, or that Satan hath brought ſuch darkneſſe into the world, that it is hard to diſcern the true Church; that is not the fault of the Church, but either of our blindneſſe, or of Satans darkneſſe. But yet in this moſt deep darkneſſe there is one moſt cleer candle, which of it ſelf alone is able to put away all darkneſſe. Thy word is a candle unto my feete, and a light unto my ſteps.

Anton. object. 7.

The Church of Chriſt is a Catholike or univerſall Church, diſperſed throughout the whole world; this Church is the great houſe of God, in this are good men and evill mingled together, goats and ſheep, corn and chaffe; it is the net which gathereth all kinde of fiſhes: this Church cannot erre, becauſe Chriſt hath promiſed it his ſpirit, which ſhall leade it into all truth, and that the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it; that he will be with it unto the end of the world; whatſoever it ſhall looſe or binde upon earth, ſhall be ratified in heaven, &c. This Church is the pillar and ſtay of the truth; this is it for the which Saint Auguſtine ſaith, he beleeveth the Goſpel. But this univerſall Church alloweth the Maſſe, becauſe the more part of the ſame alloweth it. Therefore, &c.

M. Ridleys anſwer.

I grant that the name of the Church is taken after three divers manners in the Scriptures. Sometime for the whole multitude of them which profeſſe the name of Chriſt, of the which they are alſo named Chriſtians. But as S. Paul ſaith of the Jew, not every one is a Jew, that is a Jew outwardly, &c. Neither yet all that be of Iſrael, are counted the ſeed; even ſo not every one which is a Chriſtian outwardly, is a Chriſtian indeed. For if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is none of his. Therefore that Church which is his body, and of which Chriſt is the head, ſtandeth onely in living ſtones, and true Chriſtians, not onely outwardly in name and title, but inwardly in heart and in truth. But forſomuch as this Church (which is the ſecond taking of the Church) as touching the outward fellowſhip, is contained within the great houſe, and hath with the ſame, outward ſociety of the Sacraments and miniſtery of the Word, many things are ſpoken of that Univerſall Church (which S. Auguſtine calleth the mingled Church) which cannot truly be underſtood, but only of that pure part of the Church. So that the rule of Ticonius concerning the mingled Church, may here well take place; where there is attributed unto the whole Church that which cannot agree unto the ſame, but by reaſon of the one part thereof; that is, either for the multitude of good men, which is the very true Church indeed; or for the multitude of evill men, which is the malignant Church and Synagogue of Satan. And there is alſo a third taking of the Church; of the which, although there be ſeldomer mention in the Scriptures, in that ſignification, yet in the world, even in the moſt famous aſſemblies of Chriſtendome, this Church hath borne the greateſt ſwinge. This diſtinction preſuppoſed of the three ſorts of Churches, it is an eaſie matter, by a figure called Synecdoche, to give to the mingled and Univerſall Church, that which cannot truly be underſtood but onely of the one part thereof. But if any man will ſtiffely affirm, that Univerſall doth ſo pertain unto Church, that whatſoever Chriſt hath promiſed to the Church, it muſt needs be underſtood of that, I would gladly know of the ſame man, where that univerſall Church was in the times of the Patriarkes and Prophets, of Noah, Abraham, and Moſes, (at ſuch time as the people would have ſtoned him) of Helias, of Ieremy, in the times of Chriſt, and the diſperſion of the Apoſtles, in the time of Arius, when Conſtantius was Emperour, and Felix Biſhop of Rome ſucceeded Liberius. It is worthy to be noted, that Lyra writeth upon Matthew; The Church (ſaith he) doth not ſtand in men by reaſon of their power or dignity, whether it be Eccleſiaſticall or ſecular. For many Princes and Popes, and other inferiours, have been found to have faln away from God. Therefore the Church conſiſteth in thoſe perſons, in whom is true knowledge and confeſſion of the faith, and of the truth. Evill men (as it is in a gloſſe of the decrees) are in the Church in name, and not indeed. And Saint Auguſtine, contra Creſconium grammaticum, ſaith; Whoſoever is affraid to be deceived by the darkneſſe of this queſtion, let him ask counſell at the ſame Church of it; which Church the Scripture doth point out without any doubtfulneſſe. All my notes which I have written and gathered out of ſuch Authors as I have reade in this matter, and ſuch like, are come into the hands of ſuch, as will not let me have the leaſt of all my written bookes; wherein I am inforced to complain of them unto God: for they ſpoile me of all my labours, which I have taken in my ſtudy theſe many yeers. My memory was never good, for help whereof I have uſed for the moſt part to gather out notes of my reading, and ſo to place them, that thereby I might have had the uſe of them when the time required. But who knoweth whether this be Gods will, that I ſhould be thus ordered, and ſpoiled of the poore learning I had (as me thought) in ſtore, to the intent that I now deſtitute of that, ſhould from henceforth learn onely to know with Paul, Chriſt, and him crucified? The Lord grant me herein to be a good young Scholler, and to learn this leſſon ſo well, that neither death nor life, wealth nor wo, &c. make me ever to forget that, Amen, Amen.

Mel. de eccleſ.

I have no more to ſay in this matter; for you your ſelf have ſaid all that is to be ſaid. That ſame vehement ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, I would not beleeve the Goſpel, &c. was wont to trouble many men; as I remember, I have reade it well qualified of Philip Melanchthon; but my memory is altogether ſlippery. This it is in effect; The Church is not a Iudge, but a witneſſe. There were in his time that lightly eſteemed the teſtimony of the Church, and the outward miniſtery of Preaching, and rejected the outward word it ſelf, ſticking onely to their inward revelations. Such raſh contempt of the word provoked and drave Saint Auguſtine into that exceſſive vehemency. In the which after the bare ſound of the words, he might ſeem to ſuch as do not attain unto his meaning, that he preferred the Church farre before the Goſpel, and that the Church hath a free authority over the ſame; but that godly man never thought ſo. It were a ſaying worthy to be brought forth againſt the Anabaptiſts, which think the open miniſtery to be a thing not neceſſary, if they any thing eſteemed ſuch teſtimonies. I would not ſtick to affirm, that the more part of the great houſe, that is to ſay, of the whole Univerſall Church, may eaſily erre. And again, I would not ſtick to affirm, that it is one thing to be gathered together in the Name of Chriſt, and another thing to come together with a Maſſe of the holy Ghoſt going before. For in the firſt Chriſt ruleth, in the later the Divell beareth the ſwing; and how then can any thing be good that they go about? From this later ſhall our ſix Articles come forth again into the light, they themſelves being very darkneſſe. But it is demnanded, whether the ſounder or better part of the Catholike Church may be ſeen of men, or no? Saint Paul ſaith; The Lord knoweth them that are his. What manner of ſpeaking is this in commendation of the Lord, if we knew as well as he who are his? Well, thus is the text; The ſure foundation of God ſtandeth ſtill, and hath this ſeal, the Lord knoweth them that are his; and let every man that nameth the name of Chriſt depart from iniquity. Now how many are there of the whole Catholike Church of England which depart from iniquity? How many of the Noble men, how many of the Biſhops or Clergy, how many of the rich men, or Merchants, how many of the Queens Counſellors, yea, how many of the whole Realm? In how ſmall room then I pray you is the true Church within the Realm of England? And where is it? And in what ſtate? I had a conceit of mine own well grounded (as they ſay) when I began, but now it is faln by the way.

Generall Councels repreſent the Univerſall Church, and have this promiſe of Chriſt; Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the middeſt of them. If Chriſt be preſent with two or three, then much more where there is ſo great a multitude, &c. But in generall Councels Maſſe hath been approved and uſed: Therefore, &c.

N. Ridleys anſwer.

Of the Univerſall Church, which is mingled of good and bad, thus I think; Whenſoever they which be chief in it, which rule and govern the ſame, and to whom the whole miſticall body of Chriſt doth obey, are the lively members of Chriſt, and walk after the guiding and rule of his Word, and go before the flock towards everlaſting life, then undoubtedly Councels gathered together of ſuch guides and paſtours of the Chriſtian flock, do indeed repreſent the Univerſall Church, and being ſo gathered in the name of Chriſt, they have a promiſe of the gift and guiding of his ſpirit into all truth. But that any ſuch Councell hath at any time allowed the Maſſe, ſuch a one as ours was of late, in a ſtrange tongue, and ſtuffed with ſo many abſurdities, errours, and ſuperſtitions; that I utterly deny, and affirm it to be impoſſible. For like as there is no agreement betwixt light and darkneſſe, between Chriſt and Belial; ſo ſurely ſuperſtition and the ſincere religion of Chriſt, will-worſhip and the pure worſhipping of God, ſuch as God requireth of his, that is, in ſpirit and truth, can never agree together. But ye will ſay, where ſo great company is gathered together, it is not credible but there be two or three gathered in the name of Chriſt. I anſwer; If there be one hundred good, and two hundred bad (forſomuch as the decrees and ordinances are pronounced according to the greater number of the multitude of voices) what can the leſſe number of voices avail? It is a known thing, and a common Proverb; Oftentimes the greater part overcometh the better.

A Proverb

H. Latimer.

As touching generall Councels, at this preſent I have no more to ſay, then you have ſaid. Onely I referre you to your own experience, to think of our Country Parliaments and Convocations, how and what ye have ſeen and heard. The more part in my time did bring forth ſix Articles; for then the King would ſo have it, being ſeduced of certain. Afterward the more part did repell the ſame, our good Ioſias willing to have it ſo. The ſame Articles now again (alas) another great, but worſe part hath reſtored. Oh what an uncertainty is this? But after this ſort moſt commonly are mans proceedings, God be mercifull unto us. Who ſhall deliver us from ſuch torments of minde? Therefore is death the beſt Phyſitian, but unto the faithfull, whom ſhe together and at once delivereth from all griefs. You muſt think this written upon this occaſion, becauſe you would needs have your paper blotted.

Death is the beſt Phyſitian to the faithfull.

Anton. object. 9.

If the matter ſhould go thus, that in generall Councels men ſhould not ſtand to the more number of the multitude (I mean of them which ought to give voices) then ſhould no certain rule be left unto the Church, by the which controverſies in weighty matters might be determined; but it is not to be beleeved, that Chriſt would leave his Church deſtitute of ſo neceſſary a help and ſafegard.

Nich. Ridleys anſwer. Epheſ. 5.

Chriſt, who is the moſt loving ſpouſe of his eſpouſe the Church, who alſo gave himſelf for it, that he might ſanctifie it unto himſelf, did give unto it abundantly all things which are neceſſary to ſalvation; but yet ſo, that the Church ſhould declare it ſelf obedient unto him in all things, and keep it ſelf within the bounds of his commandements, and further not to ſeek any thing which he teacheth not, as neceſſary unto ſalvation. Now further, for determination of all controverſies in Chriſts religion, Chriſt himſelf hath left unto the Church not onely Moſes and the Prophets, whom he willeth his Church in all doubts to go unto, and ask counſell at, but alſo the Goſpels, and the reſt of the body of the New Teſtament; in the which whatſoever is heard of Moſes and the Prophets, and whatſoever is neceſſary to be known unto ſalvation, is revealed and opened.

Luke 13. Iſaiah 8.

Rom. 10.

So that now we have no need to ſay, Who ſhall climb up into heaven, or who ſhall go down into the depth, to tell us what is needfull to be done? Chriſt hath done both, and hath commended unto us the Word of faith, which alſo is abundantly declared unto us in his Word written; ſo that hereafter if we walk earneſtly in this way, to the ſearching out of the truth, it is not to be doubted, but through the certain benefit of Chriſts Spirit, which he hath promiſed unto his, we may finde it, and obtain everlaſting life. Should men ask counſell of the dead for the living, ſaith Iſaiah? Let them go rather to the Law and to the Teſtimony, &c. Chriſt ſendeth them that be deſirous to know the truth, unto the Scriptures, ſaying, Search the Scriptures. I remember a like thing well ſpoken of Hierome; Ignorance of the Scriptures, is the mother and cauſe of all errours. And in another place, as I remember in the ſame author; The knowledge of the Scriptures, is the food of everlaſting life. But now me thinketh I enter into a very broad Sea, in that I begin to ſhew, either out of the Scriptures themſelves, or out of the ancient Writers, how much the holy Scripture is of force to teach the truth of our religion. But this is it, that I am now about, that Chriſt would have the Church his Spouſe in all doubts to aske counſell at the Word of his Father written, and faithfully left, and commended unto it in both Teſtaments, the Old and the New. Neither do we read, that Chriſt in any place hath laid ſo great a burthen upon the members of his ſpouſe, that he hath commanded them to go to the Univerſall Church. Whatſoever things are written, ſaith Paul, are written for our learning. And it is true, that Chriſt gave unto his Church, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome ſhepherds and teachers, to the edifying of the Saints, till we come all to the unity of faith, &c.

But that all men ſhould meet together out of all parts of the world, to define of the Articles of our faith, I neither finde it commanded of Chriſt, nor written in the Word of God.

H. Latimer. 2 Tim. 3.

There is diverſity betwixt things pertaining to God or faith, and politick and civill matters. For in the firſt we muſt ſtand onely to the Scriptures, which are able to make us all perfect and inſtructed unto ſalvation, if they well be underſtood. And they offer themſelves to be well underſtood onely to them, which have good wils, and give themſelves to ſtudy and prayer. Neither are there any men leſſe apt to underſtand them, then the prudent and wiſe men of the world. But in the other, that is, in civill or politick matters, oftentimes the Magiſtrates do tolerate a leſſe evill, for avoiding of a greater, as they which have this ſaying oft in their mouthes; Better an inconvenience then a miſchief. And it is the property of a wiſe man, ſaith one, to diſſemble many things; and he that cannot diſſemble, cannot rule. In which ſayings they bewray themſelves, that they do not earneſtly weigh what is juſt, what is not. Wherefore forſomuch as mans lawes, if it be but in this reſpect onely, that they be deviſed by men, are not able to bring any thing to perfection, but are inforced of neceſſity to ſuffer many things out of ſquare, and are compelled ſometime to winke at the worſt things, ſeeing they know not how to maintain the common peace and quiet otherwiſe, they do ordain that the more part ſhall take place. You know what theſe kindes of ſpeeches mean, I ſpeak after the manner of men; ye walk after the manner of men, all men are lyers. And that of S. Auguſtine, If ye live after mans reaſon, ye do not live after the will of God.

Anton. object. 10.

If ye ſay that Councels have ſometime erred, or may erre, how then ſhould we beleeve the Catholike Church? for that Councels are gathered by the authority of the Catholike Church.

N. Ridleys anſwer.

From may be, to be indeed, is no good argument; but from being, to may be, no man doubteth but it is a moſt ſure argument. But now that Councels have ſometime erred, it is manifeſt. How many Councels were there in the Eaſt parts of the world, which condemned the Nicene Councell? and all thoſe which would not forſake the ſame, they called by a ſlanderous name (as they thought) Homouſians. Was not Athanaſius, Chryſoſtome, Cyril, Euſtachius, men very well learned, and of godly life, baniſhed and condemned as famous heretickes, and that by wicked Councels? How many things are there in the Canons and Conſtitutions of the Councels, which the Papiſts themſelves do much miſlike? But here peradventure one man will ſay unto me; We will grant you this in provinciall Councels, or Councels of ſome one nation, that they may ſometimes erre, forſomuch as they do not repreſent the Univerſall Church; but it is not to be beleeved, that the generall and full Councels have erred at any time. Here if I had my Books of the Councels, or rather ſuch notes as I have gathered out of thoſe Books, I could bring ſomething which ſhould ſerve for this purpoſe. But now ſeeing I have them not, I will recite one place onely out of S. Auſten, which (in my judgement) may ſuffice in this matter in ſtead of many. Who knoweth not (ſaith he) that the holy Scripture is ſo ſet before us, that it is not lawfull to doubt of it, and that the letters of Biſhops may be reproved by other mens words, and by Councels; and that the Councels themſelves which are gathered by Provinces and Countries, do give place to the authority of the generall and full Councels; and that the former and generall Councels are amended ded by the later, when as by ſome experience of things, either that which was ſhut up, is opened, or that which was hid, is known. Thus much out of Auguſtine. But I will pleade with our Antoman, upon matter confeſſed. Here with us when as Papiſtry reigned, I pray you how doth that book, which was called the Biſhops Book, made in the time of King Henry the eighth, whereof the Biſhop of Wincheſter is thought to be either the firſt father, or chief gatherer; how doth it (I ſay) ſharply reprove the Florentine Councell, in which was decreed the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, and that with the conſent of the Emperour of Conſtantinople, and of the Grecians? So that in thoſe dayes our learned ancient Fathers and Biſhops of England did not ſtick to affirm, that a generall Councell might erre. But me think I hear another man deſpiſing all that I have brought forth, and ſaying, Theſe which you have called Councels, are not worthy to be called Councels, but rather Aſſemblies, and Conventicles of Heretickes. I pray you ſir, why do you judge them worthy of ſo ſlanderous a name? Becauſe (ſaith he) they decreed things hereticall; contrary to true godlineſſe and ſound doctrine, and againſt the faith of Chriſtian religion. The cauſe is weighty, for the which they ought of right ſo to be called. But if it be ſo that all Councels ought to be deſpiſed, which decree any thing contrary to ſound doctrine, and the true Word, which is according to godlineſſe, forſomuch as the Maſſe, ſuch as we had here of late, is openly againſt the Word of God; forſooth it muſt follow of neceſsity, that all ſuch Councels, as have approved ſuch Maſſes, ought of right to be fled and deſpiſed, as conventicles and aſſemblies of men that ſtray from the truth.

The Biſhop of Romes authority.

Another man alledgeth unto me the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, without which, neither can the Councels (ſaith he) be lawfully gathered, neither being gathered determine any thing concerning religion. But this objection is onely grounded upon the ambitious and ſhameleſſe maintainance of the Romiſh tyranny, and uſurped dominion over the Clergy, which tyranny we Engliſh men long ago, by the conſent of the whole Realm, have expulſed and abjured. And how rightly we have done it, a little book ſet forth de utraque poteſtate (that is, of both the powers) doth cleerly ſhew. I grant that the Romiſh ambition hath gone about to challenge to it ſelf and to uſurpe ſuch a priviledge of old time. But the Councell of Carthage, in the yeer of our Lord 457. did openly withſtand it, and alſo the Councell at Milevite, in the which S. Auguſtine was preſent, did prohibite any appellations to be made to Biſhops beyond the Sea.

I ſpeak nothing of the goodneſſe or evilneſſe of your congregations; but I fight in Chriſts quarrell againſt the Maſſe, which doth utterly take away and overthrow the ordinance of Chriſt. Let that be taken quite away, and then the partition of the wall that made the ſtrife, ſhall be broken down. Now to the place of S. It is perillous to attempt any new thing in the Church, which lacketh example of good men. How much more perillous is it to commit any act, unto the which the example of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtles are contrary? But unto this your fact, in abſtaining from the Church by reaſon of the Maſſe, the example of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtles are clean contrary: Therefore, &c. The firſt part of the argument is evident, and the ſecond part I prove thus. In the times of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, all things were moſt corrupt. The people was miſerably given to ſuperſtition, the Prieſts deſpiſed the Law of God; and yet notwithſtanding we read not that Prophets made any ſchiſmes or diviſions, and Chriſt himſelf haunted the Temple, and taught in the Temple of the Jews. Peter and John went up into the Temple at the ninth houre of prayer; Paul after the reading of the law, being deſired to ſay ſomething to the people, did not refuſe to do it. Yea further, no man can ſhew, that either the Prophets, or Chriſt, and his Apoſtles did refuſe to pray together with others, to ſacrifice, or to be partakers of the Sacraments of Moſes Law.

N. Ridleys anſwer.

I grant the former part of your argument, and to the ſecond part I ſay, that although it contain many true things, as of the corrupt ſtate in the times of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and the Apoſtles, and of the Temple being haunted of Chriſt and his Apoſtles; yet notwithſtanding the ſecond part of your argument is not ſufficiently proved: For ye ought to have proved, that either the Prophets, either Chriſt or his Apoſtles did in the Temple communicate with the people in any kinde of worſhipping, which is forbidden by the Law of God, or repugnant to the Word of God. But that can no where be ſhewed. And as for the Church, I am not angry with it, and I never refuſed to go to it, and to pray with the people, to hear the Word of God, and to do all other things whatſoever may agree with the Word of God. S. Auſten ſpeaking of the ceremonies of the Jews (I ſuppoſe in the Epiſtle ad Ianuarium) although he grant they grievouſly oppreſſed that people, both for the number, and bondage of the ſame, yet he calleth them burdens of the Law, which were delivered unto them in the Word of God, not preſumptions of men, which notwithſtanding if they were not contrary to Gods Word, might after a ſort be borne withall. But now, ſeeing they are contrary to thoſe things which are in the Word of God written, whether they ought to be borne of any Chriſtian or no, let him judge which is ſpirituall, which feareth God more then man, and loveth everlaſting life more then this ſhort and tranſitory life. To that which was ſaid, that my fact lacketh example of the godly Fathers that have gone before, the contrary is moſt evident in the hiſtory of Toby. Of whom it is ſaid, that when all other went to the golden Calves, which Jeroboam the King of Iſrael had made, he himſelf alone fled all their companies, and got him to Jeruſalem unto the Temple of the Lord, and there worſhipped the Lord God of Iſrael. Did not the man of God threaten grievous plagues both unto the Prieſts of Bethel, and to the Altar which Jeroboam had there made after his own fantaſie? Which plagues King Joſias, the true Miniſter of God, did execute at the time appointed. And where do we reade, that the Prophets or the Apoſtles did agree with the people in their Idolatry? When as the people went a whoring with their hill-altars, for what cauſe I pray you did the Prophets rebuke the people ſo much, as for their falſe worſhipping of God after their own mindes, and not after Gods Word? For what was ſo much as that was? Wherefore the falſe Prophets ceaſed not to maligne the true Prophets of God: therefore they beate them, they baniſhed them, &c. Judith that holy woman, would not ſuffer her ſelf to be defiled with the meats of the wicked. All the Saints of God, which truly feared God, when they have been provoked to do any thing which they knew to be contrary to Gods laws, have choſen to die, rather then to forſake the laws of their God. Wherefore the Macchabees put themſelves in danger of death for the defence of the law, yea and at length died manfully in the defence of the ſame. If we do praiſe (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) the Macchabees, and that with great admiration, becauſe they did ſtoutly ſtand even unto death, for the lawes of their Country; how much more ought we to ſuffer all things for our Baptiſme, for the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt, &c. But the Supper of the Lord, ſuch a one (I mean) as Chriſt commandeth us to celebrate, the Maſſe utterly aboliſheth, and corrupteth moſt ſhamefully.

H. Latimer.

Who am I, that I ſhould adde any thing to this which you have ſo well ſpoken? Nay, I rather thank you, that you have vouchſafed to miniſter ſo plentifull armour to me, being otherwiſe altogether unarmed, ſaving that he cannot be left deſtitute of help, which rightly truſteth in the help of God, I onely learn to die in reading of the New Teſtament, and am ever now and then praying unto my God, that he will be an helper unto me in time of need.

Pſal. 9.

Anton. object. 13.

Seeing you are ſo obſtinately ſet againſt the Maſſe, that you affirm, becauſe it is done in a tongue not underſtood of the people, and for other cauſes, I cannot tell what; therefore it is not the true Sacrament ordained of Chriſt: I begin to ſuſpect you, that you think not Catholikely of Baptiſme alſo. Is our Baptiſme, which we do uſe in a tongue unknown to the people, the true Baptiſme of Chriſt, or no? If it be, then doth not the ſtrange tongue hurt the Maſſe. If it be not the Baptiſme of Chriſt, tell me how were you baptized? Or whether will ye (as the Anabaptiſts do) that all which were baptized in Latine, ſhould be baptized again in the Engliſh tongue?

N. Ridleys anſwer.

Although I would wiſh Baptiſme to be given in the vulgar tongue for the peoples ſake which are preſent, that they may the better underſtand their own profeſsion, and alſo be more able to teach their children the ſame, yet notwithſtanding there is not like neceſsity of the vulgar tongue in Baptiſme, as in the Lords Supper. Baptiſme is given to children, who by reaſon of their age are not able to underſtand what is ſpoken unto them, what tongue ſoever it be. The Lords Supper is, and ought to be given to them that are waxen. Moreover, in Baptiſme which is accuſtomed to be given to children in the Latine tongue, all the ſubſtantiall points (as a man would ſay) which Chriſt commanded to be done, are obſerved. And therefore I judge that Baptiſme to be a perfect and true Baptiſme; and that it is not only not needfull, but alſo not lawfull for any man ſo chriſtened, to be chriſtened again. But yet notwithſtanding, they ought to be taught the Catechiſme of the Chriſtian faith, when they ſhall come to yeers of diſcretion; which Catechiſme whoſoever deſpiſeth, or will not deſirouſly imbrace and willingly learn, in my judgement he playeth not the part of a Chriſtian man. But in the Popiſh Maſſe are wanting certain ſubſtantials, that is to ſay, things commanded by the Word of God to be obſerved in the miniſtration of the Lords Supper; of the which there is ſufficient declaration made before.

H. Latimer.

Where you ſay (I would wiſh) ſurely I would wiſh that you had ſpoken more vehemently, and to have ſaid, it is of neceſſity, that all things in the congregation ſhould be done in the vulgar tongue, for the edifying and comfort of them that are preſent, notwithſtanding that the childe it ſelfe is ſufficiently baptized in the Latine tongue.

Ant object. 14.

Foraſmuch as I perceive you are ſo ſtiffely, I will not ſay obſtinately bent, and ſo wedded to your opinion, that no gentle exhortations, no wholſome counſels, no other kinde of means can call you home to a better minde, there remaineth that which in like caſes was wont to be the onely remedy againſt ſtiffe-necked and ſtubborn perſons, that is, you muſt be hampered by the laws, and compelled either to obey whether ye will or no, or elſe to ſuffer that, which a rebel to the laws ought to ſuffer. Do you not know that whoſoever refuſeth to obey the laws of the Realm, he bewrayeth himſelf to be an enemy to his countrey? Do you not know that this is the readieſt way to ſtirre up ſedition and civill warre? It is better that you ſhould bear your own ſin, than that through the example of your breach of the common laws, the common quiet ſhould be diſturbed. How can you ſay, you will be the Queens true ſubject, when as you do openly profeſſe that you will not keep her laws?

N. Ridleys anſwer.

O heavenly Father, the Father of all wiſdom, underſtanding, and true ſtrength, I beſeech thee for thy onely Son our Saviour Chriſts ſake, look mercifully upon me wretched creature, and ſend thine holy Spirit into my breſt, that not onely I may underſtand according to thy wiſedom, how this peſtilent and deadly dart is to be born off, and with what anſwer it is to be beaten back, but alſo when I muſt joyn to fight in the field for the glory of thy Name, that then I being ſtrengthened with the defence of thy right hand, may manfully ſtand in the confeſſion of thy faith, and of thy truth, and continue in the ſame unto the end of my life, through the ſame our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

Now to the objection. I grant it to be reaſonable, that he which by words and gentleneſſe cannot be made to yeeld to that is right and good, ſhould be bridled by the ſtrait correction of the laws: that is to ſay, he that will not be ſubject to Gods Word, muſt be puniſhed by the laws. It is true that is commonly ſaid, He that will not obey the Goſpel, muſt be tamed and taught by the rigour of the law. But theſe things ought to take place againſt him, which refuſeth to do that is right and juſt, according to true godlineſſe, not againſt him, which cannot quietly bear ſuperſtitions, but doth hate and deteſt from his age ſuch kinde of proceedings, and that for the glory of the Name of God, To that which ye ſay, a tranſgreſſor of the common laws bewrayeth himſelf to be an enemy of his countrey, ſurely a man ought to look unto the nature of the laws, what manner of laws they be which are broken. For a faithfull Chriſtian ought not to think alike of all manner of laws. But that ſaying ought onely truely to be underſtood of ſuch laws as be not contrary to Gods Word. Otherwiſe, whoſoever love their countrey in truth (that is to ſay, in God) they will allwayes judge (if at any time the laws of God and man be then contrary to the other) that a man ought rather to obey God than man. And they that think otherwiſe, and pretend a love to their Country, forſomuch as they make their country to fight as it were againſt God, in whom conſiſteth the onely ſtay of that country, ſurely I do think that ſuch are to be judged moſt deadly enemies, and traytors to their country. For they that fight againſt God, which is the ſafety of their country, what do they elſe but go about to bring upon their country a preſent ruine and deſtruction? But they that do ſo are worthy to be judged enemies to their country, and betrayers of the Realm. Therefore, &c.

But this is the readieſt way (ye ſay) to ſtirre up ſedition, to trouble the quiet of the Common-wealth; therefore are theſe things to be repreſſed in time, by force of lawes. Behold, Satan doth not ceaſe to practiſe his old guiles, and accuſtomed ſubtleties. He hath ever this dart in a readineſſe to hurl againſt his adverſaries, to accuſe them of ſedition, that he may bring them (if he can) in danger of the higher powers. For ſo hath he by his Miniſters alwayes charged the Prophets of God. Achab ſaid unto Elias; Art thou he that troubleth Iſrael? The falſe Prophets alſo complained to their Princes of Jeremy, that his words were ſeditious, and not to be ſuffered: Did not the Scribes and Phariſees falſly accuſe Chriſt as a ſeditious perſon, and one that ſpake againſt Ceſar? Did they not at the laſt cry, If you let this man go, ye are not Ceſars friend? The Orator Tertullus, how doth he accuſe Paul before Felix the high Deputy? We have found this man, ſaith he, a peſtilent fellow, and a ſtirrer of ſedition, unto all the Jews in the whole world, &c. But I pray you were theſe men, as they were called, ſeditious perſons? Chriſt, Paul and the Prophets? God forbid. But they were of falſe men falſly accuſed. And wherefore I pray you? but becauſe they reproved before the people their guiles, ſuperſtition, and deceits. And when the other could not bear it, and would gladly have had them taken out of the way, they accuſed them as ſeditious perſons, and troublers of the Common-wealth, that being by this means made hatefull to the people and Princes, they might the more eaſily be ſnatched up to be tormented, and put to death. But how farre they were from all ſedition, their whole doctrine, life, and converſation doth well declare. For that which was objected laſt of all, that he cannot be a faithfull ſubject to his Prince, which profeſſeth openly that he will not obſerve the laws which the Prince hath made; here I would wiſh that I might have an indifferent Judge, and one that feareth God, to whoſe judgement in this cauſe I promiſe I will ſtand. I anſwer therefore, a man ought to obey his Prince, but in the Lord, and never againſt the Lord. For he that knowingly obeyeth his Prince againſt God, doth not a duty to the Prince, but is a deceiver of the Prince, and an helper unto him to work his own deſtruction. He is alſo unjuſt, which giveth not to the Prince that is the Princes, and to God that is Gods. Here cometh to my remembrance, that notable ſaying of Valentinianus the Emperour for chaſing the Biſhop of Millain. Set him (ſaith he) in the Biſhops ſeate, to whom if we (as man) do offend at any time, we may ſubmit our ſelves. Policarpus the moſt conſtant Martyr, when he ſtood before the chief Ruler, and was commanded to blaſpheme Chriſt, and to ſwear by the fortune of Ceſar, &c. he anſwered with a milde ſpirit; We are taught (ſaith he) to give honour unto Princes, and thoſe powers which be of God; but ſuch honour as is not contrary to Gods religion.

Satan and his miniſters do alwayes charge the godly with ſedition.

Hitherto ye ſee (good Father) how I have in words only made as it were a flouriſh before the fight, which I ſhortly look after, and how I have begun to prepare certain kindes of weapons to fight againſt the adverſary of Chriſt, and to muſe with my ſelf how the darts of the old enemy may be born off, and after what ſort I may ſmite him again with the ſword of the Spirit. I learn alſo hereby to be in ure with armour, and to aſſay how I can go armed. In Tindall where I was born, not far from the Scottiſh borders, I have known my countrey-men to watch night and day in their harneſſe, ſuch as they had, that is, in their Jacks, and their Spears in their hands (you call them Northern gads) eſpecially when they had any privy warning of the coming of the Scots. And ſo doing, although at every ſuch bickerings ſome of them ſpent their lives, yet by ſuch means, like pretty men, they defended their countrey. And thoſe that ſo died, I think that before God they died in a good quarrell, and their off-ſpring and progeny all the countrey loved them the better for their fathers ſake. And in the quarrell of Chriſt our Saviour, in the defence of his own divine ordinances, by the which he giveth unto us life and immortality; yea, in the quarrell of faith, and Chriſtian religion, wherein reſteth our everlaſting ſalvation, ſhall we not watch? ſhall we not go alwayes armed? ever looking when our adverſary (which like a roaring Lion ſeeketh whom he may devour) ſhall come upon us by reaſon of our ſlothfulneſſe? yea, and woe be unto us, if he can oppreſſe us unawares, which undoubtedly he will do, if he finde us ſleeping. Let us awake therefore. For if the good man of the houſe knew at what hour the thief ſhould come, he would ſurely watch, and not ſuffer his houſe to be broken up. Let us awake therefore, I ſay: Let us not ſuffer our houſe to be broken up. Reſiſt the devill, ſaith Saint James, and he will flie from you. Let us therefore reſiſt him manfully, and taking the croſſe upon our ſhoulders, let us follow our Captain Chriſt, who by his own blood hath dedicated and hallowed the way which leadeth unto the Father, that is, to the light which no man can attain, the fountain of the everlaſting joyes. Let us follow, I ſay, whither he calleth and allureth us, that after theſe aflictions which laſt but for a moment, whereby he trieth our faith, as gold by the fire, we may everlaſtingly raign and triumph with him in the glory of the Father, and that through the ſame our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; to whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glory, now and for ever, Amen, Amen.

Good father, forſomuch as I have determined with my ſelf, to pour forth theſe my cogitations into your boſome, here me thinketh I ſee you ſuddenly lifting up your head towards heaven, after your manner, and then looking upon me with your Propheticall countenance, and ſpeaking unto me, with theſe or like words; Truſt not, my ſonne (I beſeech you vouchſafe me the honour of this name; for in ſo doing I ſhall think my ſelf both honoured, and loved of you.) Truſt not, I ſay, my ſonne, to theſe word-weapons; for the Kingdom of God is not in words, but in power. And remember alwayes the words of the Lord. Do not imagine aforehand, what and how you will ſpeak: for it ſhall be given you, even in that ſame hour what ye ſhall ſpeak. For it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Spirit of your Father which ſpeaketh in you. I pray you therefore father pray for me, that I may caſt my whole care upon him, and truſt upon him in all perils. For I know, and am ſurely perſwaded, that whatſoever I can imagine or think aforehand, it is nothing, except he aſſiſt me with his ſpirit when the time is. I beſeech you therefore father, pray for me, me, that ſuch accomplete harneſſe of the ſpirit, ſuch boldneſſe of minde may be given unto me, that I may out of a true faith ſay with David; I will not truſt in my bow, and it is not my ſword that ſhall ſave me. For he hath no pleaſure in the ſtrength of an horſe, &c. But the Lords delight is in them that fear him, and put their truſt in his mercy. I beſeech you pray, pray, that I may enter this fight onely in the Name of God, and that when all is paſt, I being not overcome through his gracious aid, may remain and ſtand faſt in him, till that day of the Lord, in the which to them that obtain the victory ſhall be given the lively Manna to eat, and a triumphant crown for evermore.

Apoc.2.

Now Father, I pray you help me to buckle on this gear a little better. For ye know the deepneſſe of Sathan, being an old ſouldier, and you have collored with him ere now: bleſſed be God, that hath ever aided you ſo well. I ſuppoſe he may well hold you at the bay. But truely he will not be ſo willing (I think) to joyn with you as with us yonglings.

D.Latimer.

Sir, I beſeech you, let your ſervant reade this my babling unto you, and now and then, as it ſhall ſeem unto you beſt, let your pen runne on my book; ſpare not to blot my paper: I give you good leave.

Sir, I have cauſed my man not onely to reade your armour unto me, but alſo to write it out. For it is not onely no bare armour, but alſo well buckled armour. I ſee not how it could be better. I thank you even from the bottome of my heart for it, and my prayer ſhall you not lack, truſting that you do the like for me. For indeed there is the help, &c. Many things make confuſion in memory. And if I were learned as well as St. Paul, I would not beſtow much amongſt them, further than to gall them, and ſpur-gall too, when and whereas occaſion were given, and matter came to minde; for the law ſhall be their ſheet-anchor, ſtay, and refuge. Therefore there is no remedy; Namely, now when they have the maſter bowl in their hand, and rule the roſte, but patience. Better it is to ſuffer what cruelly they will put upon us, than to incurre Gods high indignation. Wherefore (good my Lord) be of good cheer in the Lord, with due conſideration what he requireth of you, and what he doth promiſe you. Our common enemy ſhall do no more than God will permit him. God is faithfull, which will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength, &c. Be at a point what ye will ſtand unto; ſtick unto that, and let them both ſay and do what they liſt. They can but kill the body, which otherwiſe is of it ſelf mortall. Neither yet ſhall they do that when they liſt, but when God will ſuffer them, when the hour appointed is come. To uſe many words with them it ſhall be but in vain, now that they have a bloody and deadly law prepared for them. But it is very requiſite that ye give a reaſonable account of your faith, if they will quietly hear you: elſe ye know in a wicked place of judgement a man may keep ſilence, after the example of Chriſt. Let them not deceive you with their ſophiſticall Sophiſmes and fallacies: you know that falſe things may have more appearance of truth, than things that be moſt true: therefore Paul giveth us a watch-word, Let no man deceive you with likelineſſe of ſpeech. Neither is it requiſite that with the contentious ye ſhould follow ſtrife of words, which tend to no edification, but to the ſubverſion of the hearers, and the vain bragging and oſtentation of the adverſaries. Fear of death doth moſt perſwade a great number. Be well ware of that argument; for that perſwaded Shaxton (as many men thought) after that he had once made a good profeſſion openly before the judgement ſeat. The fleſh is weak, but the willingneſſe of the ſpirit ſhall refreſh the weakneſſe of the fleſh.

The number of the criers under the altar muſt needs be fulfilled; if we be ſegregated thereunto, happy be we. That is the greateſt promotion that God giveth in this world, to be ſuch Philippians, to whom it is given not onely to beleeve, but alſo to ſuffer, &c. But who is able to do theſe things? Surely all our ability, all our ſufficiency is of God. He requireth and promiſeth. Let us declare our obedience to his will, when it ſhall be requiſite, in the time of trouble, yea, in the middeſt of the fire.

1 Theſ.5.
1 Theſ.4.

When that number is fulfilled, which I ween ſhall be ſhortly, then have at the Papiſts, when they ſhall ſay peace, all things are ſafe, when Chriſt ſhall come to keep his great Parliament to the redreſſe of all things that be amiſſe. But he ſhall not come as the Papiſts faign him, to hide himſelf, and to play bo-peep as it were under a piece of bread: but he ſhall come gloriouſly, to the terrour and fear of all Papiſts; but to the great conſolation and comfort of all that will here ſuffer for him. Comfort your ſelves one another with theſe words.

Lo ſir, here have I blotted your paper vainly, and played the fool egregiouſly; but ſo I thought better than not to do your requeſt at this time. Pardon me, and pray for me, pray for me, I ſay, pray for me, I ſay. For I am ſometime ſo fearfull, that I would creep into a Mouſe-hole; ſometime God doth viſit me again with his comfort. So he cometh and goeth, to teach me to feel and to know mine infirmity, to the intent to give thanks to him that is worthy, leſt I ſhould robbe him of his due, as many do, and almoſt all the world. Fare ye well.

What credence is to be given to Papiſts, it may appear by their wracking, writhing, wrinching, and monſtrouſly injurying of Gods holy Scripture, as appeareth in the Popes law. But I dwell here now in a ſchool of obliviouſneſſe. Fare you well once again, and be you ſtedfaſt and unmoveable in the Lord. Paul loved Timothy marvellous well, notwithſtanding he ſaith unto him; Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Goſpel; and again, Harden thy ſelf to ſuffer afflictions. Be faithfull unto the death, and I will give thee a crown of life, ſaith the Lord.

Apoc.2.

Here followeth the Letters of the reverend Biſhop and Martyr, Nicholas Ridley.

A Letter ſent from Biſhop Ridley, and his priſon-fellows unto Maſter Bradford and his priſon-fellows, in the Kings Bench in Southwark, Anno 1554.

A letter of B. Ridley to M. Bradford and others.

Welbeloved in Chriſt our Saviour, we all with one heart wiſh to you, with all thoſe that love God in deed and truth, grace, and health, and eſpecially to our dearly beloved companions which are in Chriſts cauſe, and the cauſe both of their brethren, and of their own ſalvation, to put their neck willingly under the yoke of Chriſts croſſe. How joyfull it was to us to hear the report of Doctor Taylor, and of his godly confeſſion, &c. I inſure you, it is hard for me to expreſſe.

Falſe reports ſpread by the [illegible] of the Papiſts.

Bleſſed be God, which was and is the giver of that, and of all godly ſtrength and ſtomack in the time of adverſity. As for the rumours that have or do go abroad, either of our relenting or maſſing, we truſt, that they which know God, and their duty towards their brethren in Chriſt, will not be too light of credence. For it is not the ſlanderers evill tongue, but a mans evill deed that can with God defile a man; and therefore with Gods grace, ye ſhall never have cauſe to do otherwiſe than ye ſay ye do: that is, not to doubt but that we will, by Gods grace, continue, &c. Like rumour as ye have heard of our coming to London, hath been here ſpread of the coming of certain learned men, priſoners, hither from London; but as yet we know no certainty whether of theſe rumours is, or ſhall be more true. Know you that we have you in our daily remembrance, and wiſh you and all the reſt of our foreſaid companions well in Chriſt.

This Letter ſeemeth to be written a little before, about the time of the burning of M. Rogers.

It ſhould do us much comfort, if we might have knowledge of the ſtate of the reſt of our moſt dearly beloved, which in this troubleſome time do ſtand in Chriſts cauſe, and in the defence of the truth thereof. Somewhat we have heard of Maſter Hoopers matter; but of the reſt never a deal. We long to hear of Father Crome, Doctor Sands, Maſter Saunders, Veron, Beacon, Rogers, &c. We are in good health, thanks be to God, and yet the manner of our intreating doth change as ſowre Ale doth in Summer. It is reported to us of our Keepers, that the Univerſity beareth us heavily. A cole chanced to fall in the night out of the chimney, and burnt a hole in the floor; and no more harm was done, the Bayliffs ſervant ſitting by the fire. Another night there chanced (as Maſter Bayliffs told us) a drunken fellow to multiply words, and for the ſame he was ſet in Bocardo. Upon theſe things (as is reported) there is riſen a rumour in the town and country about, that we ſhould have broken the priſon with ſuch violence, as if Maſter Bayliffs had not played the pretty men, we ſhould have made a ſcape. We had out of our priſon a wall that we might have walked upon, and our ſervants had liberty to go abroad in the town or fields, but now both they and we are reſtrained of both.

Whatſoever fault is done, the cauſe is laid upon the poor Chriſtians.

M. Ridley and his fellow priſoners in Bocardo, reſtrained of their liberty.

My Lord of Worceſter paſſed by thorow Oxford, but he did not viſit us. The ſame day began our reſtraint to be more, and the book of the Communion was taken from us by the Bayliffs, at the Majors commandement, as the Bayliffs did report to us. No man is licenſed to come unto us; afore they might, that would ſee us upon the wall, but that is ſo grudged at, and ſo evill reported, that we are now reſtrained, &c. Sir, bleſſed be God, with all our evill reports, grudges, and reſtraints, we are merry in God, and all our cure and care is and ſhall be (by Gods grace) to pleaſe and ſerve him, of whom we look and hope, after theſe temporall and momentany miſeries, to have eternall joy and perpetuall felicity with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, Peter and Paul, and all the heavenly company of the Angels in heaven, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. As yet there was never learned man, nor any Scholler, or other that viſited us ſince we came into Bocardo, which now in Oxford may be called a Colledge of “Quondams. For as ye know, we be no fewer than three, and I dare ſay, every one well contented with his portion, which I do reckon to be our heavenly Fathers fatherly good and gracious gift. Thus fare you well. We ſhall by Gods grace one day meet together, and be merry. The day aſſuredly approacheth apace; the Lord grant that it may ſhortly come. For before that day come, I fear me the world will wax worſe and worſe. But then all our enemies ſhall be overthrown, and troden under foot; righteouſneſſe and truth then ſhall have the victory, and bear the bell away, whereof the Lord grant us to be partakers, and all that love truely the truth.

The ingratitude of the Schollers in not viſiting the Biſhops in Bocardo.

“Bocardo a Colledge of Quondams.

We all pray you, as we can, to cauſe all our commendations to be made unto all ſuch as ye know did viſit us and you, when we were in the Tower, with their friendly remembrances and benefits. Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon and Miſtreſſe Warcup have not forgotten us, but ever ſince we came to Bocardo, with their charitable and friendly benevolence have comforted us: not that elſe we did lack (for God be bleſſed, he ever hitherto hath provided ſufficiently for us) but that is a great comfort, and an occaſion for us to bleſſe God, when we ſee that he maketh them ſo friendly to tender us, whom ſome of us were never familiarly acquainted withall.

The goodneſſe of Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon and Anne Warcup to help the Biſhops in Bocardo.

Yours in Chriſt, Nich. Ridley.

A Letter of Maſter Ridley, ſent to a Couſin of his.

GOds holy Spirit be with you now and ever, Amen.

Another Letter of B. Ridley to his Couſin.

When I call to remembrance (beloved Couſin) the ſtate of thoſe that for fear of trouble, either for loſſe of goods, will do in the ſight of the world thoſe things that they know and are aſſured are contrary to the will of God, I can do no leſſe but lament their caſe, being aſſured the end thereof will be ſo pitifull (without ſpeedy repentance) that I tremble and fear to have it in remembrance. I would to God it lay upon ſome earthly burden, ſo that freedome of conſcience might be given unto them. I wrote (as God knoweth) not of preſumption, but onely lamenting the ſtate of thoſe, whom I thought now in this dangerous time ſhould have given both you and me comfortable inſtructions. But alas, inſtead thereof we have inſtructions to follow (I lament to rehearſe it) ſuperſtitious Idolatry. Yea, and that worſt of all is, they will ſeek to prove it by the Scriptures. The Lord for his mercy turn their hearts, Amen. Commend me, &c.

M. Ridley lamenteth the ſtate of them, which for fear of trouble do winde with the world, and go contrary to their conſcience.

Yours, Nicholas Ridley.

To Maſter Bradford.

Another worthy letter of biſhop Ridley to M. Bradford.

BRother Bradford, I wiſh you and your company in Chriſt, yea, and all the holy brotherhood, that now with you in divers priſons ſuffereth and beareth patiently Chriſts Croſſe for the maintenance of his Goſpel, grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Sir, conſidering the ſtate of this chivalry and warfare, wherein I doubt not but we be ſet to fight under Chriſts banner, and his croſſe, againſt our ghoſtly enemy the devill, and the old ſerpent Sathan, me think I perceive two things to be his moſt perillous and moſt dangerous engines, which he hath to impugne Chriſts verity, his Goſpel, and his faith; and the ſame two alſo to be the moſt maſſy poſtes, and moſt mighty pillars, whereby he maintaineth and upholdeth this Satanicall Synagogue. Theſe two, ſir, are they, in my judgement: the one, his falſe doctrine and Idolatricall uſe of the Lords Supper., and the other, the wicked and abominable uſurpation of the primacy of the See of Rome. By theſe two Sathan ſeemeth to me principally to maintain and uphold his kingdom, by theſe two he driveth down mightily (alas) I fear me, the third part of the ſtarres in heaven. Theſe two poyſonfull rotten poſtes he hath ſo painted over with ſuch a pretence and colour of religion, of unity in Chriſts Church, of the Catholike faith, and ſuch like, that the wily ſerpent is able to deceive (if it were poſſible) even the elect of God. Wherefore John ſaid not without great cauſe; If any man know not Satans ſubtilties and the profundities thereof, I will wiſh him no other burden to be laden withall.

Sir, becauſe theſe be his principall and main poſtes whereupon ſtandeth all his falſhood, craft, and treachery, therefore according to the poor power that God hath given me, I have bended mine Artillery to ſhoot at the ſame. I know it to be but little (God knoweth) that I can do, and of my ſhot I know they paſſe not. Yet I will not (God willing) ceaſe to do the beſt that I can, to ſhake thoſe cankered and rotten poſts. The Lord grant me good ſucceſſe, to the glory of his Name, and the furtherance of Chriſts Goſpel. I have now already (I thank God) for this preſent time ſpent a good part of my powder in theſe ſcriblings, whereof this bearer ſhall give you knowledge. Good brother Bradford, let the wicked ſurmiſe and ſay what they liſt; know you for a certainty, by Gods grace, without all doubt, that in Chriſts Goſpels cauſe, againſt and upon the foreſaid Gods enemies, I am fully determined to live and die. Farewell (dear brother) and I beſeech you and all the reſt of our brethren to have good remembrance of the condemned hereticks (as they call them) of Oxford, in your prayers. The bearer ſhall certifie you of our ſtate. Fare well in the Lord. From Bocardo.

Biſh. Ridleyes purpoſe to live and dye upon the enemies of Chriſt, and of the Goſpel.

Yours in Chriſt, Nich Ridley.

Another Letter of B. Ridley anſwering to M. Bradford.

„ This was a treatiſe of the Lords Supper, with other things which M. Bradford ſent to him to peruſe, and to judge thereof.

DEarly beloved I wiſh you grace, mercy, and peace.

According to your minde, I have run over all your “ papers, and what I have done (which is but ſmall) therein may appear. In two places I have put in two looſe leaves. I had much ado to reade that was written in your great leaves, and I ween ſome where I have altered ſome words, becauſe I could not reade perfectly that which was written. Sir, what ſhall be beſt done with theſe things, now ye muſt conſider; for if they come in ſight at this time, undoubtedly they muſt to the fire with their Father: and as for any ſafegard that your cuſtody can be unto them, I am ſure you look not for it. For as you have been partner of the work, ſo I am ſure you look for none other, but to have and receive like wages, and to drink of the ſame cup. Bleſſed be God, that hath given you liberty in the mean ſeaſon, that you may uſe your pen to his glory, and the comfort (as I hear ſay) of many. I bleſſe God daily in you, and all your whole company, to whom I beſeech you commend me heartily. Now I love my country-man in deed and in truth. I mean Doctor Taylor, not for my earthly countries ſake, but for our heavenly Fathers ſake, and for Chriſts ſake, whom I heard ſay, he did ſtoutly in time of perill confeſſe, and yet alſo for our countries ſake, and for all our mothers ſake; but I mean of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of heavenly Jeruſalem, and becauſe of the Spirit, which bringeth forth in him, in you, and in your company ſuch bleſſed fruits of boldneſſe in the Lords cauſe of patience and conſtancy. The Lord which hath begun this work in you all, perform and perfect this his own deed, untill his own day come, Amen.

Commendation of Doctor Taylor.

And yet I perceive ye have not been baited, and the cauſe thereof God knoweth, which will let them do no more to his, than is his pleaſed will and pleaſure to ſuffer them to do for his own glory, and to the profit of them which be truely his. For the Father, which doth guide them that be Chriſts to Chriſt, is more mighty than all they, and no man is able to pull them out of the Fathers hands: except, I ſay, it pleaſe our Father, it pleaſe our Maſter Chriſt to ſuffer them, they ſhall not ſtir one hair of your heads.

My brother P. the bearer hereof, and Maſter Hoopers Letters, would that we ſhould ſay what we think good concerning your “ minde: that is, not to anſwer, except ye might have ſomewhat indifferent Judges. We are (as ye know) ſeparated, and one of us cannot in any thing conſult with another, and much ſtrait watching of the Bayliffs is about us, that there be no privy conference amongſt us. And yet, as we hear, the Schollers bear us more heavily than the Townſmen. A wonderfull thing, among ſo many, never yet Scholler offered any of us (ſo farre as I know) any manner of favour, either for or in Chriſts cauſe.

“ This matter was concerning the deliberation of the priſoners in London what to do if they were called to open diſputation.

Now as concerning your demand of your counſell, for my part I do not miſlike that which I perceive ye are minded to do. For I look for none other, but if ye anſwer afore the ſame Commiſſioners that we did, ye ſhall be ſerved and handled as we were, though ye were as well learned as ever was either Peter or Paul. And yet further I think, that occaſion afterward may be given you, and the conſideration of the profit of your auditory may perchance move you to do otherwiſe.

Finally, determinately to ſay what ſhall be beſt, I am not able; but I truſt he, whoſe cauſe we have in hand, ſhall put you in minde to do that which ſhall be moſt for his glory, the profit of his flock, and your own ſalvation. This Letter muſt be common to you and Maſter Hooper, in whom and in his priſon-fellow good father C. I bleſſe God, even from the bottome of my heart; for I doubt not but they both do to our Maſter Chriſt, true, acceptable, and honorable ſervice, and profitable to his flock; the one with his pen, and the other with his fatherly example of patience and conſtancy, and all manner of true godlineſſe. But what ſhall I need to ſay to you; Let this be common among your brethren, among whom (I dare ſay) it is with you as it is with us, to whom all things here are common, meat, money, and whatſoever any of us hath, that can or may do another good. Although I ſaid the Bayliffs and our Hoſteſſe ſtraitly watch us, that we have no conference or intelligence of any thing abroad, yet hath God provided for every one of us inſtead of our ſervants, faithfull fellows, which will be content to hear and ſee, and to do for us whatſoever they can. It is Gods work ſurely, bleſſed be God for his unſpeakable goodneſſe. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the communication of the holy Ghoſt be with you all, Amen, Amen.

Gods proviſion for his Saints.

As farre as London is from Oxford, yet thence we have received of late, both meat, money, and ſhirts, not onely from ſuch as are of our acquaintance, but of ſome (whom this bearer can tell with whom I had never to my knowledge any acquaintance. I know for whoſe ſake they do it; to him therefore be all honour, glory, and due thanks.

The Chriſtian charity of certain godly brethren of London, toward the priſoned Biſhops in Oxford.

And yet I pray you do ſo much as to ſhew them that we have received their benevolence, and (God be bleſſed) have plenty of all ſuch things. This I deſire you to do; for I know they be of Maſter Hoopers and your familiar acquaintance. Maſter Latimer was craſed; but I hear now (thanks be to God) that he amendeth again.

Another Letter of Maſter Ridley unto Maſter Bradford.

This letter of B. Ridley was written to M. Bradford ſoon after his condemnation, when it was thought that he ſhould be had to Lancaſhire. Mat.25.

OH dear brother, ſeeing the time is now come, wherein it pleaſeth the heavenly Father for Chriſt our Saviour his ſake, to call upon you, and to bid you to come, happy are you that ever you were born, thus to be found awake at the Lords calling. Euge ſerve bone & fidelis, quia ſuper pauca fuiſti fidelis, ſuper multa te conſtituet, & intrabis in gaudium Domini, i. Well done good and faithfull ſervant, becauſe thou haſt been truſty in ſmall matters, he ſhall ſet thee over great things, and thou ſhalt enter into the joy of thy Lord.

O dear brother, what meaneth this, that you are ſent into your own native Country? The wiſedom and policy of the world may mean what they will, but I truſt God will ſo order the matter finally by his fatherly providence, that ſome great occaſion of Gods gracious goodneſſe ſhall be plentifully powred abroad amongſt his, our dear brethren in that country, by this your Martyrdome, where the Martyrs for Chriſts ſake ſhed their blood, and loſt their lives. Oh what wondrous things hath Chriſt afterward wrought to his glory, and confirmation of their doctrine? If it be not the place that ſanctifieth the man, but the holy man doth by Chriſt ſanctifie the place; Brother Bradford, then happy and holy ſhall be that place wherein thou ſhalt ſuffer, and ſhalt be with thy aſhes in Chriſts cauſe ſprinkled over withall. All thy country may rejoyce of thee, that it ever brought forth ſuch a one, which would render his life again in his cauſe, of whom he had received it. Brother Bradford, ſo long as I ſhall underſtand thou art in thy journey, by Gods grace I ſhall call upon our heavenly Father for Chriſts ſake, to ſet thee ſafely home: and then good brother ſpeak you, and pray for the remnant which are to ſuffer for Chriſts ſake, according to that thou then ſhalt know more clearly.

The rejoycing of B. Ridley at the conſtancy of M. Rogers.

We do look now every day when we ſhall be called on, bleſſed be God. I ween I am the weakeſt many wayes of our company; and yet I thank our Lord God and heavenly Father by Chriſt, that ſince I heard of our dear brother Rogers departing, and ſtout confeſſion of Chriſt and his truth even unto the death, my heart (bleſſed be God) rejoyced of it, that ſince that time (I ſay) I never felt any lumpiſh heavineſſe in my heart, as I grant I have felt ſometimes before. Oh good brother, bleſſed be God in thee, and bleſſed be the time that ever I knew thee. Farewell, farewell.

Your brother in Chriſt, Nicholas

To the Brethren remaining in captivity of the fleſh, and diſperſed abroad in ſundry priſons but knit together in unity of ſpirit and holy religion in the bowels of the Lord Ieſus.

A Letter of B. Ridley to the perſecuted flock of Chriſt, written in Latine, and tranſlated into Engliſh.

GRace, peace, and mercy be multiplied among you. What worthy thanks can we render unto the Lord for you my brethren, namely, for the great conſolation which through you we have received in the Lord, who notwithſtanding the rage of Sathan that goeth about by all manner of ſubtill means to beguil the world, and alſo buſily laboureth to reſtore and ſet up his Kingdom again, that of late began to decay and fall to ruine; ye remain yet ſtill unmoveable, as men ſurely grounded upon a ſtrong rock. And now, albeit that Sathan by his ſouldiers and wicked miniſters, daily (as we hear) draweth numbers unto him, ſo that it is ſaid of him, that he plucketh even the very Stars out of heaven, whiles he driveth into ſome men the fear of death, and loſſe of all their goods, and ſheweth and offereth to otherſome the pleaſant baits of the world: namely, riches, wealth and all kinde of delights and pleaſures, fair houſes, great revenues, fat benefices, and what not? and all to the intent they ſhould fall down and worſhip, not the Lord, but the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the devill, that great Beaſt and his Image, and ſhould be inticed to commit fornication with the Strumpet of Babylon, together with the Kings of the earth, with the leſſer Beaſt, and with the falſe Prophets, and ſo to rejoyce and be pleaſant with her, and to be drunken with the wine of her fornication; yet bleſſed be God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which hath given unto you a manly courage, and hath ſo ſtrengthened you in the inward man, by the power of his Spirit, that you can contemne as well all the terrors, as alſo the vain flattering and allurements of the world, eſteeming them as vanities, meer trifles, and things of nought: Who hath alſo wrought, planted, and ſurely ſtabliſhed in your hearts, ſo ſtedfaſt a faith and love of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, joyned with ſuch conſtancy, that by no engines of Antichriſt, be they never ſo terrible or plauſible, ye will ſuffer any other Jeſus, or any other Chriſt to be forced upon you, beſides him whom the Prophets have ſpoken of before, the Apoſtles have preached, the holy Martyrs of God have confeſſed and teſtified with the effuſion of their blood.

Apoc.12.

Apoc.17.

He exhorteth the brethren to ſtand faſt.

In this faith ſtand ye faſt my brethren, and ſuffer not your ſelves to be brought under the yoke of bondage and ſuperſtition any more. For ye know (brethren) how that our Saviour warned his beforehand, that ſuch ſhould come as would point unto the world another Chriſt, and would ſet him out with ſo many falſe miracles, and with ſuch deceiveable and ſubtill practices, that even the very elect (if it were poſſible) ſhould be thereby deceived: ſuch ſtrong deluſion to come did our Saviour give warning of before. But continue ye faithfull and conſtant, and be of good comfort, and remember that our grand Captain hath overcome the world; for he that is in us, is ſtronger than he that is in the world, and the Lord promiſeth unto us, that for the elects ſake, the dayes of wickedneſſe ſhall be ſhortned. In the mean ſeaſon abide ye, and endure with patience as ye have begun: endure, I ſay, and reſerve your ſelves unto better times, as one of the Heathen Poets ſaid, ceaſe not to ſhew your ſelves valiant ſouldiers of the Lord, and help to maintain the travelling faith of the Goſpel.

But we are not they which do withdraw our ſelves unto damnation, but believe unto the ſalvation of the ſoul. Let us not ſuffer theſe words of Chriſt to fall out of our hearts by any manner of terrours or threatnings of the world. Fear not them which kill the body, the reſt ye know. other, and be the more confirmed and ſtrengthned thereby. We never had a better or more juſt cauſe either to contemne our life, or ſhed our blood; we cannot take in hand the defence of a more certain, clear, and manifeſt truth. For it is not any ceremony for the which we contend; but it toucheth the very ſubſtance of our whole religion, yea, even Chriſt himſelf. Shall we, either can we receive and acknowledge any other Chriſt inſtead of him, who is alone the everlaſting Son of the everlaſting Father, and is the brightneſſe of the glory, and a lively image of the ſubſtance of the Father, in whom onely dwelleth corporally the fulneſſe of the Godhead, who is the onely way, the truth, and the life? Let ſuch wickedneſſe (my brethren) let ſuch horrible wickedneſſe be farre from us. For although there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, as there be many gods and many lords, yet unto us there is but one God, which is the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him; but every man hath not knowledge.

This is life eternall (ſaith S. John) that they know thee to be the onely true God, and whom thou haſt ſent Ieſus Chriſt. If any therefore would force upon us any other God, beſides him whom Paul and the Apoſtles have taught, let us not hear him, but let us flee from him, and hold him accurſed.

The profundities of Sathan

Apoc.2.

1 Pet.5.

Brethren, ye are not ignorant of the deep and profound ſubtilties of Sathan; for he will not ceaſe to range about you, ſeeking by all means poſſible whom he may devour: but play ye the men, and be of good comfort in the Lord. And albeit your enemies and the adverſaries of the truth, armed with all worldly force and power that may be, do ſet upon you; yet be ye not fainthearted, and ſhrink not therefore, but truſt unto your Captain Chriſt, truſt unto the Spirit of truth, and truſt to the truth of your cauſe; which, as it may by the malice of Sathan be darkned, ſo can it never be clean put out. For we have (high praiſe be given to God therefore) moſt plainly, evidently, and clearly on our ſide, all the Prophets, all the Apoſtles, and undoubtedly all the ancient Eccleſiaſticall Writers which have written, untill of late yeers paſt.

The martyrs have all the Prophets, Apoſtles, and ancient Eccleſiaſticall Writers on their ſide.

Phil,1.

Let us be hearty and of good courage therefore, and thorowly comfort our ſelves in the Lord. Be in no wiſe afraid of your adverſaries; for that which is to them an occaſion of perdition, is to you a ſure token of ſalvation, and that of God. For unto you it is given, that not onely ye ſhould beleeve on him, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake. And when ye are railed upon for the Name of Chriſt, remember that by the voice of Peter, yea, and of Chriſt our Saviour alſo, ye are counted with the Prophets, with the Apoſtles, and with the holy Martyrs of Chriſt, happy and bleſſed therefore; for the glory and ſpirit of God reſteth upon you.

1 Pet.4.

On their part our Saviour Chriſt is evill ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified. For what can they elſe do unto you by perſecuting you, and working all cruelty and villany againſt you, but make your Crowns more glorious, yea beautifie and multiply the ſame, and heap upon themſelves the horrible plagues and heavy wrath of God: and therefore (good brethren) though they rage never ſo fiercely againſt us, yet let us not wiſh evill unto them again, knowing that whiles for Chriſts cauſe they vex and perſecute us, they are like mad men, moſt outragious and cruell againſt themſelves, heaping hot burning coals upon their own heads; but rather let us wiſh well unto them, knowing that we are thereunto called in Chriſt Jeſus, that we ſhould be heirs of the bleſſing. Let us pray therefore unto God, that he would drive out of their hearts this darkneſſe of errors, and make the light of his truth to ſhine unto them, that they acknowledging their blindneſſe, may with all humble repentance be converted unto the Lord, and together with us confeſſe him to be the onely true God, which is the Father of light, and his onely Sonne Jeſus Chriſt, worſhipping him in ſpirit and verity, Amen. The Spirit of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt comfort your hearts in the love of God, and patience of Chriſt, Amen.

He exhorteth us not to wiſh evill to our perſecutors.

Another Letter of B. Ridley, wherein he confirmeth the brethren in captivity, tranſlated out of the Latine.

GRace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be multiplied unto you, Amen.

Although brethren, we have of late heard nothing from you, neither have at this preſent any news to ſend to you; yet we thought good ſomething to write unto you, whereby ye might underſtand that we have good remembrance of you continually, as we doubt not but ye have of us alſo. When this meſſenger, coming unto us from you of late, had brought us good tidings of your great conſtancy, fortitude, and patience in the Lord, we were filled with much joy and gladneſſe, giving thanks to God the Father through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which hath cauſed his face ſo to ſhine upon you, and with the light of ſpirituall underſtanding hath ſo lightned your hearts, that now being in captivity and bonds for Chriſts cauſe, ye have not ceaſed as much as in you lieth, by words, but much more by deed and by your example, to ſtabliſh and confirm that thing, when ye were at liberty in the world, ye laboured to publiſh and ſet abroad by the Word and Doctrine: that is to ſay, holding faſt the Word of Life, ye ſhine as lights in the world, in the middeſt of a wicked and crooked nation, and that with ſo much the greater glory of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and profit of your brethren, by how much Sathan more cruelly now rageth, and buſily laboureth to darken the light of the Goſpel.

Communion and unity of Saints.

Phil.2.

Reaſons proving the religion in Queen Maries time not to be of God.

And as for the darkneſſe that Sathan now bringeth upon the Church of England, who needeth to doubt thereof? Of late time our Saviour Chriſt, his Apoſtles, Prophets, and Teachers ſpake in the Temple to the people of England in the Engliſh tongue, ſo that they might be underſtood plainly, and without any hardneſſe, of the godly, and ſuch as ſought for heavenly knowledge in matters which of neceſſity of ſalvation pertained to the obtaining of eternall life; but now thoſe things, which once were written of them for the edefying of the Congregation, are read in a ſtrange tongue without interpretation, manifeſtly againſt Saint Pauls commandement, ſo that there is no man able to underſtand them which hath not learned that ſtrange and unknown tongue.

Compariſon between the religion in King Edwards time and the religion ſet out in Queen Maries time.

Of late dayes thoſe heavenly myſteries, whereby Chriſt hath ingraffed us unto his Body, and hath united us one to another, whereby alſo being regenerate, and born anew unto God, he hath nouriſhed, encreaſed, and ſtrengthened us, whereby moreover, either he hath taught and ſet forth an order amongſt them which are whole, Scriptures in king Edwards time known, in Queen Maries time unknown.

or elſe to the ſick in ſoul or body, hath given as it were, wholſome medicines and remedies; thoſe (I ſay) were all plainly ſet forth to the people in their own language; ſo that what great and exceeding good things every man had received of God, what duty every one owed to another by Gods ordinance, what every one had profeſſed in his vocation, and was bound to obſerve, where remedy was to be had for the wicked and feeble, he to whom God hath given a deſire and willing heart to underſtand thoſe things, might ſoon perceive and underſtand. But now all theſe things are taught and ſet forth in ſuch ſort, that the people redeemed with Chriſts blood, and for whoſe ſakes they were by Chriſt himſelf ordained, can have no manner of underſtanding thereof at all.

In King Edwards time the people knew what they prayed; in Q. Maries time they neither knew what, nor to whom they prayed.

Of late (foraſmuch as we know not how to pray as we ought) our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in his prayer, whereof he would have no man ignorant, and alſo the holy Ghoſt in the Pſalmes, Hymnes, and ſpirituall ſongs which are ſet forth in the Bible, did teach and inſtruct all the people of England in the Engliſh tongue, that they might ask ſuch things as are according to the will of the Father, and might joyn their hearts and lips in prayer together; but now all theſe things are commanded to be hid and ſhut up from them in a ſtrange tongue, whereby it muſt needs follow, that the people neither can tell how to pray, nor what to pray for; and how can they joyn their hearts and voice together, when they underſtand no more what the voice ſignifieth, than a brute beaſt?

The catechiſm ſet forth in king Edwards time for children, in Queen Maries time forbidden.

Finally, I hear ſay, that the Catechiſme which was lately ſet forth in the Engliſh tongue, now in every Pulpit condemned. Oh deviliſh malice, and moſt ſpitefully injurious to the ſalvation of mankinde purchaſed by Jeſus Chriſt. Indeed Sathan could not long ſuffer that ſo great light ſhould be ſpread abroad in the world; he ſaw well enough that nothing was able to overthrow his Kingdom ſo much, as if children being godly inſtructed in Religion, ſhould learn to know Chriſt whileſt they are yet yong; whereby not only children, but the elder ſort alſo and aged folks that before were not taught to know Chriſt in their childehood, ſhould now even with children and babes be forced to learn to know him. Now therefore he roareth, now he rageth. But what elſe do they (brethren) which ſerve Sathan, and become his miniſters and ſlaves in maintaining of his impiety, but even the ſame which they did, to whom Chriſt our Saviour threatneth this curſe in the Goſpel; Woe unto you which ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, and take away the key of knowledge from them: you your ſelves have not entred in, neither have ye ſuffered them that would enter, to come in.

Mat. 13,
The Catholike Phariſees neither enter themſelves, nor wil ſuffer other to enter Gods Kingdom.
Apoc. 9.

And from whence ſhall we ſay (brethren) that this horrible and miſchievous darkneſſe proceedeth, which is now brought upon the world? From whence, I pray you, but even from the ſmoak of the great furnace of the bottomeleſſe pit, ſo that the Sun and the ayr are now darkned by the ſmoke of the pit? Now, even now (out of doubt brethren) the pit is opened againſt us, and the Locuſts begin to ſwarm, and Abaddon now raigneth.

The pit of Locuſts opened.

Apoc. 7.
1 John 5.
Exhortation to ſtand conſtant in Chriſt and his truth.

Ye therefore (my brethren) which pertain unto Chriſt, and have the Seal of God marked in your foreheads: that is to wit, are ſealed with the earneſt of the Spirit to be a peculiar people of God, quit your ſelves like men, and be ſtrong; for he that is in us, is ſtronger than he which is in the world; and ye know that all that is born of God overcometh the world, and this is our victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Let the world fret, let it rage never ſo much, be it never ſo cruell and bloody, yet be ye ſure that no man can take us out of the Fathers hands, for he is greater than all; who hath not ſpared his own Son, but hath given him to death for us all; and therefore how ſhall he not with him give us all things alſo? Who ſhal lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that juſtifieth, who then ſhall condemn? It is Chriſt that is dead, yea rather which is riſen again, who alſo is at the right hand of God, and maketh requeſt alſo for us. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſſe, or perill, or ſword? the reſt ye know, brethren. We are certainly perſwaded with St. Paul, by the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that no kinde of thing ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. Which thing, that it may come to paſſe by the grace and mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to the comfort both of you and of us all, as we for our parts will continually (God willing) pray for you; ſo (dear brethren in the Lord) with all earneſt and hearty requeſt we beſeech you, even in the bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye will not ceaſe to pray for us. Fare ye well dear brethren. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all evermore, Amen.

A Letter of Biſhop Ridley, anſwering to a certain Letter of one Maſter Weſt, ſometime his Chaplain.

Another letter of B. Ridley anſwering one M. Weſt, ſometime his Chaplain.

I Wiſh you grace in God, and love of the truth, without the which truely eſtabliſhed in mens hearts by the mighty hand of the Almighty God, it is no more poſſible to ſtand by the truth in Chriſt in time of trouble, than it is for the wax to abide the heat of the fire. Sir you know this, that I am (bleſſed be God) perſwaded that this world is but tranſitory, and (as St. John ſaith) The world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof. I am perſwaded Chriſts words to be true; Whoſoever ſhall confeſſe me before men, him will I confeſſe alſo before my Father which is in heaven: And I beleeve that no earthly creature ſhall be ſaved, whom the Redeemer and Saviour of the world ſhall before his Father deny. This the Lord grant, that it may be ſo graffed, eſtabliſhed, and fixed in my heart, that neither things preſent nor to come, high or low, life nor death, be able to remove me thence. It is a goodly wiſh, that you wiſh me deeply to conſider the things pertaining unto Gods glory; but if you had wiſhed alſo, that neither fear of death, nor hope of worldly proſperity ſhould let me to maintain Gods word and his truth, which is his glory and true honour, it would have liked me well. You deſire me for Gods ſake to remember my ſelf. Indeed Sir, now it is time ſo to do; for ſo far as I can perceive, it ſtandeth me upon no leſſe danger, than of the loſſe both of body and ſoul; and I trow, then it is time for a man to awake, if any thing will awake him. He that will not fear him that threatneth to caſt both body and ſoul into everlaſting fire, whom will he fear? With this fear, O Lord, faſten thou together our frail fleſh, that we never ſwerve from thy Laws. You ſay, you have made much ſute for me. Sir, God grant that you have not in ſuing for my worldly deliverance, impaired and hindered the furtherance of Gods word and his truth.

B. Ridley ever a reverend handler of the Sacrament.

I did never love. Confeſſion unto the Miniſter which is able to inſtruct, correct, comfort, and inform the weak, wounded, and ignorant conſcience, indeed I ever thought might do much good in Chriſts Congregation, and ſo I aſſure you, I think even at this day. My Doctrine and my Preaching you ſay you have heard often, and after your judgement have thought it godly, ſaving onely for the Sacrament, which thing although it was of me reverently handled, and a great deal better than of the reſt (as you ſay) yet in the margent you write warily, and in this world wiſely; and yet me thought all ſounding not well. Sir, but that I ſee ſo many changes in this world, and ſo much alteration, elſe at this your ſaying I would not a little marvell. I have taken you for my friend, and a man whom I fancied for plainneſſe and faithfulneſſe, as much I aſſure you, as for your learning; and have you kept this ſo cloſe in your heart from me unto this day? Sir, I conſider moe things than one, and will not ſay all that I think. But what need you to care what I think, for any thing I ſhall be able to do unto you, either good or harm? You give me good leſſons to ſtand in nothing againſt my learning, and to beware of vain-glory. Truely Sir, I herein like your counſell very well, and by Gods grace I intend to follow it unto my lives end.

The part of a true Biſhop, only to ſeek the glory of Chriſt his Maſter.

B. Ridley repenteth that he was not more earneſt in eſtabliſhing the conſciences of his family and cure.

To write unto thoſe whom you name, I cannot ſee what it will avail me. For this I would have you know, that I eſteem nothing available for me, which alſo will not further the glory of God. And now, becauſe I perceive you have an entire zeal and deſire of my deliverance out of this captivity and worldly miſery, If I ſhould not bear you a good heart in God again, me think I were too blame. Sir, how nigh the day of my diſſolution and departure out of this world is at hand, I cannot tell: the Lords will be fulfilled how ſoon ſoever it ſhall come. I know the Lords words muſt be verified on me, that I ſhall appear before the incorrupt Judge, and be countable to him of all my former life. And although the hope of his mercies is my ſheet-ancher of eternall ſalvation, yet am I perſwaded, that whoſoever wittingly neglecteth and regardeth not to clear his conſcience, he cannot have peace with God, nor a lively faith in his mercy. Conſcience therefore moveth me, conſidering you were one of my family, and one of my houſhold, of whom then I think I had a ſpeciall cure, and of all them which were within my houſe, which indeed ought to have been an example of godlineſſe to all the reſt of my cure, not onely of good life, but alſo in promoting of Gods Word to the uttermoſt of their power, (but alas, now when the triall doth ſeparate the chaff from the corn, how ſmall a deal it is, God knoweth, which the winde doth not blow away) this conſcience (I ſay) doth move me to fear, leſt the lightneſſe of my family ſhall be laid to my charge for lack of more earneſt and diligent inſtruction, which ſhould have been done. But bleſſed be God which hath given me grace to ſee this my default, and to lament it from the bottome of my heart, before my departing hence.

Doctor Harvey charged.

Good monitions of B. Ridley to his old Chaplains.

This conſcience doth move me alſo now to require both you and my friend Doctor Harvey, to remember your promiſes made to me in times paſt, of the pure ſetting forth and preaching of Gods Word and his Truth. Theſe promiſes, although you ſhall not need to fear to be charged with them of me hereafter before the world, yet look for none other (I exhort you as my friends) but to be charged with them at Gods hand. This conſcience and the love that I bear unto you, biddeth me now ſay unto you both in Gods Name, fear God, and love not the world: for God is able to caſt both body and ſoul into hell fire. When his wrath ſhall ſuddenly be kindled, bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. And the ſaying of S. John is true, All that is in the world, as the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world, and the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof, but he that doth the will of God abideth for ever. If this gift of grace (which undoubtedly is neceſſarily required unto eternall ſalvation) were truely and unfainedly graffed and firmly eſtabliſhed in mens hearts, they would not be ſo light, ſo ſuddenly to ſhrink from the maintenance and confeſſion of the truth, as is now (alas) ſeen ſo manifeſtly of ſo many in theſe dayes. But here peradventure you would know of me what is the truth. Sir, Gods Word is the truth, as St. John ſaith, and that even the ſame that was heretofore. For albeit man doth vary and change as the Moon, yet Gods Word is ſtable, and abideth one forevermore: and of Chriſt it is truely ſaid, Chriſt yeſterday and to day, the ſame is alſo for ever.

Common prayer in the common tongue.

What it is to confeſſe Chriſt.

He that denieth an open truth againſt Gods Word for worldly danger, will be as ready to deny God himſelf.

When I was in office, all that were eſteemed learned in Gods Word, agreed this to be a truth in Gods Word written, that the common prayer of the Church ſhould be had in the common tongue. You know I have conferred with many, and I enſure you, I never found man (ſo farre as I do remember) neither old nor young, Goſpeller nor Papiſt, of what judgement ſoever he was, in this thing to be of a contrary opinion. If then it were a truth of Gods Word, think you that the alteration of the world can make it an untruth? If it cannot, why then do ſo many men ſhrink from the confeſſion and maintenance of this truth received once of us all? For what is it, I pray you, elſe to confeſſe or deny Chriſt in this world, but to maintain the truth taught in Gods Word, or for any worldly reſpect to ſhrink from the ſame? This one thing have I brought for an enſample; other things be in like caſe, which now particularly I need not to rehearſe. For he that will forſake wittingly, either for fear or gain of the world, any one open truth of Gods Word, if he be conſtrained, he will aſſuredly forſake God and all his truth, rather than he will endanger himſelf to loſe or to leave that he loveth better indeed, than he doth God and the truth of his Word.

Death common to good and bad.

Damnable agreement.

"Apoſtata was he who fled from his Captain to the enemy. He was alſo ſo called that departed from the Chriſtians to the Jews or Gentiles.

I like very well your plain ſpeaking, wherein you ſay, I muſt either agree or die, and I think that you mean of the bodily death, which is common both to good and bad. Sir, I know I muſt die, whether I agree or no. But what folly were it then to make ſuch an agreement, by the which I could never eſcape this death which is common to all, and alſo incurre the guilt of death and eternall damnation? Lord grant that I may utterly abhorre and deteſt this damnable agreement ſo long as I live. And becauſe (I dare ſay) you wrote of friendſhip unto me this ſhort earneſt advertiſement, and I think verily, wiſhing me to live and not to die, therefore bearing you in my heart no leſſe love of God, than you do me in the world, I ſay unto you in the Word of the Lord (and that I ſay to you, I ſay to all my friends and lovers in God) that if you do not confeſſe and maintain to your power and knowledge that which is grounded upon Gods Word, but will either for fear or gain of the world ſhrink and play the "Apoſtata, indeed you ſhall die the death; you know what I mean. And I beſeech you all true true friends and lovers in God, remember what I ſay, for this may be the laſt time peradventure that ever I ſhall write unto you.

From Bocardo in Oxford, the viij day of April, 1555.

The ſumme of M. Grindals Letter to Biſhop Ridley.

Maſter Grindall now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being in the time of exile in the City of Frankford, wrote to Doctor Ridley then priſoner, a certain Epiſtle, wherein firſt he lamenteth his captivity, exhorting him withall to be conſtant. Secondly, he certifieth him of the ſtate of the Engliſh Exiles, being diſperſed in Germany, and of the ſingular providence of God in ſtirring up the favour of the Magiſtrates and Rulers there towards them. Thirdly, he writeth to know his minde and will concerning the printing of his book againſt Tranſubſtantiation, and of certain other Treatiſes and his diſputations. Whereunto Biſhop Ridley anſwereth again in order, as followeth.

The anſwer of Doctor Ridley to the Letter aboveſaid.

An anſwer of B. Ridley to M. Grindals letter ſent from Frankford.

Bleſſed be God our heavenly Father which enclined your heart to have ſuch a deſire to write unto me, and bleſſed be he again which hath heard your requeſt, and hath brought your letters ſafe unto my hands; and over all this I bleſſe him through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for the great comfort I have received by the ſame, of the knowledge of your ſtate, and of other our dearly beloved brethren and country-men in thoſe parts beyond the Sea.

Experience of Gods ſtrength towards his Saints in their impriſonment.

Dearly beloved brother Grindall, I ſay to you and all the reſt of our brethren in Chriſt with you, rejoyce in the Lord, and as you love me, and the other my reverend Fathers and concaptives, (which undoubtedly are Gloria Chriſti) lament not our ſtate, but I beſeech you and them all to give to our heavenly Father for his endleſſe mercies and unſpeakable benefits even in the middeſt of all our troubles given unto us, moſt hearty thanks. For know ye, that as the weight of his croſſe hath increaſed upon us, ſo he hath not nor doth not ceaſe to multiply his mercies to ſtrengthen us; and I truſt, yea by his grace I doubt nothing, but he will ſo do for Chriſt our Maſters ſake, even to the end. To hear that you and our other brethren do finde in your exile favour, and grace with the Magiſtrates, Miniſters, and Citizens at Tigury, Frankford, and otherwhere, it doth greatly comfort (I dare ſay) all here that do indeed love Chriſt and his true Word. I enſure you, it warmed my heart, to hear you by chance to name ſome, as Scorie and Coxe, &c. Oh that it had come in your minde to have ſaid ſomewhat alſo of Cheek, of Turner, of Leaver, of Sampſon, of Chambers, but I truſt in God they be all well. And Sir, ſeeing you ſay, that there be in thoſe parts with you of Students and Miniſters ſo good a number, now therefore care you not for us, otherwiſe than to wiſh that Gods glory may be ſet forth by us. For whenſoever God ſhall call us home (as we look daily for none other, but when it ſhall pleaſe God to ſay, Come) you, bleſſed be God, are enow through his aid, to light, and ſet us again the lantern of his Word in England. As concerning the copies ye ſay ye have with you, I wonder how ever they did and could finde the way to come to you. My diſputation, except ye have that which I gathered my ſelf after the diſputation done, I cannot think ye have it truely. If ye have that, then ye have therewithall the whole manner after the which I was uſed in the diſputation.

As for the treatiſe in Engliſh, Contra tranſubſtantiationem, vix poſſum adduci ut credam operæ pretium fore ut in Lantinum transferatur. Cæterum, quicquid ſit nullo modo velim ut quicquam quocunq; modo meo nomine ederetur, donec quid de nobis dominus conſtituerit fieri, vobis prius certó conſtiterit; and thus much unto your Letters. Now although I ſuppoſe you know a good part of our ſtate here (for we are forth coming, even as when ye departed, &c. You ſhall underſtand that I was in the Tower about the ſpace of two moneths cloſe priſoner, and after that had granted to me without my labour, the liberty of the Tower, and ſo continued about half a yeer, and then becauſe I refuſed to allow the Maſſe with my preſence, I was ſhut up in priſon again.

B. Ridley priſoner in the Tower half a yeer and more.

Canterbury, Ridley, Latimer, Bradford, priſoners together in the Tower.

The laſt Lent ſave one, it chanced by reaſon of the tumult ſtirred up in Kent, there were ſo many priſoners in the Tower, that my Lord of Canterbury, M. Latimer, M. Bradford, and I were put all together in one priſon, where we remained ſtill almoſt to the next Eaſter, and then we three, Canterbury, Latimer, and I; were ſuddenly ſent a little before Eaſter to Oxford, and were ſuffered to have nothing with us, but that we carried upon us. About the Whitſontide following was our diſputations at Oxford, after the which was all taken from us, as pen and ink, &c. Our own ſervants were taken from us before, and every one had put to him a ſtrange man, and we each one appointed to be kept in ſeveral places, as we are unto this day.

Cante. Ridley, Latimer removed to Oxford.

D. Weſton condemner of Canterb. Ridley, and Latimer.

Bleſſed be God, we three at the writing hereof, were in good health, and (in God) of good cheer. We have looked long ago to have been diſpatched, for we were all three on one day with a day or two of our diſputations, of Doctor Weſton being the head Commiſſioner, condemned for heretikes, and ſince that time we remain as we were of him left. The Lords will be fulfilled in us, as I do not doubt, but by his grace it ſhall be to his glory, and our endleſſe ſalvation through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Writs for the burning of Jo. Bradford called in again.

Likewiſe the Lord hath hitherto preſerved above all our expectation, our dear brother, and in Chriſts cauſe a ſtrong champion, John Bradford. He is likewiſe condemned, and is already delivered to the ſecular power, and writs (as we have heard ſay) given out for his execution, and called in again.

Thus the Lord, ſo long as his bleſſed pleaſure is, preſerveth whom he liſteth, notwithſtanding the wonderfull raging of the world. Many (as we hear ſay) have valiantly ſuffered, confeſſing Chriſts truth, and nothing yielding to the adverſary, yea not for the fear or pains of death.

Names of Martyrs.

The names of them which I knew, and have now ſuffered, are theſe: Farrar the Biſhop of S. Davids, Hooper the Biſhop of Worceſter, Rogers tuus olim comprebendarius, D, Taylor of Hadley, M. Sanders, and one Tomkins a weaver, and now this laſt day M. Cardmaker, with another, were burnt in Smithfield at London, and many other in Eſſex and Kent, whoſe names are written in the book of Life, whom yet I do not know.

This Weſt, when he had relented and ſaid Maſſe againſt his conſcience, ſhortly after pined away, and died for ſorrow.

Weſt, your old companion, and ſometime mine officer (alas) hath relented (as I have heard) but the Lord hath ſhortened his dayes, for anon after he died, and is gone. Grimbold was caught by the heel, and caſt into the Marſhalſey, but now is at liberty again, but I fear me he eſcaped not without ſome becking or bowing (alas) of his knee unto Baal.

“Note how Boner here requited the kindnes of B. Ridley ſhewed to his mother.

My dear friend Thomas Ridley of the Bullhead in Cheap, which was to me the moſt faithfull friend that I had in my trouble, is departed alſo unto God. My brother Shipſide that hath married my ſiſter, hath been almoſt half a yeer in priſon, for delivering (as he was accuſed) of certain things, I ween, from me; but now thanks be to God, he is at liberty again, but ſo that the Biſhop hath taken from him his “Park.

Of all us three Concaptives at Oxford, I am kept moſt ſtrait, and with leaſt liberty, Vel quia viro, in cujus ædibus ego cuſtodior, uxor dominatur (licet modo ſit præfectus civitatis) mulier vetula, moroſa, & ſuperſtitioſiſſ. quæ etiam hoc ſibi laudi ducit quod me dicatur arctiſſimè & cautiſſimè cuſtodire, vir autem ipſe Iriſchius nomine, mitis ſatis eſt omnibus, uxori vero pluſquam obſequentiſſ. Licet uxorem (uti noſti) nunquam habuerim, tamen ex hac quotidiana conſuetudine, quam cum iſtis conjugibus habeo, videor mihi nonnihil poſſe intelligere quam grave malum & intolerable jugum ſit cum mala muliere in conjugio collocari. Rectè ergo ſapiens dixit, uxor bona donum Dei; & iterum, mulieris bonæ beatis vir. Vel hæc inquam cauſa eſt, vel quia à magnis Magiſtratibus (neſcio quas ob cauſas) illud eſt, ut ita fieret, ipſis mandatum: idque illi ſi quando de mea nimia ſervitute apud eos conqueror, ſedulo ſæpe rurſus mihi inculcant.

All the ſtatutes of reformation in Cambridge broken, and all things reduced again into the old ſtate of Popery.

At Cambridge (as I hear ſay) Omnes ſtudioſorum & ſtatutorum reformationes nuper factæ nunc ſunt denuo deformatæ & deletæ, & omnia ſunt in priſtinum chaos & in antiquum papiſmum reducta: omnes collegiorum præfecti qui ſynceritate Evangelij favebant, vel qui conjugati erant, loco moti ſunt, & alij Papiſticæ factionis in eorum loca ſurrogati, quod & de ſociis collegiorum qui noluerunt flectere genu Baal factum eſſe audio. Nec mirum, nam aliud paſſim factum eſt in univerſo regno Angliæ, in omnibus, Archiepiſcopis, Epiſcopis, Decanis, Prebendariis, Sacerdotibus Eccleſiarum, & in toto clero: and to tell you much naughty matter in few words; Papiſmus apud nos ubique in pleno ſuo antiquo robore regnat.

Unthankfull receiving of Gods great gifts and graces.

Coldneſſe of Paſtors, corruption of Magiſtrates, waywardneſſe of the people provoked Gods wrath.

The Lord be mercifull, and for Chriſts ſake pardon us our old unkindeneſſe and unthankfulneſſe: for when he poured upon us the gifts of his manifold graces and favours (alas) we did not ſerve him, nor render unto him thanks according to the ſame. We Paſtors many of us were too cold, and bare too much (alas) with the wicked world; our Magiſtrates did abuſe, to their own worldly gain, both Gods Goſpel and the Miniſters of the ſame. The people in many places was wayward and unkinde. Thus of every ſide and of every ſort we have provoked Gods anger and wrath to fall upon us: but bleſſed might he be that hath not ſuffered his to continne in thoſe wayes which ſo wholly have diſpleaſed his ſecret Majeſty, but hath awaked them by the fatherly correction of his own Sons Croſſe, unto his glory and our endleſſe ſalvation, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

The prayer of B. Ridley for the Churches abroad, which openly profeſſe the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

My daily prayer is (as God doth know) and by Gods grace ſhall be ſo long as I live in this world, for you my dear brethren that are fled out of your own Countrey, becauſe you will rather forſake all worldly things than the truth of Gods Word. It is even the ſame that I uſe to make to God, for all thoſe Churches abroad thorow the world, which have forſaken the Kingdom of Antichriſt, and profeſſed openly the purity of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, that God our eternall Father, for our Saviour Chriſts ſake, will daily increaſe in you the gracious gift of his heavenly Spirit, to the true ſetting forth of his glory and of his Goſpel, and make you to agrée brotherly in the truth of the ſame, that there ariſe no root of bitterneſſe among you that may infect that good ſéed which God hath ſown in your hearts already, and finally that your life may be ſo pure and ſo honeſt, according to the rule of Gods Word and according to that vocation whereunto we are called by the Goſpel of Chriſt our Saviour, that the honeſty and purity of the ſame may provoke all that ſhall ſée or know it, to the love of your doctrine, and to love you for your honeſty and vertues ſake, and ſo both in brotherly unity of your true Doctrine, and alſo in the godly vertue of your honeſt life, to glorifie our Father which is in heaven.

B. Ridley prayeth for Queen Mary.

Ex noſtratibus magni aliquot Magiſtratus, Cancellarius Wint. Comes Arundellus, & Dominus Pachetus jam legatione funguntur, una cum Cardinali Polo, in patribus tranſmarinis, ad componendam (ut aiunt) pacem inter imperatorem, regem noſtrum, & Francorum regem. Poſt illorum Magiſtratuum noſtrorum redditum, & partum reginæ, quem jam quotidie expectamus, & jam aliquandiu expectavimus, quemque Deus pro ſui nominis gloria dignetur bene illi fortunare; nos tunc ſtatim nihil aliud quam noſtræ confeſſionis de hoſte noſtro antiquo triumphales in Domino coronas expectamus.

Omnium veſtrum precibus me humillimè ex toto corde commendo; In primis, tuis O chariſſ. in Chriſto frater, & dilectiſſ. Grindalle, & chariſſ. fratrum & unice mihi in Domino dilectorum, Checi, Coxi, Turneri, Leveri, Sampſonis, Chamberi, & omnium fratrum noſtrorum & conterraneorum qui apud vos degunt, & diligunt Dominum noſtrum Ieſum Chriſtum in veritate. Commendo etiam vobis reverendiſſ. patres & concaptivos meos in Domino Thomam Cranmerum jam veri magni Paſtoris & Archipreſulis nomine digniſſ. & veteranum illum Chriſti & noſtræ gentis Anglicanæ verum Apoſtolum Hugonem Latimerum. To Auguſtine Bernher.

A Letter of B. Ridley to one Auſten Bernher.

Commemoration of Saints.

BRother Auguſtine, I bleſſe God with all my heart in his manifold mercifull gifts, given unto our dear brethren in Chriſt, ſpecially to our brother Rogers, whom it pleaſed him to ſet forth firſt, no doubt out of his gracious goodneſſe and fatherly favour towards him. And likewiſe bleſſed be God in the reſt, as Hooper, Sanders, and Taylor, whom it hath pleaſed the Lord likewiſe to ſet in the forefront of the battell againſt his adverſaries, and hath endued them all (ſo far as I can hear) to ſtand in the confeſſion of his truth, and to be content in his cauſe, and for his Goſpels ſake to loſe their life. And evermore and without end bleſſed be even the ſame our heavenly Father for our dear and entirely beloved brother Bradford, whom now the Lord (I perceive) calleth for: for I wéen he will no longer vouchſafe him to abide among the adulterous and wicked generation of this world. I do not doubt but that he (for thoſe gifts of grace which the Lord hath beſtowed on him plenteouſly) hath holpen thoſe which are gone before in their journey, that is, hath animated and encouraged them to kéep the high way, & ſic currere, uti tandem acciperent præmium. The Lord be his comfort, whereof I do not doubt, and I thank God heartily that ever I was acquainted with him, and that ever I had ſuch a one in my houſe. And yet again I bleſſe God in our dear brother, and of this time Protomartyr Rogers, that he was alſo one of my calling to be a Prebendary Preacher of London. And now becauſe Grindall is gone (the Lord I doubt not hath and knoweth wherein he will beſtow him) I truſt to God, it ſhall pleaſe him of his goodneſſe to ſtrengthen me to make up the trinity out of Pauls Church, to ſuffer for Chriſt whom God the Father hath anointed, the holy Spirit doth bear witneſſe unto, Paul and all the Apoſtles preached. Thus fare you well, I had no paper, I was conſtrained thus to write.

Protomartyr is the firſt martyr whom he ſo calleth, becauſe he was the firſt that ſuffered here in thoſe bloody dayes.

Beſides theſe Letters of Biſhop Ridley, divers other tractations alſo were written by him, partly out of priſon, partly in priſon: as namely among certain other, there remain in my hands certain notes anſwering to the two notable Sermons of Doctor Watſon, Biſhop of Lincoln, &c.

Here beginneth the life, acts, and doings of Maſter Hugh Latimer, the famous Preacher and worthy Martyr of Chriſt and his Goſpel.

The ſtory of M. Hugh Latimer, Martyr.

M. Latimer firſt ſet to School.

M. Latimer ſent to Cambridge.

NOw conſequently after the life of Biſhop Ridley, with other his Letters, which partly we have expreſſed, and partly we have deferred to our latter appendix, followeth likewiſe the life and doings of the worthy Champion, and old practiſed ſouldier of Chriſt, Maſter Hugh Latimer: of whoſe acts and long travels even from his firſt yeers and tender age, to begin here to entreat: firſt, he was the ſonne of one Hugh Latimer, of Thirkeſſon in the County of Leiceſter, a husbandman of right good eſtimation; with whom alſo he was brought up untill he was of the age of four yeers or thereabout. At which time his Parents (having him as then left for their onely ſon, with ſixe other daughters) ſeeing his ready, prompt, and ſharpe wit, purpoſed to train him up in erudition, and knowledge of good literature; wherein he ſo profited in his youth, at the common Schooles of his own Countrey, that at the age of 14. yeers, he was ſent to the Univerſitie of Cambridge. Where, after ſome continuance of exerciſes in other things, he gave himſelf to the ſtudy of ſuch ſchool Divinity, as the ignorance of that age did ſuffer.

M. Latimer a long time was a zealous and ſuperſtitious Papiſt.

M. Latimer declaimed in Cambridge againſt Melancthon.

Zealous he was then in the Popiſh Religion, and therewith ſo ſcrupulous, as himſelf confeſſed, that being a Prieſt, and uſing to ſay Maſſe, he was ſo ſervile an obſerver of the Romiſh Decrees, that he thought he had never ſufficiently mingled his maſſing wine with water: and moreover, that he ſhould never be damned, if he were once a profeſſed Frier, with divers ſuch ſuperſtitious fantaſies. And in this blinde zeal he was a very enemy to the Profeſſors of Chriſts Goſpel; as both his Oration made, when he proceeded Bachelor of Divinity, againſt Philip Melancthon, and alſo his other works did plainly declare. But eſpecially his Popiſh zeal could in no caſe abide in thoſe daies good Maſter Stafford, Reader of the Divinity Lectures in Cambridge, moſt ſpitefully railing againſt him, and willing the youth of Cambridge in no wiſe to beleeve him.

Latimer converted by M. Bilney.

Read M. Latimers own confeſſion in his firſt Sermon upon the Pater noſter.

M. Latimer a Papiſt, turned to a zealous Chriſtian.

Notwithſtanding, ſuch was the goodneſſe and mercifull purpoſe of God, that when he ſaw his good time, by the which way he thought to have utterly defaced the profeſſors of the Goſpel, and true Church of Chriſt, he was at length himſelf by a member of the ſame pretily caught in the bleſſed net of Gods Word. For M. Thomas Bilney (whoſe ſtory is before deſcribed) being at that time a trier out of Satans ſubtilties, and a ſecret overthrower of Antichriſts Kingdome, ſeeing Maſter Latimer to have a zeal in his wayes (although without knowledge) was ſtricken with a brotherly pitie towards him, and bethought by what means he might beſt win this zealous ignorant brother, to the true knowledge of Chriſt. Wherefore, after a ſhort time, he came to Maſter Latimers ſtudy, and deſired him to hear him make his confeſſion. Which thing he willingly granted; by hearing whereof, he was (through the good Spirit of God) ſo touched, that hereupon he forſooke his former ſtudying of the Schoole Doctors, and other ſuch fopperies, and became an earneſt ſtudent of true Divinity, as he himſelf, as well in his conference with Maſter Ridley, as alſo in his firſt Sermon made upon the Pater noſter, doth confeſſe. So that whereas before he was an enemy, and almoſt a perſecutor of Chriſt, he was now a zealous ſeeker after him, changing his old manner of cavilling and railing, into a diligent kinde of conferring, both with Maſter Bilney and others, and came alſo to Maſter Stafford before he dyed, and deſired him to forgive him.

M. Latimer becommeth a Preacher in Cambridge.

After this his winning to Chriſt, he was not ſatisfied with his own converſion onely, but like a true Diſciple of the bleſſed Samaritane, pitied the miſery of others, and therefore became both a publike Preacher, and alſo a private inſtructer to the reſt of his brethren within the Univerſity, by the ſpace of three yeers, ſpending his time partly in the Latin tongue among the learned, and partly amongſt the ſimple people in his naturall and vulgar language. Howbeit, as Sathan never ſleepeth when he ſeeth his Kingdom to begin to decay, ſo likewiſe now, ſeeing that this worthy member of Chriſt would be a ſhrewd ſhaker thereof, he raiſed up his impious imps to moleſt and trouble him.

Enemies ſtirred in Cambridge againſt M. Latimer.

M. Latimers preaching of the cards in Cambridge.

Amongſt theſe there was an Auguſtine Frier, who took occaſion upon certain Sermons that Maſter Latimer made about Chriſtmas 1529. as well in the Church of S. Edward, as alſo in S. Auguſtines, within the Univerſity of Cambridge to invey againſt him, for that Maſter Latimer in the ſaid Sermons (alluding to the common uſage of the ſeaſon) gave the people certain cards out of the 5, 6, 7. Chapters of S. Matthew, whereupon they might, not onely then, but always elſe, occupy their time. For the chief triumph in the cards he limited the heart, as the principall thing that they ſhould ſerve God withall; whereby he quite overthrew all hypocriticall and externall ceremonies, not tending to the neceſſary furtherance of Gods holy Word and Sacraments. For the better attaining hereof, he wiſhed the Scriptures to be in Engliſh, whereby the common people might the better learn their duties, as well to God as their neighbours.

The handling of this matter was ſo apt for the time, and ſo pleaſantly applied of him, that not onely it declared a ſingular towardneſſe of wit in the Preacher, but alſo wrought in the hearers much fruit, to the overthrow of Popiſh ſuperſtition, and ſetting up of perfect religion.

The difference between true and falſe religion.

This was upon the Sunday before Chriſtmas day; on which day coming to the Church, and cauſing the bell to be tolled to a Sermon, he entered into the Pulpit, taking for his text the words of the Goſpel aforeſaid, read in the Church that day; Tu quis es, &c. In delivering the which cards (as is aboveſaid) he made the Heart to be triumph, exhorting and inviting all men thereby to ſerve the Lord with inward heart and true affection, and not with outward ceremonies: adding moreover to the praiſe of that triumph, that though it were never ſo ſmall, yet it would take up the beſt coat card beſide in the bunch, yea, though it were the King of Clubs, &c. meaning thereby how the Lord would be worſhipped and ſerved in ſimplicity of heart and verity, wherein conſiſteth true Chriſtian religion, and not in the outward deeds of the letter onely, or in the gliſtering ſhew of mans traditions, or pardons, pilgrimages, ceremonies, vows, devotions, voluntary works, and works of ſupererogation, foundations, oblations, the Popes ſupremacy, &c. ſo that all theſe either were needleſſe, where the other is preſent; or elſe were of ſmall eſtimation, in compariſon of the other.

The tenor and effect of theſe his Sermons, ſo farre as they could come to our hands, here follow.

THE Tenor and effect of certain SERMONS,

Made by M. LATIMER in Cambridge, about the yeer of our Lord, 1529.

TU quis es? Which words are as much to ſay in Engliſh, Who art thou? Theſe be the words of the Phariſees, which were ſent by the Jews unto St. John Baptiſt in the wilderneſſe, to have knowledge of him, who he was; which words they ſpake unto him of an evill intent, thinking that he would have taken on him to be Chriſt, and ſo they would have had him done with their good wills, becauſe they knew that he was more carnall, and given to their laws, than Chriſt indeed ſhould be, as they perceived by their old propheſies: and alſo, becauſe they marvelled much of his great doctrine, preaching and baptizing, they were in doubt whether he was Chriſt or not: wherefore they ſaid unto him, Who art thou? Then anſwered S. John, and confeſſed that he was not Chriſt. Now here is to be noted, the great and prudent anſwer of St. John Baptiſt unto the Phariſees, that when they required of him who he was, he would not directly anſwer of himſelf, what he was himſelf; but he ſaid he was not Chriſt, by the which ſaying he thought to put the Jews and Phariſees out of their falſe opinion, and belief towards him, in that they would have had him to exerciſe the office of Chriſt, and ſo declared further unto them of Chriſt, ſaying, He is in the midſt of you, and amongſt you, whom ye know not, whoſe latchet of his ſhoo I am not worthy to unlooſe, or undo. By this you may perceive that Saint John ſpake much in the laud and praiſe of Chriſt his Maſter, profeſſing himſelf to be in no wiſe like unto him. So likewiſe it ſhall be neceſſary unto all men and women of this world, not to aſcribe unto themſelves any goodneſſe of themſelves, but all unto our Lord God, as ſhall appear hereafter, when this queſtion aforeſaid (Who art thou?) ſhall be moved unto them: not as the Phariſees did unto S. John, of an evill purpoſe, but of a good and ſimple minde, as may appear hereafter.

Now then, according to the Preachers minde, let every man and woman, of a good and ſimple minde, contrary to the Phariſees intent, ask this queſtion (Who art thou?) This queſtion muſt be moved to themſelves, what they be of themſelves. on this faſhion, What art thou of thy onely and naturall generation between father and mother, when thou cameſt into this world? What ſubſtance, what vertue, what goodneſſe art thou of by thy ſelf? which queſtion if thou rehearſe oftentimes unto thy ſelf, thou ſhalt well perceive and underſtand, how thou ſhalt make anſwer unto it: which muſt be made on this wiſe; I am of my ſelf, and by my ſelf, coming from my naturall father and mother, the childe of the ire and indignation of God, the true inheritor of hell, a lump of ſinne, and working nothing of my ſelf, but all towards hell, except I have better help of another, than I have of my ſelf. Now we may ſee in what ſtate we enter into this world, that we be of our ſelves the true and juſt inheritors of hell, the children of the ire and indignation of Chriſt, working all towards hell, whereby we deſerve of our ſelves perpetuall damnation, by the right judgement of God, and the true claim of our ſelves: which unthrifty ſtate that we be born unto is come unto us for our own deſerts, and proveth well this example following.

Let it be admitted for the probation of this, that it might pleaſe the Kings Grace now being, to accept into his favour a mean man, of ſimple degree and birth, not born to any poſſeſſion; whom the Kings Grace favoureth, not becauſe this perſon hath of himſelf deſerved any ſuch favour, but that the King caſteth his favour unto him of his own meer motion and fantaſie: and becauſe the Kings Grace will more declare his favour unto him, he giveth unto his ſaid man a thouſand pounds in lands, to him and his heirs, on this condition, that he ſhall take upon him to be the chief Captain, and Defender of his Town of Calice, and to be true and faithfull to him in the cuſtody of the ſame, againſt the French-men eſpecially, above all other enemies.

This man taketh on him this charge, promiſing his fidelity thereunto, It chanceth in proceſſe of time, that by the ſingular acquaintance and frequent familiarity of this Captain with the French-men, theſe French-men give unto the ſaid Captain of Calice a great ſum of money, ſo that he will be content and agreeable, that they may enter into the ſaid Town of Calice by force of arms, and ſo thereby poſſeſſe the ſame unto the Crown of France: upon this agreement the French-men do invade the ſaid Town of Calice, alonely by the negligence of this Captain.

Now the Kings Grace hearing of this invaſion, cometh with a great puiſſance to defend this his ſaid Town, and ſo by good policy of war overcometh the ſaid French-men, and entereth again into his Town of Calice. Then he being deſirous to know how theſe enemies of his came thither, he maketh profound ſearch and inquiry, by whom this Treaſon was conſpired; by this ſearch it was known and found his own Captain to be the very author and beginner of the betraying of it. The King, ſeeing the great infidelity of this perſon, diſchargeth this man of his office, and taketh from him and his heirs this thouſand pounds poſſeſſions. Think you not that the King doth uſe juſtice unto him, and all his poſterity and heirs? Yes truely: the ſaid Captain cannot deny himſelf, but that he had true juſtice, conſidering how unfaithfully he behaved himſelf to his Prince, contrary to his own fidelity and promiſe: ſo likewiſe it was of our firſt father Adam. He had given unto him the ſpirit and ſcience of knowledge, to work all goodneſſe therewith; this ſaid ſpirit was not given alonely unto him, but unto all his heirs and poſterity. He had alſo delivered him the Town of Calice, that is to ſay, Paradiſe in earth, the moſt ſtrong and faireſt Town in the world, to be in his cuſtody: He neverthéleſſe by the inſtigation of theſe Frenchmen, that is to ſay, the temptation of the Fiend, did obey unto their deſire, and ſo he brake his promiſe and fidelity, the commandement of the everlaſting King his Maſter, in eating of the apple by him inhibited.

Now then, the King ſeeing this great treaſon in his Captain, depoſed him of the thouſand pounds of poſſeſſions, that is to ſay, from everlaſting life in glory, and all his heirs and poſterity: for likewiſe as he had the ſpirit of ſcience and knowledge, for him and his heirs; ſo in like manner when he loſt the ſame, his heirs loſt it alſo by him, and in him. So now, this example proveth, that by our father Adam we had once in him the very inheritance of everlaſting joy; and by him, and in him again we loſt the ſame.

The heirs of the Captain of Calice could not by any manner of claim ask of the King the right and title of their father, in the thouſand pounds poſſeſſions, by reaſon the King might anſwer, and ſay unto them, that although their father deſerved not of himſelf to enjoy ſo great poſſeſſions, yet he deſerved by himſelf to loſe them, and greater, committing ſo high treaſon, as he did, againſt his Princes commandements; whereby he had no wrong to loſe his title, but was unworthy to have the ſame, and had therein true juſtice; let not you think which be his heirs, that if he had juſtice to loſe his poſſeſſions, you have wrong to loſe the ſame: In the ſame manner it may be anſwered unto all men and women now being, that if our father Adam had true juſtice to be excluded from his poſſeſſion of everlaſting glory in Paradiſe, let us not think the contrary that be his heirs, but that we have no wrong in loſing alſo the ſame; yea, we have true juſtice and right. Then in what miſerable ſtate be we, that of the right and juſt title of our own deſerts have loſt the everlaſting joy, and claim of our ſelves to be true inheritors of hell? For he that committeth deadly ſinne willingly, bindeth himſelf to be inheritor of everlaſting pain: and ſo did our forefather Adam willingly eat of the apple forbidden. Wherefore he was caſt out of the everlaſting joy in Paradiſe, into this corrupt world, amongſt all vileneſſe, whereby of himſelf he was not worthy to do any thing laudable or pleaſant to God, evermore bound to corrupt affections, and beaſtly appetites, transformed into the uncleaneſt and variableſt nature that was made under heaven, of whoſe ſeed and diſpoſition all the world is lineally deſcended, inſomuch that this evill nature is ſo diffuſed and ſhed from one into another, that at this day there is no man nor woman living, that can of themſelves waſh away this abominable vileneſſe: and ſo we muſt needs grant of our ſelves to be in like diſpleaſure unto God, as our Father Adam was; by reaſon hereof, as I ſaid, we be of our ſelves the very children of the indignation and vengeance of God, the true inheritors of hell, and working all towards hell, which is the anſwer to this queſtion, made to every man and woman by themſelves, Who art thou?

And now the world ſtanding in this damnable ſtate, cometh in the occaſion of the Incarnation of Chriſt; the Father in Heaven perceiving the frail nature of man, that he by himſelf and of himſelf could do nothing for himſelf, by his prudent wiſedom ſent down the ſecond perſon in Trinity, his Son Jeſus Chriſt, to declare unto man his pleaſure and commandement: and ſo at the Fathers will Chriſt took on him humane nature, being willing to deliver man out of this miſerable way, and was content to ſuffer cruell paſſion in ſhedding his blood for all mankinde, and ſo left behinde for our ſafeguard laws and ordinances, to keep us alwayes in the right path unto everlaſting life, as the Evangelies, the Sacraments, the Commandements, and ſo forth: which if we do keep and obſerve according to our profeſſion, we ſhall anſwer better unto this queſtion, (Who art thou?) than we did before: for before thou diddeſt enter into the Sacrament of Baptiſm, thou wert but a naturall man, a naturall woman; as I might ſay, A man, A woman. But after thou takeſt on thee Chriſts religion, thou haſt a longer name: for then thou art a Chriſtian man, a Chriſtian woman. Now then, ſeeing thou art a Chriſtian man, what ſhall be the anſwer of this queſtion, Who art thou?

The anſwer of this queſtion is, when I ask it unto my ſelf, I muſt ſay that I am a Chriſtian man, a Chriſtian woman, the childe of everlaſting joy, through the merits of the bitter Paſſion of Chriſt. This a joyfull anſwer. Here we may ſee how much we be bound, and in danger unto God, that hath revived us from death to life, and ſaved us that were damned: which great benefit we cannot well conſider, unleſſe we do remember what we were of our ſelves before we medled with him or his Laws: and the more we know our feeble nature, and ſet leſſe by it, the more we ſhall conceive and know in our hearts what God hath done for us: and the more that we know what God hath done for us, the leſſe we ſhall ſet by our ſelves, and the more we ſhall love and pleaſe God, ſo that in no condition we ſhall either know our ſelves or God, except we do utterly confeſſe our ſelves to be meer vileneſſe and corruption. Well now it is come unto this point, that we be Chriſtian men, Chriſtian women; I pray you what doth Chriſt require of a Chriſtian man, or of a Chriſtian woman? Chriſt requireth nothing elſe of a Chriſtian man or woman, but that they will obſerve his Rule. For likewiſe as he is a good Auguſtine Frier that keepeth well St. Auguſtines rule, ſo he is a good Chriſtian man that keepeth well Chriſts rule.

Now then, what is Chriſts rule? Chriſts rule conſiſteth in many things, as in the Commandements, and the works of mercy, and ſo forth. And becauſe I cannot declare Chriſts rule unto you at one time, as it ought to be done, I will apply my ſelf according to your cuſtome at this time of Chriſtmas, I will as I ſaid, declare unto you Chriſts rule, but that ſhall be in Chriſts cards. And where you are wont to celebrate Chriſtmas in playing at cards, I intend with Gods grace to deal unto you Chriſts cards, wherein you ſhall perceive Chriſts rule. The game that we will play at, ſhall be called the Triumph, which if it be well played at, he that dealeth ſhall win; the Players ſhall likewiſe win, and the ſtanders and lookers upon ſhall do the ſame; inſomuch that there is no man that is willing to play at this Triumph with theſe cards, but they ſhall be all winners, and no loſers.

Let therefore every Chriſtian man and woman play at theſe cards, that they may have and obtain the Triumph; you muſt mark alſo that the Triumph muſt apply to fetch home unto him all the other cards, whatſoever ſuit they be of. Now then take ye this firſt card, which muſt appear and be ſhewed unto you as followeth. You have heard what was ſpoken to men of the old Law. Thou ſhalt not kill; whoſoever ſhall kill, ſhall be in danger of judgement. But I ſay unto you of the new Law, ſaith Chriſt, that whoſoever is angry with his neighbour, ſhall be in danger of judgement, and whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his neighbour Racha, that is to ſay, brainleſſe, or any other like word of rebuking, ſhall be in danger of a Councell; and whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his neighbour, Fool, ſhall be in danger of hell fire. This card was made and ſpoken by Chriſt, as appeareth in the fifth Chapter of Saint Matthew.

Now it muſt be noted, that whoſoever ſhall play with this card, muſt firſt before they play with, know the ſtrength and vertue of the ſame: wherefore you muſt well note and mark tearms how they be ſpoken, and to what purpoſe: Let us therefore reade it once or twice, that we may be the better acquainted with it.

Now behold and ſee, this card is divided into four parts: The firſt part is one of the Commandements that was given unto Moſes in the old Law, before the coming of Chriſt, which Commandement we of the new law be bound to obſerve and keep, and it is one of our Commandements. The other three parts ſpoken by Chriſt, be nothing elſe but expoſitions unto the firſt part of this Commandement: for in very effect of all theſe four parts be but one Commandement, that is to ſay, Thou ſhalt not kill: yet nevertheleſſe, the three laſt parts do ſhew unto thee how many wayes thou maiſt kill thy neighbour contrary to this Commandement: yet for all Chriſts expoſition, in the three laſt parts of this card, the tearms be not open enough to thee that doſt reade and hear them ſpoken. No doubt the Jews underſtood Chriſt well-enough when he ſpake to them theſe three laſt ſentences, for he ſpake unto them in their own naturall tearms and tongue: wherefore ſeeing that theſe tearms were naturall tearms of the Jews, it ſhall be neceſſary to expound them, and compare them unto ſome like tearms of our naturall ſpeech, that we in like manner may underſtand Chriſt as well as the Jews did. We will begin firſt with the firſt part of this card, and then after with the other three parts: you muſt therefore underſtand that the Jews and the Phariſees of the old Law, to whom this firſt part, this Commandement, Thou ſhalt not kill, was ſpoken, thought it ſufficient and enough for their diſcharge not to kill with any manner weapon of materiall weapon, as ſword, dagger, or with any ſuch weapon, and they thought it no great fault whatſoever they ſaid or did by their neighbour, ſo that they did not harm or meddle with their corporall bodies, which was a falſe opinion in them, as prove well the three laſt other ſentences following the firſt part of this Card.

Now as touching the three other ſententes, you muſt note and take heed what difference is between theſe three manner of offences, To be angry with your neighbour, To call your neighbour brainleſſe, or any ſuch word of diſdain, Or to call your neighbour fool: whether theſe three manner of offences be of themſelves more grievous one than the other, it is to be opened unto you. Truely, as they be of themſelves divers offences, ſo they kill diverſly one more than the other, as you ſhall perceive by the firſt of theſe three, and ſo forth: A man which conceiveth againſt his neighbour or brother, ire, or wrath in his minde, by ſome manner of occaſion given unto him, although he be angry in his minde againſt his ſaid neighbour, he will peradventure expreſſe his ire by no manner of ſigne, either in word or deed; yet nevertheleſſe he offendeth againſt God, and breaketh this Commandment in killing his own ſoul; and is therefore in danger of judgement.

Now to the ſecond part of theſe three; That man that is moved with ire againſt his neighbour, and in his ire calleth his neighbour brainleſſe, or ſome other like word of diſpleaſure, as a man might ſay in a fury, I ſhall handle thee well enough, which words and countenances do more repreſent and declare ire to be in this man, than in him that was but angry, and ſpake no manner of word, ne ſhewed any countenance to declare his ire: wherefore as he that ſo declareth his ire either by word or countenance, offendeth more againſt God, ſo he both killeth his own ſoul, and doth that in him is, to kill his neighbours ſoul in moving him unto ire, wherein he is faulty himſelf, and ſo this man is in danger of a Councell.

Now to the third offence, and laſt of theſe three; That man that calleth his neighbour fool, doth more declare his angry minde toward him, than he that called his neighbour but brainleſſe, or any ſuch words moving ire: for to call a man fool, that word repreſenteth more envy in a man, than brainleſſe doth. Wherefore he doth moſt offend, becauſe he doth moſt earneſtly with ſuch words expreſſe his ire, and ſo he is in danger of hell fire: wherefore you may underſtand now theſe three parts of this Card to be three offences, and that one is more grievous to God than the other, and that one killeth more the ſoul of man than the other.

Now peradventure there be ſome that will marvell that Chriſt did not declare this Commandement by ſome greater faults of ire, than by theſe which ſeem but ſmall faults, as to be angry and ſpeak nothing of it, to declare it and to call a man brainleſſe, and to call his neighbor fool, truly theſe be the ſmalleſt, and the leaſt faults that longeth to ire, or to killing in ire. Therefore beware how you offend any kinde of ire: ſeeing that the ſmalleſt be damnable to offend in, ſee that you offend not in the greateſt. For Chriſt thought, if he might bring you from the ſmalleſt manner of faults, and give you warning to avoyd the leaſt, he reckoned you would not offend in the greateſt and worſt, as to call your neighbour thief, whoreſon, whore, drab, and ſo forth, into more blaſphemous names, which offences muſt needs have puniſhment in hell, conſidering how that Chriſt hath appointed theſe three ſmall faults, to have three degrees of puniſhment in hell, as appeareth by theſe three tearms, judgement, councell, and hell fire; theſe three tearms do ſignifie nothing elſe but three divers puniſhments in hell, according to the offences: judgement is leſſe in degree than councell, therefore it ſignifieth a leſſer pain in hell, and it is ordained for him that is angry in his minde with his neighbour, and doth expreſſe his malice neither by word, ne countenance: councell is a leſſe degree in hell, than hell fire, and is a greater degree in hell than judgement; and it is ordained for him that calleth his neighbour brainleſſe, or any ſuch word, that declareth his ire and malice: wherefore it is more pain than judgement. Hell fire is more pain in hell, than councell or judgement, and it is ordained for him that calleth his neighbour fool, by reaſon that in calling his neighbour fool, he declareth more his malice, in that it is an earneſt word of ire. Wherefore hell fire is appointed for it, that is, the moſt pain of the three puniſhments.

Now you have heard that to theſe divers offences of ire and killing, be appointed puniſhments according to their degrees: for look as the offence is, ſo ſhall the pain be: if the offence be great, the pain ſhall be according: if it be leſſe, there ſhall be leſſe pain for it. I would not now that you ſhould think becauſe that here are but three degrees of puniſhments ſpoken of, that there be no more in hell: no doubt Chriſt ſpake of no more here but of theſe three degrees of puniſhments, thinking they were ſufficient enow for example, whereby we might underſtand, that there be as divers and many pains as there be offences: and ſo by theſe three offences, and theſe three puniſhments, all other offences and puniſhments may be compared with each other: yet I would ſatiſfie your mindes further in theſe three tearms, of judgement, councell, and hell fire. Where you might ſay, what was the cauſe that Chriſt declared more the pains of hell by theſe tearms, than by any other tearms? I told you afore that he knew well to whom he ſpake them; theſe tearms were naturall and known well amongſt the Jews and the Phariſees. Wherefore Chriſt taught them with their own tearms, to the intent they might underſtand the better his doctrine: and theſe tearms may be likened unto three tearms which we have common and uſuall amongſt us, that is to ſay, the Seſſions of enquirance, the Seſſions of deliverance, and the execution day: Seſſions of enquirance is like unto judgement: for when Seſſions of enquiry is, then the Judges cauſe twelve men to give verdit of the fellons crime, whereby he ſhall be judged to be endited: Seſſions of deliverance is much like councell: for at Seſſions of deliverance, the Judges go among themſelves to counſell, to determine ſentence againſt the fellon. Execution day is to be compared unto hell fire: for the Jews had amongſt themſelves a place of execution, named hell fire: and ſurely when a man goeth to his death, it is the greateſt pain in this world: wherefore you may ſee that there are degrees in theſe our tearms, as there be in thoſe tearms. Theſe evill diſpoſed affections and ſenſualities in us are alwayes contrary to the rule of our ſalvation. What ſhall we do now or imagine to thruſt down theſe Turks, and to ſubdue them? It is a great ignominy and ſhame for a Chriſtian man to be bond and ſubject unto a Turk: Nay, it ſhall not be ſo, we will firſt caſt a Trump in their way, and play with them at Cards who ſhall have the better, let us play therefore on this faſhion with this Card. Whenſoever it ſhall happen theſe foul paſſions and Turks to riſe in our ſtomacks againſt our brother, or neighbour, either for unkinde words, injuries, or wrongs, which they have done unto us, contrary unto our minde, ſtraightwayes let us call unto our remembrance, and ſpeak this queſtion unto our ſelves, Who art thou? The anſwer is, I am a Chriſtian man. Then further we muſt ſay to our ſelves, What requireth Chriſt of a Chriſtian man? Now turn up your Trump, your heart (hearts is trump as I ſaid before) and caſt your trump, your heart, on this card, and upon this card you ſhall learn what Chriſt requireth of a Chriſtian man; Not to be angry, ne moved to ire againſt his Neighbour, in minde, countenance, nor other wayes, by word or deed. Then take up this Card with your heart, and lay them together; that done, you have won the game of the Turk, whereby you have defaced and overcome by true and lawfull play: but alas for pity, the Rhodes are won and overcome by theſe falſe Turks, the ſtrong caſtle faith is decayed, ſo that I fear it is almoſt impoſſible to win it again.

Harts trump.

The great occaſion of the loſſe of this Rhodes is by reaſon that Chriſtian men do ſo daily kil their own Nation, that the very true number of Chriſtianity is decayed: which murther and killing one of another, is increaſed ſpecially two wayes, to the utter undoing of Chriſtendome, that is to ſay, by example and ſilence. By example as thus: When the Father, the Mother, the Lord, the Lady, the Maſter, the Dame, be themſelves overcome with theſe Turks, they be continuall ſwearers, adulterers, diſpoſers to malice, never in patience, and ſo forth in all other vices: Think you not when the father, the mother, the maſter, the dame, be diſpoſed unto vice or impatience, but that their children and ſervants ſhall encline and be diſpoſed to the ſame? No doubt, as the childe ſhall take diſpoſition naturall of his father and mother, ſo ſhall the ſervants apply unto the vices of their maſters and dames; if the heads be falſe in their faculties and crafts, it is no marvell if the children, ſervants, and apprentices do joy therein. This is a great and ſhamefull manner of killing Chriſtian men, that the fathers, the mothers, the maſters, and the dames, ſhall not alonely kill themſelves, but all theirs, and all longeth unto them, and ſo this way is a great number of Chriſtian linage murthered and ſpyled. The ſecond manner of killing is ſilence. By ſilence alſo is a great number of Chriſtian men ſlain; which is on this faſhion: although that the Father and Mother, Maſter and Dame of themſelves be well diſpoſed to live according to the Law of God, yet they may kill their children and ſervants in ſuffering them to do evill before their own faces, and do not uſe due correction according unto their offences; the Maſter ſeeth his ſervant or apprentice take more of his neighbour than the Kings Laws, or the order of his faculty doth admit him, or he ſuffered him to take more of his neighbour than he himſelf would be content to pay if he were in like condition: thus doing, I ſay, ſuch men kill willingly their children and ſervants, and ſhall go to hell for ſo doing; but alſo their fathers and mothers, maſters and dames, ſhall bear them company for ſo ſuffering. Wherefore I exhort all true Chriſtian men & women to give good example unto your children and ſervants, & ſuffer not them by ſilence to offend: every man muſt be in his own houſe, according to St. Auguſtines minde, a Biſhop, not alonely giving good enſample, but teach according to it, rebuke and puniſh vice, not ſuffering your children and ſervants to forget the lawes of God: you ought to ſee them have their beliefe, to know the commandements of God, to keep their holy dayes, not to loſe their time in idleneſſe; if they doe ſo, you ſhall all ſuffer paine for it, if God be true of his ſaying, as there is no doubt thereof: and ſo you may perceive that there be many one that breake this carde, Thou ſhalt not kill, and playeth therewith oftentimes at the blind trumpe, whereby they be no winners, but great loſers, : but who be thoſe now a dayes that can cleare themſelves of theſe manifeſt murders uſed to their children and ſervants? I thinke not the contrary, but that many have theſe two wayes ſlaine their owne children unto their damnation, were not the great mercy of God ready to helpe them when they repent therefore.

Two manner of killings.

Wherefore conſidering that we be ſo prone and ready to continue in ſinne, let us caſt downe our ſelves with Mary Magdalen, and the more wee bow down with her toward Chriſts feete, the more we ſhall be afraid to riſe againe in ſinne, and the more we know and ſubmit our ſelves, the more wee ſhall bee forgiven, and the leſſe wee know and ſubmit our ſelves, the leſſe wee ſhall bee forgiven, as appeareth by this example following.

Chriſt when hee was in the world amongſt the Jewes and Phariſees, there was a great Phariſee whoſe name was Simon; this Phariſee deſired Chriſt on a time to dine with him, thinking in himſelfe that hee was able and worthy to give Chriſt a dinner: Chriſt refuſed not his dinner, but came unto him. In time of their dinner it chanced there came into the houſe a great and a common ſinner named Mary Magdalen. As ſoone as ſhe perceived Chriſt, ſhe caſt her ſelfe downe, and called unto her remembrance what ſhee was of her ſelfe, and how greatly ſhee had offended God, whereby ſhe conceived in Chriſt great love, and ſo came neere unto him, and waſhed his feete with bitter teares, and ſhed upon his head precious oyntment, thinking that by him ſhe ſhould be delivered from her ſins; this great and proud Phariſee ſeeing that Chriſt did accept her oblation in the beſt part, had great indignaiton againſt this woman, and ſaid to himſelfe, if this man Chriſt were a holy Prophet, as he is taken for, he would not ſuffer this ſinner come ſo nigh him. Chriſt underſtanding the naughty minde of this Phariſee, ſayd to him; Simon, I have ſomewhat to ſay unto thee: Say what you pleaſe (quoth the Phariſee.) Then ſaid Chriſt, I pray thee tell me this: If there bee a man to whom is owing twenty pound by one, and forty by another, this man to whom this mony is owing, perceiveth theſe two men bee not able to pay him, he forgiveth them both. Which of theſe two debters ought to love this man moſt? The Phariſee ſayd, That man ought to love him beſt that had moſt forgiven him: Likewiſe ſayd Chriſt, it is by this woman. Shee hath loved mee moſt, therefore moſt is forgiven her, ſhee hath known her ſins moſt, whereby ſhe hath moſt loved me; and thou haſt leaſt loved me, becauſe thou haſt leaſt knowne thy ſins, therefore becauſe thou haſt leaſt knowne thine offences, thou art leaſt forgiven. So this proud Phariſee had an anſwer to allay his pride: and thinke you not, but that there be amongſt us a great number of theſe proud Phariſees, which thinke themſelves worthy to bid Chriſt to dinner, which will perke and preſume to ſit by Chriſt in the Church, and have diſdaine of this poore Woman Magdalen, their poore Neighbour, with an high diſdainous and ſolemn countenance, and being alwayes deſirous to climbe higheſt in the Church, reckoning their ſelves more worthy to ſit there than another, I fear me poor Magdalen under the boord, and in the belfrey, hath more forgiven of Chriſt than they have: for it is like that theſe Phariſees do leſſe know themſelves and their offences, whereby they leſſe love God, and ſo they be leſſe forgiven.

I would to God we would follow this example, and be like unto Magdalen. I doubt not but we be all Magdalens in falling into ſinne, and in offending: but we be not again Magdalens in knowing our ſelves, and in riſing from ſinne. If we be the true Magdalens, we ſhould be as willing to forſake our ſinne, and riſe from ſinne, as we were willing to commit ſinne, and to continue in it, and we then ſhould know our ſelves beſt, and make more perfect anſwer than ever we did, unto this queſtion, Who art thou? To the which we might anſwer, that we be true Chriſtian men and women: and then I ſay you ſhould underſtand, and know how you ought to play at this Card, Thou ſhalt not kill, without any interruption of your deadly enemies the Turks, and ſo triumph at the laſt, by winning everlaſting life in glory, Amen.

It would ask a long diſcourſe to declare what a ſtir there was in Cambridge, upon this preaching of M. Latimer. Belike Sathan began to feel himſelf and his kingdom to be touched too neer, and therefore thought it time to look about him, and to make out his men of arms.

D. Delwface playeth at Dice with M. Latimer.

Firſt came out the Prior of the black Friers, called Buckneham, otherwiſe ſurnamed Domine labia, who thinking to make a great had againſt M. Latimer, about the ſame time of Chriſtmas, when M. Latimer brought forth his Cards to deface belike the doings of the other, brought out his Chriſtmas Dice, caſting there to his audience cinque and quater, meaning by the cinque five places in the new Teſtament, and the four Doctors by the quater; by which his cinque quater, he would prove that it was not expedient the Scripture to be in Engliſh, leſt the ignorant and vulgar ſort through the occaſion thereof, might haply be brought in danger to leave their vocation, or elſe to run into ſome inconvenience: as for example.

Note theſe great reaſons of the Catholikes, why the Scriptures ſhould not come in Engliſh.

The Plowman when he heareth this in the Goſpel, No man that layeth his hand on the Plough, and looketh back, is meet for the Kingdom of God; might peradventure hearing this, ceaſe from his plough. Likewiſe the Baker, when he hears that a little leaven corrupteth a whole lump of dough, may percaſe leave our bread unleavened, and ſo our bodies ſhall be unſeaſoned. Alſo the ſimple man, when he heareth in the Goſpel, If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee, may make himſelfe blinde, and ſo fill the world full of beggers. Theſe with other more this Clerkly Frier brought out, to the number of five, to prove his purpoſe.

M. Latimer hearing this Frierly Sermon of Doctor Buckneham, cometh again the afternoon, or ſhortly after to the Church, to anſwer the Frier, where reſorted to him a great multitude, as well of the Univerſity as of the Town, both Doctors and other Graduates, with great expectation to hear what he could ſay: among whom alſo, directly in the face of Latimer underneath the Pulpit, ſate Buckneham the foreſaid Frier, Prior of the black Friers, with his black Friers coul about his ſhoulders.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to D. Bucknehams Sermon.

Then Maſter Latimer firſt repeating the Frierly reaſons of Doctor Buckneham, whereby he would prove it a dangerous thing for the vulgar people to have the Scripture in the vulgar tongue, ſo refuted the Frier, ſo anſwered to his objections, ſo dallied with his bald reaſon of the Ploughman looking back, and of the Baker leaving his bread unleavened, that the vanity of the Frier might to all men appear, well proving and declaring to the people, how there was no ſuch fear nor danger for the Scriptures to be in Engliſh, as the Frier pretended; at leaſt requiring this, that the Scripture might be ſo long in the Engliſh tongue, till Engliſhmen were ſo mad, that either the Ploughman durſt not look back, or the Baker ſhould leave his bread unleavened. And proceeding moreover in his Sermon, he began to diſcourſe of the myſticall ſpeeches, and figurative phraſes of the Scripture: which phraſes he ſaid were not ſo diffuſe and difficult, as they were common in the Scripture, and in the Hebrew tongue are commonly uſed and unknown: and not onely in the Hebrew tongue, but alſo every ſpeech (ſaith he) hath his like metaphors and figurative ſignifications, ſo common and vulgar to all men, that the very Painters do paint them on walls, and on houſes.

As for example (ſaith he, looking toward the Frier that ſate over againſt him) when they paint a Fox preaching out of a Friers coul, none is ſo mad to take this to be a Fox that preacheth, but know well enough the meaning of the matter, which is to paint out unto us, what hypocriſie, craft, and ſubtill diſſimulation lieth hid many times in theſe Friers couls, willing us thereby to beware of them. In fine, Frier Buckneham with this Sermon was ſo daſhed, that never after he durſt peep out of the pulpit againſt M. Latimer.

Another barking Frier againſt M. Latimer.

Beſides this Buckneham, there was alſo another railing Frier, not of the ſame coat, but of the ſame note and faction, a gray Frier and a Doctor, an Outlandiſhman called Doctor Venetus, who likewiſe in his brawling Sermons railed and raged againſt Maſter Latimer, calling him a mad and brainleſſe man, and willing the people not to believe him, &c. To whom Maſter Latimer anſwering again, taketh for his ground the words of our Saviour Chriſt, Matthew 5. Thou ſhalt not kill, &c. But I ſay unto you whoſoever is angry with his neighbour, ſhall be in danger of judgement; and whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his neighbour Racha (or any other like words of rebuking, as brainleſſe) ſhall be in danger of counſell: And whoſoever ſhall ſay to his neighbour, Fool, ſhall be in danger of hell fire.

Math. 5.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to another railing Frier.

In diſcuſſing of which place, firſt he divideth the offence of killing into three branches. One to be with hand, the other with heart, the third with word. With hand when we uſe any weapon drawn, to ſpill the life of our neighbour. With heart, when we be angry with him. With word, when in word or countenance we diſdainfully rebuke our neighbour, or deſpitefully revile him. Words of rebuking are when we ſpeak any opprobrious or unſeemly thing, whereby the patience of our neighbour is moved, as when we call him mad (ſaid he) or brainleſſe, or ſuch like, which are guilty of Councell. Words of ſpite, or reviling, are, when we call him Fool; which Chriſt ſaith is guilty of hell fire, &c.

Sap. 5.

Thus M. Latimer in handling and trimming this matter, after that with the weight of Chriſts words, and the explaining of the ſame, he had ſufficiently born the Frier clean down, then he turned to the fifth Chapter of the book of Wiſedom. Out of the which Chapter he declared to the audience, how the true ſervants and preachers of God in this world commonly are ſcorned and reviled of the proud enemies of Gods Word, which count them here as madmen, fools, brainleſſe, and drunken: ſo did they (ſaid he)

Acts 2.

in the Scripture call them which moſt purely preached, and ſet forth the glory of Gods Word. But (ſaid he) what will be the end of theſe jolly fellows, or what will they ſay in the end? Nos inſenſati, nos inſenſati, &c. We mad men, we mad fools, we, we, our ſelves, &c. And that will be their end, except they repent. And thus ending his Sermon, he ſo confounded the poor Friar, that he drave him not onely out of countenance, but alſo clean out of the Univerſity.

But what ſhould I here ſtand deciphring the names of his adverſaries, when whole ſwarms of Friers and Doctors flockt againſt him on every ſide, almoſt thorow the whole Univerſity, preaching likewiſe and barking againſt him. Amongſt whom was Doctor Watſon, Maſter of Chriſts Colledge, whoſe Scholler Latimer had been afore. Doctor Notaries, Maſter of Clare-hall, Doctor Philo, Maſter of Michael houſe, Doct. Metecalfe, Maſter of St. Johns, Doctor Blithe of the Kings Hall, Doctor Bullock, Maſter of the Queens Colledge, Doctor Cliffe of Clement Houſe, Doctor Donnes of Jeſus Colledge, Doctor Pſalmes, M. of St. Nicholas Hoſtel, Bain, Rud, and Greenwood, Bachelor of Divinity, all three of St. Johns Colledge. Alſo Brikenden Bachelor of Divinity of the ſame houſe, and ſchollar ſometimes to the ſaid Latimer. Briefly, almoſt as many as were Heads there of houſes, ſo many impugners did this worthy ſtandard-bearer of Chriſts Goſpel ſuſtain.

D. West Biſh. of Ely forbidding M. Latimer to preach.

Then came at laſt Doctor Weſt, Biſhop of Ely, who preaching againſt M. Latimer at Barwell Abbey, forbade him within the Churches of that Univerſity to preach any more. Notwithſtanding ſo the Lord provided, that Doctor Barnes, Prior of the Auguſtine Friers, did licence Maſter Latimer to preach in his Church of the Auguſtines, and he himſelf preached at the Church by, called Saints Edwards Church, which was the firſt Sermon of the Goſpel, which Doct. Barnes preached, being upon Chriſtmas Even upon a Sunday. Whereupon certain articles were gathered out of his Sermon, and were commenced againſt him by Maſter Tirell, Fellow of the Kings Hall, and ſo by the Vice-chancellor preſented to the Cardinall, as in his ſtory before hath been declared.

This M. Latimer (as you have heard) being baited by the Friers, Doctors, and Maſters of that Univerſity, about the yeer aforeſaid, 1529. notwithſtanding the maugre and malice of theſe malignant adverſaries, continued yet in Cambridge, preaching the ſpace of three yeers together, with favour and applauſe of the godly, alſo with ſuch admiration of his enemies that heard him, that the Biſhop himſelf coming in, and hearing his gift, wiſhed himſelf to have the like, and was compelled to commend him upon the ſame.

Bilney and Latimer joyned companions.

So M. Latimer, with M. Bilney, after this continued yet in Cambridge a certain ſpace, where he with the ſaid Bilney uſed much to confer and company together, inſomuch that the place where they moſt uſed to walk in the fields, was called long after, the Heretikes hill.

The ſociety of theſe two, as it was much noted of many in that Univerſity, ſo it was full of many good examples, to all ſuch as would follow their doings, both in viſiting the priſoners, in relieving the needy, in feeding the hungry, whereof ſomewhat is before mentioned in the hiſtory of Maſter Bilney. In a place of his Sermons, Maſter Latimer maketh mention of a certain hiſtory which happened about this time in Cambridge between them two, and a certain woman then priſoner in the caſtle or tower of Cambridge, which I thought here not unworthy to be remembred. The hiſtory is this: It ſo chanced that after Maſter Latimer had bin ſo acquainted with the foreſaid Maſter Bilney, he went with him to viſit the Priſoners in the Tower in Cambridge; and being there, among other priſoners there was a woman which was accuſed that ſhe had killed her own childe, which act ſhe plainly and ſtedfaſtly denied. Whereby it gave them occaſion to ſearch for the matter, and at length they found that her husband loved her not, and therefore ſought all means he could to make her away. The matter was thus:

A ſtory of a certain woman condemned, who was ſaved by M. Latimer.

A childe of hers had been ſick a whole yeer, and at length died in harveſt time, as it were in a conſumption. Which when it was gone, ſhe went to have her neighbours to help her to the buriall, but all were in harveſt abroad; whereby ſhe was enforced with heavineſſe of heart, alone to prepare the childe to the buriall. Her husband coming home, and not loving her, accuſed her of murthering the childe. This was the cauſe of her trouble, and Maſter Latimer, by earneſt inquiſition, of conſcience thought the woman not guilty. Then immediatly after, was he called to preach before King Henry the Eighth, at Windſore; where after his Sermon the Kings Majeſty ſent for him, and talked with him familiarly. At which time Maſter Latimer finding opportunity, kneeled down, opened this whole matter to the King, and begged her pardon, which the King moſt graciouſly granted, and gave it him at his return homeward. In the mean time the woman was delivered of a childe in the priſon, whoſe Godfather was M. Latimer, Miſtreſſe Cheek Godmother. But all the while he would not tell her of the pardon, but laboured to have her confeſſe the truth of the matter. At length the time came when ſhe ſhould look to ſuffer, and Maſter Latimer came as he was wont to inſtruct her: unto whom ſhe made great lamentation and mone, to be purified before her ſuffering, for ſhe thought to be damned if ſhe ſhould ſuffer without purification.

M. Latimer obtained pardon of the King for a woman wrongfully condemned.

Purification of women.

Then Maſter Bilney being with Maſter Latimer, both told her that that Law was made to the Jews, and not to us, and how women be as well in the favour of God before they be purified, as after; and rather it was appointed for a civill and politike law, for naturall honeſty ſake, than that they ſhould any thing the more be purified from ſinne thereby, &c. So thus they travelled with this woman, till they had brought her to a good trade, and then at length ſhewed her the Kings pardon, and let her go.

This good act among many other at this time happened in Cambridge by Maſter Latimer, and Maſter Bilney. But this was not alone, for many moe like matters were wrought by them, if all were known, whereof partly ſome are touched before, ſuch eſpecially as concern Maſter Bilney, mention whereof is above expreſſed. But as it is commonly ſeen in the naturall courſe of things, that as the fire beginneth more to kindle, ſo the more ſmoke ariſeth withall, in much like ſort it happened with Maſter Latimer whoſe towardneſſe the more it began to ſpring, his vertues to be ſeen, and his doings to be known, the more his adverſaries beganne to ſpurne and kindle againſt him. Concerning theſe adverſaries, and ſuch as did moleſt him, partly their names be above expreſſed. Among the reſt of this number was Doctor Redman, of whom mention is made before in the raigne of K. Edward, a man ſavouring at that time ſomewhat more of ſuperſtition, then of true Religion, after the zeal of the Phariſees, yet not ſo malignant or harmfull, but of a civill and quiet diſpoſition, and alſo ſo liberall in well doing, that few poor ſchollers were in that Univerſity, which fared not better by his purſe. This D. Redman being of no lit-

Latimer, in ſetting abroad the word and doctrine of the Goſpel, at this time, or much about the ſame writeth to him, ſeeking by perſwaſion to revoke the ſayd Latimer from that kinde and manner of teaching; to whom M. Latimer maketh anſwer again in few words: The ſumme and effect of both their letters, tranſlated out of Latine, here followeth to be ſeen.

The ſumme of the Epiſtle written by D. Redman to M. Latimer.

A letter of D. Redman to M. Latimer.

GRace be with you, and true peace in Chriſt Jeſus. I beſeech you heartily, and require moſt earneſtly, even for charities ſake, that you will not ſtand in your own conceit with a minde ſo indurate, nor prefer your own ſingular judgement in matters of Religion and controverſies before ſo many learned men, and that more is, before the whole Catholike Church, eſpecially conſidering that you neither have any thing at all in the word of GOD to make for you, nor yet the teſtimony of any authenticall Writer. Nay, nay: I beſeech you rather conſider that you are a man, and that lying and vanity may quickly bleare your eye, which doth ſometime transforme it ſelfe into an Angel of light.

Judge not ſo raſhly of us, as that wicked ſpirit hath tickled you in the ear. Wit you well that we are carefull for you, and that we wiſh you to be ſaved, and that we are carefull alſo for your own ſalvation. Lay down your ſtomack I pray you, and humble your ſpirit, and ſuffer not the Church to take offence with the hardneſſe of your heart, nor that her unity and Chriſts coat without ſeame (as much as lyeth in you) ſhould be torn aſunder. Conſider what the ſaying of the wiſeman is, and be obedient thereunto: Truſt not your own wiſedome. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

The ſumme of M. Latimers anſwer to Doctor Redman.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to D. Redman.

REverend Maſter Redman, it is even enough for me, that Chriſts Sheep hear no mans voice but Chriſts: and as for you, you have no voice of Chriſt againſt me, whereas for my part I have a heart that is ready to harken to any voice of Chriſt that you can bring me. Thus fare you well, and trouble me no more from the talking with the Lord my God.

M. Latimer called up to the Cardinall.

After M. Latimer had thus travelled in preaching and teaching in the Univerſity of Cambridge, about the ſpace of three yeers, at length he was called up to the Cardinall for hereſie, by the procurement of certaine of the ſaid Univerſity, where he was content to ſubſcribe, and grant to ſuch articles as then they propounded unto him, &c.

D. Buts a worthy favorer of Gods word.

After that he returned to the Univerſity again, where ſhortly after by the means of Doctor Buts, the Kings Phyſitian, a ſingular good man, and a ſpeciall favorer of good proceedings, he was in the number of them which laboured in the cauſe of the Kings ſupremacy. Then went he to the Court, where he remained a certain time in the ſaid Doctor Buts chamber, preaching then in London verie often. At laſt being weary of the Court, having a benefice offered by the King, at the ſute of the L. Cromwell, and Doctor Buts, was glad thereof, ſeeking by that means to be rid out of the Court, wherewith in no caſe he could agree; and ſo having a grant of the Benefice, contrary to the minde of D. Buts, he would needs depart, and be reſident at the ſame.

M. Latimer Beneficed in Wiltſhire in Weſtkingſton.

This Benefice was in Wiltſhire, under the Dioceſſe of Sarum, the name of which Town was called Weſt Kingſton, where this good Preacher did exerciſe himſelfe with much diligence of teaching to inſtruct his flock, and not only to them his diligence extended, but alſo to all the Country about. In fine, his diligence was ſo great, his Preaching ſo mighty, the manner of his teaching ſo zealous, that there in like ſort he could not eſcape without enemies. So true it is that S. Paul foretelleth us, Whoſoever will live godly in Chriſt, ſhall ſuffer perſecution.

M. Latimer troubled for preaching.

Chriſt only to be our Savior, and not our Lady.

It ſo chanced, that whereas he Preaching upon the bleſſed Virgin Chriſts Mother (whom we call our Lady) had thereupon declared his minde, referring and reducing all honor only to Chriſt our only Saviour, certain Popiſh Prieſts, being therewith offended, ſought and wrought much trouble againſt him, drawing out Articles and impoſitions which they untruly, unjuſtly, falſly, and uncharitably imputed unto him:

The ſuperſtitious rudeneſſe of blinde Prieſts.

Firſt, that he ſhould preach againſt our Lady, for that he reproved in a ſermon the ſuperſtitious rudeneſſe of certain blinde Prieſts, which ſo held together upon that bleſſed Virgin, as though ſhe never had any ſin, nor were ſaved by Chriſt the only Saviour of the whole world.

Matter deviſed againſt M. Latimer by popiſh Prieſts.

Item, that he ſhould ſay, that Saints were not to be worſhipped.

Item, that Ave Maria was a ſalutation only, and no prayer.

Item, that there was no materiall fire in hell.

Item, that there was no Purgatory, in ſaying, that he had lever be in Purgatory than in Lollards Tower.

Touching the whole diſcourſe of which Articles, with his reply and anſwer to the ſame, hereafter ſhall follow (by the Lords aſſiſtance) when we come to his letters.

The chief impugners and moleſters of him, beſides theſe Country Prieſts, were Doct. Powel of Saliſbury, D. Wilſon ſometime of Cambridge, M. Hubberdin, and D. Sherwood. Of whom ſome preached againſt him, ſome alſo did write againſt him; inſomuch that by their procurement he was cited up and called to appear before W. Warrham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and John Stokeſly Biſhop of London, Anno 1531. Jan. 29. the copie of which citation here followeth.

M. Latimer appealed from the B. of Londons citation, to his own Ordinarie.

M. Latimer moleſted by Warrham Archb. of Cant and Tokeſly, B. of London.

Againſt this citation, although Maſter Latimer did appeal to his own Ordinarie, requiring by him to be ordered, yet all that notwithſtanding, he was had up to London before Warrham the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London, where he was greatly moleſted, and detained a long ſpace from his Cure at home. There he being called thrice every weeke before the ſaid Biſhops, to make anſwer for his preaching, had certain Articles or propoſitions drawn out and layd to him, whereunto they required him to ſubſcribe. At length he not only perceiving their practicall proceedings, but alſo much grieved with their troubleſome unquietneſſe, which neither would preach themſelves, nor yet ſuffer him to preach and to do his duty, writeth to the foreſaid Archbiſhop, partly excuſing his infirmity, whereby he could not appear at their commandement, partly expoſtulating with them for ſo troubling and detaining him from his duty doing, and that for no juſt cauſe, but only for preaching the truth againſt certain vaine abuſes crept into Religion, much needfull to be ſpoken againſt. Which all may appeare by his Epiſtle ſent to a certain Biſhop or Archbiſhop, whoſe name is not expreſſed, the copie of which Epiſtle in Latine is this.

NOn licet reverendiſſime Præſul per ſupervenientem ægrotationem ad tuum Palatium venire, non novam quidem illam, ſed inveteratam, etſi novis occaſionibus nuper exaſperatam. Certe quantum videre videor, & quantum conjecturis ducor, hodie non licebit, citra meum (inquam) magnum malum non licebit. In this foreſaid Epiſtle (as ye hear) he maketh mention of certain articles or propoſitions, whereunto he was required by the Biſhops to ſubſcribe. The copy and effect of thoſe articles or rude propoſitions (as he calleth them) be theſe.

Articles deviſed by the Biſhops, for M. Latimer to ſubſcribe unto.

Articles propounded to M. Latimer to ſubſcribe unto.

I Believe that there is a Purgatory to purge the ſouls of the dead after this life.

That the ſouls in Purgatory are holpen with the maſſes, prayers, and almes of the living.

That the Saints do pray as Mediators now for us in heaven.

That they are to be honoured of us in heaven.

That it is profitable for Chriſtians to call upon the Saints, that they may pray as Mediators for us unto God.

That Pilgrimages and Oblations done to the Sepulchres and Reliques of Saints are meritorious.

That they which have vowed perpetuall chaſtity may not marry, nor break their vow, without the diſpenſation of the Pope.

That the Keyes of binding and looſing delivered to Peter, do ſtill remain with the Biſhops of Rome, his ſucceſſors, although they live wickedly, and are by no means, nor at any time committed to lay men.

That men may merit and deſerve at Gods hand by faſting, prayer, and other goods works of piety.

That they which are forbidden of the Biſhop to preach, as ſuſpect perſons, ought to ceaſe untill they have purged themſelves before the ſaid Biſhops, or their Superiors, and be reſtored again.

That the faſt which is uſed in Lent, and other faſts preſcribed by the Canons, and by cuſtome received of the Chriſtians (except neceſſity otherwiſe require, are to be obſerved and kept.

That God in every one of the ſeven ſacraments giveth grace to a man, rightly receiving the ſame.

That conſecrations, ſanctifyings, and bleſſings by uſe and cuſtome received in the Church, are laudable and profitable.

That it is laudable and profitable, that the venerable Images of the Crucifixe and other Saints, ſhould be had in the Churches as a remembrance, and to the honour and worſhip of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Saints.

That it is laudable and profitable to deck and to clothe thoſe Images, and ſet up burning lights before them, to the honour of the ſaid Saints.

M. Latimer whether he ſubſcribed or not it is uncertain.

To theſe articles whether he did ſubſcribe or no, it is uncertain. It appeareth by this Epiſtle above written to the Biſhop, that he durſt not conſent unto them, where he writeth in theſe words; His ego nudis ſententiis ſubſcribere non audeo, quia popularis ſuperſtitionis diutius duraturæ, quoad poſſum, authorculus eſſe nolo, &c. But yet whether he was compelled afterwards to agree, through the cruell handling of the Biſhops, it is in doubt. By the words and the title in Tonſtals Regiſter prefixed before the Articles, it may ſeem that he ſubſcribed. The words of the Regiſter be theſe: Hugo Latimerus in ſacra Theologia Bacch. in Vniverſitate Cantab. coram Cant. Archiepiſc. Ioha. Lond. Epiſcopo, reliquaq; concione apud Weſtmon. vocatus, confeſſus eſt & recognovit fidem ſuam, ſic ſentiendo ut ſequitur in his artic. 21. die Martij. Anno 1531. If theſe words be true, it may be ſo thought that he ſubſcribed. And whether he ſo did, no great matter nor marvell, the iniquity of the time being ſuch, that either he muſt needs ſo do, or elſe abide the Biſhops bleſſing, that is, cruell ſentence of death, which he at that time (as he himſelf confeſſed preaching at Stamford) was loath to ſuſtain for ſuch matters as theſe were, unleſſe it were for articles neceſſary, of his belief; by which his words I conjecture rather that he did ſubſcribe at length, albeit it was long before he could be brought ſo to do. Yet this by the way is to be noted, concerning the crafty and deceitfull handling of theſe Biſhops in his examinations, what ſubtill devices they uſed the ſame time to entrap him in their ſnares. The truth of the ſtory he ſheweth forth himſelf in a certain Sermon preached at Stamford, An. 1550. Octob. 9. his words be theſe: I was once (ſaith he) in examination before five or ſix Biſhops, where I had much turmoiling; every week thrice I came to examinations, and many ſnares and traps were laid to get ſomething. Now God knoweth I was ignorant of the law, but that God gave me anſwer and wiſdome what I ſhould ſpeak; it was God indeed, for elſe I had never eſcaped them. At the laſt I was brought forth to be examined into a chamber hanged with Arras, where I was wont to be examined: but now at this time the chamber was ſomewhat altered. For whereas before there was wont ever to be a fire in the chimny, now the fire was taken away, and an Arras hanged over the chimny, and the Table ſtood neer the chimnies end.

Ex verbis Latimeri.

There was amongſt theſe Biſhops that examined me, one with whom I have been very familiar, and took him for my great friend, an aged man, and he ſate next the tables end.

Then amongſt all other queſtions he put forth one, a very ſubtill and crafty one, and ſuch a one indeed, as I could not think ſo great danger in. And when I ſhould make anſwer, I pray you M. Latimer, ſaid one, ſpeak out; I am very thick of hearing, and here be many that ſit farre off. I marvelled at this, that I was bidden ſpeak out, and began to miſdeem, and gave an ear to the chimny; and ſir there I heard a pen walking in the chimny behinde the cloth. They had appointed one there to write all mine anſwers; for they made ſure, that I ſhould not ſtart from them: there was no ſtarting from them. God was my good Lord, and gave me anſwer, I could never elſe have ſcaped it. The queſtion to him there and then objected was this; Whether he thought in his conſcience, that he hath been ſuſpected of hereſie. This was a captious queſtion. There was no holding of peace would ſerve; for that was to grant himſelf faulty. To anſwer, it was every way full of danger. But God, which alway giveth in need what to anſwer, helped him, or elſe (as he confeſſed himſelf) he had never eſcaped their bloody hands. Albeit what was his anſwer he doth not there expreſſe. And thus hitherto you have heard declared the manifold troubles of this godly Preacher, in the time not onely of his being in the Univerſity, but eſpecially at his Benefice, as partly in his own words above mentioned, and partly by his own Letters hereafter following, may better appear.

A ſubtill and captious queſtion put to M. Latimer by the Biſhops.

M. Latimer reſcued by the King.

M. Latimer advanced to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter by the King.

In theſe ſo hard and dangerous ſtraits, and ſuch ſnares of the Biſhops, hard it had been for him and impoſſible to have eſcaped and continued ſo long, had not the Almighty helping hand of the higheſt, as he ſtirred him up, ſo preſerved him through the favour and power of his Prince; who with much favour embraced him, and with his meer power ſometime reſcued and delivered him out of the crooked claws of his enemies. Moreover, at length alſo, through the procurement partly of Doctor Buttes, partly of good Cromwell (whoſe ſtory ye heard before) he advanced him to the dignity and degree of a Biſhop, making him the Biſhop of Worceſter, which ſo continued a few yeers, inſtructing his Dioceſſe, according to the duty of a diligent and vigilant Paſtor, with wholſome doctrine and example of perfect converſation duely agreeing to the ſame.

The Paſtorall diligence of M. Latimer in his Dioceſſe.

The time unable for Biſhop Latimer to work in.

It were a long matter to ſtand particularly upon ſuch things as might here be brought to the commendation of his pains; as ſtudy, readineſſe, and continuall carefulneſſe in teaching, preaching, exhorting, viſiting, correcting, and reforming, either as his ability could ſerve, or elſe the time would bear. But the dayes then were ſo dangerous and variable, that he could not in all things do that he would. Yet what he might do, that he performed to the uttermoſt of his ſtrength, ſo that although he could not utterly extinguiſh all the ſparkling reliques of old ſuperſtition, yet he ſo wrought, that though they could not be taken away, yet they ſhould be uſed with as little hurt, and with as much profit as might be. As (for example) in this thing, and in divers other it did appear, that when it could not be avoided, but holy water and holy bread muſt needs be received, yet ſo he prepared and inſtructed them of his Dioceſſe, with ſuch informations and leſſons, that in receiving thereof ſuperſtition ſhould be excluded, and ſome remembrance taken thereby, teaching and charging the Miniſters of his Dioceſſe, in delivering the holy water and the holy bread, to ſay theſe words following.

Words ſpoken to the people in giving them holy water.

Words uſed in B. Latimers Dioceſſe in giving holy water.

Remember your promiſe in Baptiſm,
Chriſt his mercy and blood-ſhedding.
By whoſe moſt holy ſprinkling,
Of all your ſins you have free pardoning.

What to ſay in giving holy bread.

Words uſed in giving holy bread.

Of Chriſts Body this is a token,
Which on the Croſſe for our ſins was broken.
Wherefore of your ſins you muſt be forſakers,
If of Chriſts death ye will be partakers.

The behaviour of B. Latimer in his office.

By this it may be conſidered what the diligent care of this Biſhop was in doing the duty of a faithfull Paſtor among his flock. And moreover it is to be thought that he would have brought more things elſe to paſſe, if the time then had anſwered to his deſire; for he was not ignorant, how the inſtitution of holy water and holy bread, not onely had no ground in Scripture, but alſo how full of prophane exorciſmes and conjurations they were, contrary to the rule and learning of the Goſpel. Thus this good man behaved himſelf in his Dioceſſe. But (as before) both in the Univerſity, and at his Benefice, he was toſt and turmoiled by wicked and evill diſpoſed perſons; ſo in his Biſhoprick alſo he was not all cleer and void of ſome that ſought his trouble. As among many other evill willers, one eſpecially there was, and that no ſmall perſon, which accuſed him then to the King for his Sermons. The ſtory becauſe he himſelf ſheweth in a Sermon of his before King Edward, I thought therefore to uſe his own words, which be theſe:

The troubles of M. Latimer in his Biſhoprick.

Ex verbis Latimeri, pro concione.

B. Latimer accuſed to King Henry for his preaching.

In the Kings dayes that is dead, a great many of us were called together before him, to ſay our mindes in certain matters. In the end, one kneeleth down and accuſeth me of ſedition: and that I had preached ſeditious doctrine. A heavy ſalutation, and a hard point of ſuch a mans doing, as if I ſhould name, ye would not think. The King turned to me, and ſaid; What ſay you to that ſir?

M. Latimer anſwereth his accuſer.

Then I kneeled down, and turned me firſt to my accuſer, and required him; Sir, what form of preaching would you appoint me, in preaching before a King? would you have me preach nothing as concerning a King in the Kings Sermon? have you any commiſſion to appoint me what I ſhall preach? beſides this I asked him divers other queſtions, and he would make me no anſwer to any of them all; he had nothing to ſay.

The words of B. Latimer to the King.

Then I turned me to the King, and ſubmitted my ſelf to his Grace, and ſaid; I never thought my ſelf worthy, nor did I ever ſue to be a Preacher before your Grace, but I was called to it, and would be willing (if you miſlike me) to give place to my betters; for I grant there be a great many more worthy of the room then I am. And if it be your Graces pleaſure ſo to allow them for Preachers, I could be content to bear their books after them. But if your Grace allow me for a Preacher, I would deſire your Grace to give me leave to diſcharge my conſcience, give me leave to frame my doctrine according to my audience. I had been a very dolt to have preached ſo at the borders of your Realm, as I preach before your Grace.

The Kings heart relented toward Biſhop Latimer.

And I thank Almighty God (which hath always been my remedy) that my ſayings were well accepted of the King; for like a gracious Lord he turned into another communication. It is even as the Scripture ſaith; Cor Regis in manu Domini, i. The Lord directeth the Kings heart. Certain of my friends came to me with tears in their eyes, and told me they looked I ſhould have been in the Tower the ſame night.

B. Latimer taketh the poor mans part againſt his oppreſſor.

Beſides this, divers other conflicts and combats this godly Biſhop ſuſtained in his own Country and Dioceſſe, in taking the cauſe of right and equity againſt oppreſſion and wrong. As for another example, there was at that time not farre from the Dioceſſe of Worceſter a certain Juſtice of Peace, whom here I will not name, being a good man afterward, and now deceaſed. This Juſtice in purchaſing of certain land for his brother, or for himſelf, went about to wrong or damnafie a poore man, who made his complaint to Maſt. Latimer. He firſt hearing, then tendring his rightfull cauſe, wrote his letter to the Gentleman, exhorting him to remember himſelf, to conſider the cauſe, and to abſtain from injury. The Juſtice of Peace not content withall (as the faſhion of men is when they are told of their fault) ſendeth word again in great diſpleaſure, that he would not ſo take it at his hands, with ſuch threatning words, &c. Maſter Latimer hearing this, anſwered again by writing to a certain Gentleman: the Copy whereof among his Letters hereafter followeth in the ſequele of this ſtory to be ſeen.

Biſh. Latimer at the coming in of the ſix Articles reſigned his Biſhoprick.

M. Latimer kept ſilence till the time of K. Edward.

The whole life of M. Latimer full of tribulations.

It were a large and long proceſſe to ſtory out all the doings, travels, and writings of this Chriſtian Biſhop, neither yet have we expreſſed all that came to our hands; but this I thought ſufficient for this preſent. Thus he continued in this laborious function of a Biſhop the ſpace of certain yeers, till the coming in of the ſix Articles. Then being diſtreſſed through the ſtraightneſſe of time, ſo that either he muſt loſe the quiet of a good conſcience, or elſe forſake his Biſhoprick, he did of his own free accord reſigne his Paſtorſhip. At which time Sharton the Biſhop of Saliſbury reſigned likewiſe with him his Biſhoprick. And ſo theſe two remained a great ſpace unbiſhopped, keeping ſilence till the time of King Edward of bleſſed memory. At what time he firſt put off his Rochet in his chamber among his friends, ſuddenly he gave a ſkip in the floore for joy, feeling his ſhoulders ſo light, and being diſcharged (as he ſaid) of ſuch an heavy burden. Howbeit neither was he ſo lightned, but that troubles and labours followed him whereſoever he went. For a little after he had renounced his Biſhoprick, firſt he was almoſt ſlain, but ſore bruiſed with the fall of a tree. Then coming up to London for remedy, he was moleſted and troubled of the Biſhops, whereby he was again in no little danger, and at length was caſt into the Tower, where he continually remained priſoner, till the time that bleſſed King Edward entred his crown, by means whereof the golden mouth of this Preacher, long ſhut up before, was now opened again. And ſo he beginning afreſh to ſet forth his plough again, continued all the time of the ſaid King, labouring in the Lords harveſt moſt fruitfully, diſcharging his talent as well in divers other places of this Realm, as in Stamford, and before the Dutcheſſe of Suffolk (whoſe Sermons be extant and ſet forth in print) as alſo at London in the Convocation houſe; and eſpecially before the King at the Court: in the ſame place of the inward Garden, which was before applied to laſcivious and courtly paſtimes, there he diſpenſed the fruitfull Word of the glorious Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, preaching there before the King and his whole Court, to the edification of many.

The diligent travelling of M. Latimer in King Edwards time.

IN this his painfull travell he occupied himſelf all King Edwards dayes, preaching for the moſt part every Sunday twice, to no ſmall ſhame of all other loytering and unpreaching Prelates, which occupy great rooms, and do little good; and that ſo much more to their ſhame, becauſe he being a ſore bruiſed man by the fall of a tree, mentioned a little before, and above 67 yeers of age, took ſo little eaſe and care of ſparing himſelf, to do the people good. Now to ſpeak here of his indefatigable travell and diligence in his own private ſtudies, who notwithſtanding both his yeers, and other pains in preaching, every morning ordinarily, winter and ſummer, about two of the clock in the morning was at his book moſt diligently. How carefull his heart was of the preſervation of the Church, and the good ſucceſſe of the Goſpel, his letters can teſtifie, wherewith he admoniſhed ſuch as then were in authority of their duty, and aſſiſted them with his godly counſell.

The early waking of Maſter Latimer to his Book.

As the diligence of this man of God never ceaſed all the time of King Edward, to profit the Church both publikely and privately, ſo among other doings in him to be noted, this is not lightly to be overpaſſed, but worthy to be obſerved, that God not onely gave unto him his Spirit plentiouſly and comfortably to preach his Word unto his Church, but alſo by the ſame Spirit he did ſo evidently foreſhew and prophecy of all thoſe kindes of plagues afore, which afterward enſued, that if England ever had a Prophet, he might ſeem to be one. And as touching himſelf, he ever affirmed that the preaching of the Goſpel would coſt him his life, to the which he no leſſe cheerfully prepared himſelf, than certainly was perſwaded that Wincheſter was kept in the Tower for the ſame purpoſe, as the event did too truely prove the ſame. For after the death of the ſaid bleſſed King Edward, not long after Queen Mary was proclaimed, a Purſivant was ſent down (by the means no doubt of Wincheſter) into the country, to call him up, of whoſe coming although Maſter Latimer lacked no fore-warning, being premoniſhed about ſixe hours before by one John Careles (whoſe ſtory hereafter followeth) yet ſo far off was it that he thought to eſcape, that he prepared himſelf towards his journey before the ſaid Purſuivant came to his houſe.

M. Latimers words to the Queens Purſivant.

At the which thing when the Purſivant marvelled, ſeeing him ſo prepared towards his journey, he ſaid unto him; My friend, you be a welcome meſſenger to me. And be it known unto you, and to all the world, that I go as willingly to London at this preſent, being called by my Prince to render a reckoning of my doctrine, as ever I was at any place in the world. I doubt not but that God, as he hath made me worthy to preach his Word before two excellent Princes, ſo will he able me to witneſſe the ſame unto the third, either to her comfort or diſcomfort eternally, &c. At the which tims the Purſivant, when he had delivered his letters, departed, affirming that he had commandement not to tarry for him. By whoſe ſudden departure it was manifeſt that they would not have him appear, but rather to have fled out of the Realm. They knew that his conſtancy ſhould deface them in their Popery, and confirm the godly in the truth.

M. Latimer cometh up to London not compelled.

M. Latimers words coming through Smithfield.

Thus M. Latimer being ſent for, and coming up to London, thorow Smithfield (where merrily he ſaid, that Smithfield had long groaned for him) was brought before the Councell, where he patiently bearing all the mocks and taunts given him by the ſcornfull Papiſts, was caſt again into the Tower, where he being aſſiſted with the heavenly grace of Chriſt, ſuſtained moſt patient impriſonment a long time, notwithſtanding the cruell and unmercifull handling of the lordly Papiſts, which thought then their kingdome would never fall; yet he ſhewed himſelf not onely patient, but alſo cheerfull in and above all that which they could or would work againſt him; yea, ſuch a valiant ſpirit the Lord gave him, that he was able not onely to deſpiſe the terribleneſſe of priſons and torments, but alſo to deride and laugh to ſcorn the doings of his enemies. As it is not unknown to the ears of many, what he anſwered to the Lievtenant being then in the Tower. For when the Lievtenants man upon a time came to him, the aged Father kept without fire in the froſty Winter, and well nigh ſtarved for cold, merrily bade the man tell his Maſter, that if he did not look the better to him, perchance he would deceive him.

M. Latimer cheerfull in impriſonment.

M. Latimers merry meſſage to the Lievtenant.

The Lievtenant hearing this, bethought himſelf of theſe words, and fearing leſt that indeed he thought to make ſome eſcape, began to look more ſtraitly to his priſoner, and ſo coming to him, beginneth to charge him with his words, reciting the ſame unto him which his man had told him before; how that if he were not better looked unto, perchance he would deceive him, &c. Yea, Maſter Lievtenant, ſo I ſaid, quoth he, for you look, I think, that I ſhould burn; but except you let me have ſome fire, I am like to deceive your expectation, for I am like here to ſtarve for cold.

The anſwer of M. Latimer to the Lievtenant.

Many ſuch like anſwers and reaſons, merry, but ſavoury, coming not from a vain minde, but from a conſtant and quiet reaſon, proceeded from that man, declaring a firm and ſtable heart, little paſſing for all this great bluſtering of their terrible threats, but rather deriding the ſame.

Thus Maſter Latimer paſſing a long time in the Tower, with as much patience as a man in his caſe could do, from thence was tranſported to Oxford, with Doctor Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Maſter Ridley Biſhop of London, there to diſpute upon Articles ſent down from Gardiner Biſhop at Wincheſter, as is before touched, the manner and order of which diſputations between them and the Univerſity Doctors, is alſo before ſufficiently expreſſed. Where alſo is declared, how and by whom the ſaid Latimer with his other fellow-priſoners were condemned after the diſputations, and ſo committed again to the priſon, and there they continued from the moneth of April above mentioned, tioned, to this preſent moneth of October; where they were moſt godly occupied, either with brotherly conference, or with fervent prayer, or with fruitfull writing.

Queen MARY.

Anno 1555

October 16.

Albeit Maſter Latimer by reaſon of the feebleneſſe of his age wrote leaſt of them all in this later time of his impriſonment; yet in prayer he was fervently occupied, wherein oftentimes ſo long he continued kneeling, that he was not able to riſe without help: and amongſt other things, theſe were three principall matters he prayed for.

Three requeſts of M. Latimers prayer.

Firſt, that as GOD had appointed him to be a Preacher of his Word, ſo alſo he would give him grace to ſtand to his doctrine untill his death, that he might give his heart bloud for the ſame.

Once againe, once againe.

Secondly, that God of his mercy would reſtore his Goſpel to England once again, and theſe words once againe, once againe, he did ſo inculcate and beat into the ears of the Lord God, as though he had ſeen God before him, and ſpoken to him face to face.

M. Latimers prayer for M. Elizabeth.

The third matter was, to pray for the preſervation of the Queens Majeſtie that now is, whom in his prayer he was wont accuſtomably to name, and even with tears deſired God to make her a comfort to this comfortleſſe Realm of England. Theſe were the matters he prayed for ſo earneſtly. Neither were theſe things of him deſired in vain, as the good ſucceſſe thereof after following did declare; for the Lord moſt graciouſly did grant all thoſe his requeſts.

All three requeſts of Maſter Latimer granted of the Lord.

Firſt, concerning his conſtancy, even in the moſt extremitie the Lord graciouſly aſſiſted him. For when he ſtood at the Stake without Bocardo gate at Oxford, and the tormenters about to ſet the fire to him, and to the learned and godly Biſhop Maſter Ridley, he lifted up his eyes towards Heaven with an amiable and comfortable countenance, ſaying theſe words, Fidelis eſt Deus, qui non ſinit nos tentari ſupra id quod poſſumus, God is faithfull, which doth not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength; and ſo afterward by and by ſhed his bloud in the cauſe of Chriſt, the which bloud ran out of his heart in ſuch abundance, that all thoſe that were preſent, being godly, did marvell to ſee the moſt part of the bloud in his body to be gathered to his heart, and with ſuch violence to guſh out, his bodie being opened by the force of the fire; by the which thing GOD moſt graciouſly granted his requeſt, which was, that he might ſhed his heart bloud in the defence of the Goſpel.

The unthankfulneſſe of England.

How mercifully the Lord heard his ſecond requeſt, in reſtoring his Goſpel once again unto this Realm, theſe preſent dayes can bear record. And what then ſhall England ſay now for her defence, which being ſo mercifully viſited and refreſhed with the word of God, ſo ſlenderly and unthankefully conſidereth either her own miſerie paſt, or the great benefit of God now preſent? The Lord be mercifull unto us, Amen.

Gods gracious help in time of need, upon the Realme of England.

Queen Elizabeth granted of God to England.

Again, concerning his third requeſt, it ſeemeth likewiſe moſt effectuouſly granted, to the great praiſe of God, the furtherance of his Goſpel, and to the unſpeakable comfort of this Realm. For whether at the requeſt of his prayer, or of other Gods holy Saints, or whether God was moved with the cry of his whole Church, the truth is, that when all was deplorate and in a deſperate caſe, and ſo deſperate that the enemies mightily flouriſhed and triumphed, Gods Word was baniſhed. Spaniards received, no place left for Chriſts ſervants to cover their heads, ſodainly the Lord called to remembrance his mercie, and forgetting our former iniquity, made an end of all theſe miſeries, and wrought a marvellous change of things; at the change whereof the ſayd Queen Elizabeth was appointed and anointed, for whom this gray-headed Father ſo earneſtly prayed in his impriſonment: through whoſe true, naturall, and Imperiall Crown, the brightneſſe of Gods Word was ſet up again to confound the dark and falſe vizoured kingdom of Antichriſt, the true temple of Chriſt re-edified, the captivity of ſorrowfull Chriſtians releaſed, which ſo long was wiſhed for in the prayers of ſo many good men, ſpecially of this faithfull and true ſervant of the Lord, Maſter Latimer.

God for Chriſts ſake to grant.

The ſame God, which at the requeſts of his holy and faithfull Saints hath powred upon us ſuch benefits of his mercy, peace, and tranquillity: aſſiſt our moſt vertuous and Chriſtian Princeſſe, and her Subjects, that we may every one in his ſtate and calling ſerve to his glory, and walk in our vocation, that we loſe not that which they have obtained, but may proceed in all faithfulneſſe, to build and keep up the houſe and Temple of the Lord, to the advancing of his glory, and our everlaſting comfort in him. And thus much concerning the doings and laborious travels of Maſter Latimer. Now after theſe things thus finiſhed and diſcourſed pertaining to the ſtory of his life, let us come to his letters, which he wrote at divers and ſundrie times from the firſt beginning of his preaching, all which here to comprehend which he wrote both in Engliſh and Latine, lack of ſpace and place at this preſent will not permit: nevertheleſſe certain we will take, and firſt concerning the Articles above mentioned, for the which he was troubled by the Prieſts of the Country about his Benefice at Weſt Kington; which he writeth thereof to Maſter Morice, the copie thereof here followeth.

RIght Worſhipfull, and mine own good Maſter Morice, ſalutem in Chriſto Ieſu. And I thanke you for all hearty kindneſſe, not only heretofore ſhewed unto me, but alſo that now of late you would vouchſafe to write unto me ſo poore a wretch, to my great comfort among all theſe my troubles. I truſt and doubt nothing in it, but God will reward you for me, and ſupply abundantly mine unabilitie, &c. Maſter Morice, you would wonder to know how I have been intreated at Briſtow, I mean of ſome of the Prieſts, which firſt deſired me, welcomed me, made me chear, heard what I ſayd, and allowed my ſaying in all things whiles I was with them; when I was gone home to my Benefice, perceiving that the people favoured me ſo greatly, and that the Maior had appointed me to Preach at Eaſter, privily they procured an Inhibition for all them that had not the Biſhops licence, which they knew well enough I had not, and ſo craftily defeated Maſter Maiors appointment, pretending that they were ſorry for it, procuring alſo certaine Preachers to blatter againſt me, as Hubberdine, and Powel, with other moe, whom when I had brought before the Maior and the wiſe Councell of the Town, to know what they could lay to my charge, wherefore they ſo declaimed againſt me, they ſayd they ſpake of information: howbeit no man could be brought forth that would abide by any thing: So that they had place and time to belie me ſhamefully, but they had no place nor time to lay to my charge when I was preſent and readie to make them anſwer. God amend them, and ſwage their malice that they have againſt the truth and me, &c.

What the Papiſts do giue to our Lady.

Our Lady not without ſin.

So they did belie me to haue ſayd, when I had ſaid nothing ſo, but to reproue certain both Prieſts and beneficed men, which do giue ſo much to our Ladie, as though ſhe had not been ſaued by Chriſt, a whole Sauiour both of her, and of all that be and ſhall be ſaued; I did reaſon after this manner, that either ſhe was a ſinner, or no ſinner: if a ſinner, then ſhe was deliuered from ſin by Chriſt; ſo that he ſaued her, either by deliuering or preſeruing her from ſin, ſo that without him neither ſhe, nor none other, either be, or could be ſaued. And to auoyd all offence, I ſhewed how it might be anſwered, both to certain Scriptures which maketh all generally ſinners, and how it might be anſwered unto Chryſoſtome, and Theophilact, which make her namely, and ſpecially a ſinner. But all would not ſerue, their malice was ſo great; notwithſtanding that fiue hundred honeſt men can and will bear record. When they cannot reproue that thing that I do ſay, then they will belie me, to ſay that thing that they can reproue; for they will needs appear to be againſt me.

Papiſts depraue when they cannot diſproue.

Saints are not to be worſhipped.

Difference betwixt Images and Saints.

So they lied when I had ſhewed diuers ſignifications of this word (Saints) among the vulgar people: Firſt, images of Saints are called Saints, and ſo they are not to be worſhipped: take worſhipping of them for praying to them; for they are neither Mediators by way of redemption, nor yet by way of interceſſion. And yet they may be well uſed, when they be applied to that uſe that they were ordained for, to be Lay-mens books for remembrance of heauenly things, &c.

M. Latimers errour in thoſe dayes.

Take Saints for inhabiters of heauen, and worſhipping of them for praying to them, I neuer denyed, but that they might be worſhipped, and be our Mediators, though not by way of redemption (for ſo Chriſt alone is a whole Mediator, both for them, and for us) yet by the way of interceſſion.

Pilgrimage.

Pare away the ſcurfe, and clea take all popery.

And I neuer denied Pilgrimage. And yet I haue ſayd that much ſcurfe muſt be pared away, ere euer it can be well done, ſuperſtition, idolatry, falſe faith and truſt in the image, unjuſt eſtimation of the thing, ſetting aſide Gods ordinance for doing of the thing; debts muſt be payd, reſtitutions made, wife and children be prouided for, duty to our poore neighbors diſcharged. And when it is at the beſt, before it be vowed, it need not to be done; for it is neither under the bidding of God, nor of man to be done. And wiues muſt counſell with husbands, and husbands and wiues with Curates, before it be vowed to be done, &c.

Ave Maria.

Ave Maria.

Ave Maria, no prayer.

As for the Ave Maria, who can think that I would deny it? I ſayd it was an heauenly greeting, or ſaluting of our bleſſed Ladie, wherein the Angel Gabriel, ſent from the Father of heauen, did annunciate and ſhew unto her the good will of God towards her, what he would with her, and to what he had choſen her. But I ſaid, it was not properly a prayer, as the Pater noſter, which our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe made for a proper prayer, and bade us ſay it for a prayer, not adding that we ſhould ſay, ten or twenty Aue Maries withall: and I denied not but that we may well ſay Ave Maria alſo, but not ſo that we ſhall think that the Pater noſter is not good, a whole and perfect prayer, nor cannot be well ſayd without Ave Maria; ſo that I did not ſpeak againſt well ſaying of it, but againſt ſuperſtitious ſaying of it, and of the Pater noſter too; and yet I put a difference betwixt that, and that, which Chriſt made to be ſayd for a Prayer.

No fire in hell.

Whether the fire in hell be a materiall fire, or ſpirituall.

The worme of conſcience, is ſo called by a metaphoricall ſpeech.

Who euer could ſay or think ſo? Howbeit good Authors do put a difference betwixt a ſuffering in the fire with bodies, and without bodies. The ſoul without the bodie is a ſpirituall ſubſtance, which they ſay cannot receiue a corporall quality; and ſome make it a ſpirituall fire, and ſome a corporall fire. And as it is called a fire, ſo it is called a worme, and it is thought of ſome not to be a materiall worme that is a liuing beaſt, but it is a metaphor, but that is neither to nor fro. For a fire it is, a worme it is, pain it is, a torment it is, an anguiſh it is, a grief, a miſerie, a ſorrow, a heauines inexplicable, intolerable, whoſe nature and condition in euery point who can tell, but he that is of Gods priuie Councell, ſaith St. Auſten? God giue us grace rather to be diligent to keep us out of it, than to be curious to diſcuſſe the property of it; for certain we be, that there is little eaſe, yea none at all, but weeping, wayling, and gnaſhing of teeth, which be two effects of extreme pain, rather certaine tokens what paine there is, than what manner of pain there is.

No Purgatory.

M. Latimer had rather be in Purgatory, than in Lollards Tower. Cauſes declared why it is better to be in Purgatory, than in Lollards Tower.

He that ſheweth the ſtate and condition of it, doth not deny it. But I had rather be in it, than in Lollards Tower, the Biſhops priſon, for diuers skils and cauſes.

Firſt, in this I might die bodily for lack of meat and drink; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might die ghoſtly for fear of pain, or lack of good counſell, there I could not.

Item, in this I might be in extreme neceſſity; in that I could not, if it be perill of periſhing.

Item, in this I might lacke charity; there I could not.

Item, in this I might loſe my patience; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be in perill and danger of death; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be without ſurety of ſaluation; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might diſhonour God; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might murmure and grudge againſt God; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might diſpleaſe God; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be diſpleaſed with God; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be judged to perpetuall priſon, as they call it; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be craftily handled; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be brought to bear a fagot; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be diſcontented with God; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be ſeparated and diſſeuered from Chriſt; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be a member of the diuel; in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be an inheritor of hell, in that I could not.

Item, in this I might pray out of charity, and in vain; in that I could not.

Item, in this my Lord and his Chaplains might manacle me by night; in that they could not.

Item, in this they might ſtrangle me, and ſay that I had hanged my ſelf; in that they could not.

Item, in this they might have me to the Conſiſtory, and judge me after their faſhion; from thence they could not.

As they did with Hunne.

Ergo, I had rather to be there then here. For though the fire be called never ſo hot, yet if the Biſhops two fingers can ſhake away a peice, a Friers cowl another part, and ſcala cœli altogether, I will never found Abbey, Colledge, nor Chauntrey, for that purpoſe.

For ſeeing there is no pain that can break my charity, break my patience, cauſe me to diſhonour God, to diſpleaſe God, to be diſpleaſed with God, cauſe me not to joy in God, nor that can bring me to danger of death, or to danger of deſperation, or from ſuretie of ſalvation, that can ſeparate me from Chriſt, or Chriſt from me, I care the leſſe for it. John Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the greateſt pain that damned ſoules have, is to be ſeparate and cut off from Chriſt for ever: which pain he ſaith is greater then many hels; which pains the ſoules in Purgatory neither have nor can have.

Chryſoſt. What is the greateſt pain to damned ſoules.

Conſider Maſter Morice, whether proviſion for Purgatory hath not brought thouſands to hell. Debts have not been paid; reſtitution of evill gotten lands and goods hath not been made; Chriſtian people (whoſe neceſſities we ſee, to whom whatſoever we do, Chriſt reputeth done to himſelf, to whom we are bounden under pain of damnation to do for, as we would be done for our ſelf) are neglected and ſuffered to periſh; laſt wils unfulfilled and broken; Gods ordinance ſet aſide: and alſo for Purgatory, foundations have been taken for ſufficient ſatisfaction; ſo we have trified away the ordinance of God, and reſtitutions. Thus we have gone to hell with Maſſes, Dirges, and ringing of many a bell. And who can pull Pilgrimages from Idolatry, and purge Purgatory from Robbery, but he ſhall be in perill to come in ſuſpicion of hereſie with them? ſo that they may pill with Pilgrimage, and ſpoyl with Purgatory. And verily the abuſe of them cannot be taken away, but great lucre and vantage ſhall fall away from them, which had rather have profit with abuſe, then lack the ſame with uſe; and that is the Waſpe that doth ſting them, and maketh them to ſwell. And if Purgatory were purged of all that it hath gotten, by ſetting aſide reſtitution, and robbing of Chriſt, it would be but a poore Purgatory; ſo poore that it ſhould not be able to feed ſo fat, and trick up ſo many idle and ſlothfull Lubbers.

Proviſion for Purgatory bringeth many to hell.

What the waſpe is that ſtingeth the papiſts, and maketh them to ſwell.

I take God to witneſſe, I would hurt no man, but it grieveth me to ſee ſuch abuſe continue without remedy. I cannot underſtand what they mean by the Popes pardoning of Purgatory, but by way of ſuffrage; and as for ſuffrage, unleſſe he do his duty, and ſeek not his own, but Chriſts glory, I had rather have the ſuffrage of Jack of the Skullery, which in his calling doth exerciſe both faith and charity; but for his Maſſe. And that is as good of another ſimple Prieſt as of him. For as for authority of Keyes, it is to looſe from guiltineſſe of ſinne and eternall pain, due to the ſame, according to Chriſts Word, and not to his own private will. And as for Pilgrimage, you would wonder what juggling there is to get mony withall. I dwell within a half mile of the Foſſeway, and you would wonder to ſee how they come by flockes out of the Weſt country to many Images, but chiefly to the bloud of Hailes. And they beleeve verily that it is the very bloud that was in Chriſts body, ſhed upon the Mount of Calvary for our ſalvation, and that the ſight of it with their bodily eye, doth certifie them, and putteth them out of doubt, that they be in clean life, and in ſtate of ſalvation without ſpot of ſin, which doth bolden them to many things. For you would wonder if you ſhould commune with them both coming and going, what faiths they have. For as for forgiving their enemies, and reconciling their Chriſtian brethren, they cannot away withall; for the ſight of that bloud doth quite them for the time.

The Popes pardoning out of Purgatory, a vain invention.
Suffrage.
Maſſe.
Authority of keyes.

Pilgrimage. This bloud of Hailes was ſhewed before the King, and openly ſhewed at Pauls croſſe by the Biſhop of Rocheſter that then was, to be but the bloud of a Duck.

I read in Scripture of two certifications; one to the Romans. Iuſtificati ex fide, pacem habemus, i. We being juſtified by faith, have peace with God.

Two certifications of our remiſſion out of the Scripture.

If I ſee the bloud of Chriſt with the eye of my ſoul, that is, true faith, that his bloud was ſhed for me, &c.

Another in the Epiſtle of John, Nos ſcimus quod tranſlati ſumus de morte ad vitam, quoniam diligimus fratres, i. We know that we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we love the brethren. But I read not that I have peace with God, or that I am tranſlated from death to life, becauſe I ſee with my bodily eye the bloud of Hailes. It is very probable, that all the bloud that was in the body of Chriſt, was united and knit to his Divinity, and then no part thereof ſhall return to his corruption. And I marvell that Chriſt ſhall have two reſurrections. And if it were that they that did violently and injuriouſly pluck it out of his body when they ſcourged him and nailed him to the Croſſe, did ſee it with their bodily eye, yet they were not in clean life. And we ſee the ſelf ſame bloud in form of wine, when we have conſecrate, and may both ſee it, feel it, and receive it to our damnation as touching bodily receiving. And many do ſee it at Hailes without confeſſion, as they ſay. God knoweth all, and the Divel in our time is not dead.

The bodily ſeeing of Chriſts bloud profiteth little.

Chriſt hath left a doctrine behinde him, wherein we be taught how to beleeve, and what to beleeve; he doth ſuffer the Divel to uſe his crafty faſhion for our triall and probation. It were little thank worthy to beleeve well and rightly, if nothing ſhould move us to falſe faith, and to beleeve ſuperſtitiouſly. It was not in vain that Chriſt when he had taught truly, by and by bade, beware of falſe Prophets, which would bring in errour ſlyly. But we be ſecure and uncarefull, as though falſe prophets could not meddle with us, and as though the warning of Chriſt were no more earneſt and effectuall, then is the warning of mothers when they trifle with their children, and bid them beware the Bugge, &c.

Warning againſt falſe prophets.

Lo ſir, how I runne at ryot beyond meaſure. When I began, I was minded to have written but half a dozen lines; but thus I forget my ſelf ever when I write to a truſty friend, which will take in worth my folly, and keep it from mine enemy, &c.

As for Doct. Wilſon, I wote not what I ſhould ſay; but I pray God endue him with charity. Neither he, nor any of his Countrey-men did ever love me ſince I did inveigh againſt their factions, and partiality in Cambridge. Before that, who was more favoured of him then I? That is the Byle that may not be touched, &c.

D. Wilſon againſt M. Latimer, and why.

A certain friend ſhewed me, that Doctor Wilſon is gone now into his country about Beverley in Holdernes, and from thence he will go a progreſſe through Yorkſhire, Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and ſo from thence to Briſtow. What he intendeth by this progreſſe God knoweth, and not I. If he come to Briſtow I ſhall hear tell, &c.

As for Hubberdin (no doubt) he is a man of no great learning, nor yet of ſtable wit. He is here ſervus hominum; for he will preach whatſoever the Biſhops will bid him preach. Verily in my minde they are more to be blamed then he. He doth magnifie the Pope more then enough.

Hubberdin a great railer againſt M. Latimer.

As for our Saviour Chriſt and Chriſtian Kings, they are little beholding to him. No doubt he did miſſe the cuſhion in many things. Howbeit they that did ſend him, men think, will defend him; I pray God amend him and them both. They would fain make matter againſt me, intending ſo either to deliver him by me, or elſe to rid us both together, and ſo they would think him well beſtowed, &c.

D. Powel a ſtout Preacher a Popery.

As touching Doctor Powel, how highly he took upon him in Briſtow, and how little he regarded the ſword, which repreſenteth the Kings perſon, many can tell you. I think there is never an Earl in this Realm that knoweth his obedience by Chriſts Commandement to his Prince, and wotteth what the ſword doth ſignifie, that would have taken upon him ſo ſtoutly. Howbeit Maſter Maior, as he is a profound wiſe man, did twit him prettily; it were too long to write all. Our Pilgrimages are not a little beholding to him. For to occaſion the people to them, he alledged this text:

Scripture applied of the Papiſts.

Omnis qui relinquit patrem, domos, uxorem, i. Whoſoever leaveth father, houſe, wife, &c. By that you may perceive his hot zeal and crooked judgement, &c. Becauſe I am ſo belied, I could wiſh that it would pleaſe the Kings Grace to command me to preach before his Highneſſe a whole yeer together every Sunday, that he himſelf might perceive how they belye me, ſaying, that I have neither learning, nor utterance worthy thereunto, &c. I pray you pardon me, I cannot make an end.

A brief digreſſion touching the railing of Hubberdin againſt Maſter Latimer.

A note touching Hubberdin.

Hubberdin a right image of hypocriſie.

Hubberdin a great rayler againſt the ſervants of Chriſt.

FOraſmuch as mention hath been made in this letter of Hubberdin, an old Divine of Oxford, a right painted Phariſæ, and a great ſtrayer abroad in all quarters of the Realm to deface and impeach the ſpringing of Gods holy Goſpel, ſomething would be added more touching that man, whoſe doings and pageants if they might be deſcribed at large, it were as good as any Enterlude for the Reader to behold. Who in all his life and in all his actions (in one word to deſcribe him) ſeemeth nothing elſe but a right Image or counterfeit, ſetting out unto us in lively colours the pattern of perfect hypocriſie. But becauſe the man is now gone, to ſpare therefore the dead (although he little deſerved to be ſpared, which never ſpared to work what villany he could againſt the true ſervants of the Lord) this ſhall be enough for examples ſake, for all Chriſtian men neceſſarily to obſerve, how the ſaid Hubberdin after his long railing in all places againſt Luther, Melancthon, Zuinglius, John Frith, Tindall, Latimer, and all other like Profeſſors, after his hypocriticall open almes given out of other mens purſes, his long prayers, pretenced devotions, devout faſtings, his woolward going, and other his prodigious demeanour, riding in his long gown down to the horſe heels like a Phariſæ, or rather like a Sloven, dirted up to the horſe belly, after his forged tales and fables, dialogues, dreams, dauncings, hoppings and leapings, with other like hiſtrionicall toyes and geſtures uſed in the Pulpit, and all againſt Hereticks, at laſt riding by a Church ſide, where the Youth of the Pariſh were dauncing in the Churchyard, ſuddenly this Silenus lighting from his horſe, by the occaſion of their dauncing came into the Church, and there cauſing the bell to toll in the people, thought in ſtead of a fit of mirth to give them a ſermon of dauncing. In the which ſermon after he had patched up certain common texts out of the Scriptures, and then coming to the Doctors, firſt to Auguſtine, then to Ambroſe, ſo to Jerome, and Gregory, Chryſoſtome, and other Doctors, had made them every one (after his dialogue manner) by name to anſwer to his call, and to ſing after his tune for the probation of the Sacrament of the Altar againſt John Frith, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Luther, Tindall, Latimer, and other hereticks (as he called them) at laſt to ſhew a perfect harmony of all theſe Doctors together; as he had made them before to ſing after his tune, ſo now to make them dance alſo after his pipe, firſt he calleth our Chriſt and his Apoſtles, then the Doctors and ancient Seniours of the Church, as in a round ring all to dance together; with pipe up Hubbert in. Now dance Chriſt, now dance Peter, Paul, now dance Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Jerome; and thus old Hubberdin as he was dancing with his Doctors luſtily in the Pulpit againſt the Hereticks, how he ſtampt and took on I cannot tell, but craſh quoth the Pulpit, down cometh the dancer, and there lay Hubberdin not dancing, but ſprawling in the middeſt of his audience; where altogether he brake not his neck, yet he ſo brake his leg the ſame time, and bruiſed his old bones, that he never came in Pulpit more, and died not long after the ſame. Whereupon when the Church-wardens were called, and charged for the Pulpit being no ſtronger, they made anſwer again, excuſing themſelves, that they had made their Pulpit for preaching, and not for dancing, &c. But to ſpend no more paper about this idle matter, now to our purpoſe again.

A dauncing ſermon of Hubberdin.

Hubberdin dancing in the Pulpit, fell with the Pulpit, and brake his leg.

Anſwer of the Church-wardens.

Amongſt many other impugners and adverſaries, whereof there was no ſmall ſort which did infeſt this good man in ſermons; ſome alſo there were, which attempted the pen againſt him. In the number of whom was one Doctor Sherwood, whom upon the ſame occaſion of preaching of the Virgin Mary (or as they thought, againſt the Virgin) did invade him with his pen, writing againſt him in Latine, whoſe long Epiſtle, with Maſter Latimers anſwer alſo in Latine to the ſame hereunder followeth.

D. Sherwood writeth againſt M. Latimer.

Epiſtola Gulielmi Sherwodi adverſus Dominum Latimerum expoſtulatoria.

Gulielmus Sherwodus Presbiter, D. Latimero Kingtoniæ Rectori, gratiam & pacem à Deo Patre voſtro, & Domino Jeſu Chriſto.

NIhil moleſtè feres ſat ſcio, vir egregiè, ab homine chriſtiano chriſtianè admoneri, quæ res una (eſt Deus teſtis) nos hoc tempore animavit liberius tecum per literas (quando coram fandi copia negatur) confabulari ſuper nonnullis, quæ parum chriſtianè in concione illa tua (ſi modo concio & non verius multo Satyra quædam inſana dicenda) Magnes feldiæ effudiſſe mihi videbare. Ac primum quidem proverbio illo de fure & paſtore (quanquam proverbii vocem parabolæ vice mihi uſurpaſſe videtur Evangeliſta) carpſit, ut recte & vere aiebas, Chriſtus Scribarum & Phariſæorum (utpote Deus, eóque καρδιογνώςης) veſaniam obduratamque incredulitatem, ſed clam, ſed tectè, ſed in genere. Non aiebat, Scribæ & Phariſæi ad unum fures ſunt & latrones. Sed quid? Amen dico vobis qui non intrat per oſtium in ſtabulum ovium, ſed aſcendit aliunde, ille fur eſt & latro. Tu contra homo patentium intuitor, non mentium rimator. Epiſcopi omnes, Papæ omnes, Rectores eccleſiarum omnes (te uno pauciſque aliis, quos neſcio, tuæ farinæ hominibus, id enim ſenſiſſe videris, exceptis) Vicarij omnes fures ſunt, & latrones, quibus furibus, quibus latronibus ſuffocandis ne Angliæ totius quidem canabum ſufficere prædicabas, aut verius dementabas hyperbole forſan, ut ſemper uſus, ſed temeraria, ſed audaci ſupra modum, ſed truci, ſed impia. Non eſt mi frater, non eſt ſic temerè ſi divo credimus Paulo, ante tempus judicandum, quod veniat Dominus qui & illuminabit abſcondita tenebrarum, & manifeſtabit conſilia cordium: Chriſtus quoque ipſe, Iudex vivorum & mortuoum à Deo Patre conſtitutus, temerariam ejuſmodi proximi condemnationem apud Matthæum, chriſtiano homini mihi ſuſtuliſſe videtur, quum inquit; Nolite condemnare, ne condemnemini, nec tanti flagitij ſubticens pœnam. Quo enim (inquit) judicio judicatis, eo judicabitur de vobis, & qua menſura metimini, ea metientur vobis & alij. Volo hominum vitia taxari, volo ſua ſcelera populo prædicari, annunciari, revelari, & ſi fieri poſſit, ob oculos poni, non debacchari in homines eoſque abſentes, non poni lucem tenebras, & tenebras lucem, non dici bonum malum, & malum bonum, dulce amarum, & amarum dulce. Quod ſi fit, verendum ne dum alius alium mordemus & devoramus, viciſſim alius ab alio conſummetur. An iſta parcius, imo modeſtia viris objicienda, ipſe videto. Novimus, & qui te tranſverſa tuentibus hirquis, & quo, ſed faciles, nymphæ riſere ſacello. Heu, heu, Latimere, quæ te dementia cæpit, ut mentireris, dixiſſem prædicares plures longe in Chriſti eccleſia fures eſſe, quam paſtores, plures hœdos quam oves? Non ſic Cyprianus ille, non ſic. Sed quid? Eſt, inquit, Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax. Stat confeſſorum, hoc eſt (ut ipſe intelligit pie) Chriſtianorum pars major & melior in fidei ſuæ robore, & in legis ac diſciplinæ dominicæ veritate, nec ab eccleſiæ pace diſcedunt, qui ſe in eccleſia gratiam conſequutos de Dei dignatione meminerunt. Atque hoc ipſi ampliorem conſequuntur fidei ſuæ laudem, quod ab eorum perfidia ſegregati, qui juncti confeſſionis conſortio fuerint, à contagionis crimine receſſerunt. Vero illuminati evangelij lumine, pura & candida domini luce radiati, tam ſunt in conſervanda Chriſti pace laudabiles, quam fuerunt in diaboli congreſſione victores. Quæ ſanctiſſimi hominis ſanctiſſima verba, auſim, te etiam reclamante, de ea ipſa quæ nunc eccleſia, prædicare, vereq; affirmare; quam ubi ex confeſſoribus Chriſti filij Dei vivi depinxiſſes, ſtatim ubi eſſet gentium te neſcire prædicabas. Dicebas enim, Quiſquis cum Petro Chriſtum Dei viventis filium fatetur, Petrus eſt, & de eccleſia, ſeu uti ipſe interpretabaris, congregatione (ſubdola nimirum uſus arte, ac cæco potius præſtigio) ac ſi hoc loci magis nihil ad Petrum, Chriſti in terris ſummum Vicarium, attineret, quam ex chriſtianis alium quemlibet. Eſto, ſimus nos, ut Origenis utar verbis, aliquo modo Petrus; ſi dixerimus quod dixit Petrus; Tu es Chriſtus, Filius Deus vivi, non carne & ſanguine nobis revelante, ſed Patre qui eſt in cœlis mentem noſtram illuminante, non alio dicendi genere dicemus hæc nobis Petri competere verba, quam ipſi Petro? Abſit procul, abſit. Nam ſecundum Chriſti nomen omnes qui ſunt illius Chriſti dicuntur, dicente propheta; Vt ſalvos faciat Chriſtus ſuos. Item. Nolite tangere Chriſtos meos, & tum alio longe modo hic, alio illi unctionis vocabulo inſigniuntur. Sanius certe Roterodamus, cujus imitatorem, & ſequacem ſtrenuum in nonnullis video. Is (tu es Petrus & mox quæ ſequuntur) in primis in Romanum pontificem, ut in Chriſtianæ fidei principem competere ait, omnium ſemoto dubio, annotatione in 16 Matthæi caput; quanquam plus æquo Origianæ ſententiæ inniti ibidem mihi videtur. Quod ſi dexerimus te authore æqualiter, & indiſcriminatim hæc de Petro, & omnibus chriſtianis intelligi, incidemus in illam Lutheranam ſententiam; Omnes Chriſtianos eſſe ſacerdotes, & ordinatam nullam poteſtatem accipere, quam antea non habebant, ſed deputari tantum ad licite utendum poteſtate prius habita; quæ ſententia jam olim eſt ab eccleſia damnata.

Prælatos omnes eſſe latrones.

Ad hæc aiebas Chriſtum, quum minima vocaret præcepta, Scribarum & Phariſæorum alluſiſſe impietati, qui ut ſua eveherent, & amplificarent, minima dicebant divina. Multum hic diſcors es ab Origene, Scripturarum interprete, ſaneq; vigilantiſſimo, qui Homilia in Matthæum quinta adeo non negat revera quædam Dei præcepta dici, & eſſe minima, ut ex ſolutione, & obſervatione eorum minimum & magnum dici in regno cœlorum nihil obſcure prædicet. Simul pugnat quod tum Chriſtus ipſe ſeorſum à plebe & populo cum pauculis Diſcipulis, ſuæ cæleſtis tum ſolis, doctrinæ capacibus in monte verſabatur, nihil interim cum Scribis, nihil cum Phariſæis tractans, ut divina illa concione ſua prorſus indignis.

Subjunxiſti chriſtianè parum ut mihi videbatur, hominem chriſtianum carnis acquieſcentem deſideriis, non majus chriſtianum eſſe, quam ſit Iudæus, quam ſit Turcus. Hoc mihi non chriſtianum, ſed Oecolampadianum.

* De ſunt nonnulla, quæ conjecturis forſan utcunq; ſuppleri poſſunt ex ſequenti Latimeri reſponſione.

Sit opus, quám ad beneficam Petri confeſſionem germanis fructibus referendam. Quid tu hic tibi velis neſcio. Si eſt aliquis Petri primatus, is certe Catholico cuilibet pro viribus defendendus eſt. Eſt aliquis Petri primatus; alioqui Chriſti verbum inefficax eſt (tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum, &c.) Si nihil eſt opus ut defenſetur Petri primatus, nihil eſt opus ut defenſetur veritas. Et ob veritatem ad necem uſque mortali cuilibet certandum. Non puto quenquam germanis fructibus referre poſſe beneficam Petri confeſſionem, negando Petri primatum: benefica Petri confeſſio, an non eſt Ieſum eſſe Chriſtum filium Dei viventis? Dei filius eſt veritas. At non Chriſtus, ſi nullus eſt Petri primatus. Hic fœdè lapſus mihi videre. Nihil enim alienum eſſe puto à benefica Chriſti confeſſione, ſi quis pro virili ſedem tueatur & defenſet apoſtolicam.

Apertiſſimum mendacium eſſe clamitas, Chriſtum cum pauculis Diſcipulis in monte ſeorſum à turba verſatum fuiſſe. Apertiſſime tum mecum mentitus eſt Origenes, Scripturarnm interpres vigilantiſſimus, qui Homilia in Mattheum 5. inquit; Deſcendente Ieſu de monte, ſequutæ ſunt eum turbæ multæ, Docente vero Domino in monte, Diſcipuli erant cum ipſo, quibus datum erat cœleſtis doctrinæ non eſſe ſecreta, per quæ ſalutis ſcientia brutorum corda ſalirent, cœcorumque oculis per mundanæ delectationis tenebras caligantibus, lucem patefacerunt veritatis, Vnde & Dominus ad eos: Vos eſtis (inquit) ſal terræ, vos eſtis & lumina mundi. Nunc vero deſcendente eo de monte, turbæ ſecutæ ſunt eum. In montem ſcilicet aſcendere nequaquam poterant, quia quos delictorum ſarcinæ deprimunt, ad myſteriorum ſublimia, niſi abjecto onere, ſcandere nimine valent. Audis noſtram, non tuam ab Origene probari ſententiam.

Notas præterea, quos neſcio, tibi tum notiſſimos; alij nonnulli pſeudoprædicatores, qui populo ſuadent chriſtiano ſat eſſe, ſi credit quemadmodum credit eccleſia, & neſcire interim quid, aut quomodo credat, ita miſerum vulgus ab ampliore Dei agnitione quærenda dehortando. Iniqua, & præceps ſatis cenſura in verbi Dei miniſtros. Tales ſiqui ſunt, debemus Lutheranæ & Hæreticorum eccleſiæ: in noſtra eſſe nequeunt, quum polliticus ſit ſponſus ad conſummationem uſque ſeculi ſe non deſerturum ſponſam ſuam eccleſiam. Quæ dicis reliqua, quum ſint mera convitia tranſeo.

Quod ſatis declarat, quod poſtremo penè dicis argutè philoſophatum me de juſtificatione fidei, interim mea nihil convellens. An hoc eſt argutè philoſophari de juſtificatione fidei, dicere fidem juſtificare, ſed non ſolam, imo & opera ſuam habere juſtitiam, ſed in fide, ſed in charitate? Hoc ego arguebam quod opera diceres non juſtificare. Si hoc eſt philoſophari, ego ſum philoſophatus, & non ego tantum, ſed & Iacobus Apoſtolus. Fides eſt, fateor, ut recte dixit Auguſtinus, Fundamentum & radix juſtæ vitæ, qua conſequimur bonorum operum voluntatem, ac ita juſtitiam. Tantum ne putet quis juſtitiam ſola animi exiſtimatione finiri, omni bono & pio excluſo opere. Cætera, quum non agnoſcis, ego ſepelio. Vnum id adjiciens, ſi bene feceris, bene recipies; ſin autem malè, ecce in foribus aderit peccatum tuum. Alias nacto otio abundantius. Interim vale. Derhamia.

Salutem plurimam.

This letter is an anſwer of M. Latimers unto this that goeth before.

NOn equidem ſum ego vel adeo ferox, quod ſciam, vir item eximie, ut ab homine Chriſtiano chriſtianè admoneri moleſtè feram, vel adeo inſenſatus, & à communi ſenſu alienus (ni fallor) ut me prius ſuggillatum fuiſſe abs te & inter pocula, neque ſemel ſuggillatum, quam admonitum, imo nec admonitum tandem ſed acerrimè, potius redargutum, ſed conviciis & mendaciis malè habitum potius, ſed calumniis iniquè affectum potius, ſed falsó condemnatum potius, conſtanter probem. Quod ſi tuis hiſce literis pro illarum jure & mei animi ductu ego jam reſponderem. Sed cohibeo me, ne dum conor tuo morbo mederi, bilem tibi moveam homini vel citra ſtumulum (ut præ ſe ferunt literæ) plus quam oportet bilioſo. Imò det utrique Deus, quod ipſe utrique norit commode fore, & mihi videlicet vel in mediis calumniis patientiam Chriſtiano homine dignam, & tibi judicium aliquando tam rectum, quam nunc habes zelum tuopte marte bene fervidum. Conducibilius, opinor, fuerit ſic orare, quam ejuſmodi criminationi apologiam parare, quum & ego jam negotioſior ſum pro concione mihi perendie dicenda, quam ut commode poſſim reſpondere; & mendaciora ſint tua omnia, quam ut jure debeam ea confutare. Sed ut pauci, tamen multis, ſi fieri poſſit, ſatisfaciam, primum operæpretium fuerit in medium ſtatuere, & quid ego dixi, & quid tu ex dictis collegiſti. Collegiſti quidem multa veluti ſanguinem è ſilice colligendo excuſſurus Sed ſic eſt affectus, uti video, erga me tuus, quem ob rabiem ejuſdem ægrè noſti diſſimulare. Eſto, dixerim ego omnes Papas, omnes Epiſcopos, Vicarios, Rectoreſque omnes, per oſtium non intrantes, ſed aſcendentes aliunde, fures & latrones eſſe. Dum ſic dixi, ex introitu & aſcenſu, non ex perſonis & titulis, cum Chriſto ſum rem metitus. Hinc tu tua Minerva colligis, omnes Papas. omnes Epiſcopos, Vicarios, Rectoreſque omnes, ſimpliciter fures eſſe, ſaltem ſic me dixiſſe. Num juſta hic (mi frater) collectio? An non juſte in te quadret illud Pauli ad Romanos? ſic aiunt nos dicere, ſic male loquuntur de nobis, ſed quorum damnatio juſta eſt (inquit:) & tamen juſtius videri poſſunt ex Paulo collegiſſe adverſarij, quam tu ex me. Iam ſi idem Dei verbum nunc quod prius, neque minus Deo gratum acceptumque quiſquis interim Miniſter verbi fuerit, nonne & eadem damnatio calumniatores Miniſtri nunc manet quæ olim? Longe intereſt dicas omnes per oſtium non intrantes fures eſſe, & omnes ſimpliciter fures eſſe. Sed unde (quæſo) dum ego dico omnes per oſtium non intrantes fures eſſe, videor tibi dicere omnes ſimpliciter fures eſſe? niſi forte plærique omnes videnter tibi aliunde aſcendere, & non per oſtium intrare? Quod ſi ſenſeris, at nolito dicere ſi ſapis (ſapis autem plurimum) quod ſentis. Cum quanto enim id dixeris tuo periculo, ipſe videris. Et niſi id ſenſeris, cur per Deum immortalem ego non poſſum dicere omnes eſſe fures, qui per oſtium non intrantes aſcendunt aliunde, quibuſcunque interim titulis ſplendeſcant, niſi videar tibi dicere ſtatim omnes ad unum fures eſſe, & tum quæ te potius cœpit dementia, dum ſic colligis, ut plures fures quam paſtores colligendo eſſe feceris. Nam velis nolis verum eſt quod ego dixi, nempe quotquot per oſtium non intrant, ſed aliunde aſcendunt, fures & latrones eſſe, ſeu Papæ, ſeu Epiſcopi fuerint. Quare dum ſic in ipſo exorbitas limine, quorſum attinet reliqua examinare? Sed age, hoc tibi arridet plurimum, quod Phariſæi ſunt tam tecte à Chriſto reprehenſi, & non palam, quomodo tum non diſplicebit è regione tibi acerbiſſima illa, ſimul & apertiſſima criminatio, in os & coram turba illis objecta, (Væ vobis Scribæ & Phariſæi hypocritæ) ubi nominati taxantur? Sed Chriſtus, inquis, Deus erat pervicaciam cordis conſpicatus. Tu vero homo patentium intuitor, non mentium rimator: Sum ſane homo (uti dicis) id quod citra tuam operam jam olim habeo exploratum: homo (inquam) ſum, non labem in alieno corde deliteſcentem, ſed vitam omnibus patentem & expoſitam intuitus, adeóque ex fructibus cognoſcens, quos Chriſtus admonuit ex fructibus cognoſcendos, ipſum quorundam vivendi genus libenter damnans denique, quod in ſacris literis, ſacriſque interpretibus damnatum toties comperio, nihil id quidem moratus, quæcunque ipſum amplectuntur perſonæ: quod dum ego facio, neque cordium latebras ulterius penetro, nonne immerito abs te reprehendor? qui non homo mecum, ſed pluſquam homo es, dum mei animi emphaſim melius noſti per arrogantiam, quam egomet novi, utpote qui non ſat habes quæ dico noviſſe, ſed quæ ſentio nondum dicta noveris, abditiſſima cordis mei penitiſſime rimatus, ne non ſcire in te ipſum competeret, quod in me torquere molitus es; nimirum noli ante tempus judicare, noli condemnare, ut diſcas quam oportet mendacem non eſſe immemorem, ne proprio forſan gladio juguletur, & in foveam incidat ipſe, quam ſtruxerat alteri. Nam dum ego pronuncio fures eſſes, quotquot per oſtium non intrantes aſcendunt aliunde, tibi non verba ſolum audienti, ſed & corculum meum contemplanti omnes ad unum fures eſſe pronuntio, excepto meipſo videlicet & aliis meæ farinæ hominibus neſcio (inquis) quos. Sed quis illam fecit exceptionem niſi tu qui cognoſcens occulta cordium, ſic inquis, ſenſiſſe videris? Sed tibi ſic ſenſiſſe videor, cui & dixiſſe videor, quod (ut liquidiſſime conſtat) neutiquam dixi. Sed tibi peculiare eſt alios à cordis intuitu prohibere, ut ipſe intuearis ſolus quicquid eſt in corde, acie videlicet tam perſpicaci, ut videas in corde, quod in corde nondum eſt natum: id quod ibi facis, dum quod ego de eccleſia recte dixi, tu tuo more calumniaris iniquè, quaſi ego quod ad uſum clavium attinet, æquaſſem omnes cum Petro, cum ne unum quidem verbum de clavium poteſtate ſit dictum; imo ne cogitatum quidem, neque Petri primatui derogatum, ut cujus nulla ſit facta mentio. Sed tu pro tuo candore ſic colligis, dum ego nil aliud quam admonui auditores eccleſiam Chriſti ſupra petram non ſuper arenam fundatam, ne mortua fide plus ſatis hæreant, tum perituri & portis inferorum fœdiſſime ceſſuri, ſed fidem operibus oſtendant, tum demum vitam æternam habituri. Quid ego minus quam omnes Chriſtianos, ut ego ſum, ſacerdotes dixerim eſſe? Sed oculatiſſimi ſunt invidi ad colligendum quod venantur, Nonne hic optimo jure cogor nonnihil chriſtianæ charitatis in tuo pectore deſiderare? qui dum neſcis confutare quod dico, miris modis mihi impingis quod poſſis confutare. Tu vero optime noſti quid ſentit Lutherus de eccleſia. Et ego non gravabor ſubſcribere, quid ſentit poſt multos alios Lyranus ſuper 16 Matthæi, ex quo pater inquit, quod eccleſia non conſiſtit in hominibus, ratione poteſtatis vel dignitatis eccleſiæ, ſeu ſecularis, quia multi principes & ſummi pontifices, inquit, inventi ſunt apoſtataſſe à fide, propter quod eccleſia conſiſtit, inquit, in illis perſonis, in quibus eſt notitia vera & confeſſio fidei & veritatis. Hic conſenſit & cum Hieronimo Chryſoſtomus. Sic enim dicunt; (neſcio an applaudant tibi quod dicunt, quippe qui in illis te prodis eſſe:) Qui promptiores ſunt ad primatum Petri defenſandum, etiam cum nihil ſit opus, quam ad beatificam Petri confeſſionem germanis fructibus referendam. Sed tu mittis me ad Auguſtinum, bene liberalis conſultor. Ego optem te eundem legere ſi libeat in Epiſt. Iohannis tractatu tertio. Videris enim in Auguſtianis operibus non adeo excercitatus, cum de fidei juſtificatione tam argute Philoſopharis. Quocirca cuperem te in collectaneis Bedæ exercitatiorem fore, cum tua ipſius collectanea Auguſtinum non ſpirent, ut jam non pluribus neque illius, neque aliorum authorum locis quærendis te gravem. Sed illud non omittam tamen, etſi aliò etiam me evocent negotia, non alluſiſſe videlicet Chriſtum Phariſæorum impietati, cum præcepta vocaret minima. Sic enim tu audes dicere, quia aliam in Origene interpretationem legiſti, Pulchrè admodum objectum, quaſi unus & idem Scripturæ locus non ſit ab aliis aliter fere expoſitus: Origines de illuſione non meminit, igitur nemo: qualis conſecutio? ſed nihil, inquis, ibi Chriſti cum Phariſæis: & id quoque non minus, pulchrè abs te dictum, quaſi non ſtatim poſt ſubderet Chriſtus de Scribis & Phariſæis mentionem, populum ab illorum juſtitia humanis. i. ſuis ipſorum traditionibus ſtabilita revocans. Niſi abundaverit juſtitia veſtra inquiens plus quam Scribarum, &c. At verſabatur tum, inquis, Chriſtus cum pauculis Diſcipulis ſeorſum â turba: imo hoc apertiſſimum mendacium eſt, id quod verbum Matthæi caput ſeptimum claudentia luce clarius commonſtrât, ut tolerabiliora ſint mihi de me mendacia tua, qui audes de ipſo Chriſto & ejus ſermone mentiri. Et factum eſt, inquit, ut cum finiſſet Ieſus ſermones hos, obſtupuerunt ſuper doctrina ejus. Ecce autem, ſi Chriſtus ſeorſum à turba ſit locutus, quomodo obſtupuerunt ſuper doctrina, quam per te non audiverunt? Sed Lucas Evangeliſta, ſive de eodem, ſive de conſimili Chriſtus ſermone locutus, teſtatur turbam audiiſſe, ca. capite ſeptimo. Cum conſummâſſet Ieſus ſermones hos (inquit) audienti populo. En quo prolabitur præceps judicium tuum invidia male deformatum? Scilicet tu ipſe hic non toto erras cælo? dignius videlicet quia aliorum errores expiſceris & notes, & ad palinodiam revoces: Tu tuo ſenſui hic non fidis? Medice cura te ipſum, & diſce quid ſit illud; Hypocrita cur vides feſtucam, &c. Diſce ex tus trabibus alienis feſtucis parcere. Ego nihil dixi, teſtor Deum, non mentior, quod vel Oecolampadio, vel Luthero, vel Melancthoni acceptum referre debeam; & tamen tu, quæ eſt tua charitas, non vereris id meo aſſuere capiti. Ego ſi feci iſtud, decidam merito ab inimicis meis inanis. Sed neſcis tu quidem opinor cujus ſpiritus ſis, dum mavis miniſtrum verbi impudentiſſimis mendaciis laceſſere, quam teſtimonium veritati perhibere, quod quantum ſit piaculum in conſpectu Dei, tu abſque doctore non ignorans, in cumulum damnationis tuæ niſi reſipiſcas. Iam vero num ego vitupero, ut quis credat quemadmodum eccleſia credit? Non ſane vitupero, niſi quod malevolentia erga me tua tam ſurdas reddidit aures tuas, ut ne audiens quidem audias quæ dicuntur. Sed hoc vitupero, ut quis cui chriſtianorum ſuadeat, quemadmodum ſuadere ſolent pſeudoprædicatores non pauci, ſat per omnia eſſe, credere quemadmodum eccleſia credit, & neſcire interim quid aut quomodo credit eccleſia, & ſic miſerum populum ab ampliori Dei agnitione quærenda dehortari? Quod poſtremo mihi obtrudis, mendacium eſt & illud plus quam dici poſſit inhumanum, neque eo mea verba ſenſu accipis, ſenſu quo ſint à me dicta, ideoque Hieronymo ſuper 26 Matthæi teſte falſus teſtis coram Deo futurus. Lege locum, & relinque falſum teſtimonium. Ego dico Chriſtianum, id eſt, baptiſmo in Chriſtianorum numerum receptum, ſi profeſſioni non reſpondeat, ſed carnis deſideriis ſeſe dedat, non magis Chriſtianum eſſe quod ad conſecutionem æternæ vitæ ſpectat, quæ promittitur Chriſtianis, quàm Iudæum aut Turcam: inquam hujus conditionem in illo die deteriorem fore, ſi verum tibi dixit; melius eſſe viam veritatis non agnoſcere, quam poſt agnitam, &c. Et quibus dicit Chriſtus nunquam novi vos? Nonne his qui per nomen ejus prophetantes, virtutes præſtiterint? nonne negabet Chriſtus nos, illum prænegantes coram hominibus? Nonne ſtatuemur inter oves Chriſti à dextris, ſi non vitam Chriſto dignam retulerimus profeſſi Chriſtum, ſed profeſſionem mala vita contaminantes. Sunt verius pſeudo-Chriſtiani quam Chriſtiani habendi: & ab Auguſtino & Chriſto vocantur Antichriſti. Non nego quin obligatio manet, ſed in majorem damnationem manet, ſi non ſatisfacit obligationi. Officium concionatoris eſt hortari auditores ut ſic ſint Chriſtiani, ut compatientes hic cum Chriſto, cum Chriſto conregnent in cœlo, ut aliter Chriſtianum eſſe non ſit illis Chriſtianum eſſe. Sic Scripturæ, ſic interpretes Scripturæ loquuntur, ut verbis hæretica tibi videatur loquutio: ſed avarus, fornicator, homicida, inquis, catholicus eſt & Chriſti ſervus: tamen ſic animi gratia tecum ludam. Fornicator per te eſt Chriſti ſervus, ſed idem eſt peccati & Diaboli ſervus; ergo idem poteſt duobus dominis ſervire, quod Chriſtum latuit. Et ſi fides mortua efficit catholicum, & Dæmones pertinent ad eccleſiam catholicam, utpote qui juxta Iacobum credunt & contremiſcunt. Fornicator (inquis) fidit Chriſto; ſpes non pudefacit, qui fidit Chriſto non peribit, ſed habebit vitam æternam. Neque me latet ad Galathas ſcripſiſſe Paulum fide aberrantes eccleſiam tamen vocaſſe; ſic idem ad Corinthios ſcribens eos in eodem capite nunc carnales appellat, nunc Dei templum, Corinthios nimirum intelligens, ſed alios atque alios. Neque enim templum Dei erant qui carnales erant; quanquom nec me latet eccleſiam, i. multitudinem profitentium Chriſtum, partim ex bonis, partim ex malis conflatam eſſe, nempe rete Evangelicum ex omni generi congregari. Quid hoc adverſum ea quæ ego dixi, qui conabar omnes bonos non malos efficere, & ideo laborabam ut auditores mei non putarent magnum eſſe ſi in malis eccleſiaſtici invenirentur: ſed non viſum eſt tibi piam prædicationem piè interpretari, dum exiſtimas ad pietatem pertinere, ſi piè dicta impiè revocarentur. Si colloquia tua non ſunt quam ſcripta clementiora, neutra ego optem mihi contingere, ſed omnis amarulentia, tumor, ira, vociferatio, maledicentia tollatur à te cum omni malitia; & tamen neque colloquiis, neque ſcriptis me gravabis. Tu non optares (opinor) tales auditores, qualem te præſtiteris. Sed Deus te reddat benigniorem, vel à meis concionibus quàm longiſſimè ableget. Vale.

Spiritum Veritatis.

Flammis, ſumoque quam lectione, aut oculis digniores multo perlegimus tuas literas, quibus tua ipſius ſcelera in nos torquere ſubdolè, & aſtutè admodum moliris. Et quo firmius iſta tua ſtatuas, veterem inter pocula me tui ſuggillatorem facis. Quod quam vere (ut omnia) dicas, jam vide. Narravit nobis preſentibus jam olim Marchfieldiæ unus & idem alter, qui tuæ interfuerant concioni, te palam ſummaque ut præ te ferebas, cum authoritate dixiſſe, indignos eſſe miſeros homunculos, qui angelica ſalutatione ſalutem deiparam Virginem, ni velint ipſam rurſum ut pariat Chriſtum. Ego hæc dixi, parum Chriſtiane & religioſe abs te dicta, cavendumque diligenter piis quibuſque Chriſtianis, ne hujuſmodi fidem habeant concionatoribus. An hoc eſt te ſuggillare, an magis & tibi & illis pie, & religioſe conſulere? Nihil ego tibi & tu mihi, necdum viſo, bilis impingo, ſed ſumma raraque te eſſe modeſtia, & tolerantia hominem (ut videri vis) gaudeo, ſed & gaudebo, nec retorqueo in te convitia, & probra, quibus tuæ ſcatent literæ. At iſtud non video quomodo dicas (imo nec admonitum, tandem, ſed acerrime potius redargutum, ſed convitiis & mendaciis habitum potius, ſed calumniis iniquè affectum potius, ſed falſo condemnatum potius) Redargui fateor, at ea redargutio quam admonitio, aliud nihil. Convitium nullum, mendacium nullum, calumnia nulla, quod ſciam, in meis conſpicitur literis, niſi mentitus eſt Paulus, Niſi calumniatus eſt Paulus, Niſi convitiatus eſt Paulus, quum diceret quoſdam ſic dixiſſe, facienda mala ut venirent bona. Nos calidi adhuc tuo ſpiritu, tua tibi retulimus verba, id quod norunt probe omnes, qui te illic una audiere, Vtinam tu nil tale effudiſſes, ego tum certè nihil tibi tale adſcripſiſſem. Abſit à me ut ego (quod dicere videris) ullo te animi odio, ullo te impio mentis affectu perſequar. Didici ex Chriſto diligere etiam inimicos: tantum abeſt ut hominem fratrem, ejuſdemque domini conſervum odio habeam. Sed plus quam hoſtilia, plus quam cruenta tua verba ne quicquam me movent. Tantum quam poſſum pauciſſimis tuis reſpondebo, poſthac te tuo relicturus judici.

Primum quod dicis (Eſto dixerim ego, omnes Papas, omnes Epiſcopos, Vicarios, Rectoreſque omnes per oſtium non intrantes, ſed aſcendentes aliunde, fures eſſe & latrones, dum ſic dixi, ex aſcenſu non ex perſonis & titulis cum Chriſto ſum rem metitus.) Si id dixiſſes, nihil nobis tecum ea de re negotij fuiſſet. Sed (quod tu mea Minerva collegiſſe dicis) dicebas, Papæ videlicet omnes, Epiſcopi omnes, Vicarij omnes, Rectores omnes fures ſint, & latrones, nulla, quam audivi neque aſcenſus, neque deſcenſus, neque per oſtium, neque per feneſtram mentione facta. Nec ego adeo ſurdis eram auribus, ut ſi quid tale ſuo loco dixiſſes, continuò non excepiſſem. Eum quem nunc adfers ſenſum catholicum veneror, & exoſculor; priorem rejicio & deteſtor. Sacræ Scripturæ authoritas (Principi populi tui non maledices) non ſinit me ut ſentiam, ut tu mihi aſcribere videris, pleroſque omnes aliunde aſcendere. Quis ſum ego ut judicem alienum ſervum (unuſquiſque enim propriam ſarcinam bajulabit.) Non ego, ſed nec alius quiſquam vetuit unquam quo minus diceres, omnes eſſe fures qui per oſtium non intrantes aſcendunt aliunde quibuſcunque interim titulis ſplendeſcant: ſed qui per oſtium non intrantes aſcendunt aliunde, jam primum audio, quod ſi prius (ut jam dixi) adieciſſes, verbum nullum. Quod dicis, quæ me dementia cœperit, ſic collegiſſe, ut plures fures quam paſtores, plures hœdos quam oves eſſe in Eccleſia, dixiſti. Quod quam dixeris, ut prius dixi, verè, ipſi videto. Iam prioribus literis ſaniorem fuiſſe diui Cypriani Martyris de Eccleſia cenſuram docuimus. Fruſtra dicis apertam illam & in os objectam criminationem, væ vobis Scribæ & Phariſei, hypocritæ, mihi è regione diſplicituram, quum adeo, ut dicis arrideat tecta & parabolica illa, Qui non intrat per oſtium in ſtabulum ovium, &c. Non poteſt profecto mihi unquam diſplicere aliquod ſacrum Chriſti factum. Præſentes reprehendebat ipſe impios Scribas & Phariſæos, juxta id, Annuncia populo meo ſcelera ſua, non aliena; abſentes tu Papas & Epiſcopos; qui talia fecerant væ futurum prædixit; tu vocabula, quo neſcio afflatu, tantum reſpiciebas. Nullius ego hominis animum judico unquam, ſed ne judicabo, tantum abeſt ut animi tui emphaſin mihi arrogaverim unquam. Deſine mihi objicere talia. Quod audivimus loquimur, quod vidimus teſtamur. Si ſanè, & rectè ad quemlibet Chriſtianum interpritatus es id Matthæi, Tu es Petrus æqualiter, ut dicis, de Eccleſia, nihil omnino de vi clavium locutus, gaudeo. Mihi certe non arridet. Nec dixi te dixiſſe omnes Chriſtianos, ut tu es, Sacerdotes eſſe, ſed ejuſmodi nudam & confuſam interpretationem non parum fovere & nutrire hujuſmodi aſſertionem Lutheranam, id quod credo, ipſe vides. Me illorum adjicies numero, qni promptiores ſunt ad Primatum Petri defenſandum etiam, ut ais, quum nihil * ſed hæreticum dictum videtur. Chriſtianus enim conditionem ſignificat non actionem ſine actu. Signa latet quippiam, &c.

Beſides theſe Latine letters above expreſſed, other letters alſo he wrote in Engliſh, as well to others, as namely to Sir Edward Baynton Knight, which letters becauſe they do contain much fruitfull matter worthy to be read and known, I thought here preſently to inſert, which albeit may ſeem ſomewhat prolixe in reading; yet the fruit thereof I truſt ſhall recompence the length of them.

The Copy of a Letter ſent by Maſter Latimer, Parſon of Weſtkington, in the County of Wilteſhire, to Sir Edward Baynton, Knight.

Salutem in Chriſto.

Right worſhipfull Sir, I recommend me unto your Maſterſhip with hearty thanks for your ſo friendly, ſo charitable, and ſo mindefull remembrance of me ſo poor a wretch. Whereas of late I received your letters by Maſter Bonnam perceiving therein both who be grieved with me, wherefore, and what behoveth me to do, in caſe, I muſt needs come up, which your goodneſſe towards me with all other ſuch like to recompence, whereas I my ſelf am not able, I ſhall not ceaſe to pray my Lord God, which both is able, and alſo doth indeed reward all them that favour the favourers of his truth for his ſake; for the truth is a common thing, pertaining to every man, for the which every man ſhall anſwer another day. And I deſire favour neither of your Maſterſhip, neither of any man elſe, but in truth, and for the truth, I take God to witneſſe, which knoweth all. In very deed Maſter Chancellor did ſhew me that my Lord biſhop of London had ſent letters to him for me; and I made anſwer that he was mine Ordinary, and that both he might and ſhould reform me as farre as I needed reformation, as well and as ſoon as my Lord of London. And I would be very loath (now this deep winter) being ſo weak and ſo feeble (not onely exerciſed with my old diſeaſe in my head and ſide, but alſo with new, both the colick and the ſtone) to take ſuch a journey; and though he might ſo do, yet he needed not, for he was not bound ſo to do: notwithſtanding I ſaid, if he to do my Lord of London pleaſure to my great diſpleaſure, would needs command me to go, I would obey his commandement, yea though it ſhould be never ſo great a grievance and painfull to me, with the which anſwer he was content, ſaying, he would certifie my Lord of London thereof, truſting his Lordſhip would be content with the ſame: but as yet I hear nothing from him. M. Chancellor alſo ſaid, that my Lord of London maketh as though hee were greatly diſpleaſed with me, for that I did contemne his authority, at my laſt being in London. Forſooth I preached in Abbe-Church, not certain then (as I remember) whether in his Dioceſſe or no, intending nothing leſſe than to contemne his authority, and this I did not of mine own ſwinge, or by mine own procuration, but at the requeſt of honeſt Merchant men (as they ſeemed to me) whoſe names I do not know, for they were not of mine acquaintance before; and I am glad thereof for their ſakes, leſt if I knew them, I ſhould be compelled to utter them ſo, and their godly deſire to hear godly preaching, ſhould return to their trouble: for they required me very inſtantly, and to ſay the truth, even importunately. Whether they were of that Pariſh or no, I was not certain: But they ſhewed not onely themſelves, but alſo many other to be very deſirous to hear me, pretending great hunger and thirſt of the Word of God, and ghoſtly Doctrine. And upon conſideration, and to avoid all inconveniences, I put them off, and refuſed them twice or thrice, till at the laſt they brought me word that the Parſon and Curate were not onely content, but alſo deſired me, notwithſtanding that they certified him both of my name plainly, and alſo that I had not the Biſhops ſeal to ſhew for me, but onely a licence of the Univerſity; which Curate did receive me, welcomed me, and when I ſhould go into the pulpit, gave me the common benediction; ſo that I had not been alone uncharitable, but alſo charliſhly uncharitable, if I ſhould have ſaid nay. Now all this ſuppoſed to be truth (as it is) I marvell greatly how my Lord of London can alleadge any contempt of him in me.

Firſt, he did never inhibit me in my life; and if he did inhibite his curate to receive me, what pertaineth that to me, which neither did know thereof, nor yet made any ſute to the Curate deceitfully, nor did it appear to me very likely that the Curate would ſo little have regarded my Lords inhibition, which he maintaineth ſo vigilantly, not knowing my Lords minde before. Therefore I conjectured with my ſelf, that either the Curate was of ſuch acquaintance with my Lord, that he might admit whom he would, or elſe (and rather) that it was a train and a trap laid before me, to the intent that my Lord himſelf, or other pertaining to him, was appointed to have been there, and to have taken me if they could in my Sermon: which conjecture both occaſioned me ſomewhat to ſuſpect thoſe men which deſired me, though they ſpeak never ſo fair and friendly, and alſo rather to go. For I preach nothing, but if it might be ſo, I would my Lord himſelf might hear me every Sermon I preach. So certain I am that it is truth, that I take in hand to preach. If I had with power of my friends (the Curate gain-ſaying and withſtanding) preſumed to have gone into the Pulpit, there had been ſomething wherefore to pretend a contempt. I preached in Kent alſo, at the inſtant requeſt of a Curate; yet hear I not that his Ordinary layeth any contempt to my charge, or yet doth trouble the Curate. I marvell not a little, how my Lord Biſhop of London having ſo broad, wide, and large Dioceſſe committed unto his Cure, and ſo peopled as it is, can have leiſure for preaching and teaching the Word of God, opportunè, importunè, tempeſtivè, intempeſtivè, privatum, publicè, to his own flock, inſtando, arguendo, exhortando, monendo, cum omni lenitate & doctrina, have leiſure (I ſay) either to trouble me, or to trouble himſelf with me, ſo poor a wretch, a ſtranger to him, and nothing pertaining to his Cure, but as every man pertaineth to every mans cure, ſo intermixing and intermedling himſelf with another mans Cure, as though he had nothing to do in his own. If I would do as ſome men ſay my Lord doth, gather up my joyſe, as we call it, warily and narrowly and yet neither preach for it in mine own Cure, nor yet otherwhere, peradventure he would nothing deny me. In very deed I did moniſh Judges and Ordinaries to uſe charitable equity in their judgements towards ſuch as be accuſed, namely, of ſuch accuſers, which be as like to hear and bewray, as other be to ſay amiſſe, and to take mens words in the meaning thereof, and not to wreſt them in another ſenſe than they were ſpoken in: for all ſuch accuſers and witneſſes do falſe before God, as St. Hierome ſaith upon the xxvi. Chapter of Matthew. Nor yet do I accompt thoſe Judges well adviſed, which wittingly will give ſentence after ſuch witneſſes, much leſſe thoſe which procure ſuch witneſſes againſt any man: nor do I think Judges now adayes ſo deeply confirmed in grace, or ſo impeccable, but that it may behoove and become Preachers, to admoniſh them to do well, as well as other kindes of men, both great and ſmall. And this I did, occaſioned of the Epiſtle which I declared, Rom. 6. wherein is this ſentence, Non eſtis ſub lege, ſed ſub gratia, Ye Chriſtian men that believe in Chriſt, are not under the Law. What a ſaying is this (quoth I) if it be not rightly underſtood, that is, as St. Paul did underſtand it? for the words ſound as though he would go about to occaſion Chriſtian men to break law, ſeeing they be not under the law: and what if the Pſeudapoſtles, adverſaries to Saint Paul would have ſo taken them, and accuſed Saint Paul of the ſame to my Lord of London; if my ſaid Lord would have heard Saint Paul declare his own minde of his own words, then he ſhould have eſcaped, and the falſe Apoſtles put to rebuke; if he would have rigorouſly followed utcunque allegata & probata, and have given ſentence after relation of the accuſers, then good Saint Paul muſt have born a faggot at Pauls Croſſe, my Lord of London being his Judge. O, it had been a goodly ſight to have ſeen Saint Paul with a faggot on his back, even at Pauls Croſſe, my Lord of London Biſhop of the ſame, ſitting under the Croſſe. Nay, verily I dare ſay, my Lord ſhould ſooner have burned him, for Saint Paul did not mean that Chriſtian men might break law, and do whatſoever they would, becauſe they were not under the law: but he did mean, that Chriſtian men might keep the law, and fulfill the law, if they would, becauſe they were not under the law, but under Chriſt, by whom they were divided from the tyranny of the law, and above the law, that is to ſay, able to fulfill the law to the pleaſure of him that made the law, which they could never do of their own ſtrength, and without Chriſt: ſo that to be under the law, after Saint Pauls meaning, is to be weak to ſatisfie the law; and what could Saint Paul do withall, though his adverſaries would not ſo take it? But my Lord would ſay peradventure that men will not take the Preachers words otherwiſe than they mean therein. Bona verba, as though Saint Pauls words were not otherwiſe taken, as it appeareth in the third Chapter to the Romanes, where he ſaith, quod injuſtitia noſtra Dei juſtitiam commendat, that is to ſay, our unrighteouſneſſe commendeth and maketh more excellent the righteouſneſſe of God which ſoundeth to many as though they ſhould be evill, that good ſhould come of it, and by unrighteouſneſſe to make the righteouſneſſe of God more excellent. So Saint Paul was reported to mean; yet he did mean nothing ſo, but ſhewed the ineſtimable wiſedome of God, which can uſe our naughtineſſe to the manifeſtation of his unſpeakable goodneſſe; not that we ſhould do naughtily to that end and purpoſe. Now my Lord will not think (I dare ſay) that Saint Paul was too blame that he ſpake no more circumſpectly, more warily, or more plainly, to avoid evill offence of the people; but rather he will blame the people, for that they took no better heed, and attendance of Pauls ſpeaking, to the underſtanding of the ſame: yea, he will rather pity the people, which had been ſo long nuzled in the doctrine of the Phariſees, and wallowed ſo long in darkneſſe of mans traditions, ſuperſtitions, and trade of living, that they were unapt to receive the bright lightneſſe of the truth, and wholeſome Doctrine of God, uttered by Saint Paul. Nor do I think that my Lord will require more circumſpection, or more convenience to avoid offence of errours in me, than was in Saint Paul, when he did not eſcape malevolous corrections, and ſlanderous reports of them that were of perverſe judgments, which reported him to ſay whatſoever he appeared to them to ſay, or whatſoever ſeemed to them to follow of his ſaying: but what followeth? ſic aiunt nos dicere, ſic male loquuntur de nobis: ſo they report us to ſay, ſaith Saint Paul, So they ſpeak evill of us: ſed quorum damnatio juſta eſt, but ſuch, whoſe damnation is juſt, ſaith he; and I think the damnation of all ſuch that evill report Preachers now adayes, likewiſe juſt; for it is untruth now and then. Yea Chriſt himſelf was miſ-reported, and falſly accuſed, both as touching his words, and alſo as concerning the meaning of his words. Firſt he ſaid, deſtruite, that is to ſay, deſtroy you; they made it poſſum deſtruere, that is to ſay, I can deſtroy: he ſaid templum hoc, this temple, they added manu factum, that is to ſay, made with hand, to bring it to a contrary ſenſe. So they both inverted his words, and alſo added unto his words, to alter his ſentence: for he did mean of the temple of his body, and they wreſted it to Salomons Temple. Now I report me whether it be a juſt fame raiſed up, and diſperſed after this manner. Nay verily, for there be three manner of perſons which can make no credible information. Firſt, adverſaries, enemies: Secondly, ignorant and without judgement: Thirdly, ſuſurrones, that is to ſay, whiſperers, and blowers in mens ears, which will ſpew out in hudder mudder, more than they dare avow openly. The firſt will not, the ſecond cannot, the third dare not: therefore the relation of ſuch is not credible, and therefore they can make no fame lawfull, nor occaſion any indifferent Judge to make proceſſe againſt any man; and it maketh no little matter what they be themſelves that report of any man, whether well or evill: for it is a great commendation to be evill ſpoken of. of them that be naught themſelves, and to be commended of the ſame, is many times no little reproach. God ſend us once all grace to wiſh well one to another, and to ſpeak well one of another. Me ſeems it were more comely for my Lord (if it were comely for me to ſay ſo) to be a Preacher himſelf, having ſo great a Cure as he hath, than to be a diſquieter and a troubler of Preachers, and to preach nothing at all himſelf. If it would pleaſe his Lordſhip to take ſo great a labour and pain at any time, as to come to preach in my little Biſhoprick at Weſtkingſton, whether I were preſent or abſent my ſelf, I would thank his Lordſhip heartily, and think my ſelf greatly bounden to him, that he of his charitable goodneſſe would go ſo farre to help to diſcharge me in my cure, or elſe I were more unnaturall than a beaſt unreaſonable, nor yet would I diſpute, contend, or demand by what authority, or where he had authority ſo to do, as long as his predication were fruitfull, and to the edification of my Pariſhioners. As for my Lord, he may do as it pleaſeth his Lordſhip. I pray God he do alwayes as well as I would wiſh him ever to do: but I am ſure Saint Paul, the true Miniſter of God, and faithfull diſpenſer of Gods myſteries, and right exemplar of all true and very Biſhops, ſaith in the firſt Chapter to the Philippians, that in his time ſome preached Chriſt for envy of him, thinking thereby ſo to grieve him withall, and as it were to obſcure him, and to bring his authority into contempt, ſome of good will and love, thinking thereby to comfort him: notwithſtanding (ſaith he) by all manner of wayes, and after all faſhions, whether it be of occaſion or of truth, as ye would ſay for truths ſake, ſo that Chriſt be preached and ſhewed, I joy and will joy: ſo much he regarded more the glory of Chriſt, and promotion of Chriſts Doctrine, to the edification of Chriſtian ſouls, than the maintenance of his own authority, reputation and dignity, conſidering right well (as he ſaid) that what authority ſoever he had, it was to edification, and not to deſtruction. Now I think it were no reproach to my Lord, but very commendable, rather to joy with St. Paul, and be glad that Chriſt be preached quovis modo, yea though it were for envy, that is to ſay, in diſdain; deſpite and contempt of his Lordſhip (which thing no man well adviſed will enterpriſe or attempt) then when the preaching cannot be proved juſtly, to demand of the Preacher auſterely, as the Pariſees did of Chriſt, qua authoritate hæc facis, aut quis dedit tibi iſtam authoritatem? As my authority is good enough, and as good as my Lord can give me any, yet I would be glad to have his alſo, if it would pleaſe his Lordſhip to be ſo good Lord unto me. For the Univerſity of Cambridge hath authority Apoſtolick to admit twelve yeerly, of the which I am one: and the Kings Highneſſe, God ſave his Grace, did decree that all admitted of Univerſities ſhould preach thorow out all his Realm as long as they preached well, without diſtrein of any man, my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of Dureſme, with ſuch other not a few, ſtanding by, and hearing the decree, nothing gain-ſaying it, but conſenting to the ſame. Now to contemne my Lord of Londons authority, were no little fault in me; ſo no leſſe fault might appear in my Lord of London to contemne the Kings authority and decree, yea ſo godly, ſo fruitfull, ſo commendable a decree pertaining both to the edification of Chriſtian ſouls, and alſo to the regard and defence of the Popiſh grace and authority Apoſtolike. To have a book of the King not inhibited, is to obey the King, and to inhibite a Preacher of the King admitted, is it not to diſobey the King? Is it not one King that doth inhibit and admit, and hath he not as great authority to admit as to inhibit? He that reſiſteth the power, whether admitting or inhibiting, doth he not reſiſt the ordinance of God? We low ſubjects are bound to obey powers, and their ordinances: and are not the higheſt ſubjects alſo, who ought to give us enſample of ſuch obedience? As for my preaching it ſelf, I truſt in God, my Lord of London cannot rightfully blame it, nor juſtly reprove it, if it be taken with the circumſtance thereof, and as I ſpake it, or elſe it is not my preach-

Nay, my Lord will none of that.

preaching, but his that falſly reporteth it, as the Poet Martiall ſaid to one that depraved his book;

Quem recitas meus eſt, O Fidentine, libellus:
Sed male cum recitas, incipit eſſe tuus.

But now I hear ſay that my Lord of London is informed, and upon the ſaid information hath informed the King, that I go about to defend Bilney, and his cauſe, againſt his Ordinaries and Judges, which I enſure is not ſo: for I had nothing to do with Bilney, nor yet with his Judges, except his Judges did him wrong; for I did nothing elſe but moniſh all Judges indifferently to do right, nor am I altogether ſo fooliſh as to defend the thing which I knew not. It might have become a Preacher to ſay as I ſaid, though Bilney had never been born. I have known Bilney a great while, I think much better than ever did my Lord of London: for I have been his ghoſtly father many a time; and to tell you the truth, what I have thought alwayes in him, I have known hitherto few ſuch ſo prompt and ready to do every man good after his power, both friends and foe, noyſome wittingly to no man, and towards his enemy ſo charitable; ſo ſeeking to reconcile them, as he did, I have known yet not many, and to be ſhort, in ſumme, a very ſimple good ſoul, nothing fit or meet for this wretched world, whoſe blinde faſhion and miſerable ſtate (yea farre from Chriſts Doctrine) he could as evill bear, and would ſorrow, lament, and bewail it as much as any man that ever I knew: as for his ſingular learning, as well in holy Scripture, as in all other good letters, I will not ſpeak of it. Notwithſtanding if he either now of late, or at any time attempted any thing contrary to the obedience which a Chriſtian man doth owe either to his Prince or to his Biſhop, I neither do nor will allow and approve that, neither in him, nor yet in any other man: we be all men, and ready to fall; wherefore he that ſtandeth, let him beware he fall not. How he ordered or miſordered himſelf in judgement, I cannot tell, nor will I meddle withall; God knoweth, whoſe judgements I will not judge. But I cannot but wonder, if a man living ſo mercifully, ſo charitably, ſo patiently, ſo continently, ſo ſtudiouſly and vertuouſly, and killing his old Adam, that is to ſay, mortifying his evill affections, and blinde motions of his heart ſo diligently, ſhould die an evill death, there is no more, but let him that ſtandeth, beware that he fall not: for if ſuch as he ſhall die evill, what ſhall become of me, ſuch a wretch as I am? but let this go, as little to the purpoſe, and come to the point we muſt reſt upon. Either my Lord of London will judge my outward man onely, as it is ſaid, Omnes vident quæ foris ſunt, or elſe he will be my God, and judge mine inward man, as it is ſaid, Deus autem intuetur cor: if he will have to do onely with mine outward man, and meddle with mine outward converſation, how that I have ordered my ſelf toward my Chriſtian brethren, the Kings liege people, I truſt I ſhall pleaſe and content both my Lord God, and alſo my Lord of London: for I have preached and teached but according to holy Scripture, holy Fathers, and ancient Interpreters of the ſame, with the which I think my Lord of London will be pacified: for I have done nothing elſe in my preaching, but with all diligence moved my auditors to faith and charity, to do their duty, and that that is neceſſary to be done. As for things of private devotion, mean things, and voluntary things, I have reproved the abuſe, the ſuperſtition of them, without condemnation of the things themſelves, as it becometh Preachers to do: which thing if my Lord of London will do himſelf (as I would to God he would do) he ſhould be reported (no doubt) to condemne the uſe of ſuch things, of covetous men which have damage, and finde leſſe in their cofers by condemnation of the abuſe, which abuſe they ſaw rather ſhould continue ſtill, than their profit ſhould not continue (ſo thorny be their hearts.) If my L. would needs coaſt and invade my inward man, will I, nill I, and break violently into my heart, I fear me I ſhall either diſpleaſe my Lord of London, which I would be very loath, or elſe my Lord God, which I will be more loath: not for any infidelity, but for ignorance, for I believe as a Chriſtian man ought to believe: but peradventure my Lord knoweth and will know many things certainly, which (perchance) I am ignorant in, with the which ignorance though my Lord of London may if he will be diſcontent, yet I truſt my Lord God will pardon it, as long as I hurt no man withall, and ſay to him with diligent ſtudy, and daily prayer, Paratum cor meum Deus, paratum cor meum, ſo ſtudying, preaching, and tarrying the pleaſure and leiſure of God: And in the mean ſeaſon, Acts 8. as Apollo did, when he knew nothing of Chriſt, but Baptiſmum Iohannis, teach and preach mine, even Chriſtian that, and no farther than I know to be true. There be three Creeds, one in my Maſſe, another in my Matins; the third common to them that neither ſay Maſſe, nor Matins, nor yet know what they ſay when they ſay the Creed: and I believe all three with all that God hath left in holy Writ, for me and all other to believe: yet I am ignorant in things which I truſt hereafter to know, as I do now know things in which I have been ignorant heretofore: ever learn, and ever to be learned, to profit with learning, with ignorance not to annoy. I have thought in times paſt, that the Pope, Chriſts Vicar, had been Lord of all the world as Chriſt is, ſo that if he ſhould have deprived the King of his Crown, or you of the Lordſhip of Bromeham, it had been enough: for he could do no wrong. Now I might be hyred to think otherwiſe; notwithſtanding I have both ſeen and heard Scripture drawn to that purpoſe. I have thought in times paſt, that the Popes diſpenſations of pluralities of Benefices, and abſence from the ſame, had diſcharged conſciences before God: foraſmuch as I had heard, Ecce vobiſcum ſum, & qui vos audit, me audit, bended to corroborate the ſame. Now I might be eaſily intreated to think otherwiſe, &c.

No man ſo c but he may learn.

I have thought in times paſt that the Pope could have ſpoyled Purgatory at his pleaſure with a word of his mouth; now learning might perſwade me otherwiſe, or elſe I would marvell why he would ſuffer ſo much money to be beſtowed that way, which ſo needfull is to be beſtowed otherwiſe, and to deprive us of ſo many patrones in heaven as he might deliver out of Purgatory, &c. I have thought in times paſt, that if I had been a Frier, and in a Cowl, I could not have been damned, nor afraid of death, and by occaſion of the ſame, I have been minded many times to have been a Frier, namely, when I was ſore ſicke and diſeaſed: Now I abhorre my ſuperſtitious fooliſhneſſe, &c. I have thought in times paſt, that divers images of Saints could have holpen me, and done me much good, and delivered me of my diſeaſes: Now I know that one can help as much as another. And it pitieth mine heart, that my Lord, and ſuch as my Lord is, can ſuffer the people to be ſo craftily deceived. It were too long to tell you what blindneſſe I have been in, and how long it were ere I could forſake ſuch folly, it was ſo corporate in me: but by continuall prayer, continuall ſtudy of Scripture, and oft communing with men of more right judgement, God hath delivered me, &c. Yea, men think my Lord himſelf hath thought in times paſt, that by Gods Law a man might marry his brothers wife, which now both dare think and ſay contrary; and yet this his boldneſſe might have chanced, in Pope Julius dayes, to ſtand him either in a fire, or elſe in a faggot. Which thing deeply conſidered, and pondered of my Lord, might ſomething ſtirre him to charitable equity, and to be ſomething remiſſe toward men, which labour to do good as their power ſerveth with knowledge, and do hurt to no man with their ignorance: for there is no greater diſtance, than between Gods Law, and not Gods Law; nor is it ſo, or ſo, becauſe any man thinketh it ſo, or ſo: but becauſe it is ſo or ſo indeed, therefore we muſt think it ſo, or ſo, when God ſhall give us knowledge thereof: for if it be indeed either ſo or not, it is ſo or not ſo, though all the world hath thought otherwiſe theſe thouſand yeers, &c.

And finally as ye ſay, the matter is weighty, and ought ſubſtantially to be looked upon, even as weighty as my life is worth; but how to look ſubſtantially upon it, otherwiſe know not I, than to pray my Lord God day and night, that as he hath emboldened me to preach his truth, ſo he will ſtrengthen me to ſuffer for it, to the edification of them which have taken by the working of him fruit thereby, and even ſo I deſire you, and all other that favour me for his ſake, likewiſe to pray: for it is not I (without his mighty helping hand) that can abide that brunt; but I have truſt that God will help me in time of need, which if I had not, the Ocean Sea, I think, ſhould have divided my Lord of London and me by this day. For it is a rare thing for a Preacher to have favour at his hand which is no Preacher himſelf, and yet ought to be, I pray God that both he and I may both diſcharge our ſelves, he in his great Cure, and I in my little, to Gods, pleaſure, and ſafety of our ſouls, Amen. I pray you pardon me, that I write no more diſtinctly, nor more truely: for my head is ſo out of frame, that it ſhould be too painfull for me to write it again; and if I be not prevented, ſhortly I intend to make merry with my Pariſhioners this Chriſtmas, for all the ſorrow, leſt perchance I never return to them again: and I have heard ſay, that a Doe is as good in winter, as a Buck in ſummer.

A Letter of Sir Edward Baynton, Knight, anſwering to the Letter of Maſter Latimer, ſent to him before.

The copy of Sir Edward Bayntons Letter to Maſter Latimer.

Maſter Latimer, after hearty recommendations; I have communicated the effect of your Letters to divers of my friends, ſuch as for Chriſtian charity (as they ſay) rather deſire in you a reformation, either in your opinion (if it ſwerve from the truth) or at the leaſt in your manner and behaviour, in as much as it giveth occaſion of ſlander and trouble, in let of your good purpoſes, than any other inconvenience to your perſon or good name. And foraſmuch as your ſaid Letter miſliked them in ſome part, and that I have ſuch confidence in your Chriſtian breſt, as in my judgement ye will conformably and gladly both hear that may be reformed in you, and alſo (as it is worthy) ſo knowledge and confeſſe the ſame: I have therefore deſired them to take the pain to note their mindes in this Letter which I ſend to you, as aggregate of their ſayings, and ſent from me your aſſured friend and favourer, in that that is the very truth of Gods Word: wherein nevertheleſſe, as I truſt you your ſelf will temper your own judgement, and in a ſoberneſſe affirm no truth of your ſelf, which ſhould divide the unity of the Congregation in Chriſt; and the received truth agreed upon by holy Fathers of the Church, conſonant to the Scripture of God, even ſo whatſoever ye will do therein (as I think ye will not do otherwiſe than ye ſhould do) I being unlearned, and not of the knowledge to give ſentence in this alteration and contention, muſt rather of good congruence ſhew my ſelf in that you diſagree with them, readier to follow their doctrine in truth, than yours, unleſſe it may pleaſe Almighty God to inſpire and confirm the hearts of ſuch people to teſtifie the ſame in ſome honeſt number as ought to induce me to give credence unto them.

Theſe friends of M. Baynton ſeem to be ſome Popiſh Prieſts, and enemies to the Goſpel, as Powell, Wilſon, Sherwood, Hubberdine, &c.

The Papiſts will not have unity diſturbed. Papiſtry coloured with authority of holy Fathers.

M. Baynton will follow the moſt number

Onely God knoweth the certain truth, which is communicate unto us, as our capacity may comprehend it by faith, but that it is per ſpeculum in ænigmate. And there hath been qui zelum Dei habuerunt, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam. Among which I repute not you, but to this purpoſe I write it, that to call this or that truth, it requireth a deep and profound knowledge, conſidering that to me unlearned, that I take for truth may be otherwiſe, not having ſenſus exercitatos, as S. Paul ſaith, ad diſcernendum bonum & malum: and it is ſhewed me, that an opinion or manner of teaching, which cauſeth diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, is not of God, by the Doctrine of Saint John in his Epiſtle, where he ſaith, Omnis qui confitetur Chriſtum in carne, &c. ex Deo eſt. And like as the Word of God hath alwayes cauſed diſſention among men unchriſtened, whereupon hath enſued and followed Martyrdome to the Preacher, ſo in Chriſts Congregation, among them that profeſſe Chriſts Name, In uno Domino, uno Baptiſmate, & una fide, they that preach and ſtirre rather contention than charity, though they can defend their ſaying, yet their teaching is not to be taken as of God, in that it breaketh the chain of Chriſtian charity, and maketh diviſion in the people, congregate and called by God into an unity of faith and baptiſm. But for this point I would pray to God, that not onely in the truth may be agreement, but alſo ſuch ſoberneſſe and uniform behaviour uſed in teaching and preaching, as men may wholly expreſſe (as they may) the charity of God, tending onely to the union and love of us all, to the profit and ſalvation of our ſouls.

Note the proceeding of the Popes church, which would not have the people certain of Gods truth and religion.

Error and falſe doctrine would fain lie ſtill in peace, and not be ſtirred.

Unity in the Lord, in Baptiſm, in Faith.

The chain of Chriſtian charity.

The anſwer of M^r. Latimer to the Letter of Sir Edward Baynton above prefixed.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to M. Bayntons Letter.

Right worſhipfull Sir, and my ſingular good Maſter, ſalutem in Chriſto Ieſu, with due commendation and alſo thanks for your great goodneſſe towards me, &c. And whereas you have communicate my laſt Letters to certain of your friends, which rather deſire this or that in me, &c. what I think therein I will not now ſay, not for that there could be any perill or danger in the ſaid Letters (well taken) as farre as I can judge, but for that they were raſhly and unadviſedly ſcribled, as ye might well know both by my excuſe, and both by themſelves alſo, though none excuſe had been made. And beſides that, ye know right well, that whereas the Bee gathereth honey, even there the Spinner gathereth venome, not for any diverſity of the flower, but for divers natures in them that ſuck the flower: As in times paſt, and in the beginning, the very truth, and one thing in it ſelf, was to ſome offence, to ſome fooliſhneſſe, to other otherwiſe diſpoſed, the wiſedom of God. Such diverſity was in the redreſſe of hearers thereof.

The Bee. The Spinner.

Every thing as it is taken.

But this notwithſtanding, there is no more but either my writing is good, or bad: if it be good, the communicating thereof to your friends cannot be hurtfull to me; if it be otherwiſe, why ſhould you not communicate it to them, which both could and would inſtruct you in the truth, and reform my errour? Let this paſſe, I will not contend: had I wiſt cometh ever out of ſeaſon. Truely I were not well adviſed if I would not either be glad of your inſtruction, or yet refuſe mine own reformation, but yet it is good for a man to look ere he leap, and God forbid that ye ſhould be addict and ſworn to me ſo wretched a fool, that you ſhould not rather follow the doctrine of your friends in truth, ſo great learned men as they appear to be, then the opinions of me, having never ſo Chriſtian a breaſt.

Had I wiſt.

Wherefore do as you will: for as I would not if I could, ſo I cannot if I would, be noyſome unto you, but yet I ſay, I would my Letters had been unwritten, if for none other cauſe, at leaſt way, in as much as they cauſe me to more writing, an occupation nothing meet for my mad head: and as touching points which in my foreſaid Letters miſlike your friends, I have now little leaſure to make an anſwer thereto, for the great buſineſſe that I have in my little Cure, I know not what other men have in their great Cure, ſeeing that I am alone without any Prieſt to ſerve my Cure, without any Scholler to reade unto me, without any Book neceſſary to be looked upon, without learned men to come and counſell withall. All which things other have at hand abundantly, but ſome thing muſt be done, howſoever it be. I pray you take it in good worth, as long as I temper mine own judgement, affirming nothing with prejudice of better. Firſt yee miſlike, that I ſay I am ſure that I preach the truth, ſaying in reproof of the ſame, that God knoweth certain truth. In deed God alone knoweth all certain truth, and God alone knoweth it as of himſelf, and none knoweth certain truth but God, and thoſe which be taught of God, as ſaith Saint Paul; Deus enim illis patefecit: And Chriſt himſelf; Erunt omnes docti a Deo: And your friends deny not but that certain truth is communicate to us, as our capacity may comprehend it by faith, which if it be truth, as it is, then there ought no more to be required of any man, but according to his capacitie; now certain it is, that every man hath not like capacitie, &c.

Example of a true diligent Paſtor.

M. Latimer unfurniſhed with outward help.

M. Latimer blamed for ſaying he was ſure of the truth which he preached.

As God alone knoweth all truth, ſo ſome truth he revealeth to be certain to his ſervants.

But as to my preſumption and arrogancy; either I am certain or uncertain that it is truth that I preach. If it be truth, why may not I ſay ſo, to encourage my hearers to receive the ſame more ardently, and enſue it more ſtudiouſly? If I be uncertain, why dare I be ſo bold to preach it? And if your friends in whom you truſt ſo greatly, be Preachers themſelves, after their Sermon I pray you ask them whether they be certain and ſure that they taught you the truth or no, and ſend me word what they ſay, that I may learn to ſpeak after them. If they ſay they be ſure, yee know what followeth: if they ſay they be unſure, when ſhall you be ſure that have ſo doubtfull teachers and unſure? And you your ſelf, whether are you certain or uncertain that Chriſt is your Saviour, and ſo forth of other Articles that yee be bounden to beleeve, or whether be ye ſure or unſure, that civill ordinances be the good works of God, and that you do God ſervice in doing of them, if yee do them for a good intent? If ye be uncertain, take heed he be your ſure friend that heareth you ſay ſo, and then with what conſcience do ye doubt; Cum quicquid non eſt ex fide, peccatum ſit? But contrary ſay you, God alone knoweth certain truth, and ye have it but per ſpeculum in ænigmate; and there have been, qui zelum Dei habuerunt, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam: And to call this or that truth, it requireth a deep knowledge, conſidering that to you unlearned, that you take for truth may be otherwiſe, not having ſenſus exercitatos (as Paul ſaith) ad diſcernendum bonum & malum, as ye reaſon againſt me, and ſo you do beſt to know ſurely nothing for truth at all, but to wander meekly hither and thither, omni vento doctrinæ, &c. Our knowledge here, you ſay, is but per ſpeculum in ænigmate: What then? Ergo, it is not certain and ſure.

It is no preſumption in a Preacher being certain of that which he preacheth, to ſhew it to the people. Let not man preach, except that he be certain of that which he preacheth.

Every true Chriſtian ought to be certain of his faith.

The doubting doctrine of the Catholikes.

Arguments.

I deny your argument by your leave; yea if it be by faith, as yee ſay, it is much ſure, Quia certitudo fidei eſt maxima certitudo: Becauſe the certainty of faith is the moſt ſureſt certaintie, as Dun and other School Doctors ſay: that there is a great diſcrepance between certain knowledge, and clear knowledge: for that may be of things abſent that appear not, this requireth the preſence of the object, I mean of the thing known, ſo that I certainly and ſurely know the thing which I perfectly beleeve, though I do not clearly and evidently know it. I know your School ſubtilties, as well as you, which diſpute as though enigmaticall knowledge, that is to ſay, dark and obſcure knowledge might not be certain and ſure knowledge, becauſe it is not clear, manifeſt, and evident knowledge; and yet there have been (ſay they) qui zelum Dei habuerunt, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam, which have had a zeal, but not after knowledge. Truth it is, there have been ſuch, and yet be too many to the great hinderance of Chriſts glory, which nothing doth more obſcure, then an hote zeal accompanied with great authority without right judgement. There have been alſo, Qui ſcientiam habuerunt abſque zelo Dei, qui veritatem Dei in injuſtitia detinentes plagis vapulabunt multis, dum voluntatem Domini cognoſcentes, nihil minus quam faciunt: i. Which have had knowledge without any zeal of God, who holding the verity of God in unrighteouſneſſe, ſhall be beaten with many ſtrips, while they knowing the Will of God, do nothing thereafter. I mean not among Turks and Sarazens that be unchriſtened, but of them that be chriſtened. And there have been alſo that have loſt Scientiam Dei, id eſt, ſpiritualem divini verbi ſenſum, quem prius habuerunt: i. The ſpirituall knowledge of Gods Word which they had before, becauſe they have not enſued after it, nor promoted the ſame, but rather with their mother wits have impugned the wiſedome of the Father, and hindered the knowledge thereof, which therefore hath been taken away from them, ut juſtificetur Chriſtus in Sermonibus ſuis, & vincat cum judicatur, threatning Matth. 13. Ei vero, qui non habet, etiam quod habet, id eſt, quod videtur habere, auferetur ab eo, cum abuti habito, vel non bene uti, ſit non habere, nec non ſit verum illud quoque, non habitaturam, videlicet ſapientiam in corpore peccatis ſubdito, qui adhuc & ſi carnaliter ſapiant plus ſatis, atſtat ſententia, nempe carnalem & Philoſophicam Scripturarum intelligentiam, non eſſe ſapientiam Dei, quæ a ſapientibus abſconditur, parvulis revelatur: i. To him that hath not, that alſo which he hath, that is, that which he ſeemeth to have, ſhall be taken from him: when as to abuſe that which a man hath, or not to uſe it well, is as not to have it. And alſo ſeeing it is true, that Gods wiſedome will not dwell in a body ſubject to ſinne, albeit he abound in carnall wiſedome too much: yet the ſame carnall and Philoſophicall underſtanding of Gods Scriptures, is not the Wiſedome of God which is hid from the wiſe, and is revealed to little ones. And if to call this or that truth, requireth a deep and profound knowledge, then either every man hath a deep and profound knowledge, or elſe no man can call this or that truth: and it behooveth every Preacher to have ſo deep and profound knowledge, that he may call this or that truth, which this or that he taketh in hand to preach for the truth, and yet he may be ignorant and uncertain in many things, both this and that, as Apollo was: but which things, whether this or that, he will not attempt to preach

Anſwer.

Certain knowledge.

Clear knowledge.

M. Latimer not ignorant of the School ſubtilties.

Every Preacher ought to be ſure of the truth.

There be many truths, whereof a good man may well be ignorant.

There be many things in Scripture in the profundities whereof a man may wade too farre.

Againſt preachers which take upon them to define great ſubtilties and high matters in the Pulpit.

Vain ſubtilties and queſtions to be declined.

Simple and plain preaching of faith, and of the fruits thereof.

preach for the truth. And as for my ſelf, I truſt in God, I may have ſenſus exercitatos, well enough, ad diſcernendum bonum & malum: Senſus exerciſed to diſcerne good and evill in thoſe things which without deep and profound knowledge in many things I preach not, yea there be many things in Scripture in which I cannot certainly diſcern bonum & malum, I mean verum & falſum, not with all the exerciſe that I have in Scripture, nor yet with the help of all Interpreters that I have, to content my ſelf and other in all ſcrupuloſity, that may ariſe: but in ſuch I am wont to wade no further into the ſtream, then that I may either go over, or elſe return back again, having ever reſpect, not to the oſtentation of my little wit, but to the edification of them that hear me, as farre forth as I can, neither paſſing mine own nor yet their capacity.

And ſuch manner of arguments might well ſerve the divell contra puſillanimos, to occaſion them to wander and waver in the faith, and to be uncertain in things in which they ought to be certain: or elſe it may appear to make and ſerve againſt ſuch Preachers which will define great ſubtilties and high matters in the Pulpit, which no man can be certain and ſure of by Gods Word to be truth, ne ſenſus quidem habens ad diſcernendum bonum & malum exercitatiſſimos; as whether, if Adam had not ſinned, we ſhould have had Stockfiſh out of Iſeland: how many Larks for a penny if every Starre in the Element were a flickering Hobby: How many yeers a man ſhall lye in Purgatory for one ſinne, if he buy not plenty of the oyl that runneth over our Lamps to ſlake the ſinne withall, and ſo forget hell which cannot be ſlaked, to provide for Purgatory.

Such argumentation (I ſay) might appear to make well againſt ſuch Preachers, not againſt me, which ſimply and plainly utter true faith and the fruits of the ſame, which be the good works of God, quæ præparavit Deus ut in eis ambularemus: i. which he hath prepared for us to walk in, every man to do the thing that pertaineth to his office and duty in his degree and calling, as the Word of God appointeth, which thing a man may do with ſoberneſſe, having ſenſus ad diſcernendum bonum & malum, vel mediocriter exercitatos. For it is but fooliſh humility, willingly to continue alwayes infantulus in Chriſto & in infirmitate: i. An infant ſtill in Chriſt, and in infirmity: in reproof of which it was ſaid, Facti eſtis opus habentes lacte non ſolido cibo. For Saint Paul ſaith not, Eſtote humiles, ut non ſapiatis. For though he would not that we ſhould think arrogantly of our ſelves, and above that that it becometh us to think of our ſelves, but ſo to think of our ſelves, ut ſimus ſobrii ac modeſti, yet he biddeth us ſo to think of our ſelves, ut cuique Deus partitus eſt menſuram fidei: i. As God hath diſtributed to every one the meaſure of faith. For he that may not with meekneſſe think in himſelf what God hath done for him, and of himſelf as God hath done for him, how ſhall he, or when ſhall he give due thanks to God for his gifts? And if your friends will not allow the ſame, I pray you enquire of them whether they may cum ſobrietate & modeſtia, be ſure they preach to you the truth, and whether we may, cum ſobrietate & modeſtia, follow Saint Pauls bidding, where he ſaith unto us all, Nolite fieri pueri ſenſibus, ſed malitia infantes eſtote: i. Be not children in underſtanding, but in maliciouſneſſe be infants. God give us all grace to keep the mean, and to think of our ſelves neither too high nor too low, but ſo that we may reſtore unto him, qui peregre profectus eſt, his gifts again cum uſura, that is to ſay, with good uſe of the ſame, ſo that ædificemus invicem with the ſame, ad gloriam Dei, Amen.

Fooliſh humility.

A mean between too hye, and too low.

For my life, I truſt in God that I neither (by Gods grace) ſhall, neither in ſoberneſſe, nor yet in drunkenneſſe affirm any truth of my ſelf, therewith intending to divide that unitie of the Congregation of Chriſt, and the received truth agreed upon by the holy Fathers of the Church conſonant to the Scripture of God, though it be ſhewed you never ſo often, that an opinion or manner of teaching, which cauſeth diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, is not of God, by the doctrine of Saint Iohn in his Epiſtle, where he ſaith, Omnis qui confitetur Ieſum Chriſtum in carne, ex Deo eſt: i. Every one that confeſſeth Chriſt in the fleſh, is of God. Firſt, not every thing whereupon followeth diſſention, cauſeth diſſention, as I would they that ſhewed you that, would alſo ſhew you, whether this opinion, that a man may not marry his brothers wife, be of God or of men: if it be of men, then as Gamaliel ſaid, diſſolvetur; if it be of God, as I think it is, and perchance your friends alſo, quis poteſt diſſolvere niſi qui videbitur Deo repugnare? i. Who can diſſolve it but ſhall ſeem to repugne againſt God? And yet there be many not heathens, but in Chriſtendome, that diſſent from the ſame, which could bear full evill to hear ſaid unto them, Vos ex patre Diabolo eſtis. So that ſuch an opinion might ſeem to ſome to make a diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, ſaving that they may ſay perchance with more liberty then other, that an occaſion is ſometime taken and not given, which with their favour I might abuſe for my defence, ſaving that, non omnibus licet in hac temporum iniquitate.

Not every thing whereupon diſſention cometh, is the cauſe of diſſention.

He meaneth the Pope and his Papiſts, which could not abide the diſſolving of the Marriage between King Henry and his brothers wife.

Occaſion may be taken where none is given.

The Church of the Galathians

The Galathians having for Preachers and Teachers the falſe Apoſtles, by whoſe teaching they were degenerate from the ſweet liberty of the Goſpel into the ſowre bonds of ceremonies, thought themſelves peradventure a Chriſtian Congregation when Saint Paul did write his Epiſtle unto them, and were in a quiet trade under the dominion of maſterly Curates, ſo that the falſe Apoſtles might have objected to Saint Paul that his Apoſtleſhip was not of God, foraſmuch as there was diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation by occaſion thereof, while ſome would renue their opinions by occaſion of the Epiſtle, ſome would opinari, as they were wont to do, and follow their great Lords and Maſters, the falſe Apoſtles, which were not heathen and unchriſtened, but Chriſtened, and high Prelates of the Profeſſors of Chriſt. For your friends I know right well what Eraſmus hath ſaid in an Epiſtle ſet before the Paraphraſes of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which Eraſmus hath cauſed no ſmall diſſention with his pen in a Chriſtian Congregation, in as much as many have diſſented from him, not onely in Cloyſters (men more then chriſtened men) of high perfection, but alſo at Pauls Croſſe, and Saint Mary Spittle, beſides many that with no ſmall zeal have written againſt him, but not without anſwer.

Eraſmus in his Epiſtle ſet before the Paraphraſe, in 1 Cor.

And I would fain learn of your friends, whether that Saint Hieromes writing were of God, which cauſed diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, as it appeareth by his own words in the Prologue before the Canonicall Epiſtles, which be theſe: Et tu Virgo Chriſti Euſtochium, dum a me impenſius Scripturæ veritatem inquiris, meam quodam modo ſenectutem invidorum dentibus vel morſibus corrodendam apponis, qui me falſarium corruptoremque Scripturarum pronunciant: ſed ego in tali opere nec illorum invidentiam pertimeſco, nec Scripturæ veritatem poſcentibus denegabo. I pray you what were they that called Saint Hierome falſarium, and corrupter of Scripture, and for envy would have bitten him with their teeth? unchriſten, or chriſten? what had the unchriſten to do with Chriſtian doctrine? They were worſhipfull Fathers of a Chriſtian Congregation, men of much more hotter ſtomackes then right judgement, of a greater authority then good charity: but Saint Hierome Hierome in prologo ſuper Canon. Epiſt.

Hierome noted of ſome to be a falſifier and a corrupter of the Scripture.

Worſhipfull fathers of greater authority then of good charity.

would not ceaſe to do good for the evill, ſpeaking of them that were naught, giving in that an enſample to us of the ſame; and if this diſſention were in Saint Hieromes time, what may be in our time? de malo in peius ſcilicet.

It is not enough to be chriſtened, but to keep our promiſe made when we be chriſtened.

And I pray you what mean your friends by a Chriſtian Congregation? All thoſe (trow ye) that have been chriſtened? But many of thoſe be in worſe condition, and ſhall have greater damnation, then many unchriſtened. For it is not enough to a Chriſtian Congregation that is of God, to have been chriſtened: but it is to be conſidered what we promiſe when we be chriſtened, to renounce Satan, his works, his pomps: Which thing if we buſie not our ſelves to do, let us not crake that we profeſſe Chriſts name in a Chriſtian Congregation, in uno baptiſmo, i. in one baptiſm.

Unitie in baptiſme, is not enough.

And where they adde in uno Domino, i. in one Lord, I read in Matth. 17. Non omnis qui dicit, Domine, Domine, &c. i. Not every one that ſaith Lord, Lord, &c. And in Luke the Lord himſelf complaineth and rebuketh ſuch Profeſſors and Confeſſors, ſaying to them, Cur dicitis, Domine, Domine, & non facitis quæ dico? i. Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not that I bid you? Even as though it were enough to a Chriſtian man, or to a Chriſtian Congregation to ſay every day, Domine, Dominus noſter, and to ſalute Chriſt with a double Domine. But I would your friends would take the pains to read over Chryſoſtome ſuper Matthæum hom. 49 cap. 24. to learn to know a Chriſtian Congregation if it will pleaſe them to learn at him. And where they adde, in una fide, i. in one faith, Saint Iames ſaith boldly, Oſtende mihi fidem ex operibus: i. Shew me thy faith by thy works. And Saint Hierome, Si tamen credimus, inquit, opere veritatem oſtendimus: i. If we beleeve, we ſhew the truth in working. And the Scripture ſaith, Qui credit Deo, attendit mandatis: i. He that beleeveth God, attendeth to his Commandements: And the divels beleeve to their little comfort. I pray God to ſave you and your friends from that beleeving Congregation, and from that faithfull company.

To pretend unitie under the title of one Lord, is not enough.

To be in unity of faith except the faith be ſound, is not enough.

Therefore all this toucheth not them that be unchriſtened, but them that be chriſtened, and anſwer not unto their Chriſtendome. For Saint Hierome ſheweth how true Preachers ſhould order themſelves, when evill Prieſts and falſe Preachers, and populus ab his deceptus, i. the people that be by them deceived, ſhould be angry with them for preaching the truth, Tom 5. in Hieremiam Caput. 26. exhorting them to ſuffer death for the ſame, of the evill Prieſts and falſe Preachers, and the people deceived of them, which evill Prieſts and falſe Preachers with the people deceived, be chriſtened as well as other: and I fear me that Saint Hierome might appear to ſome Chriſtian Congregation, as they will be called, to write ſeditiouſly, to divide the unity of a great honeſt number, confeſſing Chriſt, in uno baptiſmate, uno Domino, una fide, ſaying, populus qui ante ſub magiſtris conſopitus erat, ibit ad montes, non illos quidem qui vel leviter tacti fumigant, ſed montes veteris & novi Teſtamenti, Prophetas, Apoſtolos, & Evangeliſtas, & cum eiuſmodi montium lectione verſatus, ſi non invenerit doctores (meſſis enim multa, operarii autem pauci) tunc & populi ſtudium comprobabitur, quo fugerit ad montes, & magiſtrorum deſidia coarguetur. Tom. 6. in Naum. cap. 30. i. The people which before were brought aſleep by their Maſters, muſt go up to the Mountains, not ſuch mountains which ſmoak when they are touched, but to the Mountains of the Old and New Teſtament, the Prophets, Apoſtles, and Evangeliſts. And when thou art occupied with reading in theſe Mountains, if then thou finde no inſtructors, (for the harveſt is great, and the workmen be few) yet ſhall the diligent ſtudy of the people be fleeing to the Mountains, and the ſloathfulneſſe of the Maſters ſhall be rebuked.

How true Preachers ſhould order themſelves, when the wicked Prieſts be againſt them.

I do marvell why our Chriſtian Congregations be ſo greatly grieved that lay people would read Scripture, ſeeing that S. Hierome alloweth and approveth the ſame, which compareth not here the unchriſtened to the chriſtened, but the lay people chriſtened to their Curates Chriſtened, under the which they have been rocked and locked aſleep in a ſubtile trade a great while full ſoundly, though now of late they have been waked, but to their pain, at the leaſt way to the pain of them that have wakened them with the Word of God; and it is properly ſaid of Saint Hierome to call them Maſters and not ſervants, meaning that ſervants teach not their own doctrine, but the doctrine of their Maſter Chriſt, to his glory. Maſters teach not Chriſts doctrine, but their own, to their own glory; which Maſterly Curates cannot be quiet till they have brought the people aſleep again: but Chriſt the very true Maſter ſaith, Vigilate, & orate, ne intretis in tentationem. Non cogitationes meæ cogitationes veſtræ, neque viæ meæ viæ veſtræ, dicit Dominus: and there have been, qui cogitaverunt conſilia, quæ non potuerunt ſtabilire, i. which have gone about counſels, which they could not eſtabliſh. I pray God give our people grace ſo to wake, ut ſtudium illorum comprobetur, and our Maſters ſo to ſleep, ut non deſidia illorum coarguatur. For who is ſo blinde that he ſeeth not how farre our Chriſtian Congregation doth gainſay Saint Hierome, and ſpeaketh after another faſhion? God amend that is amiſſe; for we be ſomething wide, ywis.

But now your friends have learned of Saint Iohn, that omnis qui confitetur Ieſum Chriſtum in carne, ex Deo eſt: i. Every one that confeſſeth Ieſus Chriſt in fleſh, is of God: And I have learned of Saint Paul, that there have been, not among the heathen, but among the Chriſten, qui ore confitentur, factis autem negant: i. which confeſſe Chriſt with their mouth, and deny him with their acts: So that Saint Paul ſhould appear to expound Saint Iohn, ſaving that I will not affirm any thing as of my ſelf, but leave it to your friends to ſhew you utrum qui factis negant Chriſtum & vita, ſint ex Deo necne per ſolam oris confeſſionem: for your friends know well enough by the ſame Saint Iohn, qui ex Deo eſt non peccat: and there both have been, and be now too many, Qui ore tenus confitentur Chriſtum veniſſe in carne: i. Which with mouth onely confeſſe Chriſt to be come in the fleſh; but will not effectually hear the Word of God by conſenting to the ſame, notwithſtanding that Saint Iohn ſaith, qui ex Deo eſt, verbum Dei audit, vos non auditis quia ex Deo non eſtis: and many ſhall hear nunquam novi vos: i. I never knew you, which ſhall not onely be chriſtened, but alſo ſhall prophetare, and do puiſſant things in nomine Chriſti: And Saint Paul ſaid there ſhould come Lupi graves qui non parcerent gregi: i. Ravening Wolves which will not ſpare the flock, meaning it of them that ſhould confiteri Chriſtum in carne in their lips, and yet uſurp by ſucceſſion the office, which Chriſt calleth pſeudoprophetas, i. falſe Prophets, and biddeth us beware of them, ſaying, they ſhall come in veſtimentis ovium i. in ſheeps clothing, and yet they may wear both Satten, Silk and Velvet, called afterwards ſervi nequam, non paſcentes, ſed percutientes conſervos, edentes & bibentes cum ebriis, habituri tandem portionem cum hypocritis: i. Naughty ſervants, not feeding but ſmiting their fellow-ſervants, eating and drinking with the drunken, which ſhall have their portion with hypocrites. They are called ſervi, ſervants I trow, quod ore confitentur Chriſtum in carne; nequam vero, quia factis negant eundem, non dantes cibum in tempore, dominium exercentes in gregem: i. Becauſe they confeſſe Chriſt in fleſh: and naughty they are called, becauſe they deny him in their deeds, not giving meat in due ſeaſon, and exerciſing maſterſhip over the flock. And yet your friends reaſon as though there could none bark and bite at true Preachers, but they that be unchriſtned, notwithſtanding that Saint Auguſtine upon the ſame Epiſtle of Iohn, calleth ſuch confeſſors of Chriſt, qui ore confitentur, & factis negant, Antichriſtos; a ſtrange name for a Chriſtian Congregation : and though Saint Auguſtine could defend his ſaying, yet his ſaying might appear not to be of God, to ſome mens judgement, in that it breaketh the chain of Chriſts charity, ſo to cauſe men to hate Antichriſtianiſmum, Antichriſts, according to the doctrine of Saint Paul, Sitis odio perſequentes quod malum eſt: i. Hate that is evill; and ſo making diviſion, not between chriſtened and unchriſtened, but between Chriſtians and Antichriſtians, when neither pen nor tongue can divide the Antichriſtians from their blinde folly. And I would you would cauſe your friends to reade over Saint Auguſtine upon the Epiſtle of S. Iohn, and tell you the meaning thereof, if they think it expedient for you to know it, as I remember it is Tractatu 3. but I am not ſure nor certain of that, becauſe I did not ſee it ſince I was at Cambridge; and here have I not Saint Auguſtines works to look for it, but well I wot, that there he teacheth us to know the Chriſtians from the Antichriſtians, which both be chriſtened, and both confeſſe, Ieſum eſſe Chriſtum, if they be asked the queſtion : and yet the one pert denieth it in very deed : But to know whether, Non linguam, ſed facta attendamus, & vivendi genus, num ſtudeamus officia vocationis præſtare annon ſtudeamus, immo perſuaſi forte ſumus non neceſſe eſſe ut præſtemus, ſed omnia in primitivam Eccleſiam & tempora præterita, &c. quaſi nobis ſat ſit dominari, & ſecularibus negotiis nos totos volvere, ac voluptatibus & pompæ inhiare : i. Let us not ſtand upon our talks, but attend to our doings and converſation of life, whether we, not onely do not put our endeavour thereto, but alſo perſwade our ſelves as though it were not neceſſary for us to accompliſh ſuch things, &c. but that it is enough to bear rule and authority over them, and to beſtow our ſelves wholly upon ſecular matters, pleaſures, and pomp of this world. And yet we will appear, vel ſoli ex Deo eſſe; ſed longe aliter Chriſtum confitentur, qui confitendo ex Deo eſſe comprobantur.

Aug. in Ioan. Tract. 3.

Both Chriſtians and Antichriſtians confeſſe the Name of Chriſt.

And yet as long as they miniſter the Word of God or his Sacraments, or any thing that God hath ordained to the ſalvation of mankinde, wherewith God hath promiſed to be preſent, to work with the miniſtration of the ſame to the end of the world, they be to be heard, to be obeyed, to be honoured for Gods Ordinance ſake, which is effectuall and fruitfull, whatſoever the Miniſter be, though he be a devill, and neither Church nor member of the ſame, as Origen ſaith, and Chryſoſtome, ſo that it is not all one to honour them, and truſt in them, Saint Hierome ſaith : but there is required a judgement, to diſcern when they miniſter Gods Word and Ordinance of the ſame, and their own, leſt peradventure we take chalk for cheeſe, which will edge our teeth, and hinder digeſtion. For as it is commonly ſaid, The blinde eateth many a flye, as they did which were perſwaded a principibus ſacerdotum ut peterent Barrabbam, Ieſum autem crucifigerent : i. Of the high Prieſts, to ask Barrabas, and to crucifie Ieſus : and ye know that to follow the blinde guides is to come into the pit with the ſame. And will you know, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, how apertly they reſiſt Chriſt, when men begin to blame them for their miſliving, and intolerable ſecularity, and negligence? they dare not for ſhame blaſpheme Chriſt himſelf, but they will blaſpheme the Miniſters and Preachers of whom they be blamed.

In the people is required a judgement to diſcern, whether they took of their miniſters chalk for cheeſe.

The blind eateth many a fly. Intolerable ſecularity and negligence in Church-men.

Therefore, whereas ye will pray for agreement both in the truth, and in uttering of the truth, when ſhall that be, as long as we will not hear the truth, but diſquiet with crafty conveyance the Preachers of the truth, becauſe they reprove our evilneſſe with the truth? And, to ſay the truth, better it were to have a deformity in preaching, ſo that ſome would preach the truth of God, and that which is to be preached, without cauponation and adulteration of the word (as Lyranus ſaith in his time few did, what they do now adayes, I report me to them that can judge) than to have ſuch an uniformity, that the ſilly people ſhould be thereby occaſioned to continue ſtill in their lamentable ignorance, corrupt judgement, ſuperſtition and idolatry, and eſteem things as they do all, prepoſterouſly, doing that, that they need not to do, leaving undone that they ought to do, for lack or want of knowing what is to be done, and ſo ſhew their love to God, not as God biddeth (which ſaith, Si diligitis me, præcepta mea ſervate: i. If ye love me, keep my Commandements. And again, Qui habet præcepta mea & facit ea, hic eſt qui diligit me : i. He that knoweth my Precepts, and doth them, he loveth me.) but as they bid, Qui quærunt quæ ſua ſunt, non quæ Ieſu Chriſti: i. Which ſeek their own things, not Chriſts : as though to tythe mynt were more than judgement faith and mercy.

Better is in the Church a deform diſgracement, ſo that Chriſt be truly preached, than uniform ignorance agreeing in idolatry.

And what is to live in ſtate of Curates, but that he taught which ſaid, Petre amas me? Paſce, paſce, paſce; Peter loveſt thou me? Feed, feed, feed; which is now ſet aſide, as though to love were to do nothing elſe, but to wear Rings, Myters and Rochets, &c. And when they erre in right living, how can the people but erre in loving, and all of the new faſhion, to his diſhonour that ſuffered his paſſion, and taught the true kinde of loving, which is now turned to piping playing, and curious ſinging, which will not be reformed (I trow) niſi per manum Dei validam. And I have both Saint Auguſtine, and Saint Thomas, with divers other, that lex is taken not onely for Ceremonies, but but alſo for Moralls, where it is ſaid, Non eſtis ſub lege, though your friends reprove the ſame. But they can make no diviſion in a Chriſtian Congregation. And whereas both you and they would have a ſoberneſſe in our preaching, I pray God ſend it unto us, whatſoever ye mean by it. For I ſee well, whoſoever will be happy, and buſie with væ vobis, he ſhall ſhortly after come coram nobis.

The ſtate of Curates, what it is.

The true honour of Chriſt turned to piping, playing, and ſinging.

He that will be buſie with væ vobis, let him look ſhortly for coram nobis.

And where your friends think that I made a lye, when I ſaid that I have thought in times paſt that the Pope had been Lord of the world, though your friends be much better learned than I, yet I am ſure that they know not what either I think, or have thought better than I, juxta illud, Nemo novit quæ ſunt homines, &c. as though better men than I have not thought ſo, as Bonifacius (as I remember) Octavus, the great learned man Iohn of the Burnt Tower; Presbyter Cardinalis in his book where he proveth the Pope to be above the Councell Generall and Special, where he ſaith that the Pope is Rex Regum, And Dominus Dominantium, i. King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and that he is, Verus Dominus totius orbis, jure, licet non facto : i. The true Lord of the whole world by good right, albeit in fact he be not ſo; and that Conſtantinus did but reſtore his own unto him, when he gave unto him Rome, ſo that in propria venit, as Saint Iohn ſaith Chriſt did, & ſui eum non receperunt : i. He came unto his own, and his own received him not : and yet I hear not that any of our Chriſtian Congregations hath reclaimed againſt him, untill now of late diſſention began. Who be your friends I cannot tell; but I would you would deſire them to be my good Maſters, and if they will do me no good, at the leaſt-way do me no harm; and though they can do you more good than I, yet I am ſure I would be as loath to hurt you as they, either with mine opinions, manner of preaching, or writing.

Purgatory. Worſhipping of Saints.

there is one Raphael Maruphus in London, an Italian, and in times paſt a Merchant of diſpenſations, which I ſuppoſe would die in the quarrell, as Gods true Knight, and true Martyr. As touching Purgatory, and worſhipping of Saints, I ſhewed to you my minde before my Ordinary: and yet I marvelled ſomething, that after private communication had with him, ye would (as it were) adjure me to open my minde before him, not giving me warning before, ſaving I cannot interpret your evill doings towards me; and yet neither mine Ordinary, nor you diſallowed the thing that I ſaid, and I looked not to eſcape better than Doctor Crome: but when I have opened my minde never ſo much, yet I ſhall be reported to deny my preaching, of them that have belyed my preaching, as he was. Sed opus eſt magna patientia ad ſuſtinendas calumnias malignantis Eccleſiæ: i. I ſhall have need of great patience to bear the falſe report of the malignant Church.

A pretty nip to ſuch as have many cures, and are reſident on none.

Sir, I have had more buſineſſe in my little Cure, ſince I ſpake with you, what with ſick folkes, and what with Matrimonies, than I have had ſince I came to it, or than I would have thought a man ſhould have in a great Cure. I wonder how men can go quietly to bed, which have great Cures and many, and yet peradventure are in none of them all. But I pray you tell none of your friends that I ſaid ſo fooliſhly, leſt I make a diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, and divide a ſweet and a reſtfull union, or tot quot, with hæc requies mea in ſeculum ſeculi. Sir, I had made an end of this ſcribling, and was beginning to write it again more truely and more diſtinctly, and to correct it, but there came a man of my Lord of Farleys, with a Citation to appear before my Lord of London in haſte, to be puniſhed for ſuch exceſſes as I committed at my laſt being there, ſo that I could not performe my purpoſe; I doubt whether yee can reade it as it is. If yee can, well be it: if not, I pray you ſend it me again, and that you ſo do, whether you can reade it or not. Ieſus mercy, what a world is this, that I ſhall be put to ſo great labour and pains, beſides great coſts, above my power, for preaching of a poor ſimple Sermon? But I trow our Saviour Chriſt ſaid true, Oportet pati, & ſic intrare: tam periculoſum eſt in Chriſto pie vivere velle: i. I muſt needs ſuffer, and ſo enter: ſo perillous a thing it is to live vertuouſly with Chriſt. Yea in a Chriſtian Congregation. God make us all Chriſtians, after the right faſhion, Amen.

Here followeth another Letter of M. Latimer written to King Henry the eighth upon this occaſion. We heard before of two ſundry Proclamations, ſet out by the Biſhops in the name of King Henry, the one in the yeer 1531, and the other ſet out An. 1546. In the which Proclamations, being authorized by the Kings name, were inhibited all Engliſh books, either containing or tending to any matter of the Scripture. Where alſo we have expreſſed at large the whole Catalogue of all the errors and hereſies, which the ſaid Biſhops falſly have excerpted, and maliciouſly imputed to godly writers, with their places and quotations, above aſſigned in the place aforeſaid. Now M. Latimer growing in ſome favour with the King, and ſeeing the great decay of Chriſts religion by reaſon of theſe Proclamations, and touched therefore with the zeal of conſcience, directeth unto King Henry this Letter hereunder enſuing, thereby intending by all means poſſible to perſwade the Kings minde to ſet open again the freedome of Gods holy Word amongſt his ſubjects. The copy and tenor of his Letter here followeth.

The Letter of Maſter Latimer, written to King Henry, for the reſtoring again of the free liberty of reading the holy Scriptures.

Another Letter of M. Latimer to K. Henry. Auguſt. ad Caſulanum, Chryſoſt.

THe holy doctor Saint Auguſtine in an Epiſtle which he wrote to Caſalanus, ſaith, that he which for fear of any power hideth the truth, provoketh the wrath of God to come upon him: for he feareth men more than God. And according to the ſame, the holy man Saint John Chryſoſtome ſaith, that he is not onely a traytor to the truth, which openly for truth teacheth a lye, but he alſo which doth not freely pronounce and ſhew the truth that he knoweth. Theſe ſentences (moſt redoubted King) when I reade now of late, and marked them earneſtly in the inward parts of mine heart, they made me ſore afraid, troubled, and vexed me grievouſly in my conſcience, and at the laſt drave me to this ſtrait, that either I muſt ſhew forth ſuch things as I have read and learned in Scripture, or elſe be of that ſort that provoke the wrath of God upon them, and be traytors unto the truth: the which thing rather than it ſhould happen, I had rather ſuffer extreme puniſhment.

M. Latimer touched in conſcience to write to the King.

What it is to be a traytor to truth.

For what other thing is it to be a traytor unto the truth, than to be a traytor and a Judas unto Chriſt, which is the very truth and cauſe of all truth? the which ſaith, that whoſoever denieth him here before men, he will deny him before his Father in heaven. The which denying ought more to be feared and dread, than the loſſe of all temporall goods, honour, promotion, fame, priſon, ſlander, hurts, baniſhments, and all manner of torments, and cruelties, yea, and death it ſelf, be it never ſo ſhamefaſt and painfull. But alas, how little do men regard thoſe ſharp ſayings of theſe two holy men? and how little do they fear the terrible judgement of Almighty God? and ſpecially they which boaſt themſelves to be guides and captains unto other, and challenging unto themſelves the knowledge of holy Scripture, yet will neither ſhew the truth themſelves (as they be bound) neither ſuffer them that would. So that unto them it may be ſaid, that which our Saviour Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſees, Matthew 23. Wo be unto you Scribes and Phariſees, which ſhut up the Kingdome of Heaven before men, and neither will you enter in your ſelves, neither ſuffer them that would, to enter in. And they will, as much as in them lyeth, debarre, not onely the Word of God, The ſubtill wilineſſe and practiſes of the Phariſees.

which David calleth, a light to direct and ſhew every man how to order his affections and luſts, according to the Commandements of God, but alſo by their ſubtill wilyneſſe they inſtruct, move, and provoke, in a manner, all Kings in Chriſtendome, to ayd, ſuccour, and help them in this their miſchief; and eſpecially in this your Realm they have ſo blinded your liege people, and ſubjects with their Laws, Cuſtomes, Ceremonies, and banbery Gloſes, and puniſhed them with curſings, excommunications, and other corruptions (corrections I would ſay) and now at the laſt when they ſee that they cannot prevail againſt the open truth (which the more it is perſecuted, the more it encreaſeth by their tyranny) they have made it treaſon to your noble Grace to have the Scripture in Engliſh.

Here I beſeech your Grace to pardon me a while, and patiently to hear me a word or two; yea, though it be ſo that as concerning your high Majeſty and Regall power, whereunto Almighty God hath called your Grace, there is as great difference between you and me, as between God and man. For you be here to me and to all your ſubjects, in Gods ſtead, to defend, aid, and ſuccour us in our right, and ſo I ſhould tremble and quake to ſpeak to your grace. But again, as concerning that you be a mortall man, in danger of ſinne, having in you the corrupt nature of Adam, in the which all we be both conceived and born: ſo have you no leſſe need of the merits of Chriſts paſſion for your ſalvation, than I and other of your ſubjects have, which be all members of the myſticall Body of Chriſt. And though you be an higher member, yet you muſt not diſdain the leſſer. For as Saint Paul ſaith, Thoſe members that be taken to be moſt vile, and had in leaſt reputation, be as neceſſary as the other, for the preſervation and keeping of the body. This, moſt gracious King, when I conſidered, and alſo your favourable and gentle nature, I was bold to write this rude, homely, and ſimple Letter unto your Grace, truſting that you will accept my true and faithfull minde even as it is.

1 Cor.12.

First, and before all things, I will exhort your Grace to mark the life and proceſſe of our Saviour Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, in preaching and ſetting forth of the Goſpel, and to note alſo the words of our Maſter Chriſt, which he had to his Diſciples when he ſent them forth to preach his Goſpel, and to theſe have ever in your minde the golden rule of our Maſter Chriſt; The tree is known by the fruit. For by the diligent marking of theſe, your Grace ſhall clearly know and perceive who be the true followers of Chriſt, and teachers of his Goſpel, and who be not. And concerning the firſt, all Scripture ſheweth plainly that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts life was very poor.

Matth.7.

The rule of Chriſt.

Beginne at his birth, and I beſeech you, who ever heard of a poorer, and ſo poor as he was? It were too long to write how poor Joſeph and the bleſſed Virgin Mary took their journey from Nazareth toward Bethelem, in the cold and froſty winter, having no body to wait upon them, but he both maſter and man, and ſhe both miſtreſſe and maid. How vilely, thinks your Grace, were they intreated in the Innes and lodgings by the way? and in how vile and abject place was this poor maid, the mother of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, brought to bed, without company, light, or any other thing neceſſary for a woman in that plight? Was not here a poor beginning, as concerning this world? Yes truely. And according to this beginning was the proceſſe and end of his life in this world, and yet he might by his godly power have had all the goods and treaſures of this world at his pleaſure, when and where he would.

The poverty of Chriſts life expreſſed.

But this he did to ſhew us, that his followers and Vicars ſhould not regard nor ſet by the riches and treaſures of this world, but after the ſaying of David we ought to take them, which ſaith thus, if riches, promotions, and dignity happen to a man, let him not ſet his affianee, pleaſure, truſt, and heart upon them. So that it is not againſt the poverty in ſpirit which Chriſt praiſeth in the Goſpel of Saint Matthew, Chapter 5. to be rich, to be in dignity and in honour, ſo that their hearts be not fixed and ſet upon them ſo much, that they neither care for God nor good men. But they be enemies to this poverty in ſpirit, have they never ſo little, that have greedy and deſirous mindes to the goods of this world, onely becauſe they would live after their own pleaſure and luſts. And they alſo be privy enemies (and ſo much the worſe) which have profeſſed, as they ſay, wilfull poverty, and will not be called worldly men. And they have lords lands, and Kings riches, yea, rather than they would loſe one jot of that which they have, they will ſet debate between King and King, Realm and Realm, yea between the King and his ſubjects, and cauſe rebellion againſt the temporall power, to the which our Saviour Chriſt himſelf obeyed, and payed tribute, as the Goſpel declareth; unto whom the holy Apoſtle Saint Paul teacheth every Chriſtian man to obey. Yea and beſide all this, they will curſe and ban, as much as in them lieth, even into the deep pit of hell, all that gain-ſay their appetite, whereby they think their goods, promotions, or dignities ſhould decay.

The poor condition of Chriſts life, is an example to us to caſt down our pride, not to ſet by riches.

It is not againſt the poverty of the ſpirit, to be rich.

What is to be poor in ſpirit, and what not.

Privy enemies to ſpirituall poverty.

Againſt monks and friers, and prelates of the ſpiritualty.

Mat.17.

Subjection to ſuperiour powers.

Your Grace may ſee what means and craft the ſpiritualty (as they will be called) imagine, to break and withſtand the acts which were made in your Graces laſt Parliament againſt their ſuperfluities. Wherefore they that thus do, your Grace may know them not to be true followers of Chriſt. And although I named the ſpiritualty to be corrupt with this unthrifty ambition; yet I mean not all to be faulty therein, for there be ſome good of them. Neither will I that your Grace ſhould take away the goods due to the Church, but take away all evill perſons from the goods, and ſet better in their ſtead.

Ambition of the ſpiritualty.

I name nor appoint no perſon nor perſons, but remit your Grace to the rule of our Saviour Chriſt, as in Matthew the ſeventh Chapter, By their fruits you ſhall know them. As touching the words that our Saviour Chriſt ſpake to his Diſciples when he ſent them to preach his Goſpel, they be read in Matthew the fifteenth Chapter, where he ſheweth, that here they ſhall be hated and deſpiſed of all men worldly, and brought before Kings and Rulers, and that all evill ſhould be ſaid by them, for their preaching ſake, but he exhorteth them to take patiently ſuch perſecution by his own example, ſaying, It becometh not the ſervant to be above the maſter. And ſeeing they called me Belzebub, what marvell is it, if they call you devilliſh perſons and heretikes. Reade the fourteenth Chapter of St. Matthews Goſpel, and there your Grace ſhall ſee that he promiſed to the true Preachers no worldly promotions or dignity, but perſecution and all kindes of puniſhment, and that they ſhould be betrayed even by their own brethren and children. In John alſo he ſaith, In the world ye ſhall have oppreſſion, and the world ſhall hate you: but in me you ſhall have peace. And in the tenth Chapter of S. Matthews Goſpel ſaith our Saviour Chriſt alſo, Lo I ſend you forth as ſheep among Wolves. So that the true Preachers go like Sheep harmleſſe, and be perſecuted, and yet they revenge not their their wrong, but remit all to God; ſo far is it off that they will perſecute any other but with the word of God only, which is their weapon. And ſo this is the moſt evident token that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt would that his Goſpel and the Preachers of it ſhould be knowen by, that it ſhould be deſpiſed among thoſe worldly wiſemen, and that they ſhould repute it but fooliſhneſſe, and deceiveable doctrine, and the true Preachers ſhould be perſecuted and hated, and driven from Towne to Towne, yea, and at the laſt loſe both goods and life.

Iohn 16

Gods word only is the weapon of ſpirituall Paſtors.

And yet they that did this perſecution, ſhould think that they did well, and a great pleaſure to God. And the Apoſtles remembring this leſſon of our Saviour Chriſt, were content to ſuffer ſuch perſecutions, as you may reade in the Acts of the Apoſtles and the Epiſtles. But we never read that they ever perſecuted any man. The holy Apoſtle Saint Paul ſaith, That every man that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus, ſhould ſuffer perſecution. And alſo he ſaith further in the Epiſtle written to the Philipians in the firſt chapter, That it is not only given to you to beleeve in the Lord, but alſo to ſuffer perſecution for his ſake.

The Apoſtles were perſecuted, but never no perſecutors.

Wherefore take this for a ſure concluſion, that there, where the Word of God is truly preached, there is perſecution, as well of the hearers, as of the teachers: and whereas is quietneſſe and reſt in worldly pleaſure, there is not the truth. For the world loveth all that are of the world, and hateth all things that are contrary to it. And to be ſhort, S. Paul calleth the Goſpel, the word of the croſſe, the word of puniſhment. And the holy Scripture doth promiſe nothing to the favourers and followers of it in this world, but trouble, vexation, and perſecution, which theſe worldly men cannot ſuffer, nor away withall.

Perſecution a ſure mark of true preaching. The word of the croſſe.

Therefore pleaſeth it your good grace, to return to this golden rule of our Maſter and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which is this, By their fruits you ſhall know them. For where you ſee perſecution, there is the Goſpel, and there is the truth; and they that do perſecute, be voyd and without all truth; not caring for the clear light, which (as our Savior Jeſus Chriſt ſaith in the third chapter of S. Johns Goſpel) is come into the World, and which ſhall utter and ſhew forth every mans workes. And they whoſe works be naught, dare not come to this light, but go about to ſtop it and hinder it, letting as much as they may, that the holy Scripture ſhould not be read in our mother tongue, ſaying that it would cauſe hereſie and inſurrection, and ſo they perſwade, at the leaſt way they would faine perſwade your Grace to keep it back. But here mark their ſhameleſſe boldneſſe, which be not aſhamed, contrary to Chriſts doctrine, to gather figs of thorns, and grapes of buſhes, and to call light darkneſſe, and darkneſſe light, ſweet ſowre, and ſowre ſweet, good evill, and evill good, and to ſay, that that, which teacheth all obedience, ſhould cauſe diſſention and ſtrife: but ſuch is their belly wiſedome, wherewith they judge and meaſure every thing, to hold and keep ſtill this wicked Mammon, the goods of this world, which is their God, and hath ſo blinded the eyes of their hearts, that they cannot ſee the clear light of the ſacred Scripture, though they babble never ſo much of it.

John 3.

Crafty pretenſes of the Prelates to ſtop the reading of holy Scripture.

Belly wiſdom.

But as concerning this matter, other men have ſhewed your Grace their mindes, how neceſſarie it is to have the Scripture in Engliſh. The which thing alſo your Grace hath promiſed by your laſt Proclamation: the which promiſe I pray GOD that your gracious Highneſſe may ſhortly performe, even to day before to morow. Nor let the wickedneſſe of theſe worldly men detain you from your godly purpoſe and promiſe. Remember the ſubtle worldly wiſe Counſellors of Hammon the Sonne of Naas, King of the Ammonites, which, when David had ſent his ſervants to comfort the yong King for the death of his Father, by crafty imaginations counſelled Hammon, not only not to receive them gently, but to entreat them moſt ſhamefully and cruelly, ſaying, That they came not to comfort him, but to eſpie and ſearch his land, ſo that afterward they bringing David word how every thing ſtood, David might come and conquer it. And they cauſed the yong King to ſhear their heads, and to cut their coats by the points, and ſent them away like fooles; whom he ought rather to have made much of, and to have entreated them gently, and have given them great thanks and rewards. Oh wretched counſellors. But ſee what followed of this carnall and worldly wiſedome. Truly nothing but deſtruction of all the whole Realm, and alſo of all them that took their parts.

Perſwaſion to let the Scripture to be read in Engliſh.

Siniſter counſell about Princes.

Wicked policy turned to his own deſtruction.

Therefore good King, ſeeing that the right David, that is to ſay, our Savior Chriſt hath ſent his ſervants, that is to ſay, his true Preachers, and his owne word alſo to comfort our weake and ſick ſoules, let not theſe worldly men make your Grace beleeve that they will cauſe inſurrections and hereſies, and ſuch miſchiefes as they imagine of their owne mad brains; leſt that he be avenged upon you and your Realme, as was David upon the Ammonites, and as he hath ever been avenged upon them which have obſtinately withſtood and gaine-ſayd his word. But peradventure they will lay this againſt me, and ſay that experience doth ſhew how that ſuch men as call themſelves followers of the Goſpel, regard not your Graces commandement, neither ſet by your Proclamation, and that was well proved by theſe perſons which of late were puniſhed in London for keeping ſuch bookes as your Grace had prohibited by Proclamation: and ſo like as they regarded not this, ſo they will not regard or eſteeme other your Graces lawes, ſtatutes, or ordinances. But this is but a craftie porſwaſion. For your Grace knoweth that there is no man living, ſpecially that loveth worldly promotion, that is ſo fooliſh to ſet forth, promote, or inhaunce his enemie, whereby he ſhould be let of his worldly pleaſures and fleſhly deſires; but rather he will ſeeke all the wayes poſſible that he can, utterly to confound, deſtroy, and put him out of the way. And ſo as concerning your laſt Proclamation, prohibiting ſuch bookes, the very true cauſe of it, and chiefe Counſellors (as men ſay, and of likelihood it ſhould be) were they whoſe evill living and cloked hypocriſie theſe books uttered and diſcloſed. And howbeit that there were three or foure, that would have had the Scripture to go forth in Engliſh, yet it happened there, as it is evermore ſeen, that the moſt part overcommeth the better, and ſo it might be that theſe men did not take this Proclamation as yours, but as theirs ſet forth in your name, as they have done many times moe, which hath put this your Realme in great hinderance and trouble, and brought it in great penury, and more would have done, if GOD had not mercifully provided to bring your Grace to knowledge of the falſhood and privy treaſon, which their head and Captain was about; and be ye ſure not without adherents, if the matter be duly ſearched. For what marvell is it, that they being ſo nigh of your Counſell, and ſo familiar with your Lords, ſhould provoke both your Grace and them to prohibite theſe books, which before by their own authority have forbidden the New Teſtament, under pain of everlaſting damnation: for ſuch is their manner,

Under the pretence of inſurrections and hereſies, the Prelates ſtop the liberty of Chriſts Goſpel.

Objection prevented and anſwered.

The cauſe and cauſers of the Kings Proclamation againſt the reading of ſcripture books in Engliſh.

He meaneth of Cranmer, Cromwel, and one or two mo, againſt whom the B. of Wincheſter and his faction did prevaile.

A practice of Prelates to convey their own Proclamations under the Kings name and authority.

He meaneth of the pope, which went about to drive K. Henry out of his kingdome, and that not without ſome adherents neere about the King to ſend a thouſand men to hell, ere they ſend one to God, and yet the new Teſtament (and ſo I think by the other) was meekely offered to every man that would and could, to amend it, if there were any fault.

Moreover, I will ask them the cauſes of all inſurrections, which have been in this Realm heretofore. And whence is it that there be ſo many Extortioners, Bribers, Murderers, and Theeves, which daily do not break only your Graces lawes, ordinances, and ſtatutes, but alſo the lawes and Commandements of Almighty God? I thinke they will not ſay theſe books, but rather their pardons which cauſeth many a man to ſin in truſt of them. For as for thoſe malefactors which I now rehearſed, you ſhall not finde one amongſt a hundred, but that he will cry out both of theſe books, and alſo of them that have them, yea and will be glad to ſpend the good which he hath wrongfully gotten, upon Fagots to burn both the books, and them that have them.

The cauſe of inſurrections is falſly laid upon Engliſh books, but rather is to be layd upon the Popes pardons. Extortioners, Bribers, Theeves, be the greateſt enemies to the Goſpel to be in Engliſh.

And as touching theſe men that were lately puniſhed for theſe books, there is no man, I hear ſay, that can lay any word or deed againſt them that ſhould ſound to the breaking of any of your Graces lawes, this only except, if it be yours, and not rather theirs. And be it ſo that there be ſome that have theſe books, that be evill, unruly, and ſelfe willed perſons, not regarding Gods lawes, nor mans, yet theſe books be not the cauſe thereof, no more than was the bodily preſence of Chriſt and his words, the cauſe that Judas fell, but their owne froward minde and carnall wit, which ſhould be amended by the vertuous example of living of their Curates, and by the true expoſition of the Scripture. If the Lay people had ſuch Curates, that would thus do their office, neither theſe books, nor the Divel himſelf could hurt them, nor make them to go out of frame, ſo that the lack of good Curats is the deſtruction and cauſe of all miſchiefe. Neither do I write theſe things becauſe that I will either excuſe theſe men lately puniſhed, or to affirme all to be true written in theſe books, which I have not all read, but to ſhew that there cannot ſuch inconvenience follow of them, and ſpecially of the Scripture as they would make men beleeve ſhould follow.

The froward life of the Goſpellers, is not to be laid to the Goſpel.

Lack of good Curats, is the cauſe of all miſchiefe in the Realm.

And though it be ſo that your Grace may by other books, and namely by the Scripture it ſelfe, know and perceive the hypocrite wolves clad in Sheepes clothing, yet I think my ſelf bound in conſcience to utter unto your Grace ſuch things as GOD put in my mind to write. And this I do (God ſo judge me) not for hate of any perſon or perſons living, nor for that I think the Word of GOD ſhould go forth without perſecution, if your Grace had commanded that every man within your Realme ſhould have it in his Mothers tongue. For the Goſpel muſt needs have perſecution unto the time that it be preached throwout all the World, which is the laſt ſigne that Chriſt ſhewed to his Diſciples ſhould come before the day of Judgement: ſo that if your Grace had once commanded that the Scripture ſhould be put forth, the Divel would ſet forth ſome wile or other to perſecute the truth. But my purpoſe is, for the love that I have to GOD principally, and the glory of his Name, which is only known by his Word, and for the true allegeance that I owe unto your Grace, and not to hide in the ground of my heart the talent given me of God, but to chaffer it forth to other, that it may increaſe to the pleaſure of GOD, to exhort your Grace to avoyd and beware of theſe miſchievous flatterers, and their abominable waies and counſels.

The Goſpel will not go forth without perſecution, though the K. would permit the reading thereof to be free.

The laſt ſigne before the judgment day, is that the Goſpel ſhould be preached throw the world.

M. Latimer chaffereth forth his talent. He meaneth this belike by ſir Tho. More, who for the biſhops pleaſure ſet his pen againſt the Goſpel.

And take heed whoſe counſels your Grace doth take in this matter: for there be ſome that for fear of loſing of their worldly worſhip and honor, will not leave off their opinion, which raſhly, and that to pleaſe men withall by whom they had great promotion they took upon them to defend by writing, ſo that now they think that all their felicitie, which they put in this life, ſhould be mard, and their wiſdome not ſo greatly regarded, if that which they have ſo ſlanderouſly oppreſſed ſhould be now put forth and allowed. But alas, let theſe men remember Saint Paul, how fervent he was againſt the truth (and that of a good zeale) before he was called; he thought no ſhame to ſuffer puniſhment, and great perſecutions for that which before he deſpiſed and called hereſie. And I am ſure that their living is not more perfect than S. Pauls was, as concerning the outward works of the law, before he was converted.

S. Paul a good example for all perſecutors to follow.

Alſo the King and Prophet David was not aſhamed to forſake his good intent in building of the Temple, after that the Prophet Nathan had ſhewed him that it was not the pleaſure of God that he ſhould build any houſe for him; and notwithſtanding that Nathan had before allowed and praiſed the purpoſe of David, yet he was not aſhamed to revoke and eat his words againe, when he knew that they were not according to Gods will and pleaſure.

K. Davids good example to all kings to ſubmit their intents and purpoſes to Gods word

Wherefore they be ſore drowned in worldly wiſdome, that think it againſt their worſhip to knowledge their ignorance; whom I pray to God that your Grace may eſpie, and take heed of their worldly wiſedome, which is fooliſhneſſe before God, that you may do that that God commandeth, and not that ſeemeth good in your own ſight without the word of God, that your Grace may be found acceptable in his ſight, and one of the members of his Church; and according to the office that he hath called your Grace unto, you may be found a faithfull miniſter of his gifts, and not a defender of his faith, for he will not have it defended by man or mans power, but by his word only, by the which he hath evermore defended it, and that by a way far above mans power or reaſon, as all the ſtories of the Bible make mention.

By Nathan we may learn not to be aſhamed to call back our words when we know Gods pleaſure to be otherwiſe.

Wherefore gracious King remember your ſelf, have pitie upon your ſoule, and thinke that the day is even at hand when you ſhall give accounts of your office, and of the bloud that hath beene ſhed with your ſword. In the which day that your Grace may ſtand ſtedfaſtly, and not be aſhamed, but be clear and readie in your reckoning, and to have (as they ſay) your Quietus eſt, ſealed with the bloud of our Savior Chriſt which only ſerveth at that day, is my daily prayer to him that ſuffered death for our ſins, which alſo praieth to his Father for grace for us continually. To whom be all honour and praiſe for ever, Amen. The Spirit of God preſerve your Grace. Anno Domini 1530. 1. die Decembris.

In this Letter of Maſter Latimer to the King above prefixed, many things we have to conſider: Firſt, his good conſcience to God, his good will to the King, the dutie of a right Paſtor unto truth, his tender care to the common wealth, and ſpecially to the Church of Chriſt. Further, we have to conſider the abuſe of Princes Courts, how Kings many times be abuſed with flatterers and wicked counſellers about them, and ſpecially we may note the ſubtle practices of Prelates, in abuſing the name and authoritie of Kings, to ſet forth their own malignant proceedings. We may ſee moreover, and rather marvell at in the ſaid Letter, the great boldneſſe and divine ſtoutneſſe in this man, who as yet being no Biſhop, ſo freely and plainly without all fear of death, adventuring his owne life to diſcharge his conſcience, durſt ſo boldly, to ſo mighty a Prince, in ſuch a dangerous caſe, againſt the Divers things in this letter of M. Latimer to the King to be conſidered.

The heavenly courage of M. Latimer in di charging his conſcience.

the Kings Law and Proclamation ſet out in ſuch a terrible time, take upon him to write, and to admoniſh that, which no Counſellor durſt once ſpeak unto him in defence of Chriſts Goſpel. Whoſe example if the Biſhops and Prelates of this Realm, for their parts likewiſe in like caſes of neceſſity would follow (as indeed they ſhould) ſo many things peradventure would not be ſo out of frame as they be, and all for lack that the Officers of Gods Word do not their duty.

The King well pleaſed with the plainneſſe of M. Latimer.

Finally, this moreover in the ſaid Letter is to be noted, how bleſſedly Almighty God wrought with his faithfull ſervant, whoſe bold adventure, and wholeſome counſell, though it did not prevail through the iniquity of the time, yet notwithſtanding God ſo wrought with his ſervant in doing his duty, that no danger, nor yet diſpleaſure roſe to him thereby, but rather thanks and good will of the Prince; for not long after the ſame he was advanced by the King to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, as is above declared.

Seeing Maſter Latimer was ſo bold and plain with the King (as is afore ſpecified) no great marvell if he did uſe the like freedome and plainneſſe toward other meaner perſons in admoniſhing them of their miſorder, eſpecially if any ſuch occaſion were given, where truth and equity required his defence againſt injury and oppreſſion. For example whereof we have another Letter of his, written to a certain Juſtice of Peace in Warwickſhire, who as he is long ſince departed, ſo he ſhall be here unnamed. The Letter, although it may ſeem ſomewhat long and tedious; yet I thought here not to overpaſſe the ſame for divers and ſundry reſpects: Firſt, that the vertue and faithfull conſcience of this good Paſtor may appear more at large; alſo for that all other Biſhops and Paſtors by this example may learn with like zeal and ſtomack to diſcharge their duty and conſcience in reforming things amiſſe, and in powdering with the Salt of Gods Word the ſores of the people. Which thing if every Biſhop for his part within his Dioceſſe had done in King Edwards dayes, in redreſſing ſuch corruption of that time with like diligence as this man did, verily I ſuppoſe that the perſecution of Queen Mary had not ſo plagued the Realm as it did: but whereas never a man almoſt liveth in due order, and yet never a Biſhop will ſtirre to ſeek redreſſe, what can become of the Realm? Item, another reſpect is, becauſe of the Juſtices and all other placed in room and office, which may take heed hereby, not to abuſe their authority to tread down truth, and bear down poor men with open wrong through extortion or partiality: And finally, that all injurious oppreſſors whatſoever, by the ſaid Letter may take ſome fruit of wholeſome admonition. What the argument and occaſion was of this Letter, I ſhewed before. The tenor and purport thereof, as it was written to the Gentleman, is this as followeth.

RIght Worſhipfull, ſalutem in Domino. And now ſir I underſtand, that you be in great admirations at me, and take very grievouſly my manner of writing to you, adding thereunto that you will not bear it at my hand, no, not if I were the beſt Biſhop in England, &c.

Ah ſir? I ſee well I may ſay as the common ſaying is, Well have I fiſhed and caught a Frog; brought little to paſſe with much ado. You will not bear it with me, you ſay. Why ſir? what will ye do with me? You will not fight with me, I trow. It may ſeem unſeemly for a Juſtice of Peace to be a breaker of peace, I am glad the doting time of my fooliſh youth is gone and paſt. What will you then do with me, in that you ſay you will not bear it at my hand? What hath my hand offended you? Perchance you will convent me before ſome Judge, and call me into ſome Court. Deus bene vertat. Equidem non recuſo judicium ullum. Accuſemus invicem, ut emendemus alius alium in nomine Domini. Fiat juſtitia in judicio, i. God turn it to good. I refuſe no judgement. Let us accuſe one another, that one of us may amend another in the Name of the Lord. Let juſtice proceed in judgement. And then and there, do beſt, have beſt, for club half penny. Or peradventure ye will ſet pen to paper, and all to rattle me in a Letter, wherein confuting me you will defend your ſelf and your brother againſt me. Now that would I ſee, quoth long Roben, ut dicitur vulgariter. Non potero ſane non vehementer probare ejuſmodi induſtriam, i. I cannot chuſe but muſt allow ſuch diligence. For ſo ſhould both your integrities and innocencies beſt appear, if you be able to defend both your own proceedings, and your brothers doings in this matter to be upright. Et ego tum juſtis rationibus victus, libenter cedam, culpam humiliter confeſſurus, i. And then will I gladly give place, confeſſing my fault humbly, as one conquered with juſt reaſons. But I think it will not be. But now firſt of all let me know what it is that ye will not bear at my hand? What have I done with my hand? What hath my hand treſpaſſed you? Forſooth, that can I tell, no man better: For I have charitably moniſhed you in a ſecret Letter, of your ſupper dealing, and ſuch like miſbehaviour. O quam grave piaculum? i. What a ſore matter is this? And will ye not bear ſo much with me? Will ye not take ſuch a ſhew of my good will towards you, and toward the ſaving of your ſoul at my hand? Oh Lord God, who would have thought that Maſter N. had been ſo impudent, that he would not bear a godly monition for the wealth of his ſoul? I have in uſe to commit ſuch treſpaſſes many times in a year with your betters by two or three degrees, both Lords and Ladies, and the beſt of the Realm, and yet hitherto I have not heard that any of them have ſaid in their diſpleaſure, that they will not bear it at my hand. Are you yet to be taught what is the office, liberty, and priviledge of a Preacher? What is it elſe, but even arguere mundum de peccato, i. to rebuke the world of ſin, without reſpect of perſons; Quod quidem ipſum eſt ipſius Spiritus ſancti peculiare in eccleſia munus & officium, ſed non niſi per Prædicatores legitimos exequendum, i. Which thing undoubtedly is the peculiar office of the holy Ghoſt in the Church of God, ſo that it be practiſed by lawfull Preachers. You could but ill bear (belike) to hear your fault openly reproved in the Pulpit, which cannot bear the ſame in a ſecret ſealed up Letter, written both friendly, charitably, and truely; Niſi forte acriter reprehendere peccata, ſit jam omni charitate, amicitia, veritate carere, i. Unleſſe perhaps to rebuke ſin ſharply, be now to lack all charity, friendſhip, and truth. But Maſter N. if you will give me leave to be plain with you, I fear me you be ſo plunged in worldly purchaſings, and ſo drowned in the manifold dregges of this deceiveable world, that I ween you have forgotten your Catechiſme. Reade therefore again the opening of the firſt Commandement, and then tell me whether you of me, or I of you have juſt cauſe to complain, &c.

As may well appear by his Letter ſent to the King before.

Item ſir, you ſaid further, that I am wonderfully abuſed by my neighbour, &c. How ſo, good Maſter N.? Wherein? Or how will you prove it to be true, and when? So you ſaid, that he had abuſed you, and given you wrong information, but the contrary is found true by good teſtimony of M. Chamber, which heard as well as you what my neighbour ſaid, and hath teſtified the ſame, both to you, and againſt you, full like himſelf. Maſter N, to forge and feigne (which argueth an ill cauſe) that is one thing; but to prove what a man doth ſay, that is another thing. As though you were priviledged to out-face poor men, and bear them in hand what they liſt, as may ſeem to make ſome maintenauce for your naughty cauſe. Truſt me Maſter N. I was but a very little acquainted with my neighbour when this matter began; but now I have found him ſo conformable to honeſty, upright in his dealings, and ſo true in his talk, that I eſteem him better than I do ſome other whom I have perceived and found otherwayes. For I will flatter no man, nor yet claw his back in his folly, but eſteem all men as I finde them, allowing what is good, and diſallowing what is bad: In omnibus hominibus ſive amicis ſive inimicis, juxta præceptum Paulinum, à filiis hujus ſeculi in precio non habitum: Sitis odio, inquit, proſequentes quod malum eſt, adhærentes autem ei quod bonum eſt: Neque bonum malum, nec malum bonum in gratiam hominum affirmemus unquam, id quod filii hujus ſeculi vulgó faciunt, ut eſt videre ubique, i. Among all men, either friends or enemies, according to Pauls precept, not eſteemed of the children of this world; Hate you, ſaith he, that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good. And let us not at any time for the favour of men, call good evill, and evill good, as the children of this world are commonly wont to do, as it is every where to be ſeen. And now what manner of man do you make me, Maſter N. when you note me to be ſo much abuſed by ſo ignorant a man, ſo ſimple, ſo plain, and ſo farre without all wrinkles? Have I lived ſo long in this tottering world, and have I been ſo many wayes turmoiled and toſſed up and down, and ſo much as it were ſeaſoned with the powder of ſo many experiences to and fro, to be now ſo farre bewitched and alienated from my wits, as though I could not diſcern cheeſe from chalk, truth from falſhood, but that every ſilly ſoul, and baſe witted man might eaſily abuſe me to that enterpriſe he liſted at his pleaſure? Well, I ſay not nay, but I may be abuſed. But why do you not tell me how your brother abuſed me, promiſing before me and many moe, that he would ſtand to your awardſhip, and now doth deny it? Why do you not tell me, how thoſe two falſe faithleſſe wretches abuſe me, promiſing alſo to abide your award, and do it not? Yea, why do you not tell me, how you your ſelf have abuſed me, promiſing me to redreſſe the injury and wrong that your brother hath done to my neighbour, and have not fulfilled your promiſe? Theſe notable abuſes be nothing with you, but onely you muſt needs burthen me with my neighbours abuſing me, which is none at all, as farre forth as ever I could perceive, ſo God help me at my need. For if he had abuſed me as you and other have done, I ſhould be ſoon at a point with him, for any thing further doing for him, &c.

M. Latimer flattereth no man.

Item ſir, you ſaid further, that I ſhall never be able to prove that either your brother, or the two tenants agreed to ſtand to your award, &c. No ſir? Maſter N. you ſay belike as you would have it to be, or as your brother with his adherents have perſwaded you to think it to be, ſo inducing you to do their requeſt to your own ſhame and rebuke, if you perſevere in the ſame, beſide the perill of your ſoul, for conſenting at leaſt way, to the maintenance by falſhood of your brothers iniquity. For in that you would your awardſhip ſhould take none effect, you ſhew your ſelf nothing inclinable to the redreſſe of your brothers unright dealing with an honeſt poor man, which hath been ready at your requeſt to do you pleaſure with his things, or elſe he had never come into this wrangle for his own goods with your brother.

Bolſtring of falſhood and iniquity.

Brother ought not to bear with brother, to bear down right and truth, eſpecially being a Juſtice.

Ah Maſter N. what manner of man do you ſhew your ſelf to be? or what manner of conſcience do you ſhew your ſelf to have? For firſt, as touching your brother, you know right well that ſir Thomas Coking with a Letter of his own hand-writing, hath witneſſed unto your brothers agreement, which Letter he ſent to me unſealed, and I ſhewed the ſame to my neighbour, and other moe ere I ſealed it, and perchance have a copy of the ſame yet to ſhew. With what conſcience then can you ſay that I ſhall never be able to prove it? Shall not three men upon their oathes make a ſufficient proof, trow you? Vel ipſo Dicente Domino; In ore duorum vel trium, &c. i, The Lord himſelf ſaying; in the mouth of two or three, &c. Yea, you think it true I dare ſay, in your conſcience, if you have any conſcience though I were in my grave, and ſo unable to prove any thing. And as for the two tenants, they be as they be, and I truſt to ſee them handled according as they be; for there be three men yet alive, that dare ſwear upon a book, that they both did agree. But what ſhould we look for at ſuch mens hands, when you your ſelf play the part you do? Verum vivit adhuc Deus, qui videt omnia, & judicat juſtè, &c. i. But God is yet alive, which ſeeth all, and judgeth juſtly.

Corrupt tenants.

Item ſir, you ſaid yet further, that the Juſtices of Peace in the country think you very unnaturall, in taking part with me before your brother, &c. Ah Maſter N. what a ſentence is this to come out of your mouth? For partaking is one thing, and miniſtring of juſtice is another thing: and a worthy miniſter of juſtice will be no partaker, but one indifferent between party and party. And did I require you to take my part, I pray you? No, I required you to miniſter juſtice between your brother and my neighbour, without any partaking with either other. But what manner of Juſtices be they, I pray you, which would ſo fain have you to take part naturally with your brother, when you ought and ſhould reform and amend your brother? as you your ſelf know, no man better. What? Juſtices? no, Jugglers you might more worthily call ſuch as they be, than Juſtices. Be they thoſe Juſtices which call you unnaturall, for that you will not take your brothers part againſt all right and conſcience, whom you had picked out and appointed to have the finall hearing and determining of my neighbours cauſe, after your ſubſtantiall and finall award making? Verily I think no leſſe. Forſooth he is much beholding to you, and I alſo for his ſake. Is that the wholeſome counſell that you have to give your poor neighbours in their need? Indeed you ſhew your ſelf a worthy Juggler: Oh, I would have ſaid a Juſticer, among other of your juggling and partaking Juſtices. Deum bonum, i. O good God, what is this world? Marry ſir, my neighbour had ſpun a fair thred, if your partaking Juſtices through your good counſell had had his matter in ordering and finiſhing. I pray God ſave me and all my friends, with all Gods flock, from the whole fellowſhip of your ſo naturall and partaking Juſtices, Amen.

Were not here good ſort of Juſtices, trow you?

Juſtices turned to Jugglers.

Partaking Juſtices.

Lord God, who would have thought that there had been ſo many partaking Juſtices, that is to ſay, unjuſt Juſtices in Warwickſhire, if Maſter N. himſelf one of the ſame order (but altogether out of order) and therefore knoweth it beſt, had not told us the tale? But theſe call you, you ſay, very unnaturall, &c. And why not rather, I pray you, too much naturall? For we reade de natura duplici, integra & corrupta. Illa erat juſtitiæ plena: hæc niſi reparata, ſemper manet injuſta, injuſtitiæ fructus alios poſt alios paritura, i. Of a double nature, ſound and corrupt. That was full of juſtice: this unleſſe it be reſtored, abideth alwayes unjuſt, bringing forth the fruits of wickedneſſe one after another: So that he that will not help his brother, having a juſt cauſe in his need, may be juſtly called unnaturall, as not doing juxta inſtinctum naturæ, ſive integræ, ſive reparatæ, i. according to the inſtinct of nature, either as it was at the beginning, or as it was reſtored. But he that will take his brothers part againſt right, as to ratifie his brothers wrong deceiving, he is too much naturall, tanquam ſequeus ingenium ſive inclinationem naturæ corruptæ, contra voluntatem Dei, i. as one following the diſpoſition and inclination of corrupt nature againſt the will of God; and ſo to be naturall may ſeem to be cater-couſin, or couſin-germaine with, to be diabolicall.

I fear me we have too many Juſtices that be too much naturall, to their own periſhment both body and ſoul. For worthy Juſtices having ever the fear and dread of God before their eyes, (quales ſunt pauciores apud nos, quam vellem, i. Of which ſort we have a fewer amongſt us, than I would) will have no reſpect at all in their judgements and proceedings, ad propinquitatem ſanguinis, i. to vicinitie of bloud; but altogether ad dignitatem & æquitatem cauſæ, ut quod juſtum eſt ſemper judicent intuitu Dei, non quod injuſtum eſt intuitu hominum; of which number I pray GOD make you one, Amen. Iuſtus eſt (ſayth John) qui facit juſtitiam. At qui facit peccatum (id quod facit, quiſquis injuſte facit in gratiam & favorem ullius hominis) ex diabolo eſt, i. He is juſt that doth juſtice. But he that ſinneth (as they all do, which do unjuſtly for favour and pleaſure of men) is of the Divell (ſaith he) of which ſort all our partaking and naturall Juſtices be with all their partiality and naturality. Quare dignum & juſtum eſt, that as many as be ſuch Juſtices, juſte priventur munere, & amplius quoque plectantur pro ſui quique facinoris quantitate, ut vel ſic tandem abſcindantur, tanquam nati in incommodum reipublicæ noſtræ, qui nos conturbant, cum adjuvare debeant, i. Be juſtly deprived of their offices, and further alſo be puniſhed, according to the quantity or quality of their crime, ſo that by that means they may be cut off, as men born and bred to the hurt and detriment of the Common-wealth, which trouble us, when they ought to help us, Amen.

Quare ſeponite juſtitiam, & ſequimini naturam, as your naturalls and diabolicals would have you to do, that is, even as juſt as Germains lips, which came not together by nine mile, Vt vulgo dicunt, &c.

Item ſir, finally and laſt of all you added theſe words following: Well, quoth you, let Maſter Latimer take heed how he meddleth with my brother, for he is like to finde as crabbed and as froward a peece of him, as ever he found in his life, &c. Ah ſir? and is your brother ſuch a one as you ſpeak of indeed? mercifull God, what a commendation is this for one brother to give another? Eſtne ejuſmodi gloriatio tua, mi amice? i. Is this your glorying my friend? And were it not poſſible trowe you, to make him better? It is written Vexatio dat intellectum, i. Vexation giveth underſtanding. And again, Bonum mihi, Domine, quod humiliaſti me, i. It is good, O Lord, that thou haſt humbled me. At leaſt way, I may pray to God for him as David did for ſuch like, Ad hunc modum; Chamo & frœno maxillas eorum conſtringe, qui non approximant ad te, i. After this ſort; Binde faſt Aſſes with bridle and ſnaffle, that they approach not neere unto thee. In the mean ſeaſon, I would I had never known either of you both; for ſo ſhould I have been without this inward ſorrow of my heart, to ſee ſuch untowardlineſſe of you both to godlineſſe; for I cannot be but heavy-hearted, to ſee ſuch men ſo wickedly minded. Well, let us ponder a little better your words, where you ſay, I ſhall finde him as crabbed and as froward a peece, &c. Mark well your own words. For by the tenor of the ſame it plainly appeareth, that you confeſſe your brothers cauſe wherein he ſo ſtiffely ſtandeth, to be unjuſt and very naught. For he that ſtandeth ſo ſtiffely in a good quarrell and a juſt cauſe, as many good men have done, is called a faſt man, a conſtant, a truſty man. But he that is ſo obſtinate and untractable in wickedneſſe and wrong doing, is commonly called a crabbed and froward peece, as you name your brother to be.

Wherefore knowing ſo well your brothers cauſe to be ſo naughty, why have you not endavoured your ſelfe, as a worthy Juſtice, to reform him accordingly, as I required you, and you promiſed me to do, now almoſt twelve moneths ago, if not altogether? Summa Summarum, Maſter N. if you will not come off ſhortly, and apply your ſelf thereunto more effectually hereafter, than you have heretofore, be you well aſſured thereof, I ſhall detect you to all the friends that I have in England, both high and low, as well his crabbedneſſe and frowardneſſe, as your colourable ſupportation of the ſame, that I truſt I ſhall be able thereby either to bring you both to ſome goodneſſe, or at leaſt way I ſhall ſo warne my friends and all honeſt hearts to beware of your ilneſſe, that they ſhall take either no hurt at all, or at leaſt way leſſe harme by you through mine advertiſement; in that, knowing you perfectly, they may the better avoyd and ſhun your company. You ſhall not ſtay me, Maſter N. no though you would give me all the lands and goods you have, as rich as you are noted to be. Ego nolo tam juſtam cauſam derelinquere, ego nolo peccatis alienis in hac parte communicare, i. I will not forſake ſuch a juſt cauſe, neither will I communicate with other mens ſinnes. For whether it be per deteſtabilem ſuperbiam, i. by deteſtable pride: whether per abominabilem avaritiam, i. by abominable avarice: or by both two linked together, it is no ſmall iniquity to keep any poore man ſo long from his right and duty ſo ſtiffe-neckedly and obſtinately, or whether ye will crabbedly and frowardly. And what is it then any manner of waies to conſent to the ſame? You know, I trow, Maſter N. Furtum quid ſit, nempe, quoviſmodo auferre vel retinere alienam rem invito Domino, ut quidam definiunt. Si fur ſit qui ſic palam facit, quis erit qui facientem probat, tutatur, propugnat, vel quibuſcunque ambagibus ſuffulcit? id eſt. What theft is, that is, to take or detain by any manner of way another mans good againſt his will that is the owner, as ſome define it. If he be a theef that ſo doth openly, what ſhall he be that approveth him which is the doer, defendeth, maintaineth, and ſupporteth him by any manner of colour? Conſider with your ſelf good Maſter N. Quid ſit opprimere & fraudare in negotio fratrem, i. What is to oppreſſe and to defraud your brother in his buſineſſe: and what followeth thereof. It is truly ſayd, Non tollitur peccatum, niſi reſtituatur ablatum, i. The ſin is not forgiven, except the thing be reſtored again that is taken away. No reſtitution, no ſalvation; which is as well to be underſtood, de rebus per fraudes, technas, & dolos, ut de rebus per manifeſtum furtum & latrocinium partis, i. Of things gotten by fraud, guile, and deceit, as of things gotten by open theft and robbery. Wherefore let not your brother Maſter N. by cavillation continue in the Divels poſſeſſion. I will do the beſt I can, and wraſtle with the Divel, omnibus viribus, to deliver you both from him. I will leave no one ſtone unmoved to have both you and your brother ſaved. There is neither Archbiſhop nor Biſhop, nor yet any learned man either in Univerſities or elſewhere, that I am acquainted withall, that ſhall not write unto you, and in their writing by their learning confute you. There is no godly man of law in this Realm that I am acquainted withall, but they ſhall write unto you, and confute you by the law. There is neither Lord nor Ladie, nor yet any noble perſonage in this Realm, that I am acquainted withall, but they ſhall write unto you, and godly threaten you with their authority.

Godly threats of M. Latimer to ſave the ſoul of his friend.

I will do all this; yea, and kneele upon both my knees before the Kings Majeſty, and all his honourable Councell, with moſt humble petition for your reformation, rather than the Divell ſhall poſſeſſe you ſtill, to your finall damnation. So that I do not deſpair, but verily truſt, one way or other, to pluck both you, and alſo your crabbed brother, as crabbed as you ſay he is, out of the Divels clawes, maugre the Divels heart.

Theſe premiſſes well conſidered, looke upon it, good Maſter N. that we have no further ado: Gods plague is preſently upon us; therefore let us now diligently looke about us, and in no wiſe defend, but willingly reknowledge, and amend whatſoever hath been amiſſe. Theſe were the capitall points of your talke, as I was informed, after you had peruſed that my nipping and unpleaſant letter; and I thought good to make you ſome anſwer to them, if perchance I might ſo move you, the rather to call your ſelfe to ſome better remembrance, and ſo more earneſtly apply your ſelf to accompliſh and perform what you have begun and promiſed to do, namely, the thing it ſelf being of ſuch ſort, as apparently tendeth both to your worſhip, and alſo to Gods high pleaſure.

Thus lo, with a mad head, but yet a good will, after long ſcribling I wot not well what (but I know you can reade it, and comprehend it well enough) I bid you moſt heartily well to fare in the Lord, with good health, and long life to Gods pleaſure, Amen. From Baxterley the 15. of June.

During the time that the ſayd Maſter Latimer was priſoner in Oxford, we reade not of much that he did write, beſides his conference with Doctor Ridley, and his proteſtation at the time of his diſputation. Otherwiſe, of letters we finde very few or none that he did write to his friends abroad, ſave only theſe few lines, which he wrote to one Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon of London, a godly Matron, and an exile afterward for the Goſpels ſake. Who ſo long as ſhe remained in England, was a ſingular Patroneſſe to the good Saints of God, and learned Biſhops, as to Maſter Hooper, to the Biſhop of Hereford, to Maſter Coverdale, Maſter Latimer, Doctor Cranmer, with many other. The copie and effect of which his letter to Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon here followeth.

A letter ſent to Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon of London, widow, from Maſter Hugh Latimer out of Bocardo, in Oxford.

If the gift of a pot of cold water ſhall not be in oblivion with God, how can God forget your manifold and bountifull gifts, when he ſhall ſay to you; I was in priſon, and you viſited me. God grant us all to do and ſuffer while we be here, as may be to his will and pleaſure, Amen.

Yours in Bocardo, Hugh Latimer.

Touching the memorable acts and doings of this worthy man, among many other this is not to be neglected, what a bold enterprize he attempted, in ſending to King Henry a preſent, the manner whereof is this. There was then, and yet remaineth ſtill an old cuſtome received from the old Romanes, that upon New-yeers day being the firſt day of January, every Biſhop with ſome handſome New-yeers gift ſhould gratifie the King; and ſo they did, ſome with gold, ſome with ſilver, ſome with a purſe full of money, and ſome one thing, ſome another: but Maſter Latimer being Biſhop of Worceſter then, among the reſt, preſented a New Teſtament for his New-yeers gift, with a napkin having this poſie about it, Fornicatores & adulteros judicabit Dominus.

New-yeers gift ſent to King Henry.

And thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) the whole life, both of Maſter Ridley, and of Maſter Latimer, two worthy doers in the Church of Chriſt, ſeverally and by themſelves ſet forth and deſcribed, with all their doings, writings, diſputations, ſufferings, their painfull travels, faithfull preachings, ſtudious ſervice in Chriſts Church, their patient impriſonment, and conſtant fortitude in that which they had taught, with all other their proceedings from time to time, ſince their firſt ſpringing yeers, to this preſent time and moneth of Queen Marie, being the moneth of October, Anno 1555. In the which moneth they were both brought forth together, to their finall examination and execution. Wherefore as we have heretofore declared both their lives ſeverally and diſtinctly one from the other, ſo now joyntly to couple them both together, as they were together both joyned in one ſociety of cauſe and martyrdome, we will by the grace of Chriſt proſecute the reſt that remaineth concerning their later examination, degrading, and conſtant ſuffering, with the order and manner alſo of the Commiſſioners, which were Maſter White Biſhop of Lincolne, Maſter Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter, with others, and what were their words, their objections, their Orations there uſed, and what again were the anſwers of theſe men to the ſame, as in the proceſſe here followeth to be ſeen.

B. Ridley and M. Latimer brought forth to examination.

October.

M. White biſh. of Lincoln. M. Brooks biſhop of Gloceſter, the Popes Deputies.

The order and manner of the examination of Doctor Ridley, and M. Latimer had the 30. day of September, 1555.

FIrſt, after the appearing of Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury before the Popes Delegate, and the Queens Commiſſioners in Saint Maries Church at Oxford, about the 12, day of September, whereof more ſhall be ſayd (by the Lords grace) when we come to the death of the ſayd Archbiſhop; ſhortly after, upon the 28. of the ſayd moneth of September, was ſent down to Oxford another Commiſſion from Cardinall Poole Legate à latere, to John White Biſhop of Lincoln, to Doctor Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter, and to Doctor Holiman Biſhop of Briſtow. The contents and vertue of which Commiſſion was, that the ſayd John of Lincolne, James of Gloceſter, and John of Briſtow, they, or two of them, ſhould have full power and authority, to aſcite, examine, and judge Maſter Hugh Latimer, and Maſter Doctor Ridley, pretenſed Biſhops of Worceſter, and London, for divers and ſundry erroneous opinions, which the ſaid Hugh Latimer, and Nicholas

The laſt examination of Maſt. Ridley, and M. Latimer.

The effect of the Cardinals Commiſſion ſent down to Oxford.

Nicholas Ridley did hold and maintain in open diſputations had in Oxford, in the Moneths of May, June, and July, in the yeer of our Lord, 1554. as long before in the time of perdition, and ſince. The which opinions if the named perſons would now recant, giving and yeelding themſelves to the determination of the Univerſall and Catholike Church, planted by Peter in the bleſſed See of Rome, that then they deputed Judges, by the ſayd authority of their Commiſſion, ſhould have power to receive the ſayd penitent perſons, and forthwith miniſter unto them the reconciliation of the holy Father the Pope; but if the ſaid Hugh Latimer, and Nicholas Ridley would ſtoutly and ſtubbornly defend and maintain theſe their erroneous opinions and aſſertions, that then the ſayd Lords by their Commiſſion ſhould proceed in forme of judgement, according to the law of Heretikes, that is, degrading them from their promotion and dignity of Biſhops, Prieſts, and all other Eccleſiaſticall orders, ſhould pronounce them as Heretikes; and therefore cleane cut them off from the Church, and ſo yeeld them to receive puniſhments due to all ſuch hereſie and ſchiſme.

D. Ridley and M. Latimer aſcited to appear the laſt of September.

Wherefore the laſt of September, the ſayd two perſons, Nicholas Ridley, and Hugh Latimer, were aſcited to appear before the ſayd Lords, in the Divinity Schoole at Oxford, at eight of the clock. At what time thither repaired the Lords, placing themſelves in the high ſeate, made for publike Lectures and diſputations, according to the uſage of that Schoole, being then fair ſet, and trimmed with cloth of Tiſſue, and cuſhions of Velvet: and after the ſayd Lords were placed and ſet, and the ſayd Latimer and Ridley were ſent for; and firſt appeared Maſter Doctor Ridley, and anon Maſter Latimer. But becauſe it ſeemed good ſeverally to examine them, Maſter Latimer was kept backe, untill Doctor Ridley was throughly examined. Therfore, ſoon after the coming of Doctor Ridley into the Schoole, the Commiſſion was publiſhed by an appointed Notarie, and openly read. But Doctor Ridley ſtanding bare-headed, humbly expecting the cauſe of that his appearance, eft-ſoons as he had heard the Cardinall named, and the Popes holineſſe, put on his cap. Wherefore after the Commiſſion was publiſhed, in form and ſenſe above ſpecified, the Biſhop of Lincoln ſpake in ſenſe following.

D. Ridley putteth on his cap, at the hearing of the Popes name.

The words of the Biſhop of Lincoln to D. Ridley for not putting off his cap.

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, although neither I, neither my Lords here, in reſpect of our owne perſons, do looke for cap or knee, yet becauſe we bear, and repreſent ſuch perſons as we do, that is my Lord Cardinals Grace, Legate à latere to the Popes holineſſe, as well in that he is of a notable Parentage (and therewith Maſter Ridley moved his cap with lowly obeyſance) deſcending from the regall bloud, as in that he is a man worthy to be reverenced with all humility, for his great knowledge and learning, noble vertues, and godly life, and eſpecially in that he is here in England Deputy to the Popes holineſſe, it ſhould have becommed you at this name to have uncovered your head. Wherefore except you will of your own ſelf take the pains to put your hand to your head, and at the nomination, as well of the ſayd Cardinall, as of the Popes holineſſe, uncover the ſame, leſt that this your contumacie exhibited now before us, ſhould be prejudiciall to the ſayd moſt reverent perſons (which thing we may in no caſe ſuffer) you ſhall cauſe us to take the pain, to cauſe ſome man to pluck off your cap from you. To whom Maſter Ridley making his petition for licence, anſwered:

Anſwer of D. Ridley to the biſhop of Lincolne.

Ridley. As touching that you ſayd (my Lord) that you of your own perſons deſire no cap nor knee, but only require the ſame, in conſideration that you repreſent the Cardinals Graces perſon, I do you to wit, and thereupon make my proteſtation, that I did put on my cap at the naming of the Cardinals Grace, neither for any contumacie that I bear towards your own perſons, neither for any derogation of honour toward the Lord Cardinals Grace. For I know him to be a man worthy of all humility, reverence, and honour, in that he came of the moſt regall bloud, and in that he is a man indued with manifold graces of learning and vertue, and as touching theſe vertues and points, I with all humility (therewith he put off his cap, and bowed his knee) and obeyſance that I may, will reverence and honour his Grace; but in that he is Legate to the Biſhop of Rome (and therewith put on his cap) whoſe uſurped ſupremacie, and abuſed authority, I utterly refuſe and renounce, I may in no wiſe give any obeyſance or honour unto him, leſt that my ſo doing and behaviour might be prejudiciall to mine oath, and derogation to the verity of Gods word: and therefore that I might not only by confeſſion profeſſe the verity in not reverencing the renounced authority, contrary to Gods word, but alſo in geſture, in behaviour, and all my doings expreſſe the ſame, I have put on my cap, and for this conſideration only; and not for any contumacie to your Lordſhips, neither contempt of this worſhipfull audience, neither derogation of any honour due to the Cardinall his Grace, both for his noble Parentage, and alſo his excellent qualities, I have kept on my cap.

D. Ridley reverenceth the perſon of the Cardinall, but not his Legacy.

D. Ridley oweth not reverence to the Pope.

D. White biſhop of Lincoln replieth again.

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, you excuſe your ſelfe of that, with the which we preſſed you not, in that you proteſt you keep on your cap, neither for any contumacie towards us (which looke for no ſuch honour of you) neither for any contempt of this audience: which although juſtly they may, yet (as I ſuppoſe) in this caſe do not require any ſuch obeyſance of you; neither in derogation of any honour due to my Lord Cardinals Grace, for his regall diſcent (at which word Maſter Ridley moved his cap) and excellent qualities; for although in all the premiſſes honour be due, yet in theſe reſpects we require none of you, but only in that my Lord Cardinals Grace is here in England, Deputie of the Popes holineſſe (at which word the Lords and others put off their caps, and Maſter Ridley put on his) and therefore we ſay unto you the ſecond time, that except you take the pains your ſelf, to put your hand to your head, and put off your cap, you ſhall put us to the pain, to cauſe ſome man to take it from you, except you alledge ſome infirmity and ſickneſſe, or other more reaſonable cauſe, upon the conſideration whereof we may do as we think good.

Putting off caps at the naming of the Pope.

D. Ridley anſwereth.

Ridley. The premiſſes I ſayd only for this end, that it might as well appear to your Lordſhips, as to this worſhipfull audience, why and for what conſideration I uſed ſuch kinde of behaviour, in not humbling my ſelfe to your Lordſhips with cap and knee: and as for my ſickneſſe, I thanke my Lord God, that I am as well at eaſe, as I was this long ſeaſon; and therefore I do not pretend that which is not, but only this, that it might appeare by this my behaviour, that I acknowledge in no point that uſurped ſupremacy of Rome, and therefore contemne and utterly deſpiſe all authoritie coming from him. In taking of my cap, do as it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhips, and I ſhall be content.

The uſurped ſupremacie of Rome denied.

D. Ridleys cap plucked off per force.

Then the Biſhop of Lincoln, after the third admonition, commanded one of the Bedles (that is an officer of the Univerſity) to pluck his cap from his head. M. Ridley bowing his head to the officer, gently permitted him to take away his cap.

After this, the Biſhop of Lincoln in a long Oration exhorted Maſter Ridley to recant, and ſubmit himſelf to the univerſall faith of Chriſt, in this manner:

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, I am ſure you have ſufficiently pondered with your ſelf the effect of this our Commiſsion with good adviſement, conſidering both points thereof, how that authority is given to us, if you ſhall receive the true doctrine of the Church (which firſt was founded by “ Peter at Rome immediately after the death of Chriſt, and from him by lineall ſucceſsion hath been brought to this our time) if you will be content to renounce your former errours, recant your hereticall and ſeditious opinions, content to yeild your ſelf to the undoubted faith, and truth of the Goſpel, received and allwayes taught of the Catholike and Apoſtolike Church, the which the King and Queen, all the Nobles of this Realm, and Commons of the ſame, all Chriſtian people have and do confeſſe, you onely ſtanding alone by your ſelf: You underſtand and perceive, I am ſure, that authority is given us to receive you, to reconcile you, and upon due penance to adjoyn and aſſociate you again into the number of the Catholikes and Chriſts Church, from the which you have ſo long ſtraied, without the which no man can be ſaved, the which thing I and my Lords here, yea and all, as well Nobles and Commons of this Realm moſt heartily deſire, and I for my part (wherewith he put off his cap) moſt earneſtly exhort you to do.

“ Nay the faith of Chriſt may be proved to have been at Rome in Tiberius time before Peter came there.

Remember (Maſter Ridley) it is no ſtrange country whither I exhort you to return. You were once one of us, you have taken degrees in the School. You were made a Prieſt, and became a Preacher, ſetting forth the ſame doctrine which we do now. You were made Biſhop according to our lawes; and to be ſhort, it is not ſo long agone, ſince you ſeparated your ſelf from us, and in the time of hereſie became a ſetter forth of that diveliſh and ſeditious doctrine, which in theſe later dayes was preached amongſt us. For at what time the new doctrine of “ onely faith began to ſpring, the Councell willing to winne my Lord Chancellor, ſent you to him (I then being in my Lords houſe unknown as I ſuppoſe to you) and after you had talked with my Lord ſecretly, and were departed, immediately my Lord declared certain points of your talk, and means of your perſwaſion, and amongſt other this was one, that you ſhould ſay, (a) tuſh my Lord, this matter of juſtification is but a trifle, let us not ſtick to condeſcend herein to them; but for Gods love my Lord, ſtand ſtoutly in the verity of the Sacrament: for I ſee they will aſſault that alſo. If this be true (as my Lord is a man credible enough in ſuch a matter) hereby it is declared of what minde you were then, as touching the truth of the moſt bleſſed Sacrament.

Though the countrey of Rome be not ſtrange, yet the doctrine of Rome is ſtrange.

“ Another untruth in biſhop White, for onely faith, is no new doctrine.

(a) The words of D Ridley falſly reported.

Alſo in a Sermon of yours at Pauls Croſſe, you as effectually and as Catholikely ſpake of that bleſſed Sacrament, as any man might have done, whereby it appeareth that it is no ſtrange thing, nor unknown place whereunto I exhort you. I wiſh you to return thither from whence you came: that is, together with us to acknowledge the truth, to acknowledge the Church of GOD, wherein no man may erre, to acknowledge the ſupremacy of our moſt reverend Father in God the Popes Holineſſe, which (as I ſaid) lineally taketh his deſcent from Peter, upon whom Chriſt promiſed before his death, to build his Church; the which ſupremacy or prerogative, the moſt ancient Fathers in all ages, in all times did acknowledge: and here he brought a place or two out of the Doctors, but eſpecially ſtayed upon a ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, which writeth in this manner, Totus orbis Chriſtianus in tranſmarinis, & longe remotis terris, Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſubjectus eſt, i. All the Chriſtian countries beyond the Sea are ſubject to the Church of Rome. Here you ſee, Maſter Ridley, that all Chriſtendome is ſubject to the Church of Rome. What ſhould ſtay you therefore to confeſſe the ſame with S. Auſten, and the other Fathers?

The biſhop of Lincoln perſwadeth Doct. Ridley to return to the Popes Church.

Dubitatur utrum hæc forma verborum ſit Auguſtini.

Then Maſter Ridley deſired his patience, to ſuffer him to ſpeak ſomewhat of the premiſſes, leſt the multitude of things might confound his memory; and having grant thereunto, he ſaid in this manner:

Ridley. My Lord, I moſt heartily thank your Lordſhip, as well for your gentleneſſe, as alſo for your ſobriety in talk, and for your good and favourable zeal in this learned exhortation, in the which I have marked eſpecially three points, which you uſed to perſwade me to leave my doctrine and religion, which I perfectly know and am throughly perſwaded to be grounded not upon mans imagination and decrees, but upon the infallible truth of Chriſts Goſpel, and not to look back, and to return to the Romiſh See, contrary to mine oath, contrary to the prerogative and Crown of this Realm, and eſpecially (which moveth me moſt) contrary to the expreſſed Word of God.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to the B. of Lincoln. 3. Points noted in the Biſhop of Lincolns oration.

The firſt point is this, that the See of Rome taking his beginning from Peter, upon whom you ſay Chriſt hath builded his Church, hath in all ages lineally from Biſhop to Biſhop been brought to this time.

1. The See of Rome founded upon Peter.

Secondly, that even the holy Fathers from time to time have in their writings confeſſed the ſame.

2. The See of Rome confirmed by old Doctors.

Thirdly, that in that I was once of the ſame opinion, and together with you I did acknowledge the ſame.

3 Doct. Ridley once of the ſame See.

Firſt, as touching the ſaying of Chriſt, from whence your Lordſhip gathereth the foundation of the Church upon Peter, truly the place is not ſo to be underſtood as you take it, as the circumſtance of the place will declare. For after that Chriſt had asked his Diſciples whom men judged him to be, and they had anſwered, that ſome had ſaid he was a Prophet, ſome Helias, ſome one thing, ſome another, then he ſaid, Whom ſay ye that I am? Then Peter ſaid, I ſay that thou art Chriſt, the Sonne of God. To whom Chriſt anſwered, I ſay, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam, i. Thou art Peter, and upon this ſtone I will build my Church, that is to ſay, upon this ſtone, not meaning Peter himſelf, as though he would have conſtitute a mortall man, ſo frail and brickle a foundation of his ſtable and unfallible Church; but upon this Rock-ſtone, that is, this confeſſion of thine, that I am the Son of God, I will build my Church. For this is the foundation and beginning of all Chriſtianity, with word, heart, and minde to confeſſe that Chriſt is the Son of God. Whoſoever beleeveth not this, Chriſt is not in him; and he cannot have the mark of Chriſt printed in his forehead, which confeſſeth not that Chriſt is the Son of God.

The Church not builded up on Peter.

The Church builded upon faith, not upon any perſon.

Therefore Chriſt ſaid unto Peter, that upon this rock, that is, upon this his confeſsion, that he was Chriſt the Sonne of God, he would build his Church; to declare, that without this faith no man can come to Chriſt: ſo that this belief, that Chriſt is the Sonne of God, is the foundation of our Chriſtianity, and the foundation of our Church. Here you ſee upon what foundation Chriſts Church is built, not upon the frailty of man, but upon the ſtable and infallible Word of God.

The words of Chriſt to Pete in Matth 16. expounded. Faith is the foundation of the Church.

Now as touching the lineall deſcent of the Biſhops in the See of Rome, true it is, that the Patriarchs triarks of Rome in the Apoſtles time, and long after, were great maintainers and ſetters forth of Chriſts glory, in the which above all other countries and regions there eſpecially was preached the true Goſpel, the Sacraments were moſt duely miniſtred; and as before Chriſts coming it was a city ſo valiant in proweſſe, and martiall affairs; that all the world was in a manner ſubject to it, and after Chriſts Paſſion, divers of the Apoſtles there ſuffered perſecution for the Goſpels ſake: ſo after that the Emperors, their hearts being illuminated, received the Goſpel, and became Chriſtians, the Goſpel there, as well for the great power and dominion, as for the fame of the place, flouriſhed moſt, whereby the Biſhops of that place were had in more reverence and honour, moſt eſteemed in all Councels and Aſſemblies; not becauſe they acknowledge them to be their Head, but becauſe the place was moſt reverenced and ſpoken of, for the great power and ſtrength of the ſame. As now here in England, the Biſhop of Lincoln in ſeſſions and ſittings hath the preheminence of the other Biſhops, not that he is the head and ruler of them; but for the dignity of the Biſhoprick (and therewith the people ſmiled.) Wherefore the Doctors in their writings have ſpoken moſt reverently of this See of Rome, and in their writings preferred it, and this is the prerogative which your Lordſhip did rehearſe the ancient Doctors to give to the See of Rome.

Lineall deſcent of the Biſhop of Rome.

Why the Biſhops of Rome have bin more eſteemed than the Biſhops of other Cities.

The prerogative that the Doctors give to the See of Rome, and for what cauſe.

The See of Rome ſo long as it continued in ſound doctrine, was worthy to be reverenced.

Semblably, I cannot nor dare not but commend, reverence, and honour the See of Rome, as long as it continued in the promotion, and ſetting forth of Gods glory, and in due preaching of the Goſpel, as it did many yeers after Chriſt. But after that the Biſhops of that See, ſeeking their own pride, and not Gods honour, began to ſet themſelves above Kings and Emperours, challenging to them the title of Gods Vicars, the dominion and ſupremacy over all the world, I cannot but with St. Gregory a Biſhop of Rome alſo, confeſſe that the Biſhop of that place is the very true Antichriſt, whereof Saint John ſpeaketh by the name of the Whore of Babylon, and ſay with the ſaid St. Gregory; He that maketh himſelf a Biſhop over all the world, is worſe than Antichriſt.

The Biſhop of Rome proved to be Antichriſt.

Now whereas you ſay that Saint Auguſtine ſhould ſeem not onely to give ſuch a prerogative, but alſo ſupremacy to the See of Rome, in that he ſaith, all the Chriſtian world is ſubject to the Church of Rome, and therefore ſhould give to that See a certain kinde of ſubjection: I am ſure that your Lordſhip knoweth, that in Saint Auſtens time there were four Patriarks, of Alexandria, Conſtantinople, Antioch, and Rome, which Patriarks had under them certain countries; as in England the Archbiſhop of Canterbury hath under him divers Biſhopricks in England and Wales, to whom he may be ſaid to be their Patriark. Alſo your Lordſhip knoweth right well, that at what time Saint Auſten wrote this book, he was then Biſhop in Africa. Farther you are not ignorant, that between Europe and Africa lieth the Sea called Mare mediterraneum, ſo that all the countries in Europe to him which is in Africa may be called Tranſmarinæ, countries beyond the Sea. Hereof St. Auſten ſaith, Totus orbis Chriſtianus in tranſmarinis & longe remotis terris, Eccleſiæ Romanæ ſubjectus eſt, i. All the Chriſtian countries beyond the Seas and far regions, are ſubject to the See of Rome. If I ſhould ſay all countries beyond the Sea, I do except England, which to me now being in England, is not beyond the Sea. In this ſenſe Saint Auſten ſaith, All the countries beyond the Sea are ſubject to the See of Rome, declaring thereby that Rome was one of the Sees of the four Patriarks, and under it Europe, by what ſubjection I pray you? onely for a preheminence, as we here in England ſay, that all the Biſhopricks in England are ſubject to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury and York.

The place of Saint Auſten anſwered.

Patriarks in the church in Auſtens time.

Countries beyond the Sea ſubject to Rome, how and in what reſpect.

For this preheminence alſo the other Doctors (as you recited) ſay, that Rome is the mother of Churches, as the Biſhoprick of Lincoln is mother to the Biſhoprick of Oxford, becauſe the Biſhoprick of Oxford came from the Biſhoprick of Lincoln, and they were both once one, and ſo is the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury mother to the other Biſhopricks which are in her Province. In like ſort the Archbiſhoprick of York is mother to Northbiſhopricks; and yet no man will ſay, that Lincoln, Canterbury or York, is ſupreme Head to other Biſhopricks; neither then ought we to confeſſe the See of Rome to be ſupreme Head, becauſe the Doctors in their writings confeſſe the See of Rome to be mother of Churches.

Rome may be mother of churches and yet no ſupreme head of churches.

Now where you ſay, I was once of the ſame religion which you are of, the truth is, I cannot but confeſſe the ſame. Yet ſo was Saint Paul a perſecutor of Chriſt. But in that you ſay, that I was one of you not long agone, in that I doing my meſſage to my Lord of Wincheſter, ſhould deſire him to ſtand ſtout in that groſſe opinion of the Supper of the Lord, in very deed I was ſent (as your Lordſhip ſaid) from the councell to my Lord of Wincheſter, to exhort him to receive alſo the true confeſſion of Juſtification; and becauſe he was very refractorious, I ſaid to him; Why, my Lord, what make you ſo great a matter herein? You ſee many Anabaptiſts riſe againſt the ſacrament of the Altar; I pray you my Lord be diligent in confounding of them: for at that time my Lord of Wincheſter and I had to do with two Anabaptiſts in Kent. In this ſenſe I willed my Lord to be ſtiff in the defence of the Sacrament againſt the deteſtable errours of Anabaptiſts, and not in the confirmation of that groſſe and carnall opinion now maintained.

In like ſort, as touching the Sermon which I made at Pauls Croſſe, you ſhall underſtand that there were at Pauls, and divers other places, fixed railing bils againſt the Sacrament, tearming it Jack of the Box, the ſacrament of the halter, round Robbin, with like unſeemly tearms; for the which cauſes, I, to rebuke the unreverent behaviour of certain evill diſpoſed perſons, preached as reverently of that matter as I might, declaring what eſtimation and reverence ought to be given to it, what danger enſued the miſhandling thereof, affirming in that ſacrament to be truely and verily the body and blood of Chriſt, effectuouſly by grace and ſpirit: which words the unlearned underſtanding not, ſuppoſed that I had meant of the groſſe and carnall being which the Romiſh decrees ſet forth, that a body having life and motion, ſhould be indeed under the ſhapes of bread and wine.

D. Ridley falſely charged to preach tranſubſtantiation at Pauls Croſſe.

Doctor Ridley miſtaken in his Sermon.

With that the Biſhop of Lincoln ſomewhat interrupting him, ſaid:

Linc. Well, M. Ridley, thus you wreſt places to your own pleaſure, for whereas S. Auguſtine ſaith, that the whole Chriſtian world is ſubject to the See of Rome without any limitation, and uſeth theſe words, In tranſmarinis, & longe remotis terris, only to expreſſe the latitude of the dominion of the See of Rome, willing thereby to declare that all the world, yea Countries farre diſtant from Rome, yet nevertheleſſe are ſubject to that See, yet you would wreſt it, and leave it only to Europe. I am ſure ye will not deny, but that totus mundus is more than Europe.

Lincoln againe replieth.

D. Ridley again anſwereth to the words of Auſten.

Rid. Indeed, my Lord, if St. Auſten had ſaid ſimpliciter totus mundus, and not added in tranſmarinis, it had been without limitation; but in that he ſaid, totus mundus in tranſmarinis partibus, all the countries beyond the ſeas, he himſelf doth limit the univerſall propoſition, declaring how far he meant by totus mundus.

The Biſhop not ſtaying for his anſwer, did proceed, ſaying:

Linc. Well, if I would ſtay upon this place, I could bring many moe places of the Fathers, for the confirmation thereof; but we have certain inſtructions, according to the which we muſt proceed, and came not hither to diſpute the matter with you, but onely to take your anſwers to certain Articles, and uſed this in the way of diſputation, in the which you interrupted me; wherefore I will return thither again.

Lincoln returneth again to his Oration.

“And why then do you alligate it to the city of Rome?

Ye muſt conſider that the Church of Chriſt lieth not hidden, but is a City on the mountain, and a candle on the candleſtick. Ponder with your ſelf, that the Church of Chriſt is catholica, catholike, which is deducted of κατὰ ὅλον, that is, per omnia: ſo that Chriſts Church is univerſally ſpread thorowout the world, not contained in the “allegation of places, not comprehended in the circuit of England, not contained in the compaſſe of Germany and Saxony, as your Church is.

Two powers, of the keys and of the ſword.

England how ſubject to the King, and how to the Pope.

Wherefore (Maſter Ridley) for Gods love be ye not ſingular; acknowledge with all the Realm the truth, it ſhall not be (as you alleadge) prejudiciall to the Crown; for the King and Queen their Majeſties have renounced that uſurped power taken of their predeceſſors, and juſtly have renounced it. For I am ſure you know that there are two powers, the one declared by the ſword, the other by the keyes. The ſword is given to Kings and Rulers of countries; the keyes were delivered by Chriſt to Peter, and of him left to all the ſucceſſors. As touching our goods, poſſeſſions, and lives, we with you acknowledge us ſubjects to the King and Queen, who hath the temporall ſword; but as concerning matters of religion, as touching Gods quarrell and his Word, we acknowledge another head: and as the King and the Queen their Highneſſe do in all worldly affairs juſtly challenge the prerogative and primacy, ſo in Spirituall and Eccleſiaſticall matters they acknowledge themſelves not to be heads and rulers, but members of Chriſts body. Why therefore ſhould ye ſtick at that matter, the which their Majeſties have forſaken and yeelded?

D. Ridley exhorted to ſubmit himſelf to the Pope.

Fear of puniſhment ſet before him.

Wherefore (Maſter Ridley) you ſhall not onely not do injury to the Crown, and be prejudiciall to their Majeſties honour, in acknowledging with all Chriſtendom the Popes Holineſſe to be ſupreme Head of Chriſts Church here militant in earth, but do a thing moſt dilectable in their ſight, and moſt deſired of their Holineſſe. Thus if you will do, revoking together all your errours, acknowledging with the reſidue of the Realm the common and the publike fault, you ſhall do that all men moſt heartily deſire; you ſhall bring quietneſſe to your conſcience, and health to your ſoul; then ſhall we with great joy, by the authority committed to us from the Cardinals Grace, receive you into the Church again, acknowledging you to be no longer a rotten, but a lively member of the ſame: but if you ſhall ſtill be ſingular, if you ſhall ſtill and obſtinately perſevere in your errours, ſtubbornly maintaining your former hereſies, then we muſt againſt our will, according to our Commiſſion, ſeparate you from us, and cut you off from the Church, leſt the rottenneſſe of one part in proceſſe of time putrifie and corrupt the whole body, then muſt we confeſſe and publiſh you to be none of ours; then muſt we yeeld you up to the temporall Judges, of whom, except it otherwiſe pleaſe the King and Queens Highneſſe, you muſt receive puniſhment by the Laws of this Realm, due for hereticks.

“But that office you your ſelves have aſſigned unto them.

Wherefore M. Ridley conſider your ſtate, remember your former degrees, ſpare you body, eſpecially conſider your ſoul, which Chriſt ſo dearly bought with his precious blood, do not you raſhly caſt away that which was precious in Gods ſight; enforce not us to do all that we may do, which is not onely to publiſh you to be none of us, to cut you off from the Church: we do not, nor cannot condemn you to die (as moſt untruely hath been reported of us) but that is the temporall Judges “office; we onely declare you to be none of the Church, and then muſt you, according to the tenor of them, and pleaſure of the Rulers, abide their determination, ſo that we, after that we have given you up to the temporall Rulers, have no further to do with you.

But I truſt (Maſter Ridley) we ſhall not have occaſion to do that we may. I truſt you will ſuffer us to reſt in that point of our Commiſſion, which we moſt heartily deſire, that is, upon recantation and repentance to receive you, to reconcile you, and again to adjoyn you to the unity of the Church.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to Lincoln.

Then Maſter Ridley, with often interruption, at length ſpake.

“He meaneth, in which no generall errour can be finally.

The church tyed to no place.

The catholikes do binde the church to a certain place, and that onely to Rome.

The Proteſtants binde the church to no one certain place, but followeth the confeſſion of the Word.

The counſell of Lyrinenſis what church to follow.

Ridley. My Lord, I acknowledge an unſpotted Church of Chriſt, in the which “no man can erre, without the which no man can be ſaved, the which is ſpread thorowout all the world, that is, the Congregation of the faithfull; neither do I alligate or binde the ſame to any one place, as you ſaid, but confeſſe the ſame to be ſpread thorowout all the world; and whereas Chriſts Sacraments are duely miniſtred, his Goſpel truely preached and followed, there doth Chriſts Church ſhine as a City upon an hill, and as a candle in the candleſtick: but rather it is ſuch as you, that would have the Church of Chriſt bound to a place, which appoint the ſame to Rome, that there and no where elſe is the foundation of Chriſts Church. But I am fully perſwaded that Chriſts Church is every where founded, in every place where his Goſpel is truely received, and effectually followed. And in that the Church of God is in doubt, I uſe herein the wiſe counſell of Vincentius Lyrinenſis, whom I am ſure you will allow, who giving precepts how the Catholike Church may be in all ſchiſmes and hereſies known, writeth in this manner: When (ſaith he) one part is corrupted with hereſies, then preferre the whole world before that one part; but if the greateſt part be infected, then preferre antiquity.

The greateſt part of chriſtianity infected with the church of Rome, and in what points.

In like ſort now, when I perceive the greateſt part of Chriſtianity to be infected with the poyſon of the See of Rome, I repair to the uſage of the Primitive Church, which I finde clean contrary to the Popes decrees, as in that the Prieſt receiveth alone, that it is made unlawfull to the Laity to receive in both kindes, and ſuch like: Wherefore it requireth, that I preferre the antiquity of the Primitive Church, before the novelty of the Romiſh Church.

“The Bohemians required that, and were ſhent for their labour.

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, theſe faults which you charge the See of Rome withall, are indeed no faults. For firſt, it was never forbid the Laity, but that they might if “they demanded, receive under both kindes. You know alſo, that Chriſt after his reſurrection, at what time, he went with his Apoſtles to Galilee, opened himſelf by breaking of bread. You know that Saint Paul after his long ſayling towards Great reaſons of the catholikes to prove the Communion under one kinde.

Rome brake bread, and that the Apoſtles came together in breaking of bread, which declareth that it is not unlawfull to mininſter the ſacrament under the form of bread onely: and yet the Church had juſt occaſion to decree, that the Laity ſhould receive in one kinde onely, thereby to take away an opinion of the unlearned, that Chriſt was not wholly both fleſh and blood under the form of bread. Therefore to take away their opinion, and to eſtabliſh better the peoples faith, the holy Ghoſt in the Church thought fit to decree, that the Laity ſhould receive onely in one kinde; and it is no news for the Church upon juſt conſideration to alter rites and ceremonies. For you reade in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that Saint Paul writing to certain of the Gentiles, which had received the Goſpel, biddeth them to abſtain à ſuffocato & ſanguine, from things ſtifled, and from blood, ſo that this ſeemeth be an expreſſe commandement; yet who will ſay but that it is lawfull to eat bloodings? how is it lawfull, but by the permiſſion of the Church.

Argument. The church did abrogate the precept of the Apoſtles of ſtrangled and bloodings: Ergo, the church likewiſe hath authority touching the miniſtration under both kindes.

Anſwer. The precept of the Apoſtles was but for a time, and for a purpoſe, by little and little to win the Jews.

Ridley. My Lord, ſuch things as St. Paul enjoyned to the Gentiles for a ſufferance, by a little and little to winne the Jews to Chriſt, were onely commandements of time, and reſpected not the ſucceſſors: but Chriſts Commandement, Do this (that is, that which he did in remembrance, which was not to miniſter in one kinde onely) was not a commandement for a time, but to perſevere to the worlds end.

But the Biſhop of Lincoln, not attending to this anſwer, without any ſtay proceeded in this Oration.

So that the Church ſeemeth to have authority by the holy Ghoſt, whom Chriſt ſaid he would ſend after his aſcenſion, which ſhould teach the Apoſtles all truth, to have power and juriſdiction to alter ſuch points of the Scripture, ever reſerving the foundation: but we came not, as I ſaid before, in this ſort to reaſon the matter with you, but have certain inſtructions miniſtred unto us, according to the tenor of the which we muſt proceed, propoſing certain Articles, unto the which we require your anſwer directly, either affirmatively, or negatively to every of them, either denying them or granting them without farther diſputations or reaſoning; for we have already ſtretched our inſtructions, in that we ſuffered you to debate and reaſon the matter, in ſuch ſort as we have done: the which Articles you ſhall hear now, and to morrow at eight of the clock in Saint Maries Church we will require and take your anſwers; and then according to the ſame proceed: and if you require a copy of them, you ſhall have it, pen, ink, and paper, alſo ſuch books as you ſhall demand, if they be to be gotten in the Univerſity.

The Articles.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. Nos Iohannes Lincolne, Iacobus Glioceſt. & Iohannes Briſtol, Epiſcopi. per reverendiſſ. dominum Reginaldum miſeratione divina S.Mariæ in Coſmedin, &c.

Articles joyntly and ſeverally miniſtred to D. Ridley and D. Latimer by the Popes Deputies.

1 We do object to thee Nicholas Ridley, and to thee Hugh Latimer, jointly and ſeverally, firſt, that thou Nicholas Ridley in this high Univerſity of Oxford, Anno 1554. in the moneths of April, May, June, July, or in ſome one or moe of them, haſt affirmed, and openly defended and maintained, and in many other times and places beſides, that the true and naturall body of Chriſt, after the conſecration of the Prieſt, is not really preſent in the ſacrament of the Altar.

2 Item, that in the yeer and moneths aforeſaid thou haſt publikely affirmed and defended, that in the ſacrament of the Altar remaineth ſtill the ſubſtance of bread and wine.

3 Item, that in the ſaid yeer and moneths thou haſt openly affirmed, and obſtinately maintained, that in the Maſſe is no propitiatory ſacrifice for the quick and the dead.

4 Item, that in the yeer, place, and moneths aforeſaid, theſe thy foreſaid aſſertions ſolemnly have been condemned, by the ſcholaſticall cenſure of this ſchool, as hereticall and contrary to the Catholike faith, by the worſhipfull Maſter Doctor Weſton, Prolocutor then of the Convocation houſe, as alſo by other learned men of both the Univerſities.

5 Item, that all and ſingular the premiſſes be true, notorious, famous, and openly known by publike fame, as well to them neer hand, and alſo to them in diſtant places far off.

Examination upon the ſaid Articles.

ALl theſe articles I thought good here to place together, that as often as hereafter rehearſall ſhall be of any of them, the Reader may have recourſe hither, and peruſe the ſame, and not to trouble the ſtory with ſeverall repetitions thereof.

D. Ridley examined upon the articles aforeſaid.

Lincoln. After theſe Articles were read, the Biſhops took counſell together. At the laſt the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid, Theſe are the very ſame Articles which you in open diſputation here in the Univerſity did maintain and defend. What ſay you unto the firſt? I pray you anſwer affirmatively, or negatively.

Ridley. Why, my Lord, I ſuppoſed your gentleneſſe had been ſuch, that you would have given me ſpace untill to morrow, that upon good adviſement I might bring a determinate anſwer.

Linc. Yea, M. Ridley, I mean not that your anſwers now ſhall be prejudiciall to your anſwers to morrow. I will take your anſwers at this time, and yet notwithſtanding it ſhall be lawfull to you to adde, diminiſh, alter, and change of theſe anſwers to morrow what you will.

The catholikes promiſe fair, but they perform nothing.

Rid. Indeed, in like manner at our laſt diſputations I had many things promiſed, and few performed. It was ſaid, that after diſputations I ſhould have a copy thereof, and licenſe to change mine anſwers, as I ſhould think good. It was meet alſo that I ſhould have ſeen what was written by the Notaries at that time. So your Lordſhip pretended great gentleneſſe in giving me a time; but this gentleneſſe is the ſame that Chriſt had of the high Prieſts. For you, as your Lordſhip ſaith, have no power to condemn me, neither at any time to put a man to death: ſo in like ſort the high Prieſts ſaid, that it was not lawfull for them to put any man to death, but committed Chriſt to Pilate, neither would ſuffer him to abſolve Chriſt, although he ſought all the means therefore that he might. Then ſpake Doctor Weſton, one of the audience.

The high prieſts had not power to put Chriſt to death but they had power to commit him to Pilate, neither would they ſuffer him to abſolve Chriſt.

West. What? do you make the King Pilate?

D. Weſton ſhooteth his bolt.

Rid. No, Maſter Doctor; I do but compare your deeds with Caiaphas his deeds and the high Prieſts, which would condemne no man to death, as ye will not, and yet would not ſuffer Pilate to abſolve and deliver Chriſt.

Linc. Maſter Ridley, we minde not but that you ſhall enjoy the benefit of anſwering to morrow, and will take your anſwers now as now, to morrow you ſhall change, take out, adde, and alter what you will. In the mean ſeaſon we require you to anſwer directly to every Article, either affirmatively or negatively.

The proteſtation of D. Ridley.

Rid. Seeing you appoint me a time to anſwer to morrow, and yet will take mine anſwers out of hand: firſt, I require the Notaries, to take and write my proteſtation, that in no point I acknowledge your authority, or admit you to be my Judges, in that point you are authorized from the Pope. Therefore whatſoever I ſhall ſay or do, I proteſt, I neither ſay it, neither do it willingly, thereby to admit the authority of the Pope; and if your Lordſhip will give me leave, I will ſhew the cauſes, which move me thereunto.

Linc. No, M. Ridley, we have inſtructions to the contrary. We may not ſuffer you.

Rid. I will be ſhort; I pray your Lordſhips ſuffer me to ſpeak in few words.

D. Ridley cannot be ſuffered to ſpeak.

Linc. No, Maſter Ridley, we may not abuſe the hearers ears.

Rid. Why, my Lord, ſuffer me to me to ſpeak three words.

Linc. Well, Maſter Ridley, to morrow you ſhall ſpeak forty. The time is far paſt; therefore we require your anſwer determinately. What ſay you to the firſt article? and thereupon rehearſed the ſame.

The reall preſence in the ſacrament may have a double ſenſe.

Equivocation in the word really.

How the body of Chriſt may be ſaid to be really, and how not really in the ſacrament.

Rid. My proteſtation alwayes ſaved, that by this mine anſwer I do not condeſcended to your authority, in that you are Legate to the Pope, I anſwer thus: In a ſenſe the firſt article is true, and in a ſenſe it is falſe; for if you take really for verè, for ſpiritually by grace and efficacy, then it is true that the naturall body and blood of Chriſt is in the Sacrament verè & realiter, indeed and really; but if you take theſe tearms ſo groſly, that you would conclude thereby a naturall body having motion, to be contained under the forms of bread and wine verè & realiter, then really is not the body and blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament, no more than the holy Ghoſt is in the element of water in our Baptiſm. Becauſe this anſwer was not underſtood, The Notaries wiſt not how to note it; wherefore the Biſhop of Lincoln willed him to anſwer either affirmatively, or negatively, either to grant the article, or to deny it.

2 Queſtions under one.

The Papiſts & Proteſtants in granting the preſence do agree only in the manner of being they differ.

How Chriſts body is effectually received in the Sacrament.

Ridley. My Lord, you know that where any equivocation (which is a word having two ſignifications) is, except diſtinction be given, no direct anſwer can be made; for it is one of Ariſtotles fallacies, containing two queſtions under one, the which cannot be ſatiſfied with one anſwer. For both you and I agree herein, that in the Sacrament is the very true and naturall body and blood of Chriſt, even that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which aſcended into heaven, which ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father, which ſhall come from thence to judge the quick and the dead, onely we differ in modo, in the way and manner of being: we confeſſe all one thing to be in the Sacrament, and diſſent in the manner of being there. I being fully by Gods Word thereunto perſwaded, confeſſe Chriſts naturall body to be in the Sacrament indeed by ſpirit and grace, becauſe that whoſoever receiveth worthily that bread and wine, receiveth effectuouſly Chriſts body, and drinketh his blood, that is, he is made effectually partaker of his paſſion; and you make a groſſer kinde of being, encloſing a naturall, a lively, and a moving body, under the ſhape or form of bread and wine.

How Chriſt may be granted to be really in the ſacrament, and how not.

Now, this difference conſidered, to the queſtion thus I anſwer, that in the Sacrament of the Altar is the naturall body and blood of Chriſt verè & realiter, indeed and really, if you take theſe tearms indeed and really for ſpiritually by grace and efficacy; for ſo every worthy receiver receiveth the very true body of Chriſt: but if you mean really and indeed, ſo that thereby you would include a lively and a moveable body under the forms of bread and wine, then in that ſenſe is not Chriſts body in the Sacrament really and indeed.

This anſwer taken and penned of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Lincoln propoſed the ſecond queſtion or article. To whom he anſwered:

What change is in the ſacramentall bread. Sacramentall mutation.

The ſubſtance of bread and wine in the ſacrament not changed.

Rid. Alwayes my proteſtation reſerved, I anſwer thus; that in the Sacrament is a certain change, in that that bread, which was before common bread, is now made a lively preſentation of Chriſts body, and not onely a figure, but effectuouſly repreſenteth his body, that even as the mortall body was nouriſhed by that viſible bread, ſo is the internall ſoul fed with the heavenly food of Chriſts body, which the eyes of faith ſeeth, as the bodily eyes ſeeth onely bread. Such a Sacramentall mutation I grant to be in the bread and wine, which truely is no ſmall change, but ſuch a change as no mortall man can make, but onely that Omnipotency of Chriſts Word.

Then the Biſhop of Lincoln willed him to anſwer directly, either affirmatively or negatively, without further declaration of the matter. Then he anſwered:

Compariſon between the ſacrament of the Communion and of Baptiſm.

Rid. That notwithſtanding the Sacramentall mutation of the which he ſpake, and all the Doctors confeſſed, the true ſubſtance and nature of bread and wine remaineth, with the which the body is in like ſort nouriſhed, as the ſoul is by grace and ſpirit with the body of Chriſt. Even ſo in Baptiſme the body is waſhed with the viſible water, and the ſoul is cleanſed from all filth by the viſible holy Ghoſt, and yet the water ceaſeth not to be water, but keepeth the nature of water ſtill: In like ſort in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper the bread ceaſeth not to be bread.

What difference the Papiſts put between the ſacrament of the Communion and Baptiſm.

Then the Notaries penned, that he anſwered affirmatively to the ſcond article. The Biſhop of Lincoln declared a difference between the ſacrament of the Altar and Baptiſm, becauſe that Chriſt ſaid not by the water, this is the holy Ghoſt, as he did by the bread; This is my body.

Then M. Ridley recited S. Auſten which conferred both the ſacraments the one with the other: but the Biſhop of Lincoln notwithſtanding thereupon recited the third article, and required a direct anſwer. To whom Ridley ſaid:

Anſwer to the third article.

Propitiatory ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a derogation to Chriſts paſſion.

Rid. Chriſt, as Saint Paul writeth, made one perfect ſacrifice for the ſinnes of the whole world, neither can any man reiterate that ſacrifice of his, and yet is the Communion an acceptable ſacrifice to God of praiſe and thankſgiving; but to ſay that thereby ſins are taken away (which wholly and perfectly was done by Chriſts paſſion, of the which the Communion is onely a memory) that is a great derogation of the merits of Chriſts paſſion: for the Sacrament was inſtituted, that we receiving it, and thereby recogniſing and remembring his paſſion, ſhould be partakers of the merits of the ſame. For otherwiſe doth this Sacrament take upon it the office of Chriſts paſſion, whereby it might follow, that Chriſts died in vain.

The Notaries penned this his anſwer to be affirmatively. Then ſaid the Biſhop of Lincoln:

Unbloody ſacrifice.

Lin. Indeed as you alleadge out of Saint Paul, Chriſt made one perfect oblation for all the whole world, that is, that bloody ſacrifice upon the Croſſe: yet neverthelesse he hath left this ſacrifice, but not bloody, in the remembrance of that, by the which ſins are forgiven; the which is no derogation of Chriſts paſſion.

Then recited the Biſhop of Lincoln the fourth article. to the which M. Ridley anſwered:

Anſwer to the fourth article.

Rid. That in ſome part the fourth was true, and in ſome part falſe; true, in that thoſe his aſſertions were condemned as hereſies, although unjuſtly; falſe, in that it was ſaid they were condemned

Queen Mary.

demned ſcientia ſcholaſtica, in that the diſputations were in ſuch ſort ordered, that it was far from any ſchool act.

This anſwer penned of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Lincoln rehearſed the fifth article. To the which he anſwered:

Rid. That the premiſſes were in ſuch ſort true, as in theſe his anſwers he had declared. Whether that all men ſpake evill of them, he knew not, in that he came not ſo much abroad to hear what every man reported.

This anſwer alſo written of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid:

Doctor Ridley aſſigned to appear again the next day.

Linc. To morrow at eight of the clock you ſhall appear before us in S. Maries Church, and then becauſe we cannot well agrée upon your anſwer to the firſt article (for it was long before he was underſtood) if it will pleaſe you to write your anſwer, you ſhall have pen, ink, and paper, and books, ſuch as you ſhall require; but if you write any thing ſaving your anſwers to theſe articles, we will not receive it: ſo he charging the Major with him, declaring alſo to the Major that he ſhould ſuffer him to have a pen and ink, diſmiſſed M. Ridley, and ſent for M. Latimer, who being brought to the Divinity ſchool, there tarried till they called for him.

Maſter Latimer appeareth before the Commiſſioners.

M. Latimer appeareth before the deputies.

Now after Maſter Ridley was committed to the Maior, then the Biſhop of Lincoln commanded the Bayliffs to bring in the other priſoner, who eftſoons as he was placed, ſaid to the Lords:

Lat. My Lords, if I appear again, I pray you not to ſend for me untill you be ready. For I am an old man, and it is great hurt to mine old age to tarry ſo long gazing upon the cold wals. Then the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid:

Lin. M. Latimer, I am ſorry you are brought ſo ſoon, although it is the Bayliffs fault, and not mine; but it ſhall be amended.

The order of M. Latimers apparell.

Then Maſter Latimer bowed his knée down to the ground, holding his hat in his hand, having a kerchief on his head, and upon it a night-cap or two, and a great cap (ſuch as towns-men uſe, with two broad flaps to button under the chin) wearing an old thred-bare Briſtow frize gown girded to his body with a penny leather girdle, at the which hanged by a long ſtring of leather his Teſtament, and his ſpectacles without caſe, depending about his neck upon his breſt. After this the Biſhop of Lincoln began on this manner:

The Oration of Lincoln to M. Latimer.

Linc. Maſter Latimer, you ſhall underſtand, that I and my Lords here have a Commiſſion from my Lord Cardinall Pools Grace, Legate à latere, to this Realm of England, from our moſt reverend Father in God, the Popes Holineſſe, to examine you upon certain opinions and aſſertions of yours, which you as well here openly in diſputations in the yéer of our Lord, 1554. as at ſundry and at divers other times did affirm, maintain, and obſtinately defend. In the which Commiſſion be ſpecially two points; the one which we muſt deſire you is, that if you ſhall now recant, revoke, and diſannull theſe your errours, and together with all this Realm, yea all the world confeſſe the truth, we upon due repentance of your part ſhould receive you, reconcile you, acknowledge you no longer a ſtrayed ſhéep, but adjoyn you again to the unity of Chriſts Church, from the which you in the time of ſchiſme fell. So that it is no new place to the which I exhort you; I deſire you to return thither from whence you went.

Anno 1555.

But this church then ſtandeth upon the truth of Gods word, and not upon the fantaſie of man.

Conſider Maſter Latimer, that without the unity of the Church is no ſalvation, and in the Church can be no errours. Therefore what ſhould ſtay you to confeſſe that which all the Realm confeſſeth, to forſake that which the King and Quéen their Majeſties have renounced, and all the Realm recanted: it was a common errour, and it is now of all confeſſed; it ſhall be no more ſhame to you, than it was to us all. Conſider, Maſter Latimer, that within theſe twenty yéers this Realm alſo with all the world confeſſed one Church, acknowledged in Chriſts Church an Head, and by what means and for what occaſion it cut off it ſelf from the reſt of Chriſtianity, and renounced that which in all times and ages was confeſſed, it is well known, and might be now declared upon what good foundation the Sée of Rome was forſaken, ſave that we muſt ſpare them that are dead, to whom the reherſall would be opprobrious: it is no uſurped power, as it hath béen tearmed, but founded upon Peter by Chriſt, a ſure foundation, a perfect builder, as by divers places, as well of the ancient Fathers, as by the expreſſe Word of God may be proved.

How you ſpared the dead, your own acts can bear witneſſe.

The Popes authority.

With that M. Latimer, which before leaned his head to his hand, began ſomewhat to remove his cap and kerchief from his ears.

ποιμαίνειν, ſignifieth to feed, or to rule.

The Biſhop proceeded, ſaying; for Chriſt ſpake expreſly to Peter, ſaying; Paſce oves meas, & rege oves meas, the which word doth not onely declare a certain ruling of Chriſts flock, but includeth alſo a certain preheminence and government; and therefore is the King called Rex à regendo: ſo that in ſaying rege, Chriſt declared a power which he gave to Peter, which juriſdiction and power Peter by hand delivered to Clement, and ſo in all ages hath it remained in the Sée of Rome. This if you ſhall confeſſe with us, and acknowledge with all the Realm your errours and falſe aſſertions, then ſhall you do that which we moſt deſire, then ſhall we reſt upon the firſt part of our Commiſſion, then ſhall we receive you, acknowledge you one of the Church, and according to the authority given unto us, miniſter unto you, upon due repentance, the benefit of abſolution, to the which the King and Quéen their Majeſties were not aſhamed to ſubmit themſelves, although they of themſelves were unſpotted, and therefore néeded no reconciliation: yet leſt the putrifaction and rottenneſſe of all the body might be noyſome, and do damage to the head alſo, they (as I ſaid) moſt humbly ſubmitted themſelves to my Lord Cardinall his Grace, by him, as a Legate to the Popes Holineſſe, to be partakers of the reconciliation. But if you ſhall ſtubbornly perſevere in your blindeneſſe, if you will not acknowledge your errours, if you as you ſtand now alone, will be ſingular in your opinions, if by ſchiſme and hereſie you will divide your ſelf from your Church, then muſt we procéed to the ſecond part of the Commiſſion, which we would be loath to do, that is, not to condemne you, for that we cannot do (that the temporall ſword of the Realm, and "not we, will do) but to ſeparate you from us, acknowledge you to be none of us, to renounce you as no member of the Church, to declare that you are filius perditionis, a loſt childe, and as you are a rotten member of the Church, ſo to cut you off from the Church, and ſo to commit you to the temporall Judges, permitting them to procéed againſt you, according to the tenor of their laws.

Benefit of the Popes abſolution offered to M. Latimer.

" Qui tradiderunt me tibi majus peccatum habent, ſaith Chriſt.

Perſwaſſons uſed to M. Latimer to return to the unity of the Popes Church.

Therefore Maſter Latimer, for Gods love conſider your eſtate, remember you are a learned man, you have taken degrées in the School, Reaſons to perſwade the fleſh, but not to ſatisfie conſcience.

borne the office of a Biſhop, remember you are an old man, ſpare your body, accelerate not your death, and ſpecially remember your ſoules health, quiet of your conſcience, conſider that if you ſhould die in this ſtate, you ſhall be a ſtinking ſacrifice to God; for it is the cauſe that maketh the Martyr, and not the death: conſider that if you dye in this ſtate, you dye without grace, for without the Church can be no ſalvation. Let not vaine glory have the upper hand, humiliate your ſelf, captivate your underſtanding, ſubdue your reaſon, ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the Church, do not force us to do all that we may do, let us reſt in that part which we moſt heartily deſire, and I, for my part (then the Biſhop put off his cap) again with all my heart exhort you.

After the Biſhop had ſomewhat pauſed, then M. Latimer lift up his head (for before he leaned on his elbow) and asked whether his Lordſhip had ſaid; and the Biſhop anſwered, Yea.

Lat. Then will your Lordſhip give me leave to ſpeak a word or two?

Linc. Yea, Maſter Latimer, ſo that you uſe a modeſt kinde of talk, without railing or taunts.

M. Latimer hath leave to ſit down.

Lat. I beſeech your Lordſhip, licence me to ſit down.

Linc. At your pleaſure, Maſter Latimer, take as much eaſe as you will.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to the B. of Lincolne.

The univerſall church hath not his foundation onely in Rome.

Argument. Chriſt bade Peter regere, govern his people: Ergo, the Pope muſt play the Rex, to raign over Kings and Emperors.

Lat Your Lordſhip gently exhorted me in many words to come to the unity of the Church. I confeſſe (my Lord) a Catholike Church, ſpread thorowout all the world, in the which no man may erre, without the which unity of the Church no man can be ſaved: but I know perfectly by Gods Word, that this Church is in all the world, and hath not his foundation in Rome onely, as you ſay; and me thought your Lordſhip brought a place out of the Scriptures to confirm the ſame, that there was a juriſdiction given to Peter, in that Chriſt bade him regere, govern his people. Indeed, my Lord, Saint Peter did well and truely his office, in that he was bid regere: but ſince the Biſhops of Rome have taken a new kinde of regere. Indeed, they ought to regere, but how my Lord? not as they will themſelves: but this regere muſt be hedged in and ditched in. They muſt regere, but ſecundum Verbum Dei; they muſt rule, but according to the Word of God.

Regere ſeeundum verbum, turned to regere ſecundum vnluntatem. Deut. 21.

But the Biſhops of Rome have turned regere ſecundum Verbum Dei, into regere ſecundum voluntatem ſuam: they have turned the rule according to the Word of God, into the rule according to their own pleaſures, and as it pleaſeth them beſt: as there is a book ſet forth which hath divers points in it, and amongſt other, this point is one, which your Lordſhip went about to prove by this word regere, and the argument which he bringeth forth for the proof of that matter, is taken out of Deuteronomy, where it is ſaid; if there ariſeth any controverſie among the people, the Prieſts, Levitici generis, of the order of Levi, ſhall decide the matter ſecundum Legem Dei, according to the Law of God; ſo it muſt be taken. This book perceiving this authority to be given to the Prieſts of the old Law, taketh occaſion to prove the ſame to be given to the Biſhops and other the Clergy of the new Law: but in proving this matter, whereas it was ſaid there, as the Prieſts of the order of Levi ſhould determine the matter according to Gods Law, that (according to Gods Law) is left out, and onely is recited, as the Prieſts of the order of Levi ſhall decide the matter, ſo it ought to be taken of the people; a large authority I enſure you. What gelding of Scripture is this? what clipping of Gods coin? With the which tearms the audience ſmiled. This is much like the regere which your Lordſhip talked of. Nay, nay, my Lords, we may not give ſuch authority to the Clergie, to rule all things as they will. Let them keep themſelves within their Commiſſion. Now I truſt, my Lord, I do not rail yet.

Clipping of Gods Scriptures by the Catholikes.

Lincoln. No, Maſter Latimer, your talk is more like taunts than railing: but in that I have not read the book which you blame ſo much, nor know not of any ſuch, I can ſay nothing therein.

The author of this book was D. Brooks, which there was in the Commiſſion.

Lat. Yes, my Lord, the book is open to be read, and is intituled to one which is Biſhop of Gloceſter, whom I never knew, neither did at any time ſee him to my knowledge. With that the people laughed, becauſe the Biſhop of Gloceſter ſate there in Commiſſion.

Then the Biſhop of Gloceſter ſtood up, and ſaid it was his book.

Lat. Was it yours, my Lord, Indeed I knew not your Lordſhip, neither ever did ſee you before, neither yet ſee you now, through the brightneſſe of the Sun ſhining betwixt you and me. Then the audience laughed again; and Maſter Latimer ſpake unto them, ſaying; Why, my Maſters, this is no laughing matter. I anſwer upon life and death. Væ vobis qui ridetis nunc, quoniam flebitis.

The Biſhop of Lincoln commanded ſilence, and then ſaid:

Linc. Maſter Latimer, if you had kept your ſelf within your bounds, if you had not uſed ſuch ſcoffs and taunts, this had not been done.

Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter ſpeaketh.

After this the Biſhop of Gloceſter ſaid in excuſing of his book.

Gloceſter. Maſter Latimer, hereby every man may ſee what learning you have.

Then M. Latimer interrupted him, ſaying:

The catholikes how unreaſonable they are in uſing of men.

Lat. Loe you look for learning at my hands which have gone ſo long to the ſchool of oblivion, making the bare walls my Library, keeping me ſo long in priſon without book, or pen and ink; and now you let me looſe to come and anſwer to articles. You deal with me as though two were appointed to fight for life and death, and over night the one through friends and favour is cheriſhed, and hath good counſell given him how to encounter with his enemy. The other, for envy or lack of friends, all the whole night is ſet in the ſtocks. In the morning when they ſhall meet, the one is in ſtrength and luſty; the other is ſtark of his limbs, and almoſt dead for feebleneſſe. Think you, that to run thorow this man with a Spear is not a goodly victory?

But the Biſhop of Gloceſter interrupting his anſwer, proceeded, ſaying:

The catholikes alleadge the Scriptures, but take not all.

Gloc. I went not about to recite any places of Scripture in that place of my book; for then if I had not recited it faithfully, you might have had juſt occaſion of reprehenſion: but I onely in that place formed an argument à majore, in this ſenſe; that if in the old Law the Prieſts had power to decide matters of controverſies, much more then ought the authority to be given to the Clergie in the new Law: and I pray you in this point what availeth their rehearſall, ſecundum legem Dei?

Lat. Yes, my Lord, very much. For I acknowledge authority to be given to the ſpiritualty to decide matter of religion, and as my Lord ſaid even now, to regere: but they muſt do it ſecundum Verbum Dei, and not ſecundum voluntatem ſuam, according to the Word and Law of God, and not after their own will, after their own imaginations and fantaſies.

The Biſhop of Gloceſter would have ſpoken more, ſaving that the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid, that they came not to diſpute with Maſter Latimer, but to take his determinate anſwers to their articles, and ſo began to propoſe the ſame articles which were propoſed to Maſter Ridley. But Maſter Latimer interrupted him, ſpeaking to the Biſhop of Glocester: Well my Lord, I could wiſh more faithfull dealing with Gods word, and not to leave out a part, and ſnatch a part here, and another there, but to rehearſe the whole faithfully.

But the Biſhop of Lincolne, not attending to this ſaying of Maſter Latimer, proceeded in rehearſing the Articles in forme and ſenſe as I declared before in the examination of the Articles, propoſed to Maſter Ridley, and required Maſter Latimers anſwer to the firſt. Then Maſter Latimer making his proteſtation, that notwithſtanding theſe his anſwers it ſhould not be taken that thereby he would acknowledge any authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, ſaying that he was the King and Queen their Maieſties ſubiect, and not the Popes, neither could ſerve two Maſters at one time, except he ſhould firſt renounce one of them; required the Notaries ſo to take his proteſtation, that whatſoever he ſhould ſay or do, it ſhould not be taken as though he did thereby agree to any authoritie that came from the Biſhop of Rome.

The proteſtation of M. Latimer.

1 Article.

Linc. The Biſhop of Lincolne ſaid, that his proteſtation ſhould be ſo taken; but he required him to anſwer briefly, affirmatively, or negatively to the firſt Article, and ſo recited the ſame again: and Maſter Latimer anſwered as followeth.

The body of Chriſt in the Sacrament received by the ſpirit and grace.

Lati. I do not deny (my Lord) that in the Sacrament by ſpirit and grace is the very bodie and blood of Chriſt, becauſe that every man, by receiving bodily that bread and wine, ſpiritually receiveth the bodie and blood of Chriſt, and is made partaker thereby of the merits of Chriſts paſſion: but I denie that the bodie and blood of Chriſt is in ſuch ſort in the Sacrament as you would have it.

M. Latimer againſt the groſſe and carnall being of Chriſt in the ſacrament.

Linc. Then Maſter Latimer, you anſwer affirmatively.

Lati. Yea, if you mean of that groſſe and carnall being, which you do take.

The Notaries tooke his anſwer to be affirmatively.

2 Article.

Linc. What ſay you M. Latimer to the ſecond Article? and recited the ſame.

What change is in the bread and wine in the ſacrament, not in the nature but in the dignity of repreſenting.

Lati. There is, my Lord, a change in the bread and wine, and ſuch a change as no power, but the omnipotencie of God can make, in that that which before was bread, ſhould now have that dignitie to exhibit Chriſts bodie, and yet the bread is ſtill bread, and the wine ſtill wine: for the change is not in the nature, but in the dignity, becauſe now that which was common bread hath the dignitie to exhibit Chriſts bodie: for whereas it was common bread, it is now no more common bread, neither ought it to be ſo taken, but as holy bread ſanctified by Gods word.

With that the Biſhop of Lincolne ſmiled, ſaying:

Linc. Lo Maſter Latimer, ſee what ſtedfaſtneſſe is in your doctrine. That which you abhorred and deſpiſed moſt, you now moſt eſtabliſh: for whereas you moſt rayled at holy bread, you now make your communion holy bread.

Lati. Tuſh, a ruſh for holy bread. I ſay the bread in the communion is an holy bread indeed.

But the Biſhop of Lincolne interrupted him, and ſaid:

Subſtance of bread and wine in the ſacrament unchanged.

Linc. O, you make a difference between holy bread and holy bread (with that the audience laughed.) Well Maſter Latimer, is not this your anſwer, that the ſubſtance of bread and wine remaineth after the words of conſecration?

Difference between Chriſts holy bread, and the Popes holy bread.

Lati. Yes verily, it muſt needs be ſo. For Chriſt himſelf calleth it bread, St. Paul calleth it bread, the Doctors confeſſe the ſame, the nature of a Sacrament confirmeth the ſame, and I call it holy bread, not in that I make no difference betwixt your holy bread and this, but for the holy office which it beareth, that is, to be a figure of Chriſts bodie, and not only a bare figure, but effectually to repreſent the ſame.

So the Notaries penned his anſwer to be affirmatively.

3 Article.

Linc, What ſay you to the third queſtion? and recited the ſame.

Lati. No, no, my Lord, Chriſt made one perfect ſacrifice for all the whole world, neither can any man offer him again, neither can the Prieſt offer up Chriſt again for the ſinnes of man, which he took away by offering himſelfe once for all (as Saint Paul ſaith) upon the croſſe, neither is there any propitiation for our ſins, ſaving his croſſe only.

So the Notaries penned his anſwer to this Article alſo to be affirmatively.

4 Article.

Linc. What ſay you to the fourth, Maſter Latimer? and recited it. After the recitall whereof, when Maſter Latimer anſwered not, the Biſhop asked him whether he heard him or no?

Lati. Yes, but I do not underſtand what you mean thereby.

Linc. Marie onlie this, that theſe your aſſertions were condemned by Maſter Doctor Weſton as hereſies; is it not ſo M. Latimer?

Lati. Yes, I thinke they were condemned. But how unjuſtly, he that ſhall be Judge of all, knoweth.

So the Notaries took his anſwer, to this Article alſo to be affirmatively.

5 Article.

Linc. What ſay you M. Latimer to the fift Article? and recited it.

Lati. I know not what you meane by theſe termes. I am no Lawyer, I would you would propoſe the matter plainly.

Linc In that we proceed according to the Law, we muſt uſe their termes alſo. The meaning only is this, that theſe your aſſertions are notorious, evill ſpoken of, and yet common and frequent in the mouthes of the people.

Lati. I cannot tell how much, nor what men talke of them. I come not ſo much among them, in that I have been ſecluded a long time. What men report of them I know not, nor care not.

This anſwer taken, the Biſhop of Lincolne ſaid:

M. Latimer aſſigned to appeare the next day again.

Linc. Maſter Latimer, we mean not that theſe your anſwers ſhall be prejudiciall to you. To morrow you ſhall appeare before us again, and then it ſhall be lawfull for you to altar and change what you will. We give you reſpite till to morrow, truſting that after you have pondered well all things againſt to morrow, you will not be aſhamed to confeſſe the truth.

Lati. Now my Lord I pray you give me licence in three words to declare the cauſes why I have refuſed the authoritie of the Pope.

Linc. Nay M. Latimer, to morrow you ſhall have licence to ſpeak 40. words.

Lati. Nay my Lords, I beſeech you to do with me now as it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhips: I pray you let not me be troubled to morrow again.

Linc. Yes Maſter Latimer, you muſt needs appear again to morrow.

Lati. Truly my Lord, as for my part I require no reſpite, for I am at a point; you ſhall give me reſpits in vain: therefore I pray you let me not trouble you to morrow.

Linc. Yes, for we truſt, God will worke with you againſt to morrow. There is no remedie you muſt needs appear again to morrow at eight of the clock in Saint Maries Church. And forthwith the Biſhop charged the Maior with Maſter Latimer, and diſmiſſed him, and then brake up their Seſſion for that day, about one of the clock at afternoon.

Here followeth the ſecond Seſsion.

The next daies Seſſion.

THe next day following (which was the firſt day of October) ſomewhat after eight of the clock, the ſayd Lords repaired to Saint Maries Church, and after they were ſet in a high throne well trimmed with cloth of tiſſew and ſilke, then appeared Maſter Ridley, who was ſet at a framed table a good ſpace from the Biſhops feet, which table had a ſilk cloth caſt over it, the which place was compaſſed about with framed ſeats in quadrate forme, partly for Gentlemen which repaired thither (for this was the Seſſion day alſo of goale delivery) and heads of the Univerſity to ſit, and partly to keep off the preaſſe of the audience: for the whole body, as well of the Univerſitie as of the Town, came thither to ſee the end of theſe two perſons. After Maſter Ridleyes appearance, and the ſilence of the audience, the Biſhop of Lincolne ſpake in manner following:

D. Ridleys appearance before the deputies.

The words of M. White B. of Lincolne, to B. Ridley about his cap.

Linc. Maſter Ridley, yeſterday when that we challenged you for not uncovering your head, you excuſed your ſelf of that whereof no man accuſed you, in ſaying you did not put on your cap for any obſtinacie towards us, which as touching our own perſons deſired no ſuch obedience of you, but only in reſpect of them whoſe perſons we bear; neither (you ſayd) for any contempt that you bear to this worſhipfull audience, which although juſtly may, yet in this caſe require no ſuch humility of you; neither for any derogation of honor to my Lord Cardinals grace, in that he is deſcended from the regall blood, in that he is a man moſt noble, both for his excellent qualities and ſingular learning: for as touching thoſe points, you ſayd you with all humilitie would honor, reverence, and worſhip his grace; but in that he is Legate to the moſt reverend Father in God the Popes holineſſe (with that the Biſhop with all then preſent, put off their caps, but Maſter Ridley moved not his) you ſayd you ne could, ne would by any means be induced to give him honor: but foraſmuch as this is the point as we told you yeſterday, why we require honor and reverence of you, we tell you now as we did then, except you take the pains to move your bonet, we will take the pains to cauſe your bonet to be taken from you, except you pretend ſickneſſe, as yeſterday you did not.

Capping again at the name of the Pope.

B. Ridley refuſeth to put off his cap to the Pope, or to them which come from the Pope.

Rid. I pretend now none other cauſe, than I did yeſterday, that is, only that hereby it may appear that not only in word and confeſſion, but alſo by all my geſture and behaviour, in no point I agree or admit any authoritie or power that ſhall come from the Pope, and not for any pride of minde (as God is my judge) neither for contempt of your Lordſhips, or of this worſhipfull audience, neither for derogation of honor due to my Lord Cardinals grace as concerning thoſe points which your Lordſhip ſpake of, that is, his noble Parentage and ſingular graces in learning. And as for taking my cap away, your Lordſhip may do as it ſhall pleaſe you; it ſhall not offend me, but I ſhall be content with your ordinance in that behalfe.

Linc. Foraſmuch as you do anſwer now as you did yeſterday, we muſt do alſo as we did then, and forthwith one of the Bedles very haſtily ſnatched his cap from his head.

After this the Biſhop of Lincolne began the examination in ſenſe following.

The laſt examination of B. Ridley.

The words of the B. of Lincolne.

Linc. Maſter Ridley, yeſterday we took your anſwer to certain articles, which we then propoſed unto you: but becauſe we could not be throughly ſatisfied with your anſwer then to the firſt Article, neither could the Notaries take any determinate anſwer of you, we (you requiring the ſame) granted you licence to bring your anſwer in writing, and thereupon commanded the Maior that you ſhould have pen, paper and inke, yea any books alſo that you would require, if they were to be gotten: we licenced you then alſo to alter your former anſwers this day at your pleaſure: Therefore we are come now hither, to ſee whether you are in the ſame mind now that you were in yeſterday, (which we would not wiſh) or contrary, contented to revoke all your former aſſertions, and in al points content to ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the univerſall Church, and I for my part moſt earneſtly exhort you (and therewith he put off his cap) not becauſe my conſcience pricketh me, as you ſaid yeſterday, but becauſe I ſee you a rotten member, and in the way of perdition.

Yeſterday I brought forth amongſt other St. Auſten, to prove that authoritie hath alwaies been given to the See of Rome, and you wreſted the words far contrarie to St. Auſtens meaning, in that you would have totus mundus to be applied only to Europe, which is but the third part of all the world, whereas indeed the proceſſe of St. Auguſtines words will not admit that your interpretation. For he ſaith not totus mundus Chriſtianus in tranſmarinis, &c. but firſt totus mundus Chriſtianus Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſubjectus eſt: all the Chriſtian world is ſubject to the Church of Rome, and afterward addeth, in tranſmarinis partibus, beyond the ſea, but only to augment the dominion of the See of Rome.

The place of S. Auſten again repeated, Totus mundus, &c.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to the place of S. Auſten, as before.

Rid. But M. Ridley ſtill perſevered in his former anſwer, ſaying; I am ſure my Lord you have ſome skill in Coſmographie, in the which you ſhall underſtand that there is a Sea called Mare mediterraneum, caſt between Europe, and Africa, in the which he meant Europe beyond the Sea, even as I ſhould ſay the whole world beyond the ſea, excepting England in the which I ſtand: and here many words were ſpent upon the interpretation of the ſame place of St. Auſten

Linc. After long diſceptation, the B. of Lincoln ſaid, that the meaning of St. Auguſtine might be known by the conſent of other the Doctors, and rehearſed divers.

How the Catholikes uſe to alledge the Doctors.

Rid. But M. Ridley required the rehearſall of the places, and to read the very words of the Doctors, ſaying; that perhaps thoſe which the Biſhop rehearſed, being proponed in other terms in the Doctors, would admit a contrary meaning and interpretation: but in that book, out of the which the Biſhop rehearſed them, was none of the Doctors, but only the ſentences drawn out of the Doctors by ſome ſtudious man: he could not recite the very words of the Doctors.

A place of Cyrillus alledged by Melancthon. Scripture books burned at Oxford.

Linc. Then after, he came to Cyrillus, which (as he ſayd) made againſt M. Ridley in the Sacrament, even by Philip Melancthon his own alleadging in his common places, and forthwith called for Melancthon, but in vain, becauſe all ſuch books were burned a little before, wherefore he paſſed it over.

" Argumentum a contrario ſenſu ex Cyrillo contra Iudæos. Altars be erected in Chriſts remembrance in Britaine. Ergo, Chriſt is come. Altars be now placked down in Britaine: Ergo, Chriſt is not come.

Cyrillus alſo in another place, proving to the Jewes that Chriſt was come, uſeth this reaſon, " Altars are erected in Chriſts name in Britaine, and in far Countries: Ergo, Chriſt is come. But we may uſe the contrary, of that reaſon; Altars are placked down in Britaine: Ergo, Chriſt is not come. A good argument á contrariis; I will ſtand to it in the ſchooles by and by with any man. Ye ſee what a good argument this your doctrine maketh for the Jewes, to prove that Chriſt is not come.

Doctor Ridley ſmiling, anſwered; your Lordſhip is not ignorant that this word Altare in the Scripture ſignifieth as well the altar whereupon the Jewes were wont to make their burnt ſacrifices, as the table of the Lords Supper. Cyrillus meaneth there by this word Altare, not that the Jewiſh Altar, but the Table of the Lord, and by that ſaying (Altars are erected in Chriſts name, Ergo Chriſt is come) he meaneth that the Communion is miniſtred in his remembrance, Ergo Chriſt is come: for the ſtrength of his argument is, becauſe the remembrance of a thing cannot be, except it ſelf be paſt: then could not all Countries celebrate the Communion in remembrance of Chriſts paſſion, except Chriſt had been come and ſuffered. As for the taking down of the Altars, it was done upon juſt conſiderations, for that they ſeemed to come too nigh to the Jewes uſage. Neither was the Supper of the Lord at any time better miniſtred, more duely received, than in thoſe latter dayes when all things were brought to the rites and uſage of the Primitive Church.

Answer. This argument is not a ſenſu contrario for erecting of altars in the Antecedent, and plucking down altars in the conſequent, be not contrary. In the Antecedent, Cyrill meaneth the table, or elſe the celebration of the Lords ſupper in his remembrance. In the conſequent by plucking down of altars, is meant the taking away of places and monuments ſerving not to the Lords ſupper, but to idolatry, whereby the true table of the Lords ſupper, in his remembrance may be erected againe.

Linc. A goodly receiving I promiſe you, to ſet an “ Oyſter table inſtead of an altar, and to come from puddings at Weſtminſter to receive: and yet when your Table was conſtituted, you could never be content, in placing the ſame now Eaſt, now North, now one way, now another, untill it pleaſed God of his goodneſſe to place it clean out of the Church.

“ B. White blaſphemouſly calleth the boord of the Lords ſupper, an oyſter table.

Rid. Your Lordſhips unreverent terms do not elevate the thing. Perhaps ſome men came more devoutly from puddings, than other men now do from other things.

Linc. As for that M. Ridley, you ought to be judge of no man: but by this your reaſoning you cauſe us to ſtretch and inlarge our inſtructions. We came not to reaſon, but to take your determinate anſwers to our articles, and eftſoones he read the firſt article in manner above ſpecified.

The articles read again to M. Ridley.

Now, M. Ridley, what ſay you to the firſt Article? if you have brought your anſwer in writing, we will receive it: but if you have written any other matter, we will not receive it.

Rid. Then Maſter Ridley took a ſheet of paper out of his boſoom, and began to read that which he had written: but the Biſhop of Lincolne commanded the Bedle to take it from him. But he deſired licence to read it, ſaying that it was nothing but his anſwers, but the Biſhop would in no wiſe ſuffer him.

B. Ridley not ſuffered to read his own anſwer.

Rid. Why my Lord, will you require my anſwer, and not ſuffer me to publiſh it? I beſeech you my Lord, let the audience bear witneſſe in this matter. Your Lordſhips may handle it at your pleaſures: therefore let the audience be witneſſe to your doings.

Linc, Well, M. Ridley, we will firſt ſee what you have written, and then if we ſhall think it good to be read, you ſhall have it publiſhed: but except you will deliver it firſt, we will take none at all of you.

Note the extreme dealing of theſe Catholike men.

With that M. Ridley, ſeeing no remedy, delivered it to an Officer, which immediately delivered it to the Biſhop of Lincolne, who after he had ſecretly communicated it to the other two Biſhops, declared the ſenſe, but would not read it as it was written, ſaying, that it contained words of blaſphemie: therefore he would not fill the ears of the audience therewithall, and ſo abuſe their patience: notwithſtanding M. Ridley deſired very inſtantly to have it publiſhed, ſaying, that except a line or two, there was nothing contained but the ancient Doctors ſaying for the confirmation of his aſſertions.

The deputies durſt not read out the writing of B. Ridley.

After the ſayd Biſhops had ſecretly viewed the whole, then the Biſhop of Lincolne ſayd: In the firſt part M. Ridley, is nothing contained but your proteſtation, that you would not have theſe your anſwers ſo to be taken, as though you ſeemed thereby to conſent to the authoritie or juriſdiction of the Popes holineſſe.

Rid. No, my Lord, I pray you read it out that the audience may hear it: but the Biſhop of Lincoln would in no wiſe, becauſe (he ſaid) there were contained words of blaſphemy.

Then the Biſhop of Lincoln recited the firſt Article, and required M. Ridleyes anſwer to it. Then M. Ridley ſayd, that his anſwer was there in writing, and deſired that it might be publiſhed: but the Biſhop would not read the whole, but here and there a piece of it. So the Notaries took his anſwer, that he referred him to his anſwer in writing exhibited now, and alſo before at the time of diſputation, M. Doctor Weſton being Prolocutor.

1. Article.

In likewiſe the Biſhop of Lincolne recited the ſecond Article, and required an anſwer, and M. Ridley referred him to his anſwer in writing, exhibited now, and alſo before at the time of diſputation: and like anſwers were taken to all the reſidue of the Articles.

2. Article.

Theſe anſwers in this manner rehearſed, taken and penned of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Gloceſter began an exhortation to move M. Ridley to turn.

Glo. If you would once emptie your ſtomack, captivate your ſenſes, ſubdue your reaſon, and together with us conſider what a feeble ground of your religion you have, I do not doubt but you might eaſily be perduced to acknowledge one Church with us, to confeſſe one faith with us, and to beleeve one religion with us. For what a weak and feeble ſtay in religion is this I pray you? Latimer leaneth to Cranmer, Cranmer to Ridley, and Ridley to the ſingularity of his own wit: ſo that if you overthrow the ſingularity of Ridleys wit, then muſt needs the religion of Cranmer and Latimer fall alſo. You remember well M. Ridley, that the Prophet ſpeaketh moſt truly, ſaying; Væ, væ, Wo, wo be to them which are ſingular and wiſe in their own conceits.

The words of exhortation of Brooks B. of Gloceſter to M. Ridley.

But you will ſay here, it is true that the Prophet ſaith: but how know you that I am wiſe in mine own conceit? Yes M. Ridley, you refuſe the determination of the Catholike Church; you muſt needs be ſingular and wiſe in your own conceit, for you bring Scripture for the probation of your aſſertions, and we alſo bring Scriptures; you underſtand them in one ſenſe, and we in another. How will you know the truth herein? If you ſtand to your own interpretation, then you are ſingular in your own conceit: but if you ſay you will follow the minds of the Doctors and ancient Fathers, ſemblably you underſtand them in one meaning, and we take them in another; how will ye know the truth herein? If you ſtand to your own judgement, then are you ſingular in your own conceit, then can you not avoyd the væ, and wo which the Prophet ſpeaketh of.

Wherefore if you have no ſtay but the Catholike Church in matters of controverſie, except you will reſt upon the ſingularitie and wiſedome of your own brain, if the Prophet moſt truely ſaith, væ, væ, wo, wo be to them that are wiſe in their own conceit: then for Gods love Maſter Ridley ſtand not ſingular, be not you wiſe in your own conceit, pleaſe not your ſelf over much. How were the Arrians, the Manichees, the Eutichians, with other divers heretiks which have been in the Church, how I pray you were they ſuppreſſed and convinced? By reaſoning in diſputations? No truly, the Arrians had no moe places of Scripture for the confirmation of their hereſie, than the Catholikes for the defence of the truth.

The determination of the Church is only that, whereupon our Catholike men do ground their faith.

How then were they convinced? only by the determination of the Church. And indeed except we do conſtitute the Church our foundation, ſtay, and judge, we can have no end of controverſies, no end of diſputations. For in that we all bring Scriptures and Doctors for the probation of our aſſertions, who ſhould be judge of this our controverſie? If we our ſelves, then be ſingular and wiſe in your own conceits, then cannot we avoyd the wo that the Prophet ſpeaketh of.

It remaineth therefore that we ſubmit our ſelves to the determination and arbitrement of the Church, with whom God promiſed to remain to the worlds end, to whom he promiſed to ſend the holy Ghoſt which ſhould teach it the truth. Wherefore M. Ridley, if you will avoyd the wo that the Prophet ſpeaketh of, be not you wiſe in your judgement: if you will not be wiſe and ſingular in your own judgement, captivate your own underſtanding, ſubdue your reaſon, and ſubmit your ſelfe to the determination of the Church.

This is briefly the ſum of the Oration of the Biſhop of Gloceſter, by the which he endeavoured in many mo words, amplifying and inlarging the matter eloquently with ſundry points of Rhetorick to move affections, to perſwade M. Ridley to recant and forſake his religion.

A brief anſwer of B. Ridley to B. Brooks tale.

To whom M. Ridley anſwered in few words, that he ſayd moſt truly with the Prophet, wo be to him that is wiſe in his own conceit, but that he acknowledged no ſuch ſingularity in him, ne knew any cauſe why he ſhould attribute ſo much to himſelfe. And whereas he ſayd M. Cranmer leaned to him, that was moſt untrue, in that he was but a yong Scholler in compariſon of M. Cranmer: for at what time he was a yong ſcholler, then was M. Cranmer a Doctor, ſo that he confeſſed that M. Cranmer might have been his ſchoolemaſter theſe many yeares. It ſeemed that he would have ſpoken more, but the B. of Gloceſter interrupted him ſaying:

Glo. Why M. Ridley, it is your own confeſſion, for M. Latimer at that time of his diſputations confeſſed his learning to lie in M. Cranmers books, and M. Cranmer alſo ſayd, that it was your doing.

Linc. Likewiſe the B. of Lincolne with many words, and gently holding his cap in his hand, deſired him to turn. But Maſter Ridley made an abſolute anſwer, that he was fully perſwaded, the religion which he defended to be grounded upon Gods word, and therefore without great offence towards God, great perill and dammage of his ſoul, he could not forſake his Maſter and Lord God, but deſired the Biſhop to perform his grant, in that his Lordſhip ſayd the day before, that he ſhould have licence to ſhew his cauſe why he could not with a ſafe conſcience admit the authority of the Pope: but the Biſhop of Lincolne ſayd, that whereas then he had demanded licence to ſpeake three words, he was contented then that he ſhould ſpeake forty, and that grant he would performe.

B. Ridley could not for his conſcience yeeld to the Popes doctrin.

D. Weſton ſhooteth his bolt.

Then ſtepped forth Doctor Weſton, which ſate by and ſayd, why my Lord, he hath ſpoken foure hundred already.

Maſter Ridley confeſſed he had, but they were not of his preſcribed number, neither of that matter. The Biſhop of Lincoln bade him take his licence: but he ſhould ſpeak but forty, and he would tell them upon his fingers, and eftſoones M. Ridley began to ſpeak: but before he had ended half a ſentence, the Doctors ſitting by cried and ſayd, that his number was out, and with that he was put to ſilence.

B. Ridley limited no more but forty words to ſpeake. Note Reader the extreme dealing of the Papiſts.

After this the Biſhop of Lincoln, which ſate in the middeſt, began to ſpeak as followeth.

Linc. Now I perceive Maſter Ridley, you will not permit ne ſuffer us to ſtay in that point of our Commiſſion which we moſt deſired: for I enſure you, there is never a word in our Commiſſion more true than, dolentes & gementes. For indeed I for my part, I take God to witneſſe, am ſorry for you, Whereupon Maſter Ridley anſwered.

Rid. I beleeve it well my Lord, foraſmuch as one day it will be burdenous to your ſoul.

Linc. Nay, not ſo M. Ridley, but becauſe I am ſorry to ſee ſuch ſtubbornneſſe in you, that by no means you may be perſwaded to acknowledge your errors, and receive the truth: but ſeeing it is ſo, becauſe you will not ſuffer us to perſiſt in the firſt, we muſt of neceſſitie proceed to the other part of our Commiſſion. Therefore I pray you hearken what I ſhall ſay, and forthwith he did reade the ſentence of condemnation, which was written in a long proceſſe: the tenor of which, becauſe it is ſufficiently already expreſſed before, we thought meet in this place to omit, foraſmuch as they are rather words of courſe, than things deviſed upon deliberation. Howbeit indeed the effect was, that foraſmuch as the ſayd Nicholas Ridley did affirm, maintain, and ſtubbornly defend certain opinions, aſſertions and hereſies, contrary to the word of God, and the received faith of the Church, as in denying the true and naturall bodie of Chriſt, and his naturall blood to be in the Sacrament of the Altar: Secondarily, in affirming the ſubſtance of bread and wine to remaine after the words of the conſecration: Thirdly, in denying the Maſſe to be a lively ſacrifice of the Church for the quick and the dead, and by no meanes would be perduced and brought from theſe his hereſies: they therefore the ſaid I. of Lincoln, James of Gloceſter, John of Briſtow, did judge and condemne the ſaid Nicholas Ridley, as an heretike, and ſo adjudged him preſently both by word, and alſo in deed to be degraded from the degree of a Biſhop, from Prieſthood and all Eccleſiaſticall order, declaring moreover the ſayd Nicholas Ridley to be no member of the Church, and therefore committed him to the ſecular powers, of them to receive due puniſhment according to the tenor of the temporall lawes: and further excommunicating him by the great excommunication.

Sentence of condemnation, read againſt D. Ridley.

The effect of the condemnation, whereof reade before.

The laſt appearance and examination of Maſter Latimer before the Commiſsioners.

The laſt appearance and examination of M. Latimer before the Commiſſioners.

This ſentence being publiſhed by the Biſhop of Lincolne, Maſter Ridley was committed as a priſoner to the Maior, and immediately Maſter Latimer was ſent for: but in the mean ſeaſon the carpet or cloth which lay upon the table whereat Maſter Ridley ſtood, was removed becauſe (as men reported) M. Latimer had never the degree of a Doctor, as M. Ridley had. But eftſoones as Maſter Latimer appeared, as he did the day before, perceiving no cloth upon the table, he layd his hat, which was an old felt, under his elbowes, and imediately ſpake to the Commiſſioners, ſaying.

Lati. My Lords, I beſeech your Lordſhips to ſet a better order here at your entrance: for I am an old man, and have a very evill back, ſo that the preaſſe of the multitude doth me much harme.

Linc. I am ſorry Maſter Latimer for your hurt. At your departure we will ſee to better order.

With that M. Latimer thanked his Lordſhip, making a very low courteſie. After this the Biſhop of Lincoln began on this manner.

Linc. Maſter Latimer, although yeſterday after we had taken your anſwers to thoſe Articles which we propoſed, we might have juſtly proceeded to judgement againſt you, eſpecially in that you required the ſame, yet we having a good hope of your returning, deſiring not your deſtruction, but rather that you would recant, revoke your errors, and turn to the Catholike Church, deferred farther proceſſe till this day, and now according to the appointment, we have called you here before us, to hear whether you are content to revoke your hereticall aſſertions, and ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the Church, as we moſt heartily deſire, and I for my part, as I did yeſterday, moſt earneſtly do exhort you, or to know whether you perſevere ſtill the man that you were, for the which we would be ſorry.

The Biſhop of Linc. words to M. Latimer.

It ſeemed that the Biſhop would have further proceeded, ſaving that M. Latimer interrupted him, ſaying.

Lati. Your Lordſhip often doth repeat the Catholike Church, as though I ſhould deny the ſame. No, my Lord, I confeſſe there is a Catholike Church, to the determination of which I will ſtand, but not the Church which you call Catholike, which ſooner might be termed diabolike. And whereas you joyn together the Romiſh and Catholike Church, ſtay there I pray you. For it is one thing to ſay Romiſh church, and another thing to ſay Catholike Church: I muſt uſe here in this mine anſwer, the counſell of Cyprianus, who at what time he was aſcited before certain Biſhops that gave him leave to take deliberation and counſell, to trie and examine his opinion, he anſwereth them thus: in ſticking and perſevering in the truth, there muſt no counſell nor deliberation be taken. And again, being demanded of them ſitting in judgement, which was moſt like to be of the Church of Chriſt, whether he which was perſecuted, or they which did perſecute? Chriſt, ſayd he, hath foreſhewed, that he that doth follow him, muſt take up his croſſe, and follow him. Chriſt gave knowledge that the Diſciples ſhould have perſecution and trouble. How think you then my Lords, is it like that the See of Rome, which hath been a continuall perſecutor, is rather the Church, or that ſmall flock which hath continually been perſecuted of it, even to death? Alſo the flock of Chriſt hath been but few in compariſon to the reſidue, and ever in ſubjection: which he proved beginning at Noes time even to the Apoſtles.

M. Latimer ſhort with the Commiſſioners.

The Catholike Church and the Romiſh church be two things.

Cyprians counſell in truth no deliberation to be taken.

M. Latimers queſtion to the Biſhops. Whether is more like, the See of Rome, which perſecuteth, or the little flock which is perſecuted, to be the true Church.

Linc. Your cauſe and St. Cyprians is not one, but clean contrary: for he ſuffered perſecution for Chriſts ſake and the Goſpel; but you are in trouble for your errors and falſe aſſertions, contrary to the Word of God, and the received truth of the Church.

Lat. Maſter Latimer interrupting him, ſayd; Yes verily, my cauſe is as good as Saint Cyprians: for his was for the Word of God, and ſo is mine.

The cauſe of the Martyrs of the Primitive time, and of the latter time all one.

But Lincoln goeth forth in his talke.

Alſo at the beginning and foundation of the church, it could not be but that the Apoſtles ſhould ſuffer great perſecution. Further, before Chriſts comming, continually there were very few which truly ſerved God: but after his coming began the time of grace, then began the Church to increaſe, and was continually augmented, untill it came unto this perfection, and now hath juſtly that juriſdiction which the unchriſtian Princes before by tyrannie did reſiſt: there is a divers conſideration of the eſtate of the Church now in the time of grace, and before Chriſts coming. But, Maſter Latimer, although we had inſtructions given us determinately to take your anſwer to ſuch articles as we ſhould propoſe, without any reaſoning or diſputations, yet we hoping by talke ſomewhat to prevail with you, appointed you to appear before us yeſterday in the Divinity School, a place for diſputations. And whereas then notwithſtanding you has licence to ſay your minde, and were anſwered to every matter, yet you could not be brought from your errors: We thinking that from that time ye would with good adviſement conſider your eſtate, gave you reſpite from that time yeſterday when we diſmiſſed you, untill this time, and now have called you again here in this place, by your anſwers to learn whether you are the ſame man you were then or no? Therefore we will propoſe unto you the ſame articles which we did then, and require of you a determinate anſwer, without further reaſoning, and eftſoons recited the firſt Article.

The image of the Church before Chriſts coming compared with the Church after his coming.

The articles propounded again to M. Latimer.

Lat. Alwaies my proteſtation ſaved, that by theſe mine anſwers it ſhould not be thought that I did condiſcend and agree to your Lordſhips authority, in that you are legaced by authority of the Pope, ſo that thereby I might ſeem to conſent to his juriſdiction: To the firſt article I anſwer now as I did yeſterday, that in the Sacrament the worthy receiver receiveth the very body of Chriſt, and drinketh his blood by the ſpirit and grace. But after a corporall being, which the Romiſh Church preſcribeth, Chriſts body and blood is not in the ſacrament under the forms of bread and wine.

M. Latimer again anſwereth with proteſtation, as before.

The very body of Chriſt received in the ſacrament by the ſpirit and

The Notaries took his anſwer to be affirmatively. For the ſecond article he referred himſelf to his anſwers made before.

Linc. After this the Biſhop of Lincoln recited the third article, and required a determinate anſwer.

Lati. Chriſt made one oblation and ſacrifice for the ſins of the whole world, and that a perfect ſacrifice, neither needeth there to be any other, neither can there be any other propitiatorie ſacrifice.

Anſwer to the ſecond and third articles.

The Notaries took his anſwer to be affirmatively.

In like manner did he anſwer to the other articles, not varying from his anſwers made the day before.

After his anſwers were penned of the Notaries, and the Biſhop of Lincoln had exhorted him in like ſort to recant as he did Maſter Ridley, and revoke his errors and falſe aſſertions, and Maſter Latimer had anſwered that he ne could, ne would deny his Maſter Chriſt, and his verity, the Biſhop of Lincoln deſired Maſter Latimer to hearken to him: and then, Maſter Latimer hearkning for ſome new matter and other talk, the Biſhop of Lincoln read his condemnation, after the publication of the which, the ſayd three Biſhops brake up their Seſſions, and diſmiſſed the audience.

M. Latimer wil not deny his Maſter Chriſt.

Condemnation read againſt M. Latimer.

But M. Latimer required the Biſhop to perform his promiſe in ſaying the day before, that he ſhould have licence briefly to declare the cauſe why he refuſed the Popes authority.

The Papiſts falſe in their promiſes.

Linc. But the Biſhop ſayd that now he could not hear him, neither ought to talk with him.

Then Maſter Latimer asked him whether it were not lawfull for him to appeal from this his judgement. And the Biſhop asked him again to whom he would appeale. To the next generall Councell (quoth M. Latimer) which ſhall be truly called in Gods name. With that appellation the Biſhop was content: but he ſayd it would be a long ſeaſon before ſuch a convocation as he meant would be called.

M. Latimer appealeth to the next generall Councell truly called in the Lords name, but that councell is long a coming.

Then the Biſhop committed Maſter Latimer to the Maior, ſaying; now he is your priſoner Maſter Maior. Becauſe the preaſſe of the people was not diminiſhed, each man looking for farther proceſſe, the Biſhop of Lincoln commanded avoydance, and willed Maſter Latimer to tarry till the preaſſe were diminiſhed, leſt he ſhould take hurt at his egreſſion, as he did at his entrance. And ſo continued Biſhop Ridley, and Maſter Latimer, in durance till the 16. day of the ſayd month of October.

A communication between D. Brooks, and D. Ridley, in M. Iriſh his houſe, the xv. day of October, at which time he was degraded.

The talke between Doctor Brooks B. of Gloceſter, and D. Ridley upon his degradation.

No mercy to be had without conſenting to iniquity.

IN the mean ſeaſon upon the 15. day in the morning, and the ſame year aboveſayd, the Biſhop of Gloceſter, Doctor Brooks, and the Vicechancellor of Oxford D. Marſhall, with divers other of the chief and heads of the ſame Univerſity, and many other moe accompanying them, came unto Maſter Iriſh his houſe then Maior of Oxford, where Doctor Ridley late Biſhop of London was cloſe priſoner. And when the Biſhop of Gloceſter came into the chamber where the ſayd D. Ridley did lie, he told him for what purpoſe their coming was unto him, ſaying; that yet once again the Queens Maieſtie did offer unto him, by them, her gracious mercy, if that he would receive the ſame, and come home again to the faith which he was baptized in, and revoke his erroneous doctrine that he of late had taught abroad to the deſtruction of many. And further ſayd, that if he would not recant and become one of the Catholike Church with them, then they muſt needs (againſt their wills) proceed according to the Law, which they would be very loth to do, if they might otherwiſe. But ſayth he, we have been oftentimes with you, and have requeſted that you would recant this your fantaſticall and divelliſh opinion, which hitherto you have not, although you might in ſo doing win many, and do much good Therefore, good Maſter Ridley, conſider with your ſelf the danger that ſhall enſue both of body and ſoul, if that you ſhall ſo wilfully caſt your ſelf away in refuſing mercy offered unto you at this time.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to B. Brooks.

O worthy champion of Chriſts church.

My Lord, quoth D. Ridley, you know my mind fully herein; and as for the doctrine which I have taught, my conſcience aſſureth me that it was ſound, and according to Gods word (to his glory be it ſpoken) the which doctrine, the Lord God being my helper, I will maintain ſo long as my tongue ſhall wag, and breath is within my body, and in confirmation thereof ſeal the ſame with my blood.

With that their caps went off, but D Ridley held on his cap.

Brook. Well, you were beſt M. Ridley not to do ſo but to become one of the Church with us. For you know this well enough, that whoſoever is out of the Catholike church, cannot be ſaved: Therfore I ſay once again, that whiles you have time and mercy offered you, receive it, and confeſſe with us the Popes holineſſe to be the chief head of the ſame Church.

B. Ridley commanded to ſilence, when otherwiſe he could not be convinced.

Rid. I marvell that you will trouble me with any ſuch vain and fooliſh talke. You know my minde concerning the uſurped authority of that Romiſh Antichriſt. As I confeſſed openly in the ſchools, ſo do I now, that both by my behavior and talke, I do no obedience at all unto the Biſhop of Rome, nor to his uſurped authority, and that for divers good and godly conſiderations. And here D. Ridley would have reaſoned with the ſaid Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter, of the Biſhop of Romes authority, but could not be ſuffered, and yet he ſpake ſo earneſtly againſt the Pope therein, that the Biſhop told him, if he would not hold his peace, he ſhould be compelled againſt his will. And ſeeing, ſaith he, that you will not receive the Queens mercy now offered unto you, but ſtubbornly refuſe the ſame, we muſt, againſt our wills, proceed according to our Commiſſion to degrading, taking from you the dignity of Prieſthood. For we take you for no Biſhop, and therefore we will the ſooner have done with you: ſo committing you to the ſecular power, you know what doth follow.

Rid. Do with me as it ſhall pleaſe God to ſuffer you, I am well content to abide the ſame with all my heart.

D. Ridley refuſeth to put on the ſurples.

Brook. Put off your cap M. Ridley, and put upon you this Surples.

Rid. Not I truly.

Brook. But you muſt.

Rid. I will not.

Brook. You muſt, therefore make no more ado but put this Surples upon you.

Rid. Truly if it come upon me, it ſhall be againſt my will.

Brook. Will you not do it upon you?

Rid. No, that I will not.

Brook. It ſhall be put upon you by one or other.

Rid. Do therein as it ſhall pleaſe you, I am well contented with that, and more than that; the ſervant is not above his Maſter. If they dealt ſo cruelly with our Saviour Chriſt, as the Scripture maketh mention, and he ſuffered the ſame patiently, how much more doth it become us his ſervants? and in ſaying of theſe words, they put upon the ſaid Doctor Ridley the ſurples, with all the trinkets appertaining to the Maſſe. And as they were putting on the ſame, Doctor Ridley did vehemently inveigh againſt the Romiſh Biſhop, and all that fooliſh apparell, calling him Antichriſt, and the apparell fooliſh and abominable, yea too fond for a vice in a play, inſomuch that Brooks was exceeding angry with him, and bade him hold his peace, for he did but rayle. Doctor Ridley anſwered him again, and ſayd; So long as his tongue and breath would ſuffer him, he would ſpeak againſt their abominable doings, whatſoever happened unto him for ſo doing.

B. Ridley inveyeth againſt the B. of Rom and his foolis apparell

The ſurples here is called fooliſh apparel

Brook. Well, you were beſt to hold your peace, leſt your mouth be ſtopped. At which words one Edridge, the Reader then of the Greeke lecture ſtanding by, ſaid to Doctor Brooks: Sir, the law is he ſhould be gagged, therfore let him be gagged. At which words Doctor Ridley looking earneſtly upon him that ſo ſayd, wagged his head at him, and made no anſwer again, but with a ſigh ſayd: Oh well, well, well.

M Edridge giveth counſel that B. Ridl ſhould be gagged.

Degrading of B. Ridley.

So they proceeded in their doings, yet nevertheleſſe D. Ridley was ever talking things not pleaſant to their ears, although one or other bade him hold his peace, leſt he ſhould be cauſed againſt his will.

Ridley would not let come his hand the chalice and wa fer-cake.

When as they came to that place whereas D. Ridley ſhould hold the Chalice and the wafer-cake (called the ſinging bread) they bade him hold the ſame in his hands. And D. Ridley ſayd, they ſhall not come in my hands: for if they do, they ſhall fall to the ground for all me. Then there was one appointed to hold them in his hand, while Biſhop Brooks read a certain thing in Latine, touching the degradation of ſpirituall perſons according to the Popes law.

D. Ridley degraded from preaching.

Afterward they put a book in his hand, and withal read (as is before ſayd) a certain thing in Latine, the effect whereof was: We do take from you the office of preaching the Goſpel, &c. At which words D. Ridley gave a great ſigh, looking up towards heaven, ſaying; O Lord God forgive them this their wickedneſſe.

And as they put upon him the Maſſe-geare, ſo they began with the uppermoſt garment, in taking it away again, reading a thing in Latine, according to the order contained in the ſayd booke of the Popes law. Now when all was taken from him, ſaving onely the Surples left on his back, as they were reading and taking it away, Doctor Ridley ſaid unto them, Lord God, what power be you of, that you can take from a man that which he never had? I was never ſinger in all my life, and yet you will take from me that which I never had.

All the glittering of Antichriſts kingdome conſiſteth in apiſh toyes.

So when all this their abominable and ridiculous degradation was ended very ſolemnly, D. Ridley ſaid unto Doctor Brooks, have you done? If you have done, then give me leave to talke with you a little concerning theſe matters. Brooks anſwered and ſaid; M. Ridley, we may not talke with you, you be out of the Church, and our law is that we may not talk with any that be out of the Church. Then Maſter Ridley ſaid; ſeeing that you will not ſuffer me to talk, neither will vouchſafe to hear me, what remedy but patience? I referre my cauſe to my heavenly Father, who will reform things that be amiſſe, when it ſhall pleaſe him.

A praiſe of Bertrams book upon the Sacrament.

At which words they would have been gone, but Maſter Ridley ſaid; My Lord, I would wiſh that your Lordſhip would vouchſafe to reade over and peruſe a little Book of Bertrams doings, concerning the Sacrament. I promiſe you, you ſhall finde much good learning therein, if you will reade the ſame with an indifferent judgement. Doctor Brooks made no anſwer to this, but would have been gone away. Then Maſter Ridley ſaid; Oh, I perceive that you cannot away with this manner of talk. Well, it boots not, I will ſay no more, I will ſpeak of worldly affairs. I pray you therefore my Lord hear me, and be a mean to the Queens Majeſty, in the behalf of a great many of poor men, and eſpecially for my poor ſiſter and her huſband which ſtandeth there. They had a poor living granted unto them by me, whiles I was in the See of London, and the ſame is taken away from them, by him that now occupieth the ſame room, without all law or conſcience.

Note the charity of the Papiſts.

Here I have a ſupplication to the Queens Majeſty in their behalfes. You ſhall hear the ſame read, ſo ſhall you perceive the matter the better. Then he read the ſame, and when he came to the place in the ſupplication, that touched his ſiſter by name, then he wept, ſo that for a little ſpace he could not ſpeak for weeping. After that he had left off weeping, he ſaid; This is nature that moveth me. But I have now done, and with that read out the reſt, and delivered the ſame to his brother, commanding him to put it up to the Queens Majeſty, and to ſue, not onely for himſelf, but alſo for ſuch as had any leaſes or grants by him, and were put from the ſame by Doctor Boner, then Biſhop of London. Whereunto Brooks ſaid, indeed M. Ridley, your requeſt in this ſupplication is very lawfull and honeſt: therefore I muſt needs in conſcience ſpeak to the Queens Majeſty for them.

B. Ridleys ſiſter put from her Leaſe by D. Boner.

Rid: I pray you for Gods ſake do ſo.

Brooks. I think your requeſt will be granted, except one thing let it, and that is (I fear) becauſe you do not allow the Queens proceedings, but obſtinately withſtand the ſame, that it will hardly be granted.

Rid. What remedy? I can do no more but ſpeak and write: I truſt I have diſcharged my conſcience therein, and Gods will be done.

Brook. I will do what lieth in me.

The Copy of this ſupplication written to the Queen here followeth.

A ſupplication of B. Ridley to Q. Mary in the behalf of certain poor mens Leaſes.

Maſter Ridley to the Queens Majeſty.

IT may pleaſe your Majeſty for Chriſt our Saviours ſake, in a matter of Conſcience (and now not for my ſelf, but for other poor men) to vouchſafe to hear and underſtand this humble ſupplication. It is ſo (honorable Princeſſe) that in the time whiles I was in the Miniſtry of the See of London, divers poor men, tenants thereof, have taken new Leaſes of their tenantries, and holdings, and ſome have renewed and changed their old, and therefore have payed fines and ſums of money, both to me, and alſo to the Chapter of Pauls, for the confirmation of the ſame.

This Biſh. was D. Boner.

Now I hear ſay, that the Biſhop which occupieth the ſame room now, will not allow the foreſaid Leaſes, which muſt redound to many poor mens utter ruine and decay. Wherefore this is mine humble ſupplication unto your honorable grace, that it may pleaſe the ſame for Chriſts ſake to be unto the foreſaid poor men their gracious Patroneſſe and Defender, either that they may enjoy their foreſaid Leaſes and yeers renewed, as I ſuppoſe when their matter ſhall be heard with conſcience, both juſtice, conſcience, and equity, ſhall require, for that their Leaſes ſhall be found (I truſt) made without fraud or cunning, either of their part, or of mine, and alwayes alſo the old rents reſerved to the Sea without any kinde of damage thereof: or if this will not be granted, then that it may pleaſe your gracious highneſſe, to command that the poor men may be reſtored to their former Leaſes and yeers, and to have rendred to them again ſuch ſums of money as they paid to me and to the Chapter-houſe for their Leaſes and yeers, ſo now taken from them. Which thing concerning the fines paid to me, may be eaſily done, if it ſhall pleaſe your Majeſty to command ſome portion of thoſe goods which I left in my houſe when I fled in hope of pardon for my treſpaſſe towards your grace, which goods (as I have heard) be yet reſerved in the ſame houſe, I ſuppoſe that half of the value of my plate that I left in mine offices, and ſpecially in an Iron Cheſt in my bed-chamber, will go nigh to reſtore all ſuch fines received, the true ſummes and parcels whereof, are not ſet in their Leaſes: and therefore if that way ſhall pleaſe your highneſſe, they muſt be known by ſuch wayes and means, as your Majeſty by the advice of men of wiſedome and conſcience ſhall appoint: but yet for Chriſts ſake I crave and moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty of your moſt gracious pity and mercy, that the former way may take place.

If to ſuccour the widow and fatherleſſe, is pure and undefiled religion, as S. James ſaith, then is Boner and his religion filthy and abominable, which doth ſuch wrong to the widow and fatherleſſe.

I have alſo a poor ſiſter that came to me out of the North, with three fatherleſſe children, for her relief, whom I married after to a ſervant of mine own houſe: ſhe is put out of that I did provide for them. I beſeech your honorable grace, that her caſe may be mercifully conſidered, and that the rather, in contemplation that I never had of him, which ſuffered indurance at my entrance into the See of London, not one penny of his moveable goods, for it was almoſt half a yeer after his depoſition, afore I entred into that place: yea, and alſo if any were left, known to be his, he had licence to cary it away, or there for his uſe it did lie ſafe, as his officers do know. I paid for the Lead which I found there, when I occupied any of it to the behoof of the Church, or of the houſe. And moreover, I had not onely no part of his moveable goods, but alſo (as his old receiver, and then mine, called M Stanton, can teſtifie) I paid for him towards his ſervants common liveries and wages, after his depoſition, 53 or 55 pounds, I cannot tell whether. In all theſe matters I beſeech your honorable Majeſty to hear the advice of men of conſcience, and in eſpeciall the Archbiſhop of York, which for that he was continually in my houſe a yeer and more, before mine impriſonment, I ſupoſe he is not altogether ignorant of ſome part of theſe things, and alſo his Grace doth know my ſiſter, for whoſe ſuccour, and ſome relief, now unto your highneſſe I make moſt humble ſute.

Notwithſtanding theſe godly and juſt requeſts, no juſtice could be had, untill that now of late ſome of theſe ſhamefull injuries, by order of law have bin redreſſed.

The 16 of October, Anno, 1555. N. R.

This degradation being paſt, and all things finiſhed, Doctor Brooks called the Bayliffs, delivering to them Maſter Ridley with this charge, to keep him ſafely from any man ſpeaking with him, and that he ſhould be brought to the place of execution when they were commanded. Then M. Ridley in praiſing God, braſt out with theſe words, and ſaid; God I thank thee, and to thy praiſe be it ſpoken, there is none of you all able to lay to my charge any open or notorious crime: for if you could, it ſhould ſurely be laid in my lap, I ſee very well. Whereunto Brooks ſaid, he played the part of a proud Phariſee, exalting and praiſing himſelf.

The life of M. Ridley, ſuch as could not with any notorious crime be charged.

But Maſter Ridley ſaid, No,no,no, as I have ſaid before, to Gods glory be it ſpoken I confeſſe my ſelf to be a miſerable wretched ſinner, and have great need of Gods help and mercy, and do daily call and cry for the ſame: therefore I pray you have no ſuch opinion of me. Then they departed, and in going away, a certain Warden of a Colledge, of whoſe name I am not very ſure, bade Doctor Ridley repent him, and forſake that erroneous opinion. Whereunto M. Ridley ſaid; Sir, repent you, for you are out of the truth: and I pray God (if it be his bleſſed will) have mercy upon you, and grant you the underſtanding of his Word. Then the Warden being in a chaſe thereat, ſaid; I truſt that I ſhall never be of your erroneous and deviliſh opinion, neither yet to be in that place whither you ſhall go. He is, ſaith he, the moſt obſtinate and wilfull man that ever I heard talk ſince I was born.

The words of a certain Warden, or Head of a Colledge.

The behaviour of D. Ridley at his ſupper, the night before his ſuffering.

THe night before he ſuffered, his beard was waſhed, and his legs, and as he ſate at ſupper, the ſame night at M. Iriſhes (who was his Keeper) he bade his hoſteſſe, and the reſt at the board to his marriage: for, ſaith he, to morrow I muſt be married, and ſo ſhewed himſelf to be as merry as ever he was at any time before. And wiſhing his ſiſter at his marriage, he asked his brother ſitting at the table, whether ſhe could finde in her heart to be there or no: and he anſwered, Yea, I dare ſay, with all her heart: at which word he ſaid, He was glad to hear of her ſo much therein. So at this talk Miſtreſſe Iriſh wept.

D. Ridley biddeth gueſts to his marriage.

Miſtriſſe Iriſh a great Papiſt before, weepeth for D. Ridley.

But M. Ridley comforted her, and ſaid; O Miſtreſſe Iriſh, you love me not now, I ſee well enough. For in that you weep, it doth appear you will not be at my marriage, neither are content therewith. Indeed you be not ſo much my friend, as I thought you had been. But quiet your ſelf, though my breakfaſt ſhall be ſomewhat ſharp and painfull, yet I am ſure, my ſupper ſhall be more pleaſant and ſweet, &c.

When they aroſe from the table, his brother offered him to watch all night with him. But he ſaid, No,no, that you ſhall not. For I minde (God willing) to go to bed, and to ſleep as quietly to night, as ever I did in my life. So his brother departed, exhorting him to be of good cheer, and to take his croſſe quietly, for the reward was great, &c.

B. Ridley careles of his death

The behaviour of D. Ridley and Maſter Latimer, at the time of their death, which was the 16 of October, 1555.

UPon the North ſide of the Town, in the ditch over againſt Baily Colledge, the place of execution was appointed: and for fear of any tumult that might ariſe, to let the burning of them, the Lord Williams was commanded by the Queens Letters, and the houſholders of the City to be there aſſiſtant, ſufficiently appointed; and when every thing was in a readineſſe, the priſoners were brought forth by the Major and the Bayliffs.

The order and manner of B. Ridley and M. Latimer going to the ſtake.

Maſter Ridley had a fair black gown furred, and faced with foins, ſuch as he was wont to wear being Biſhop, and a tippet of Velvet furred likewiſe about his neck, a Velvet night-cap upon his head, and a corner cap upon the ſame, going in a pair of ſlippers to the ſtake, and going between the Major and an Alderman, &c.

After him came M. Latimer in a poor Briſtow freeze frock all worn, with his buttoned cap, and a kerchief on his head, all ready to the fire, a new long ſhrowd hanging over his hoſe down to the feet: which at the firſt ſight ſtirred mens hearts to rue upon them, beholding on the one ſide, the honor they ſometime had, on the other, the calamity whereunto they were fallen.

Maſter Doctor Ridley, as he paſſed toward Bocardo: looked up where Maſter Cranmer did lie, hoping belike to have ſeen him at the glaſſe window, and to have ſpoken unto him. But then Maſter Cranmer was buſie with Frier Soto, and his fellows diſputing together, ſo that he could not ſee him through that occaſion. Then Maſter Ridley, looking back, eſpied Maſter Latimer coming after. Unto whom he ſaid: Oh be ye there? Yea, ſaid Maſter Latimer, have after as faſt as I can follow. So he following a pretty way off, at length they came both to the ſtake, the one after the other, where firſt Doctor Ridley entring the place, marvellouſly earneſtly holding up both his hands, looked towards heaven: then ſhortly after, eſpying M. Latimer, with a wondrous cheerfull look he ran to him, imbraced and kiſſed him, and as they that ſtood neer reported, comforted him, ſaying; Be of good heart, brother, for God will either aſſwage the fury of the flame, or elſe ſtrengthen us to abide it.

D. Ridley and M. Latimer brought together to the ſtake.

The behaviour of D. Ridley and M. Latimer at the ſtake.

With that went he to the ſtake, kneeled down by it, kiſſed it, and effectuouſly prayed, and behinde him Maſter Latimer kneeled, as earneſtly calling upon God as he. After they aroſe, the one talked with the other a little while, till they which were appointed to ſee the execution removed themſelves out of the Sun. What they ſaid, I can learn of no man.

Then Doctor Smith, of whoſe recantation in King Edwards time ye heard before, began his Sermon to them, upon this Text of Saint Paul, in the thirteenth Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; Si corpus meum tradam igni, charitatem autem non habeam, nihil inde utilitatis capio; that is, If I yeeld my body to the fire to be burnt, and have not charity, I ſhall gain nothing thereby. Wherein he alleadged that the goodneſſe of the cauſe, and not the order of death, maketh the holineſſe of the perſon; which he confirmed by the examples of Judas, and of a woman in Oxford that of late hanged her ſelf, for that they and ſuch like as he recited, might then be adjudged righteous, which deſperately ſundered their lives from their bodies, as he feared that thoſe men that ſtood before him would do. But he cried ſtill to the people to beware of them, for they were heretikes, and died out of the Church. And on the other ſide, he declared their diverſities in opinions, as Lutherians, Oecolampadians, Zuinglians, of which ſect they were he ſaid, and that was the worſt: but the old Church of Chriſt, and the Catholike faith beleeved farre otherwiſe. At which place they lifted up both their hands and eyes to heaven, as it were calling

God to witneſſe of the truth. The which countenance they made in many other places of his Sermon, whereas they thought he ſpake amiſſe. He ended with a very ſhort exhortation to them to recant and come home again to the Church, and ſave their lives and ſouls, which elſe were condemned. His Sermon was ſcant in all a quarter of an hour.

Doctor Ridley ſaid to Maſter Latimer, will you begin to anſwer the Sermon, or ſhall I? M. Latimer ſaid, begin you firſt I pray you. I will, ſaid M. Ridley.

D. Ridley ready to anſwer D. Smiths Sermon, but could not be ſuffered.

D. Marſhall Vice-chancellor of Oxford, ſtoppeth D. Ridleys mouth.

Then the wicked Sermon being ended, Doctor Ridley, and Maſter Latimer kneeled down upon their knees towards my Lord Williams of Tame, the Vice-chancellor of Oxford, and divers other Commiſſioners appointed for that purpoſe, which ſate upon a fourm thereby. Unto whom M. Ridley ſaid; I beſeech you my Lord, even for Chriſts ſake, that I may ſpeak but two or three words: and whileſt my Lord bent his head to the Major and Vice-chancellor, to know (as it appeared) whether he might give him leave to ſpeak, the Bayliffs and Doctor Marſhall Vice-chancellor, ran haſtily unto him, and with their hands ſtopped his mouth, and ſaid; Maſter Ridley, if you will revoke your erroneous opinions, and recant the ſame, you ſhall not onely have liberty ſo to do, but alſo the benefit of a ſubject, that is, have your life. Not otherwiſe, ſaid Maſter Ridley? No, quoth Doctor Marſhall: therefore if you will not ſo do, then there is no remedy but you muſt ſuffer for your deſerts. Well (quoth M. Ridley) ſo long as the breath is in my body, I will never deny my Lord Chriſt, and his known truth: Gods will be done in me. And with that he roſe up, and ſaid with a lowd voice, Well, then I commit our cauſe to Almighty God, which ſhall indifferently judge all.

B. Ridley committeth his cauſe to God.

M. Latimers words when he could not be ſuffered to anſwer D. Smith

“This was no Popiſh tippet, but made onely to keep his neck warm.

To whoſe ſaying, Maſter Latimer added his old Poſie, Well, there is nothing hid but it ſhall be opened: and he ſaid, he could anſwer Smith well enough, if he might be ſuffered. Incontinently they were commanded to make them ready, which they with all meekneſſe obeyed. M. Ridley took his gown and his “tippet, and gave it to his brother in law M. Shipſide, who all his time of impriſonment, although he might not be ſuffered to come to him, lay there at his own charges to provide him neceſſaries, which from time to time he ſent him by the Sergeant that kept him. Some other of his apparell that was little worth, he gave away, other the Bayliffs took.

B. Ridley giveth away his apparell and other gifts to the people about him.

He gave away beſides, divers other ſmall things to Gentlemen ſtanding by, and divers of them pitifully weeping, as to Sir Henry Lea he gave a new groat, and to divers of my Lord Williams Gentlemen, ſome napkins, ſome nutmegs, and races of Ginger, his Diall, and ſuch other things as he had about him, to every one that ſtood next him. Some plucked the points off his hoſe. Happy was he that might get any ragge of him.

M. Latimer ſtanding at the ſtake in his ſhirt.

Maſter Latimer gave nothing, but very quietly ſuffered his Keeper to pull off his hoſe, and his other array, which to look unto was very ſimple: and being ſtripped into his ſhrowd, he ſeemed as comely a perſon to them that were there preſent, as one ſhould lightly ſee; and whereas in his clothes he appeared a withered and crooked ſilly old man, he now ſtood bolt upright, as comely a father as one might lightly behold.

Then Maſter Ridley, ſtanding as yet in his truſſe, ſaid to his brother, It were beſt for me to go in my truſſe ſtill. No, quoth his brother, it will put you to more pain: and the truſſe will do a poor man good. Whereunto Maſter Ridley ſaid: Be it, in the Name of God, and ſo unlaced himſelf. Then being in his ſhirt, he ſtood upon the foreſaid ſtone, and held up his hands and ſaid: Oh heavenly Father, I give unto thee moſt hearty thanks, for that thou haſt called me to be a profeſſor of thee, even unto death. I beſeech thee Lord God take mercy upon this Realm of England, and deliver the ſame from all her enemies.

B. Ridley thanketh God for his martyrdom and prayeth for England.

Then the Smith took a chain of Iron, and brought the ſame about both Doctor Ridleyes, and Maſter Latimers middles: and as he was knocking in a ſtaple, Doctor Ridley took the chain in his hand, and ſhaked the ſame, for it did gird in his belly, and looking aſide to the Smith, ſaid; Good fellow, knock it in hard, for the fleſh will have his courſe. Then his brother did bring him Gun-powder in a bag, and would have tied the ſame about his neck, Maſter Ridley asked what it was. His brother ſaid, Gun-powder. Then ſaid he, I will take it to be ſent of God, therefore I will receive it as ſent of him. And have you any ſaid he, for my brother, meaning Maſter Latimer? Yea Sir, that I have (quoth his brother:) Then give it unto him (ſaid he) betime, leſt ye come too late. So his brother went, and carried of the ſame Gun-powder unto Maſter Latimer.

Gun-powder given to the Martyrs.

B. Ridleys ſute to the Lord of Tame, for leaſes of poor men.

In the mean time Doctor Ridley ſpake unto my Lord Williams, and ſaid; My Lord, I muſt be a ſuter unto your Lordſhip in the behalf of divers poor men, and ſpecially in the cauſe of my poor ſiſter: I have made a ſupplication to the Queens Majeſty in their behalfes. I beſeech your Lordſhip for Chriſts ſake, to be a mean to her grace for them. My brother here hath the ſupplication, and will reſort to your Lordſhip to certifie you hereof. There is nothing in all the world that troubleth my conſcience (I praiſe God) this onely excepted. Whileſt I was in the See of London, divers poor men took leaſes of me, and agreed with me for the ſame. Now I hear ſay the Biſhop that now occupieth the ſame room, will not allow my grants unto them made, but contrary unto all law and conſcience, hath taken from them their livings, and will not ſuffer them to injoy the ſame. I beſeech you my Lord, be a mean for them: you ſhall do a good deed, and God will reward you.

D. Boner taketh away the leaſes from poor men, granted before by B. Ridley.

Then they brought a Faggot, kindled with fire, and laid the ſame down at D. Ridleyes feet. To whom M. Latimer ſpake in this manner; Be of good comfort, M. Ridley, and play the man, we ſhall this day light ſuch a candle by Gods grace in England, as I truſt ſhall never be put out.

The Church lightned by the Martyrdom of Saints.

And ſo the fire being given unto them, when Doctor Ridley ſaw the fire flaming up towards him, he cried with a wonderfull lowd voyce; In manus tuas Domine, commenda ſpiritum meum: Domine recipe ſpiritum meum, and after repeated this later part often in Engliſh, Lord, Lord, receive my ſpirit: Maſter Latimer crying as vehemently on the other ſide, Oh Father of Heaven receive my ſoul: who received the flame as it were imbracing of it. After that he had ſtroaked his face with his hands, and as it were bathed them a little in the fire, he ſoon died (as it appeareth) with very little pain or none. And thus much concerning the end of this old and bleſſed ſervant of God, Maſter Latimer, for whoſe laborious travells, fruitfull life, and conſtant death, the whole Realm hath cauſe to give great thanks to Almighty God.

M. Latimers prayer and Martyrdom.

The order of B. Ridleys burning.

But Maſter Ridley by reaſon of the evill making of the fire unto him, becauſe the wooden faggots were laid about the goſſe, and over high built, the fire burned firſt beneath, being kept down by the wood. Which when he felt, he deſired them for Chriſts ſake to let the fire come unto him. Which when his brother in law heard, but not well underſtood, intending to rid him out of his pain (for the which cauſe he gave attendance) as one in ſuch ſorrow, not well adviſed what he did, heaped faggots upon him, ſo that he clean covered him, which made the fire more vehement beneath, that it burned clean all his neather parts, before it once touched the upper, and that made him leap up and down under the faggots, and often deſire them to let the fire come unto him, ſaying; I cannot burn. Which indeed appeared well: for after his legges were conſumed by reaſon of his ſtruggling through the pain (whereof he had no releaſe, but onely his contentation in God) he ſhewed that ſide toward us clean, ſhirt and all untouched with flame. Yet in all this torment he forgat not to call unto God ſtill, having in his mouth, Lord have mercy upon me, intermingling his cry, let the fire come unto me, I cannot burn. In which pains he laboured till one of the ſtanders by with his bill pulled off the Faggots above, and where he ſaw the fire flame up, he wreſted himſelf unto that ſide. And when the flame touched the Gun-powder, he was ſeen ſtirre no more, but burned on the other ſide, falling down at Maſter Latimers feet. Which ſome ſaid, happened by reaſon that the chain looſed, other ſaid that he fell over the chain by reaſon of the poiſe of his body, and the weakneſſe of the neather lims.

D. Ridley long in burning.

The death and Martyrdom of D. Ridley.

Some ſaid that before he was like to fall from the ſtake, he deſired them to hold him to it with their bills. However it was, ſurely it moved hundreds to tears, in beholding the horrible ſight. For I think there was none, that had not clean exiled all humanity and mercy, which would not have lamented to behold the fury of the fire ſo to rage upon their bodies. Signes there were of ſorrow on every ſide. Some took it grievouſly to ſee their deaths, whoſe lives they held full dear. Some pitied their perſons, that thought their ſouls had no need thereof. His brother moved many men, ſeeing his miſerable caſe, ſeeing (I ſay) him compelled to ſuch infelicity, that he thought then to do him beſt ſervice, when he haſtened his end. Some cried out of the luck, to ſee his endeavour, who moſt dearly loved him, and ſought his releaſe, turn to his greater vexation, and increaſe of pain. But whoſo conſidered their preferments in time paſt, the places of honour that they ſometime occupied in this Common-wealth, the favour they were in with their Princes, and the opinion of learning they had, could not chooſe but ſorrow with tears, to ſee ſo great dignity, honour and eſtimation, ſo neceſſary members ſometime accounted, ſo many godly vertues, the ſtudy of ſo many years, ſuch excellent learning, to be put into the fire, and conſumed in one moment. Well, dead they are, and the reward of this world they have already. What reward remaineth for them in Heaven, the day of the Lords Glory, when he cometh with his Saints, ſhall ſhortly I truſt, declare.

The lamenting hearts of the people at the Martyrdom of theſe two Saints.

Albeit I have deferred and put over many treatiſes, letters, and exhortations, belonging to the ſtory of the Martyrs, unto the later appendix in the end of this volume; thinking alſo to have done the like with theſe fare-wells and exhortations following of B. Ridley, yet for certain purpoſes moving me thereunto, and eſpecially conſidering the fruitfull admonitions, wholſome doctrine, and neceſſary exhortations contained in the ſame, I thought beſt here to beſtow, and conſequently to adjoyn the ſaid tractations of that learned Paſtor, with the life and Story of the Author. Whereof the two firſt be in a manner his fare-wels, the one to his kinsfolks, and generally to all the faithfull of the number of Chriſts Congregation: the other more ſpeciall to the priſoners, and baniſhed Chriſtians in the Goſpels cauſe: the third containeth a fruitfull and a generall admonition to the City of London, and to all other, with neceſſary precepts of Chriſtian office, as by the tenor of them here followeth in order to be ſeen.

A Treatiſe or Letter written by D. Ridley, in ſtead of his laſt fare-well, to all his true and faithfull friends in God, with a ſharp admonition withall unto the Papiſts.

At the Name of Jeſus, let every knee bow, both of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and let every tongue confeſſe, that Jeſus Chriſt is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father, Amen.

The firſt fare-well of B. Ridley to his friends.

As a man minding to take a far journey, and to depart from his familiar friends, commonly and naturally hath a deſire to bid his friends farewell before his departure: ſo likewiſe now I looking daily, when I ſhould be called to depart hence from you (O all ye my dearly beloved brethren and ſiſters in our Saviour Chriſt, that dwell here in this world) having alike minde towards you all (and bleſſed be God for ſuch time and leiſure, whereof I right heartily thank his heavenly goodneſſe) to bid you all my dear brethren and ſiſters (I ſay in Chriſt) that dwell upon the earth, after ſuch manner as I can, Farewell.

Farewell my dear brother, George Shipſide, whom I have ever found faithfull, truſty, and loving in all ſtates and conditions, and now in the time of my croſſe, over all other to me moſt friendly and ſtedfaſt, and that which liked me beſt, over all other things, in Gods cauſe ever hearty.

Commendation of George Shipſide his brother in law.

Farewell my dear ſiſter Alice his wife. I am glad to hear of thee, that thou doſt take Chriſts croſſe which is laid now (bleſſed be God) both on thy back and mine, in good part. Thank thou God that hath given thee a godly and loving husband: ſee thou honour him and obey him, according to Gods Law. Honour thy mother in law his mother, and love all thoſe that pertain unto him, being ready to do them good, as it ſhall lie in thy power. As for thy children, I doubt not of thy husband, but that he which hath given him an heart to love and fear God, and in God them that pertain unto him, ſhall alſo make him friendly and beneficiall unto thy children, even as if they had been gotten of his own body.

Farewell my dearly beloved brother John Ridley of the Waltoun, and you my gentle and loving ſiſter Elizabeth: whom beſides the naturall league of amity, your tender love, which you were ſaid ever to bear towards me above the reſt of your brethren, doth binde me to love. My minde was to have acknowledged this your loving affection, and to have acquitted it with deeds, and not with words alone. Your daughter Elizabeth I bid farewell, whom I love for the meek and gentle ſpirit that God hath given her, which is a precious thing in the ſight of God.

To his brother John Ridley.

Farewell my beloved ſiſter of Unthank, with all your children, nephews and neeces. Since the departing of my brother Hugh, my minde was to have been unto them inſtead of their father, but the Lord God muſt and will be their father, if they would love and fear him, and live in the trade of his Law.

To his ſiſter in law of Unthank, wife to Hugh his brother.

Farewell my welbeloved and worſhipfull Couſins, Maſter Nich. Ridley of Willimountſwike, and your wife, and I thank you for all your kindeneſſe

To his couſin M. Nicholas Ridley.

neſſe ſhewed both to me, and alſo to all your own kinsfolk and mine. Good couſin, as God hath ſet you in our ſtock, and kindred (not for any reſpect of your perſon, but of his abundant grace and goodneſſe) to be as it were the bell-weather to order and conduct the reſt, and hath alſo indued you with his manifold gifts of grace both heavenly and worldly above others: ſo I pray you good couſin (as my truſt and hope is in you) continue and increaſe in the maintenance of the truth, honeſty, righteouſneſſe, and all true godlineſſe, and to the uttermoſt of your power, to withſtand falſhood, untruth, unrighteouſneſſe, and all ungodlineſſe, which is forbidden and condemned by the Word and Laws of God.

To his couſin Ralph Whitfield.

Farewell my yong couſin Ralph Whitfield. Oh your time was very ſhort with me. My minde was to have done you good, and yet you caught in that little time a loſſe, but I truſt it ſhall be recompenced, as it ſhall pleaſe Almighty God.

To all his kindred.

Farewell all my whole kindred and countrey-men, farewell in Chriſt all together. The Lord, which is the ſearcher of ſecrets, knoweth that according to my hearts deſire, my hope was of late that I ſhould have come among you, and to have brought with me abundance of Chriſts bleſſed Goſpel, according to the duty of that office and miniſtery, whereunto amongſt you I was choſen, named and appointed by the mouth of that our late peerleſſe Prince, King Edward, and ſo alſo denounced openly in his Court, by his privy Councell.

B. Ridley appointed to be B. of Durham.

Martyrdom, Gods ſingular and rare promotion.

I warn you all my welbeloved kinsfolk and country-men, that ye be not amazed or aſtonied at the kinde of my departure and diſſolution: for I enſure you, I think it the moſt honour that ever I was called unto in all my life: and therefore I thank my Lord God heartily for it, that it hath pleaſed him to call me of his great mercy unto this high honour, to ſuffer death willingly for his ſake, and his cauſe; unto the which honour he hath called the holy Prophets, and dearly beloved Apoſtles, and his bleſſed choſen Martyrs. For know ye that I doubt no more, but that the cauſes wherefore I am put to death, are Gods cauſes, and the cauſes of the truth, than I doubt that the Goſpel which John wrote is the Goſpel of Chriſt, or that Pauls Epiſtles are the very word of God. And to have a heart willing to abide, and ſtand in Gods cauſe, and in Chriſts quarrell even unto death, I enſure thee (O man) it is an ineſtimable and an honorable gift of God, given onely to the true Elect, and dearly beloved children of God, and inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven. For the holy Apoſtle and alſo Martyr in Chriſts cauſe, Saint Peter, ſaith, If ye ſuffer rebuke in the Name of Chriſt, that is, in Chriſts cauſe, and for his truths ſake, then are ye happy and bleſſed, for the glory of the Spirit of God reſteth upon you. If for rebukes ſake ſuffered in Chriſts Name, a man is pronounced, by the mouth of that holy Apoſtle, bleſſed and happy: how much more happy and bleſſed is he that hath the grace to ſuffer death alſo? Wherefore, all ye that be my true lovers and friends, rejoyce, and rejoyce with me again, and render with me hearty thanks to God our heavenly Father, that for his Sons ſake my Saviour and Redeemer Chriſt, he hath vouchſafed to call me, being elſe without his gracious goodneſſe, in my ſelf but a ſinfull and vile wretch, to call me (I ſay) unto this high dignity of his true Prophets, of his faithfull Apoſtles, and of his holy elect and choſen Martyrs, that is, to die and to ſpend this temporall life in the defence and maintenance of his eternall and everlaſting truth.

1 Pet. 4.

A bleſſed thing to ſuffer death for Chriſt.

Ye know that be my country-men dwelling upon the borders, where (alas) the true man ſuffereth oftentimes much wrong at the theeves hand, if it chance a man to be ſlain of a thief (as it often chanceth there) which went out with his neighbour to help him to reſerve his goods again, that the more cruelly he be ſlain, and the more ſtedfaſtly he ſtuck by his neighbour in the fight againſt the face of the thief, the more favour and friendſhip ſhall all his poſterity have for the ſlain mans ſake, of all them that be true, as long as the memory of this fact, and his poſterity doth endure: Even ſo ye that be my kinsfolk and country-men, know ye (howſoever the blinde, ignorant, and wicked world hereafter ſhall rail upon my death, which thing they cannot do worſe than their fathers did, of the death of Chriſt our Saviour, of his holy Prophets, Apoſtles, and Martyrs:) know ye (I ſay) that both before God, and all them that be godly, and that truely know, and follow the Laws of God, ye have, and ſhall have by Gods grace, ever cauſe to rejoyce, and to thank God highly, and to think good of it, and in God to rejoyce of me your fleſh and blood, whom God of his gracious goodneſſe hath vouchſafed to aſſociate unto the bleſſed company of his holy Martyrs in heaven: and I doubt not in the infinite goodneſſe of my Lord God, nor in the faithfull fellowſhip of his elect and choſen people, but at both their hands in my cauſe, ye ſhall rather finde the more favour and grace: for the Lord ſaith, that he will be both to them and theirs that love him, the more loving again in a thouſand generations: the Lord is ſo full of mercy to them (I ſay) and theirs which do love him indeed. And Chriſt ſaith again, that no man can ſhew more love than to give his life for his friend.

If it be a point of a faithfull friend to die with his friend upon theeves for worldly goods, how much more then to die in Chriſts quarrel upon the enemies of his Church?

Deut. 7.

John 15.

Now alſo know ye, all my true lovers in God, my kinsfolk and country-men, that the cauſe wherefore I am put to death, is even after the ſame ſort and condition, but touching more neer Gods cauſe, and in more weighty matters, but in the generall kinde all one: For both is Gods cauſe, both is in the maintenance of right, and both for the Common-wealth, and both for the weal alſo of the Chriſtian brother, although yet there is in theſe two no ſmall difference, both concerning the enemies, the goods ſtoln, and the manner of the fight. For know ye all, that like as there when the poor true man is robbed by the thief of his own goods truely gotten (whereupon he and his houſhold ſhould live) he is greatly wronged, and the thief in ſtealing and robbing with violence the poor mans goods, doth offend God, doth tranſgreſſe his Law, and is injurious both to the poor man, and to the Common-wealth: ſo I ſay, know ye that even here in the cauſe of my death, it is with the Church of England, I mean the Congregation of the true choſen children of God in this Realm of England, which I knowledge not onely to be my neighbors, but rather the Congregation of my Spirituall brethren and ſiſters in Chriſt, yea, members of one body, wherein by Gods grace, I am and have been grafted in Chriſt. This Church of England had of late of the infinite goodneſſe, and abundant grace of Almighty God, great ſubſtance, great riches of heavenly treaſure, great plenty of Gods true ſincere Word, the true and wholeſome adminiſtration of Chriſts holy Sacraments, the whole profeſſion of Chriſts Religion, truely and plainly ſet forth in Baptiſm, the plain declaration and underſtanding of the ſame, taught in the holy Catechiſm, to have been learned of all true Chriſtians.

To die in any right whatſoever it be is to die in Gods cauſe.

To die in the truth againſt theeves, and to die for the truth againſt Chriſts enemies, compared.

Truth taught in the Church of England.

The Church had alſo a true and ſincere form and manner of the Lords Supper, wherein according to Jeſus Chriſts own ordinance, and holy Inſtitution, Chriſts Commandements were executed and done. For upon the bread and wine, ſet upon the Lords Table, thanks were given, the commemoration of the Lords death was had; the bread, in the remembrance of Chriſts body torn upon the croſſe, was broken, and the cup, in the remembrance of Chriſts blood ſhed, was diſtributed, and both communicated unto all that were preſent and would receive them, and alſo they were exhorted of the miniſter ſo to do.

True miniſtration of the Lords Supper.

Service in the vulgar tongue.

All was done openly in the vulgar tongue, ſo that every thing might be moſt eaſily heard, and plainly underſtood of all the people, to Gods high glory, and the edification of the whole Church. This Church had of late the whole divine ſervice, all common and publike prayers ordained to be ſaid and heard in the common Congregation, not onely framed and faſhioned to the true vein of holy Scripture, but alſo ſet forth according to the commandement of the Lord, and St. Pauls doctrine for the peoples edification, in their vulgar tongue.

Homilies in the Church of England.

Articles ſet forth for matters of controverſie.

It had alſo holy and wholſome Homilies in commendation of the principall vertues, which are commended in Scripture: and likewiſe other Homilies againſt the moſt pernicious and capitall vices that uſe (alas) to raigne in this Realm of England. This Church had, in matters of controverſie, articles ſo penned and framed after the holy Scriptures, and grounded upon the true underſtanding of Gods Word, that in ſhort time if they had been univerſally received, they ſhould have been able to have ſet in Chriſts Church much concord and unity in Chriſts true religion, and to have expelled many falſe errours and hereſies, wherewith this Church, alas, was almoſt overgone.

Theeves of Samaria in Chriſts church, Sabei, Chaldei.

Robbing of Chriſts church.

Baptiſme mixt with mens fantaſies.

But alas, of late into this ſpirituall poſſeſſion of the heavenly treaſure of theſe godly riches, are entred in theeves, that have robbed and ſpoyled all this heavenly treaſure away. I may well complain on theſe things, and cry out upon them with the Prophet, ſaying, Deus, venerunt gentes in hæreditatem tuam, &c. Pſal. 72. O Lord God, the Gentiles, Heathen Nations, are come into thy heritage: They have defiled thy holy Temple, and made Jeruſalem an heap of ſtones, that is, They have broken and beaten down to the ground thy holy City. This Heatheniſh generation, theſe theeves of Samaria, theſe Sabei and Chaldei, theſe robbers have ruſhed out of their dens, and have robbed the Church of England of all the foreſaid holy treaſure of God; they have carried it away, and overthrown it, and inſtead of Gods holy Word, the true and right adminiſtration of Chriſts holy Sacraments, as of Baptiſme, and others, they mixt their Miniſtery with mens fooliſh fantaſies, and many wicked and ungodly traditions withall.

The Lords ſupper turned to the Maſſe.

Luke 22.

1 Cor. 11.

The Lords cup robbed.

In ſtead of the Lords holy Table, they give the people with much ſolemne diſguiſing a thing which they call their Maſſe, but indeed and in truth, it is a very masking and mockery of the true Supper of the Lord, or rather I may call it a crafty jugling, whereby theſe falſe theeves and juglers have bewitched the mindes of the ſimple people, that they have brought them from the true worſhip of God, unto pernicious idolatry, and make them to beleeve that to be Chriſt our Lord and Saviour, which indeed is neither God nor man, nor hath any life in it ſelf, but in ſubſtance is the creature of bread and wine, and in uſe of the Lords Table is the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood: and for this holy uſe, for the which the Lord hath ordained them in his Table, to repreſent unto us his bleſſed Body torn upon the croſſe for us, and his Blood there ſhedde, it pleaſed him to call them his Body and Blood: which underſtanding Chriſt declareth to be his true meaning, when he ſaith, Do this in remembrance of me. And again, Saint Paul likewiſe doth ſet out the ſame more plainly, ſpeaking of the ſame Sacrament, after the words of conſecration, ſaying, as often as ye ſhall eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, ye ſhall ſet forth (he meaneth with the ſame) the Lords death untill his coming again. And here again theſe theeves have robbed alſo the people of the Lords Cup, contrary to the plain words of Chriſt, written in his Goſpel.

Prayers turned into an unknown tongue.

Now for the common publike prayers which were in the vulgar tongue, theſe theeves have brought in again a ſtrange tongue, whereof the people underſtand not one word. Wherein what do they elſe, but rob the people of their Divine Service, wherein they ought to pray together with the Miniſter? and to pray in a ſtrange tongue, what is it, but (as St. Paul calleth it) barbarouſneſſe, childiſhneſſe, unprofitable folly, yea, and plain madneſſe.

In ſtead of Homilies the Popes decrees ſet up.

The Popes doctrine containeth blaſphemy to God, treaſon to Chriſt, is contrary to Gods Word, is a ſubverſion of true godlineſſe, and deſtruction to mans ſoul.

For the godly articles of unity in religion, and for the wholeſome Homilies, what do theſe theeves place in the ſtead of them, but the Popes Laws and Decrees, lying Legends, fained Fables, and Miracles to delude and abuſe the ſimplicity of the rude people? Thus this robbery and theft is not onely committed, nay, ſacriledge and wicked ſpoyl of heavenly things, but alſo in the ſtead of the ſame, is brought in and placed the abominable deſolation of the tyrant Antiochus, of proud Senacherib, of the ſhameleſſe-faced King, and of the Babylonicall Beaſt. Unto this robbery, this theft and ſacriledge, for that I cannot conſent, nor (God willing) ever ſhall ſo long as the breath is in my body, becauſe it is blaſphemy againſt God, high treaſon unto Chriſt our heavenly King, Lord, Maſte, and our onely Saviour and Redeemer, it is plain contrary to Gods Word, and to Chriſts Goſpel, it is the ſubverſion of all true godlineſſe, and againſt the everlaſting ſalvation of mine own ſoul, and of all my brethren and ſiſters, whom Chriſt my Saviour hath ſo dearly bought, with no leſſe price than with the affuſion and ſhedding forth of his moſt precious Blood: Therefore all ye my true lovers in God, my kinſfolks and countrey-men, for this cauſe (I ſay) know ye that I am put to death, which by Gods grace I ſhall willingly take, with hearty thanks to God therefore, in certain hope without any doubting, to receive at Gods hand again, of his free mercy and grace, everlaſting life.

Compariſon between popiſh perſecutors and wrong theeves.

Although the cauſe of the true man ſlain of the thief, helping his neighbour to recover his goods again, and the cauſe wherefore I am to be put to death, in a generality is both one (as I ſaid before) yet know ye that there is no ſmall difference. Theſe theeves againſt whom I do ſtand, are much worſe than the robbers and theeves of the borders. The goods which they ſteal are much more precious, and their kindes of fight are farre divers. Theſe theeves are worſe (I ſay) for they are more cruell, more wicked, more falſe, more deceitfull and crafty: for thoſe will but kill the body, but theſe will not ſtick to kill both body and ſoul. Thoſe, for the generall theft and robbery, be called, and are indeed, theeves and robbers: but theſe, for their ſpirituall kinde of robbery, are called Sacrilegi, as ye would ſay, Church-robbers. They are more wicked: for thoſe go about to ſpoyl men of worldly things, worldly riches, gold and ſilver, and worldly ſubſtance; theſe go about in the wayes of the devill their ghoſtly father, to ſteal from the univerſall Church, and particularly from every man, all heavenly treaſure, true faith, true charity, and hope of ſalvation in the Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, yea to ſpoyl us of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, of his Goſpel, of his heavenly ſpirit, and of the heavenly heritage of the Kingdom of heaven, ſo dearly purchaſed unto us, with the death of our Maſter and Saviour Chriſt. Theſe be the goods and godly ſubſtance whereupon the Chriſtian before God muſt live, and without the which he cannot live: Theſe goods (I ſay) theſe theeves, theſe Church-robbers go about to ſpoyl us of. The which goods, as to the man of God, they excell and far paſſe all worldly treaſure; ſo to withſtand even unto the death ſuch theeves as go about to ſpoyl both us and the whole Church of ſuch goods, is moſt high and honourable ſervice done unto God.

Popiſh perſecutors when they are falſe theeves, yet will they be called true Catholikes.

Theſe Church-robbers be alſo much more falſe, crafty, and deceitfull than the theeves upon the borders; for theſe have not the craft ſo to commend their theft, that they dare avouch it, and therefore as acknowledging themſelves to be evill, they ſteale commonly upon the night, they dare not appear at judgements and Seſſions, where juſtice is executed, and when they are taken and brought thither, they never hang any man, but they be oft times hanged for their faults. But theſe Church-robbers can ſo cloake and colour their ſpirituall robberie, that they can make people to beleeve falſhood to be truth, and truth falſhood, good to be evill, and evill good, light to be darkneſſe, and darkneſſe light, ſuperſtition to be true religion, and Idolatry to be the true worſhip of God, and that which is in ſubſtance the creature of bread and wine, to be none other ſubſtance but only the ſubſtance of Chriſt the living Lord, both God and man. And with this their falſhood and craft they can ſo juggle and bewitch the underſtanding of the ſimple, that they dare avouch it openly in Court and in Towne, and feare neither hanging nor heading, as the poore theeves of the borders do, but ſtout and ſtrong like Nembroth dare condemne to be burned in flaming fire, quick and alive, whoſoever will go about to bewray their falſhood.

The fight with ſpirituall theeves, is worſe than with temporall theeves.

The kinde of fight againſt theſe Church-robers is alſo of another ſort and kinde, than is that which is againſt the theeves of the borders. For there the true men go forth againſt them with ſpear and launce, with bow and bill, and all ſuch kinde of bodily weapons as the true men have: but here as the enemies be of another nature, ſo the watch-men of Chriſts flock, the warriours that fight in the Lords war, muſt be armed and fight with another kinde of weapons and armour. For here the enemies of God, the ſouldiers of Antichriſt, although the battell is ſet forth againſt the Church by mortall men, being fleſh and blood, and neverthe leſſe members of their father the Divell, yet for that their graund Maſter is the power of darkneſſe, their members are ſpirituall wickedneſſe, wicked ſpirits, ſpirits of errours, of hereſies, of all deceit and ungodlines, ſpirits of Idolatry, ſuperſtition, and hypocriſie, which are called of Saint Paul, Principates and and powers, Lords of the world, Rulers of the darknes of this world, and ſpirituall ſubtleties concerning heavenly things, therefore our weapons muſt be fit and meet to fight againſt ſuch, not carnall nor bodily weapons, as ſpear and launce, but ſpirituall and heavenly: we muſt fight againſt ſuch with the armour of God, not intending to kill their bodies, but their errours their falſe craft and hereſies, their Idolatry, ſuperſtition, and hypocriſie, and to ſave (as much as lyeth in us) both their bodies and ſouls.

Epheſ. 6.

And therefore as S. Paul teacheth us, we fight not againſt fleſh and blood, that is, we fight not with bodily weapon to kill the man, but with the weapons of God to put to flight his wicked errours and vice, and to ſave both bodie and ſoule.

Epheſ. 6.

Our weapons therefore are faith, hope, charitie, righteouſneſſe, truth, patience, prayer unto God, and our ſword wherewith we ſmite our enemies, beat and batter and bear down all falſhood, is the word of God. With theſe weapons, under the banner of the Croſſe of Chriſt, we do fight, ever having our eye upon our graund Maſter, Duke and Captain Chriſt; and then we reckon our ſelves to triumph and to win the Crown of everlaſting bliſſe, when induring in this battell without any ſhrinking or yeelding to the enemies, after the example of our graund Captain Chriſt our Maſter, after the example of his holy Prophets, Apoſtles, and Martyrs, when (I ſay) we are ſlain in our mortall bodies of our enemies, and are moſt cruelly and without all mercie murthered down like a many of ſheep. And the more cruell, the more painfull, the more vile and ſpitefull is the kinde of death whereunto we be put; the more glorious in God, the more bleſſed and happie we reckon (without all doubts) our martyredome to be.

The weapons of a chriſtian warriour.

And thus much deare lovers and friends in God, my Countrimen and kinsfolk, I have ſpoken for your comfort, leſt of my death (of whoſe life you looked peradventure ſometimes to have had honeſty, pleaſures, and commodities) ye might be abaſhed or think any evill: whereas ye have rather cauſe to rejoyce (if ye love me indeed) for that it hath pleaſed God to call me to a greater honour and dignity, than ever I did enjoy before, either in Rocheſter, or in the See of London, or ever ſhould have had in the See of Durham, whereunto I was laſt of all elected and named: yea, I count it greater honour before God indeed to dye in his cauſe (whereof I nothing doubt) than is any earthly or temporall promotion or honour that can be given to a man in this world. And who is he that knoweth the cauſe to be Gods, to be Chriſts quarrell, and of his Goſpel, to be the common weale of all the elect and choſen children of God, of all the inheritors of the Kingdome of heaven, who is he (I ſay) that knoweth this aſſuredly by Gods word, and the teſtimony of his own conſcience (as I through the infinite goodneſſe of God, not of my ſelf, but by his grace acknowledge my ſelfe to do) who is he (I ſay) that knoweth this and both loveth and feareth God indeed and in truth, loveth and beleeveth his Maſter Chriſt and his bleſſed Goſpel, loveth his brotherhood, the choſen children of God, and alſo luſteth and longeth for everlaſting life, who is he (I ſay againe) that would not or cannot finde in his heart in this cauſe to be content to die? The Lord forbid that any ſuch ſhould be that ſhould forſake this grace of God. I truſt in my Lord God, the God of mercies and the Father of all comfort through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, that he which hath put this minde, will, and affection by his holy ſpirit in my heart, to ſtand againſt the face of the enemie in his cauſe, and to chuſe rather the loſſe of all my worldly ſubſtance, yea, and of my life too, than to deny his known truth; that he will comfort me, ayd me, and ſtrengthen me evermore even unto the end, and to the yeelding up of my ſpirit and ſoul into his holy hands, whereof I moſt heartily beſeech his moſt holy ſacred Majeſtie of his infinite goodneſſe and mercie, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

D. Ridley named to the See of Durham.

The cauſe of Martyrs is the common cauſe, of Chriſt, and of all his elect Saints.

Let no man ſhrink to die in ſuch a bleſſed and common quarrell.

Now that I have taken my leave of my countrimen and kinsfolke, and the Lord doth lend me life, and giveth me leiſure, I will bid my other good friends in God of other places alſo, farewell. And whom firſt or before other, then the Univerſitie of Cambridge, where I have dwelt longer, found more faithfull and hearty friends, received more benefits (the benefits of my naturall Parents rents only excepted) than ever I did even in mine own native Country wherein I was born.

Benefits ſhewed to D. Ridley in Cambridge.

Farewell therefore (Cambridge) my loving Mother and tender Nurſe. If I ſhould not acknowledge thy manifold benefits, yea, if I ſhould not for thy benefits at the leaſt love thee again, truly I were to be counted too ungrate and unkinde. What benefits hadſt thou ever, that thou uſeſt to give and beſtow upon thy beſt beloved children, that thou thoughteſt too good for me? Thou didſt beſtow on me all thy ſchoole degrees, the common offices, the Chaplainſhip of the Univerſitie, the office of the Proctorſhip, and of a common Reader; and of thy private commodities and emoluments in Colledges, what was it that thou madeſt me not partner of? Firſt to be Scholler, then to be Fellow, and after my departure from thee, thou calledſt me again to a Maſterſhip of a right worſhipfull Colledge. I thanke thee my loving Mother for all this thy kindneſſe, and I pray God that his lawes, and the ſincere Goſpel of Chriſt may ever be truly taught and faithfully learned in thee.

Pembroke-Hal in Cambridge.

Commendation of Pembroke-Hall to be a ſetter-forth ever of the Goſpel.

Farewell Pembroke Hall, of late mine own Colledge, my Cure and my charge: what caſe thou art in now God knoweth, I know not well. Thou waſt ever named ſince I knew thee, which is not thirty years ago, to be ſtudious, well learned, and a great ſetter forth of Chriſts Goſpel, and of Gods true word; ſo I found thee, and bleſſed be God ſo I left thee indeed. Wo is me for thee mine own dear Colledge, if ever thou ſuffer thy ſelfe by any meanes to be brought from that trade. In thy Orchard (the wals, buts, and trees, if they could ſpeak, would beare me witneſſe) I learned without booke almoſt all Pauls Epiſtles, yea, and I ween all the Canonicall Epiſtles, ſave only the Apocalyps. Of which ſtudie, although in time a great part did depart from me, yet the ſweet ſmell thereof I truſt I ſhall carry with me into heaven: for the profit thereof I think I have felt in all my life time ever after, and I ween of late (whether they abide now or no, I cannot tell) there was that did the like. The Lord grant that this zeale and love toward that part of Gods word, which is a key and true commentary to all the holy Scripture, may ever abide in that Colledge ſo long as the World ſhall endure.

D. Ridley learned the Epiſtles of Saint Paul and Peter without book in Pembroke-Hall.

D. Ridley called into Kent by Archbiſhop Cranmer, to the Pariſh of Hern in Kent.

From Cambridge I was called into Kent by the Arch-biſhop of Canterburie Thomas Cranmer, that moſt reverend father and man of God, and of him by and by ſent to be Vicar of Herne in Eaſt Kent. Wherefore farewell Herne, thou worſhipfull and wealthy pariſh, the firſt Cure whereunto I was called to preach Gods word. Thou haſt heard of my mouth oft-times the word of God preached, not after the Popiſh trade, but after Chriſts Goſpel: Oh that the fruit had anſwered to the ſeed. And yet I muſt acknowledge me to be thy debter for the doctrine of the Lords Supper, which at that time I acknowldege God had not revealed unto me: but I bleſſe God in all that godly vertue and zeal of Gods word, which the Lord by preaching of his word did kindle manifeſtly both in the heart and in the life and works of that godly woman there, my Lady Phines; the Lord grant that his word took like effect there in many other mo.

The godly Lady Phines in Hern Pariſh.

To the metropolitick See of Canterbury.

Farewell thou Cathedrall Church of Canterburie, the Metropolitike See, whereof once I was a member. To ſpeake things pleaſant unto thee I dare not for danger of conſcience, and diſpleaſure of my Lord God, and to ſay what lieth in my heart were now too much, and I feare were able to do thee now but little good. Neverthleſſe, for the friendſhip I have found in ſome there, and for charitie ſake I wiſh thee to be waſhed cleane of all worldlineſſe and ungodlineſſe, that thou maiſt be found of God after thy name Chriſts Church in deed and in truth.

To the See of Rocheſter.

Farewell Rocheſter, ſometime my Cathedrall See, in whom (to ſay the truth) I did finde much gentleneſſe and obedience, and I truſt thou wilt not ſay the contrary, but I did uſe it to Gods glory and thine own profit in God. Oh that thou hadſt and mightſt have continued and gone forward in the trade of Gods law wherein I did leave thee; then thy charge and burden ſhould not have been ſo terrible and dangerous, as I ſuppoſe verily it is like to be (alas) in the later day.

To Weſtminſter.

To Weſtminſter other advertiſement in God I have not now to ſay, then I have ſaid before to the Cathedrall Church of Canterbury, and ſo God give thee of his grace, that thou maiſt learn in deed and in truth to pleaſe him after his own laws: and thus fare you well.

To the See of London.

Oh London, London, to whom now may I ſpeak in thee, or whom ſhall I bid farewell? Shall I ſpeak to the Prebendaries of Pauls? Alas, all that loved Gods Word, and were the true ſetters forth thereof, are now (as I hear ſay) ſome burnt and ſlain, ſome exiled and baniſhed, and ſome holden in hard priſon, and appointed daily to be put to moſt cruell death for Chriſts Goſpel ſake. As for the reſt of them, I know they could never brook me well, nor could I ever delight in them.

Biſhop Ridley depoſed from the See of London without right or judgement.

Shall I ſpeak to the See thereof, wherein of late I was placed almoſt, and not fully by the ſpace of three years? But what may I ſay to it, being (as I hear ſay I am) depoſed and expulſed by judgement as unjuſt uſurper of that room. O judgement, judgement. Can this be juſt judgement to condemn the chief Miniſter of Gods Word, the Paſtor and Biſhop of the Dioceſſe, and never bring him into judgement, that he might have heard what crimes were laid to his charge, nor ever ſuffer him to have any place or time to anſwer for himſelf? Thinkeſt thou that hereafter, when true Juſtice ſhall have place, this judgement can ever be allowed either of God or of man? Well, as for the cauſe and whole matter of my depoſition, and the ſpoil of my goods which thou poſſeſſeſt yet, I referre it unto God which is a juſt Judge; and I beſeech God, if it be his pleaſure, that that which is but my perſonall wrong, be not laid to thy charge in the later day, this onely I can pray for.

The See of London worthily rebuked.

O thou now wicked and bloudy See, why doeſt thou ſet up again many altars of Idolatry, which by the Word of God were juſtly taken away? Why haſt thou overthrown the Lords Table? Why doeſt thou daily delude thy people, masking in thy Maſſes in ſtead of the Lords holy Supper, which ought to be common as well (ſaith Chryſoſtome, yea the Lord himſelf) to the people as to the Prieſt? How dareſt thou deny to the people of Chriſt, contrary to his expreſſe commandement in the Goſpel, his holy Cup? Why bableſt thou to the people the Common-Prayer in a ſtrange tongue, wherein Saint Paul commandeth in the Lords name, that no man ſhould ſpeak before the Congregation, except it ſhould be by and by declared in their common tongue, that all might be edified? Nay, hearken thou Whoriſh Bawde of Babylon, thou wicked limb of Antichriſt, thou bloudy Wolf, why ſlayeſt thou down, and makeſt havock of the Prophets of God? Why murthereſt thou ſo cruelly Chriſts poor ſeely ſheep, which will not hear thy voice, becauſe thou art a ſtranger, and will follow none other but their own Paſtor Chriſt his voice? Thinkeſt thou to eſcape, or that the Lord will not require the bloud of his Saints at thy hands? Thy god, which is the work of thy hands, and whom thou ſayeſt thou haſt power to make, that thy deaf and dumb god (I ſay) will not indeed,

The bloudy See of London.

nor can (although thou art not aſhamed to call him thy Maker) make thee to eſcape the revenging hand of the high and Almighty God. But be thou aſſured, that the living Lord our Saviour and Redeemer, which ſitteth on the right hand of his Father in glory, he ſeeth all thy wicked waies and crueltie done to his dear members, and he will not forget his holy ones, and his hands (O thou Whoriſh Drab) ſhalt thou never eſcape. Inſtead of my farewell to thee now I ſay fye upon thee, fye upon thee filthy Drab, and all thy falſe Prophets.

To the City of London.

Yet thou (O London) I may not leave thee thus. Although thy Epiſcopall See, now being joyned in league with the ſeat of Satan, thus hath now both handled me and the Saints of God: yet I do not doubt but in that great City there be many privy mourners, which do daily mourn for that miſchief, the which never did nor ſhall conſent to that wickedneſſe, but do deteſt and abhorre it as the wayes of Satan. But theſe privy mourners here I will paſſe by, and bid them farewell with their fellowes hereafter, when the place and occaſion ſhall more conveniently require. Among the worſhipfull of the City, and ſpecially which were in office of Maioralty, yea, and in other Cities alſo (whom to name now it ſhall not be neceſſary) in the time of my Miniſtery, which was from the later part of Sir Rowland Hils yeer, unto Sir George Barnes yeer, and a great part thereof, I do acknowledge that I found no ſmall humanity and gentleneſſe, as me thought: but (to ſay the truth) that I do eſteem above all other for true Chriſtian kindneſſe, which is ſhewed in Gods cauſe, and done for his ſake. Wherefore, O Dobs, Dobs Alderman and Knight, thou in thy yeer diddeſt win my heart for evermore, for that honourable act, that moſt bleſſed work of God of the erection and ſetting up of Chriſts holy Hoſpitals, and truly religious houſes, which by thee, and through thee were begun. For thou like a man of God, when the matter was moved for the relief of Chriſts poore ſilly members to be holpen from extream miſery, hunger, and famine, thy heart, I ſay, was moved with pietie, and as Chriſts high honourable officer in that cauſe, thou calledſt together thy brethren the Aldermen of the Citie, before whom thou brakeſt the matter for the poore; thou diddeſt pleade their cauſe, yea, and not onely in thine own perſon thou diddeſt ſet forth Chriſts cauſe, but to further the matter, thou broughteſt me into the councell chamber of the City before the Aldermen alone, whom thou haddeſt aſſembled there together to hear me ſpeak what I could ſay, as an Advocate by office and duety, in the poore mens cauſe. The Lord wrought with thee, and gave thee the conſent of thy brethren; whereby the matter was brought to the common Councell, and ſo to the whole body of the Citie; by whom with an uniforme conſent, it was committed to be drawn, ordered, and deviſed by a certain number of the moſt witty Citizens and politique, endued alſo with godlineſſe, and with ready hearts to ſet forward ſuch a noble act, as could be choſen in all the whole City: and they like true and faithfull Miniſters both to their City and their Maſter Chriſt, ſo ordered, deviſed, and brought forth the matter, that thouſands of ſilly poore members of Chriſt, which elſe for extream hunger and miſery ſhould have famiſhed and periſhed, ſhall be relieved, holpen, and brought up, and ſhall have cauſe to bleſſe the Aldermen of that time, the common Councell, and the whole body of the City, but ſpecially thee O Dobs, and thoſe choſen men, by whom this honourable work of God was begun and wrought, and that ſo long throughout all ages, as that godly work ſhall endure; which I pray Almighty God may be ever unto the worlds end, Amen.

Commendation of ſir Richard Dobs, Alderman and Knight.

The erecting of the Hoſpitall by B. Ridley and ſir Richard Dobs, Maior of London.

Commendation of ſir George Barnes, Maior of London.

And thou, O Sir George Barnes, the truth is to be confeſſed to Gods glory, and to the good example of other, thou waſt in thy yeer not onely a furtherer and continuer of that which before thee by thy predeceſſor was well begun; but alſo diddeſt labour ſo to have perfited the work, that it ſhould have been an abſolute thing and perfect ſpectacle of true charitie and godlineſſe unto all Chriſtendome. Thine endeavour was to have ſet up an houſe of occupations, both that all kinde of poverty being able to work ſhould not have lacked, whereupon profitably they might have been occupied to their own relief and to the profit and commodity of the Common-wealth of the City, and alſo to have retired thither the poore babes brought up in the Hoſpitals, when they had come to a certain age and ſtrength, and alſo all thoſe which in the Hoſpitals aforeſaid had been cured of their diſeaſes. And to have brought this to paſſe, thou obtainedſt, not without great diligence and labour both of thee and of thy brethren of that godly King Edward, that Chriſtian and peereleſſe Princes hand, his Princely place of Bridewell, and what other things to the performance of the ſame, and under what condition it is not unknown. That this thine endeavour hath not had like ſucceſſe, the fault is not in thee, but in the condition and ſtate of the time, which the Lord of his infinite mercy vouchſafe to amend when it ſhall be his gracious will and pleaſure.

Bridewell obtained of King Edward by ſir George Barnes to ſet poor people a work.

To the citizens of London.

Farewell now all ye Citizens that be of God, of what ſtate and condition ſoever yee be. Undoubtedly in London ye have heard Gods Word truly preached. My hearts deſire and daily prayer ſhall be for you, as for whom, for my time, I know to my Lord God I am countable, that yee never ſwerve, neither for loſſe of life nor worldly goods, from Gods holy Word, and yeild unto Antichriſt: whereupon muſt needs follow the extream diſpleaſure of God, and the loſſe both of your bodies and ſoules into perpetuall damnation for evermore.

Now that I have gone through the places where I have dwelt any ſpace in the time of my pilgrimage here upon Earth, remembring that for the ſpace of King Edwards raigne, which was for the time of mine office in the Seas of London and Rocheſter, I was a member of the higher houſe of the Parliament; therefore (ſeeing my God hath given me leiſure, and the remembrance thereof) I will bid my Lords of the temporalty farewell. They ſhall have no juſt cauſe (by Gods grace) to take it that I intend to ſay in ill part. As for the ſpirituall Prelacy that now is, I have nothing to ſay to them, except I ſhould repeat again a great part of that I have ſaid before now already to the See of London. To you therefore my Lords of the temporalty will I ſpeak, and this would I have you firſt to underſtand, that when I wrote this, I looked daily when I ſhould be called to the change of this life, and thought that this my writing ſhould not come to your knowledge, before the time of the diſſolution of my body and ſoul ſhould be expired; and therefore know ye, that I had before mine eyes onely the fear of God, and Chriſtian charity toward you, which moved me to write; for of you hereafter I look not in this world, either for pleaſure or diſpleaſure. If my talk ſhall do you never ſo much pleaſure or profit, you cannot promote me; nor if I diſpleaſe you can ye hurt me or harm me: for I ſhall be out of your reach. Now therefore if you fear God, and can be content to hear the talk of him that ſeeketh nothing at your hands, but to ſerve God, and to do you good: hearken what I ſay. I ſay unto you as S. Paul ſaith to the Galathians; I wonder my Lords what hath bewitched you, that yee ſo ſuddenly are fallen from Chriſt unto Antichriſt, from Chriſts Goſpel unto mans traditions, from the Lord that bought you, unto the Biſhop now of Rome. I warne you of your perill; be not deceived, except you will be found willingly conſenters unto your own death. For if you think thus; We are Lay-men, this is a matter of religion, we follow as we are taught and led, if our Teachers and Governors teach us and lead us amiſſe, the fault is in them, they ſhall bear the blame: My Lords this is true (I grant you) that both the falſe teachers, and the corrupt governour ſhall be puniſhed for the death of their Subject, whom they have falſly taught and corruptly lead, yea, and his bloud ſhall be required at their hands: but yet neverthleſſe ſhall the ſubject dye the death himſelf alſo, that is, he ſhall alſo be damned for his own ſinne; for if the blind lead the blind, Chriſt ſaith, not the leader onely, but he ſaith, both ſhall fall into the Ditch. Shall the Synagogue and the Senate of the Jews (trow ye) which forſook Chriſt, and conſented to his death, therefore be excuſed, becauſe Annas and Caiaphas, with the Scribes and Phariſees and their Clergy, did teach them amiſſe? yea and alſo Pilate their Governor and the Emperors Lieutenant by his tyranny, did without cauſe put him to death: Forſooth no my Lords, no. For notwithſtanding that corrupt doctrine, or Pilates waſhing of his hands, neither of both ſhall excuſe either that Synagogue and Seigniory, or Pilate; but at the Lords hand, for the effuſion of that innocent bloud, on the later day all ſhall drink of the deadly whip. Ye are witty and underſtand what I mean; therefore I will paſſe over this, and return to tell you how ye are fallen from Chriſt to his adverſary the Biſhop of Rome.

Acts 26.

Many good men in the See of Rome.

So long as the See of Rome followed the rules of the Apoſtles, it might be called Peter or Pauls Chair. The Church received of the Apoſtles, the Apoſtles of Chriſt, Chriſt of God. Tertul.

And leſt (my Lords) ye may peradventure think, thus barely to call the Biſhop of Rome Chriſts adverſary, or (to ſpeak in plain termes) to call him Antichriſt, that it is done in mine anguiſh, and that I do but rage, and as a deſperate man do not care what I ſay, or upon whom I do rail; therefore that your Lordſhips may perceive my minde, and thereby underſtand that I ſpeak the words of truth and ſobriety (as Saint Paul ſaid unto Feſtus) be it known unto your Lordſhips all, that as concerning the Biſhop of Rome, I neither hate the perſon nor the place. For I enſure your Lordſhips (the living Lord beareth me witneſſe, before whom I ſpeak) I do think many a good holy man, many Martyrs and Saints of God have ſit and taught in that place Chriſts Goſpel truly, which therefore juſtly may be called Apoſtolici, that is, true Diſciples of the Apoſtles, and alſo that Church and Congregation of Chriſtians to be a right Apoſtolike Church: yea, and that certain hundreth yeers after the ſame was firſt erected and builded upon Chriſt, by the true Apoſtolicall doctrine taught by the mouthes of the Apoſtles themſelves. If ye will know how long that was and how many hundreth yeers, to be curious in pointing the preciſe number of the yeers I will not be too bold, but thus I ſay; So long and ſo many hundreth yeers as that See did truly teach and preach that Goſpel, that religion, exerciſed that power, and ordered every thing by thoſe lawes and rules which that See received of the Apoſtles, and (as Tertullian ſaith) the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and Chriſt of God, ſo long (I ſay) that See might well have been called Peter and Pauls Chair and See, or rather Chriſts Chair, and the Biſhop thereof Apoſtolicus, or true Diſciple and Succeſſour of the Apoſtles, and a Miniſter of Chriſt.

The See of Rome hath degenerated from the Apoſtles rules, and hath ſet up another religion.

That is, hath exerciſed another power.

Hath ordained ſtrange laws.

If true doctrine make the See Apoſtolike, then contrary doctrine maketh the See to be Antichriſtian.

But ſince the time that that See hath degenerated from the Trade of truth and true Religion, the which it received of the Apoſtles at the beginning, and hath preached another Goſpel, hath ſet up another religion, hath exerciſed another power, and hath taken upon it to order and rule the Church of Chriſt by other ſtrange Laws, Canons, and Rules then ever it received of the Apoſtles, or the Apoſtles of Chriſt, which things it doth at this day, and hath continued ſo doing (alas, alas) of too too long a time; ſince the time (I ſay) that the ſtate and condition of that See hath thus been changed, in truth it ought of duty and of right to have the names changed both of the See and of the ſitter therein. For underſtand my Lords, it was neither for the priviledge of the place or perſon thereof, that that See and Biſhop thereof were called Apoſtolike; but for the true trade of Chriſts Religion which was taught and maintained in that See at the firſt, and of thoſe godly men. And therefore as truly and juſtly as that See then, for that true trade of religion, and conſanguinity of doctrine with the religion and doctrine of Chriſts Apoſtles, was called Apoſtolike; ſo as truly and as juſtly for the contrariety of religion, and diverſity of doctrine from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, that See and the Biſhop thereof, at this day both ought to be called, and are indeed Antichriſtian.

Apoc. 1

Daniel 7.

The See is the ſeat of Satan, and the Biſhop of the ſame, that maintaineth the abominations thereof, is Antichriſt himſelf indeed. And for the ſame cauſes this See at this day is the ſame which Saint John calleth in his Revelation, Babylon, or the Whore of Babylon, and ſpirituall Sodoma and Egyptus, the Mother of fornication and of the abominations upon the earth. And with this Whore doth ſpiritually meddle, and lyeth with her, and committeth moſt ſtinking and abominable adultery before God, all thoſe Kings and Princes, yea and all Nations of the Earth which do conſent to her abominations, and uſe or practiſe the ſame; that is (of the innummerable multitude of them to rehearſe ſome for example ſake) her diſpenſations, her pardons and pilgrimages, her invocation of Saints, her worſhipping of Images, her falſe counterfeit religion in her Monkery and Frierage, and her traditions, whereby Gods Laws are defiled; as her maſſing and falſe miniſtring of Gods Word and the Sacraments of Chriſt cleane contrary to Chriſts Word and the Apoſtles doctrine, (whereof in particularity I have touched ſomething before in my talk had with the See of London, and in other treatiſes more at large: wherein (if it ſhall pleaſe God to bring the ſame to light) it ſhall appear I truſt by Gods grace plainly to the man of God, and to him whoſe rule in judgement of religion is Gods Word, that that Religion, that rule and order, that doctrine and faith which this Whore of Babylon, and the Beaſt whereupon ſhe doth ſit, maintaineth at this day with all violence of fire and ſword, with ſpoyl and baniſhment (according to Daniels propheſie) and finally with all falſehood, deceit, hypocriſie, and all kinde of ungodlineſſe, are as clean contrary to Gods Word, as darkneſſe is unto light, or light unto darkneſſe, white to black, or black to white, or as Belial unto Chriſt, or Chriſt unto Antichriſt himſelf.

He ſpeaketh to the Lords temporall.

I know my Lords, and foreſaw when I wrote this, that ſo many of you as ſhould ſee this my writing, not being before endued with the Spirit of grace and the Light of Gods Word, ſo many (I ſay) would at theſe my words Lordlike ſtampe and ſpurn, and ſpit thereat. But ſober your ſelves with patience, and be ſtill, and know ye that in my writing of this, my minde was none other, but in God (as the living God doth bear me witneſſe) both to do you profit and pleaſure. And otherwiſe, as for your diſpleaſure, by that time this ſhall come to your knowledge, I truſt by Gods grace to be in the hands and protection of the Almighty, my heavenly Father and the living Lord, which is, (as Saint John ſaith) the greateſt of all, and then I ſhall not need (I trow) to fear what any Lord, no nor what King or Prince can do unto me.

My Lords, if in times paſt ye have been contented to hear me ſometimes in matters of religion before the Prince in the Pulpit, and in the Parliament houſe, and have not ſeemed to have deſpiſed what I have ſaid (when as elſe if ye had perceived juſt occaſion, ye might then have ſuſpected me in my talk, though it had been reaſonable, either deſire of worldly gain, or fear of diſpleaſure) how hath then your Lordſhips more cauſe to hearken to my word, and to hear me patiently, ſeeing now ye cannot juſtly think of me being in this caſe appointed to dye, and looking daily when I ſhall be called to come before the eternall Judge, otherwiſe but that I onely ſtudy to ſerve my Lord God, and to ſay that thing which I am perſwaded aſſuredly by Gods Word ſhall and doth pleaſe him, and profit all them to whom God ſhall give grace to hear and beleeve what I do ſay? And I do ſay even that I have ſaid heretofore both of the See of Rome and of the Biſhop thereof, I mean after this their preſent ſtate at this day, wherein if ye will not beleeve the Miniſters of God, and true Preachers of his Word, verily I denounce unto you in Verbo Domini, except ye do repent betime, it ſhall turn to your confuſion, and to your ſmart on the later day. Forget not what I ſay my Lords, for Gods ſake forget not, but remember it upon your bed. For I tell you moreover, as I know I muſt be countable of this my talk, and of my ſpeaking thus, to the eternall Judge (who will judge nothing amiſſe) ſo ſhall you be countable of your duty in hearing, and you ſhall be charged, if yee will not hearken to Gods Word, for not obeying to the truth. Alas my Lords, how chanceth this, that this matter is now anew again to be perſwaded unto you? Who would have thought of late, but your Lordſhips had been perſwaded indeed ſufficiently, or that ye could ever have agreed ſo uniformly with one conſent to aboliſhment of the uſurpation of the Biſhop of Rome? If that matter were then but a matter of policy wherein the Prince muſt be obeyed; how is it now made a matter wherein (as your Clergy ſaith now, and ſo ſaith the Popes laws indeed) ſtandeth the unitie of the Catholike Church, and a matter of neceſſity of our ſalvation? Hath the time, being ſo ſhort ſince the death of the two laſt Kings, Henry the eighth, and Edward his ſonne, altered the nature of the matter? If it have not, but was of the ſame nature and danger before God then as it is now, and be now (as it is ſaid by the Popes laws, and the inſtructions ſet forth in Engliſh to the Curates of the Dioceſſe of York) indeed a matter of neceſſity to ſalvation: how then chanced it that ye were all (O my Lords) ſo light, and ſo little paſſed upon the Catholike faith and the unity thereof (without the which no man can be ſaved) as for your Princes pleaſures which were but mortall men, to forſake the unity of your Catholike faith, that is, to forſake Chriſt and his Goſpel? And furthermore, if it were both then and now is ſo neceſſary to ſalvation, how chanced it alſo that ye, all the whole body of the Parliament agreeing with you, did not onely aboliſh and expell the Biſhop of Rome, but alſo did abjure him in your own perſons, and did decree in your acts great oathes to be taken of both the ſpiritualty and temporalty, whoſoever ſhould enter into any weighty and chargeable office in the Common-wealth? But on the other ſide, if the law and decree which maketh the ſupremacy of the See and Biſhop of Rome over the univerſall Church of Chriſt, be a thing of neceſſity required unto ſalvation by an Antichriſtian law (as it is indeed) and ſuch inſtructions as are given to the Dioceſſe of York, be indeed a ſetting forth of the power of that Beaſt of Babylon, by the craft and falſehood of his falſe Prophets (as of truth, compared unto Gods Word, and truly judged by the ſame, it ſhall plainly appear that they be) then my Lords never think other, but the day ſhall come when ye ſhall be charged with this your undoing of that, that once ye had well done, and with this your perjury and breach of your oath, which oath was done in judgement, juſtice, and truth agreeable to Gods law. The Whore of Babylon may well for a time dally with you, and make you ſo drunken with the wine of her filthy ſtews and whoredome (as with her diſpenſations and promiſes of pardon à pœna & culpa) that for drunkenneſſe and blindneſſe ye may think your ſelves ſafe. But be ye aſſured, when the living Lord ſhall try the matter by the fire, and judge it according to his Word, when all her abominations ſhall appear what they be; then ye my Lords, (I give your Lordſhips warning in time) repent if ye be happy, and love your own ſoules health, repent, I ſay, or elſe without all doubt, ye ſhall never eſcape the hands of the living Lord, for the guilt of your perjury and breach of your oath. As ye have banquetted and lain by the Whore in the fornication of her whoriſh diſpenſations, pardons, idolatry, and ſuch like abominations; ſo ſhall ye drink with her (except ye repent betime) of the cup of the Lords indignation and everlaſting wrath, which is prepared for the Beaſt, his falſe Prophets, and all their partakers. For he that is partner with them in their whoredome and abominations, muſt alſo be partner with them of their plagues, and in the later day ſhall be thrown with them into the lake burning with brimſtone and unquenchable fire. Thus fare ye well my Lords all. I pray God give you underſtanding of his bleſſed will and pleaſure, and make you to beleeve and embrace the truth, Amen.

Pſal. 4.

If the unity of the Popes Church ſtandeth upon neceſſity of ſalvation, why did the Lords of this Realm abjure this unity in King Henry and King Edwards dayes? If it be otherwiſe, why then do they exjure themſelves, turning to it again?

Ierem. 6.

Another farewell to the priſoners in Chriſts Goſpels cauſe, and to all them which for the ſame cauſe are exiled and baniſhed out from their own country, chooſing rather to leave all worldly commodity, then their Maſter Chriſt.

Another farewell of biſhop Ridley to the priſoners, &c.

Farewell my dearly beloved brethren in Chriſt, both ye my fellow priſoners, and ye alſo that be exiled and baniſhed out of your countries, becauſe ye will rather forſake all worldly commodity, then the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Farewell all ye together in Chriſt; farewell and be merry, for ye know that the triall of your faith bringeth forth patience, and patience ſhall make us perfect, whole and ſound on every ſide, and ſuch after triall (ye know) ſhall receive the Crown of life, according to the promiſe of the Lord made to his dear beloved; let us therefore be patient unto the coming of the Lord. As the husbandman abideth patiently the former and later rain for the encreaſe of his crop, ſo let us be patient and pluck up our hearts; for the coming of the Lord approacheth apace. Let us (my dear brethren) take example of patience in tribulation of the Prophets, which ſpake likewiſe Gods Word truly in his name. Let Job be to us an example of patience, and the end which the Lord ſuffered, which is full of mercy and pitie. We know my brethren by Gods Word, that our faith is much more precious then any corruptible gold, and yet that is tried by the fire: even ſo our faith is therfore tried likewiſe in tribulations, that it may be found, when the Lord ſhall appear, laudable, glorious, and honourable. For if we for Chriſts cauſe do ſuffer, that is gratefull before God; for thereunto are we called, that is our ſtate and vocation, wherewith let us be content. Chriſt we know ſuffered for us afflictions, leaving us an example that we ſhould follow his footſteps; for he committed no ſinne, nor was there any guile found in his mouth: when he was railed upon, and all to be reviled, he railed not again: when he was evill intreated, he did not threaten, but committed the puniſhment thereof to him that judgeth aright.

Matth. 5.
Luke 21.

Let us ever have in freſh remembrance thoſe wonderfull comfortable ſentences ſpoken by the mouth of our Saviour Chriſt; Bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake, for theirs is the Kingdome of Heaven. Bleſſed are ye when men revile you, perſecute you, and ſpeak all evill againſt you for my ſake: rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven; for ſo did they perſecute the Prophets which were before you. Therefore let us alway bear this in our mindes, that if any commodity do chance unto us for righteouſneſſe ſake, happy are we whatſoever the world doth think of us. Chriſt our Maſter hath told us before hand, that the brother ſhould put the brother to death, and the father the ſonne, and the children ſhould riſe againſt their parents and kill them, and that Chriſts true Apoſtles ſhould be hated of all men for his names ſake; but he that ſhall abide patiently unto the end, ſhall be ſaved.

Luke 6.
Matth. 10.
Matth. 10.

Let us then endure in all troubles patiently after the example of our Maſter Chriſt, and be contented therewith, for he ſuffered being our Maſter and Lord: how doth it not then become us to ſuffer? For the Diſciple is not above his Maſter, nor the ſervant above his Lord. It may ſuffice the Diſciple to be as his Maſter, and the ſervant to be as his Lord. If they have called the Father of the family, the Maſter of the houſhold, Bælzebub, how much more ſhall they call ſo them of his houſhold? Fear them not then (ſaith our Saviour) for all privities ſhall be made plain; there is now nothing ſecret, but it ſhall be ſhewed in light. Of Chriſts words let us neither be aſhamed, nor afraid to ſpeak them; for ſo Chriſt our Maſter commandeth us, ſaying: That I tell you privily, ſpeak openly abroad, and that I tell you in your ear, preach it upon the houſe top. And fear not them which kill the body; for the ſoul they cannot kill, but fear him which can caſt both body and ſoul into hell fire.

Matth. 10.
To confeſſe Chriſt, and not to fear danger.

Know ye that the heavenly Father hath ever a gracious eye and reſpect toward you, and a fatherly providence for you, ſo that without his knowledge and permiſſion nothing can do you harm. Let us therefore caſt all our care upon him, and he ſhall provide that which ſhall be beſt for us. For if of two ſmall ſparrowes which both are ſold for a mite, one of them lighteth not on the ground without your father, and all the hairs of our head are numbred, fear not them (ſaith our Maſter Chriſt) for ye are more worth then many ſmall ſparrows. And let us not ſtick to confeſſe our Maſter Chriſt for fear of danger, whatſoever it ſhall be, remembring the promiſe that Chriſt maketh, ſaying; Whoſoever ſhall confeſſe me before men, him ſhall I confeſſe before my Father which is in Heaven: but whoſoever ſhall deny me, him ſhall I likewiſe deny before my Father which is in Heaven. Chriſt came not to give unto us here a carnall amity, and a worldly peace, or to knit his unto the world in eaſe and peace, but rather to ſeparate and divide them from the world, and to joyn them unto himſelf: in whoſe cauſe we muſt, if we will be his, forſake father and mother, and ſtick unto him. If we forſake him or ſhrink from him for trouble or deaths ſake, which he calleth his croſſe; he will none of us, we cannot be his. If for his cauſe we ſhall loſe our temporall lives here, we ſhall finde them again, and enjoy them for evermore: but if in his cauſe we will not be contented to leave nor loſe them here, then ſhall we loſe them ſo, that we ſhall never find them again, but in everlaſting death. What though our troubles here be painfull for the time, and the ſting of death bitter and unpleaſant? yet we know that they ſhall not laſt in compariſon of eternity, no not the twinkling of an eye, and that they patiently taken in Chriſts cauſe, ſhall procure and get us unmeaſurable heaps of Heavenly glory, unto the which theſe temporall pains of death and troubles compared, are not to be eſteemed, but to be rejoyced upon. Wonder not, ſaith Saint Peter, as though it were any ſtrange matter that ye are tried by the fire, he meaneth of tribulation, which thing, ſaith he, is done to prove you; nay rather in that ye are partners of Chriſts afflictions, rejoyce, that in his glorious revelation ye may rejoyce with merry hearts. If ye ſuffer rebukes in Chriſts name, happy are ye, for the glory and Spirit of God reſteth upon you. Of them God is reviled and diſhonoured, but of you he is glorified.

2 Cor. 4.
1 Pet. 3.

Let no man be aſhamed of that he ſuffereth as a Chriſtian, and in Chriſts cauſe; for now is the time that judgement and correction muſt begin at the houſe of God: and if it begin firſt at us, what ſhall be the end of thoſe, think ye, which beleeve not the Goſpel? And if the righteous ſhall be hardly ſaved, the wicked and the ſinner where ſhall he appear? Wherefore they which are afflicted according to the Will of God, let them lay down and commit their ſouls to him by well doing, as to a truſty and faithfull Maker. This, as I ſaid, may not ſeem ſtrange to us, for we know that all the whole fraternity of Chriſts congregation in this world is ſerved with the like, and by the ſame is made perfect. For the fervent love that the Apoſtles had unto their Maſter Chriſt, and for the great commodities and increaſe of all godlineſſe which they felt by their faith to inſue of afflictions in Chriſts cauſe, and thirdly for the heaps of heavenly joyes which the ſame do get unto the godly, which ſhall endure in heaven for evermore; for theſe cauſes (I ſay) the Apoſtles of their afflictions did joy, and rejoyced in that they were had and accounted worthy to ſuffer contumelies and rebukes for Chriſts name. And Paul, as he glorieth in the grace and favour of God, whereunto he was brought and ſtood in by faith; ſo he rejoyced in his afflictions for the heavenly and ſpirituall profits which he numbred to riſe upon them: yea, he was ſo far in love with that that the carnall man loatheth ſo much, that is, with Chriſts croſſe, that he judged himſelf to know nothing elſe but Chriſt crucified; he will glory (he ſaith) in nothing elſe but in Chriſts croſſe, yea and he bleſſeth all thoſe, as the onely true Iſraelites and elect people of God with peace and mercy, which walk after that rule and after none other.

The cauſes why the Apoſtles ſo rejoyced in their afflictions.
1 Cor. 2.
2 Cor. 11.

O Lord, what a wonderfull ſpirit was that that made Paul in ſetting forth of himſelf againſt the vanitie of Satans Pſeudo-apoſtles, and in his claim there, that he in Chriſts cauſe did excell and paſſe them all? what wonderfull ſpirit was that (I ſay) that made him to reckon up all his troubles, his labours, his beatings, his whippings and ſcourgings, his ſhipwracks, his dangers and perils by water and by land, his famine, hunger, ger, nakedneſſe, and cold, with many moe, and the dayly care of all the congregations of Chriſt, among whom every mans pain did pierce his heart, and every mans grief was grievous unto him?

2 Tim. 2.

The glory of Paul wherein it conſiſteth.

O Lord, is this Pauls primacy, whereof he thought ſo much good that he did excell other? Is not this Pauls ſaying unto Timothy his own ſchollar? and doth it not pertain to whoſoever will be Chriſts true ſouldiers? Bear thou (ſaith he) affliction like a good ſouldier of Jeſus Chriſt.

2 Tim. 2.

This is true: If we die with him (he meaneth Chriſt) we ſhall live with him; if we ſuffer with him, we ſhall raigne with him; if we deny him, he ſhall deny us; if we be faithleſſe, he remaineth faithfull, he cannot deny himſelf. This, Paul would have known to every body; for there is none other way to heaven but Chriſt and his way: and all that will live godly in Chriſt, ſhall (ſaith Saint Paul) ſuffer perſecution.

2 Tim 3.

By this way went to Heaven the Patriarks, the Prophets, Chriſt our Maſter, his Apoſtles, his Martyrs, and all the godly ſince the beginning. And as it hath been of old, that he which was born after the fleſh, perſecuted him which was born after the ſpirit, for ſo it was in Iſaacs time: ſo ſaid St. Paul, it was in his time alſo.

Gal. 4.

And whether it be ſo or no now, let the ſpirituall man, the ſelf ſame man I mean, that is indued with the Spirit of Almighty God, let him be judge.

The way to heaven is by afflictions.

Of the croſſe of the Patriarks, as ye may reade in their ſtories, if ye reade the book of Geneſis, ye ſhall perceive.

Heb. 11.

Of other Saint Paul in few words comprehendeth much matter, ſpeaking in a generality of the wonderfull afflictions, death, and torments which the men of God in Gods cauſe, and for the truths ſake willingly and gladly did ſuffer. After much particular rehearſall of many, he ſaith; Other were racked and deſpiſed, and would not be delivered, that they might obtain a better reſurrection. Other again were tried with mockings and ſcourgings, and moreover with bonds and impriſonment; they were ſtoned, hewn aſunder, tempted, fell, and were ſlain upon the edge of the ſword, ſome wandred to and fro in ſheeps pilches, in goats pilches, forſaken, oppreſſed, afflicted, ſuch godly men as the world was unworthy of, wandring in wilderneſſe, in mountains, in caves, and in dens, and all theſe were commended for their faith. And yet they abide for us the ſervants of God, and for thoſe their brethren which are to be ſlain as they were for the Word of Gods ſake, that none be ſhut out, but that we may all go together to meet our Maſter Chriſt in the ayre at his coming, and ſo to be in bliſſe with him in body and ſoul for evermore.

Heb. 12.

Therefore ſeeing we have ſo much occaſion to ſuffer and to take afflictions for Chriſts Names ſake patiently, ſo many commodities thereby, ſo weighty cauſes, ſo many good examples, ſo great neceſſity, ſo pure promiſes of eternall life and heavenly joyes of him that cannot lye: Let us throw away whatſoever might let us, all burden of ſin, and all kinde of carnality, and patiently and conſtantly let us runne for the beſt game in this race that is ſet before us, ever having our eyes upon Jeſus Chriſt the King-leader, Captain, and Perfiter of our faith, which for the joy that was ſet before him endured the croſſe, not paſſing upon the ignominy and ſhame thereof, and is ſet now at the right hand of the Throne of God.

Reaſons to move us to patience under the croſſe.

Conſider this, that he ſuffered ſuch ſtrife of ſinners againſt himſelf, that ye ſhould not give over, nor faint in your mindes. As yet brethren we have not withſtood unto death, fighting againſt ſinne. Let us never forget (dear brethren) for Chriſts ſake, that fatherly exhortation of the wiſe man that ſpeaketh unto us as unto his children, the godly wiſedome of God, ſaying thus; My ſon, deſpiſe not the correction of the Lord, nor fall from him when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth, him doth he correct, and ſcourgeth every childe whom he receiveth.

Prov. 3.

What childe is he whom the father doth not chaſten? If ye be free from chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards and no children.

Heb. 12.

Seeing then, when as we have had carnall parents which chaſtened us, we reverenced them, ſhall not we much more be ſubject unto our ſpirituall father that we might live? And they for a little time have taught us after their own minde; but this Father teacheth us to our commodity, to give unto us his holineſſe. All chaſtiſement for the preſent time appeareth not pleaſant but painfull; but afterward it rendereth the fruit of righteouſneſſe on them which are exerciſed in it. Wherefore let us be of good cheer (good brethren) and let us pluck up our feeble members that were fallen or began to faint, heart, hands, knees, and all the reſt, and let us walk upright and ſtraight, that no limping nor halting bring us out of the way. Let us look, not upon the things that be preſent, but with the eyes of our faith let us ſtedfaſtly behold the things that be everlaſting in Heaven, and ſo chooſe rather in reſpect of that which is to come, with the choſen members of Chriſt to bear Chriſts Croſſe, than for this ſhort life time to enjoy all the riches, honours, and pleaſures of the broad world. Why ſhould we Chriſtians fear death? Can death deprive us of Chriſt, which is all our comfort, our joy, and our life? Nay forſooth. But contrary, death ſhall deliver us from this mortall body, which loadeth and beareth down the ſpirit, that it cannot ſo well perceive heavenly things; in the which ſo long as we dwell, we are abſent from God.

2 Cor. 5.

Wherefore underſtanding our ſtate in that we be Chriſtians, that if our mortall body, which is our earthly houſe, were deſtroyed, we have a building, a houſe not made with hands, but everlaſting in heaven, &c. therefore we are of good cheer, and know that when we are in the body, we are abſent from God; for we walk by faith, and not by clear ſight.

2 Cor. 5.

Neverthleleſſe we are bold, and had rather be abſent from the body, and preſent with God. Wherefore we ſtrive, whether we be preſent at home, and abſent abroad, that we may alwayes pleaſe him. And who that hath true faith in our Saviour Chriſt, whereby he knoweth ſomewhat truely what Chriſt our Saviour is, that he is the eternall Son of God, life, light, the wiſedome of the Father, all goodneſſe, all righteouſneſſe and whatſoever is good that heart can deſire, yea infinite plenty of all theſe, above that that mans heart can either conceive or think (for in him dwelleth the fulneſſe of the Godhead corporally) and alſo that he is given us of the Father, and made of God to be our wiſedome, our righteouſneſſe, our holineſſe, and our redemption: who (I ſay) is he that beleeveth this indeed, that would not gladly be with his Maſter Chriſt? Paul for this knowledge coveted to have been looſed from the body, and to have been with Chriſt, for that he counted it much better for himſelf, and had rather to be looſed than to live.

1 Cor. 1.

Phil. 1.

Therefore theſe words of Chriſt to the thief on the Croſſe, that asked of him mercy, were full of comfort and ſolace: This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe. To die in the defence of Chriſts Goſpel it is our bounden duty to Chriſt, and alſo to our neighbour. To Chriſt, for he died for us, and roſe again that he might be Lord over all. And ſeeing he died for us, we alſo (ſaith Saint John) ſhould jeopard, yea give our life for our brethren. And this kinde of giving and loſing, is getting and winning indeed: for he that giveth or loſeth his life thus, getteth and winneth it forevermore. Bleſſed are they therefore that die in the Lord, and if they die in the Lords cauſe, they are moſt happy of all. Let us not then fear death, which can do us no harm, otherwiſe than for a moment to make the fleſh to ſmart: but that our faith, which is ſurely faſtened and fixed unto the Word of God, telleth us that we ſhall be anon after death in peace, in the hands of God, in joy, in ſolace, and that from death we ſhall go ſtraight unto life. For Saint John ſaith, He that liveth, and beleeveth in me, ſhall never die. And in another place, He ſhall depart from death unto life. And therefore this death of the Chriſtian is not to be called death, but rather a gate or entrance into everlaſting life. Therefore Paul calleth it but a diſſolution and reſolution, and both Peter and Paul, a putting off this tabernacle or dwelling houſe: meaning thereby the mortall body, as wherein the ſoul or ſpirit doth dwell here in this world for a ſmall time. Yea this death may be called to the Chriſtian, an end of all miſeries. For ſo long as we live here, we muſt paſſe thorow many tribulations before we can enter in the Kingdome of Heaven. And now, after that death hath ſhot his bolt, all the Chriſtian mans enemies have done what they can; after that, they have no more to do. What could hurt or harm poor Lazarus that lay at the rich mans gate? His former penury and poverty? his miſery, beggery, and horrible ſores and ſickneſſe? For ſo ſoon as death had ſtricken him with his dart, ſo ſoon came the Angels, and carried him ſtraight up into Abrahams boſome. What loſt he by death, who from miſery and pain is ſet by the miniſtery of Angels, in a place both of joy and ſolace.

Farewell (dear brethren) farewell, and let us comfort our hearts in all troubles, and in death, with the Word of God, for heaven and earth ſhall periſh, but the word of the Lord endureth for ever.

Farewell Chriſts dearly beloved Spouſe here wandring in this world in a ſtrange land, farre from thine own country, and compaſſed about on every hand with deadly enemies, which ceaſe not to aſſault thee, ever ſeeking thy deſtruction.

Farewell, farewell, O ye the whole and univerſall Congregation of the choſen of God here living upon earth, the true Church militant of Chriſt, the true myſticall Body of Chriſt, the very houſhold and family of God, and the ſacred temple of the holy Ghoſt Farewell.

N. R.

Another Treatiſe of Biſhop Ridley, vvherein is contained firſt a lamentation for the change of Religion in England: then a compariſon betvveen the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and the Romiſh religion; vvith vvholſome inſtructions in the end to all Chriſtians, hovv to behave themſelves in time of triall.

The ſtate of the Church of England deſcribed and lamented.

ALas what miſery is thy Church brought unto (O Lord) at this day? Where of late the Word of the Lord was truely preached, was read and heard in every town, in every Church, in every village, yea and almoſt in every honeſt mans houſe: Alas now it is exiled and baniſhed out of the whole Realm. Of late who was not taken for a lover of Gods Word, for a reader, for a ready hearer, and for a learner of the ſame? And now (alas) who dare bear any open countenance toward it, but ſuch as are content in Chriſts cauſe, and for his words ſake to ſtand to the danger and loſſe of all they have?

Of late there was to be found, of every age, of every degree and kinde of people, that gave their diligence to learn (as they could) out of Gods Word, the articles of the Chriſtian faith, the commandements of God, and the Lords Prayer: The Babes and young Children were taught theſe things of their parents, of their Maſters, and weekly of their Curates in every Church: and the aged folk, which had been brought up in blindeneſſe, and in ignorance of thoſe things, which every Chriſtian is bound to know, when otherwiſe they could not, yet they learned the ſame by often hearing their children, and ſervants repeating the ſame: but now (alas, and alas again) the falſe Prophets of Antichriſt which are paſt all ſhame, do openly preach in pulpits unto the people of God, that the Catechiſm is to be counted hereſie; whereby their old blindneſſe is brought home again: for the aged are afraid of the higher powers, and the youth is abaſhed and aſhamed, even of that which they have learned, though it be Gods Word, and dare no more meddle.

Of late in every Congregation thorowout all England was made prayer and petition unto God, to be delivered from the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and all his deteſtable enormities; from all falſe doctrine and hereſie; and now alas, ſathan hath perſwaded England by his falſhood and craft, to revoke her old godly prayer, to recant the ſame, and provoke the fearfull wrath and indignation of God upon her own pate.

The lamentable change of religion in the Church.
Ierem. 4.

Of late by ſtrait laws and ordinances, with the conſent of the Nobles and Commonalty, and full agreement and counſell of the Prelates and Clergy, was baniſhed hence the Beaſt of Babylon, with laws (I ſay) and with oathes and all means that then could be deviſed for ſo godly a purpoſe: but now (alas) all theſe laws are trodden under foot; the Nobles, the Commonalty, the Prelates and Clergy are quite changed, and all thoſe oathes, though they were made in judgement, juſtice, and truth, and the matter never ſo good, doth no more hold than a bond of ruſhes or of a barley ſtraw, nor publike perjury no more feareth them, than a ſhadow upon the wall.

1 Cor. 14.

Of late it was agreed in England of all hands, according to Pauls Doctrine, and Chriſts Commandement (as Paul ſaith plainly) that nothing ought to be done in the Church, in the publike congregation, but in that tongue which the congregation could underſtand, that all might be edified thereby, whether it were common prayer, adminiſtration of the Sacraments, or any other thing belonging to publike miniſtery of Gods holy and wholeſome Word: but (alas) all is turned upſide down, Pauls Doctrine is put apart, Chriſts commandement is not regarded: For nothing is heard commonly in the Church, but a ſtrange tongue, that the people doth nothing underſtand.

Ignorance in prayer.

Of late all men and women were taught after Chriſts doctrine, to pray in that tongue which they could underſtand, that they might pray with heart that which they ſhould ſpeak with their tongue: now (alas) the unlearned people is brought into that blindneſſe again, to think that they pray, when they ſpeak with their tongue they cannot tell what, nor whereof their heart is nothing mindefull at all, for that it can underſtand never a whit thereof.

Abuſe in the Lords Supper.

Of late the Lords Supper was duely miniſtred and taught to be made common to all that were true Chriſtians with thankſgiving and ſetting forth of the Lords death and paſſion untill his returning again, to judge both quick and dead: but now (alas) the Lords Table is quite overthrown, and that which ought to be common to all godly, is made private to a few ungodly, without any kinde of thankſgiving, or any ſetting forth of the Lords death at all, that the people is able to underſtand.

The ſacrament turned out of his right uſe and kinde.

Of late all that were endued with the light and grace of underſtanding of Gods holy Myſteries, did bleſſe God which had brought them out of that horrible blindeneſſe and ignorance, whereby in times being ſeduced by Sathans ſubtilties, they believed that the Sacrament was not the Sacrament, but the thing it ſelf whereof it is a Sacrament; that the creature was the Creator, and that the thing which hath neither life nor ſenſe (alas ſuch was the horrible blindeneſſe) was the Lord himſelf, which made the eye to ſee, and hath given all ſenſes and underſtanding unto man: but now, alas, England is returned again like a Dogge to her own vomit and ſpuing, and is in worſe caſe than ever ſhe was: For it had been better never to have known the truth, than to forſake the truth once received and known: and now, not onely that light is turned into darkneſſe, and Gods grace is received in vain, but alſo laws of death are made by high Court of Parliament, maſterfully to maintain by ſword, fire, and all kinde of violence that haynous Idolatry, wherein that adoration is given unto the liveleſſe and dumb creature, which is onely due unto the everliving God: yea, they ſay they can, and do make of bread both man and God, by their tranſubſtantiation. O wicked men, and Sathans own brood.

Idolatry in worſhipping the creature for the Creator.

The Cup debarred from the miniſtration of the Lords Supper.

Of late was the Lords Cup at his Table diſtributed according to his own Commandement, by his expreſſe words in the Goſpel, as well to the Laity as to the Clergie, which order Chriſts Church obſerved ſo many hundred yeers after, as all the ancient Eccleſiaſticall Writers do teſtifie, without contradiction of any one of them, that can be ſhewed unto this day: but now (alas) not onely the Lords Commandement is broken, his Cup is denied to his ſervants, to whom he commanded it ſhould be diſtributed, but alſo with the ſame is ſet up a new blaſphemous kinde of ſacrifice to ſatisfie and pay the price of ſins both of the dead and of the quick, to the great and intolerable contumely of Chriſt our Saviour his death and paſſion, which was and is the one onely ſufficient and everlaſting available ſacrifice ſatisfactory for all the elects of God, from Adam the firſt, to the laſt that ſhall be born in the end of the world.

Blaſphemous ſacrifice for ſin.

Deut. 5.

Of late the Commandement of God, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image, nor any ſimilitude or likeneſſe of any thing in Heaven above, or in earth beneath, or in the water under the earth, thou ſhalt not bow down to them. nor worſhip them: This Commandement of God, I ſay, was graven almoſt every where in Churches, was learned of every body both young and old; whereupon Images that provoked the ſimple and ignorant people unto Idolatry, as the wiſe man ſaith, were taken out of the Churches, and ſtraightly forbidden that none ſhould any where either bow down to them or worſhip them: but now (alas) Gods holy word is blotted and razed out of Churches, and ſtocks and ſtones are ſet up in the place thereof. God commanded his Word ſo to be ordered, that it might be had in continuall remembrance at all times, and in every place: and on the other ſide he forbade Images and Idols ſo to be either made or ſet in any place, where any ſhould bow or worſhip them: but now (alas) that which God commanded is not paſſed upon, and that which he forbiddeth, is maſterfully maintained by falſhood and craft, and wickedly upholden.

Idolatry to ſtocks and ſtones.

Of late all Miniſters that were admitted to the publike office and miniſtery of Gods holy Word, in their admiſſion made a ſolemne profeſſion before the Congregation, that they ſhould teach the people nothing, as doctrine neceſſary to attain eternall ſalvation, but that which is Gods own holy Word, or may be thereon grounded without any doubt; whereby vaniſhed and melted away of themſelves many vain, yea wicked traditions of man, as ware before the fire: but now at one brunt they are revived, and are in full hope alſo to return again in as great ſtrength as ever they have been. And how can any man look for any other thing, but when you have received the head, you muſt alſo receive the whole body withall, or elſe how can the head abide? The head, under Sathan, of all miſchief is Antichriſt and his brood, the ſame is he which is the Babylonicall Beaſt. The Beaſt is he, whereupon the Whore ſitteth. The Whore is that City, ſaith John in plain words, which hath empire over the Kings of the earth. This Whore hath a golden cup of abominations in her hand, whereof ſhe maketh to drink the Kings of the earth, and of the wine of this Harlot have of all nations drunk, yea and Kings of the earth have lyen by this Whore, and Merchants of the earth by vertue of her pleaſant merchandiſe have been made rich.

The Whore of Babylon with her cup of abominations expounded.

Apoc. 17.

Now what City is there in all the whole world, that when John wrote, ruled over the Kings of the earth; or what City can be read of in any time, that of the City it ſelf challenged the Empire over the Kings of the earth, but onely the City of Rome, and that ſince the uſurpation of that See hath grown to her full ſtrength? And is it not read, that the old and ancient Writers underſtand Peters former Epiſtle to be written at Rome, and it to be called of him in the ſame Epiſtle in plain tearms Babylon? By the abominations thereof I underſtand all the whole trade of the Romiſh religion, under the name and title of Chriſt, which is contrary to the onely rule of all true religion, that is, Gods Word. What Word of God hath that devilliſh Drabbe for the maintenance of her manifold abominations, and to ſet to ſale ſuch merchandiſe, wherewith (alas) the madneſſe of man, the wicked Harlot hath bewitched almoſt the whole world? Did not Peter the very true Apoſtle of Chriſt (of whom this ſtinking ſtrumpet beareth her ſelf ſo high, but faſly and without all juſt cauſe) did not he, I ſay, give all the world warning of her pelf and traſh, of her falſe Doctors and Apoſtles (for this Whore and Beaſt will be called Dominus Apoſtolicus, whoſoever ſay nay) after this manner in his latter Epiſtle? There was among the people in times paſt falſe Prophets, as there ſhall be among you in time to come falſe Teachers, which ſhall privily bring in peſtilent ſects, even denying the Lord which hath bought them and redeemed them, procuring to themſelves ſwift damnation, and many ſhall follovv their damnable vvayes, by vvhom the vvay of truth ſhall be railed upon, and through covetouſneſſe by counterfeit tales or ſermons, they ſhall (ſaith Peter) make merchandiſe upon you, &c. And doth not John likewiſe in his Revelation, after he hath reckoned up a great rabblement of this Whores myſticall merchandiſe, at the laſt (as though he would knit up all in plain words, without any miſt at all, ſetting out the Whores merchandiſe) reckon up amongſt the reſt, and concludeth, ſaying; Et animas hominum, that is to ſay, and the ſouls of men too? Whereupon I pray you elſe roſe this true Proverb in Latine,

2 Pet. 2.

The myſticall merchandiſe of the Babylonicall Strumpet.

All things at Rome for mony.

Omnia Romæ venalia, All things for mony are ſet to ſale at Rome. Was not that a worthy commendation of Chriſts Vicar in earth, that was written of our holy Father, one of the Alexanders, a Biſhop of Rome, thus I ween in Latine:

Vendit Alexander cruces, altaria, Chriſtum:
Vendere jure poteſt; emerat ille prius.

Theſe two Verſes in Latine, I have read thus of one tranſlated into Engliſh rime.

Verſes againſt Pope Alexander.

Alexander our holy father the Pope of Rome, ſelleth for money both right and doom:
And all kinde of holines the holy father doth not ſtick to ſet to ſale, ready money for to get.
And eke Chriſt himſelf he dare be bold,
  to chop and change for ſilver and gold.
And why ſhould any think this to be ſore?
  for vvhat doth he ſell but that he bought before?

I grant theſe Verſes to be light gear, and the Verſe is but rude, but (alas) ſuch conditions were more wicked and lewd than any wit could expreſſe. If theſe had been but the faults of one or a few in number, they had been leſſe pernicious, and might have been taken for perſonall crimes, and not to be imputed unto that See: but now (alas) the matter is more than evident to all that have godly underſtanding, that theſe crimes be grounded upon laws, be eſtabliſhed by cuſtome, and ſet forth by all kinde of wicked doctrine, falſhood, and craft; and therefore now are not to be eſteemed for any one mans or a few mens perſonall crimes, but are now by laws, cuſtome, and doctrine incorporated into that wicked See, and maketh indeed the body of the Beaſt whereupon the abominable Whore doth ſit.

Abominations and wicked abuſes of the See of Rome declared.

But you would know which be thoſe Merchandiſe which I ſaid this Whore ſetteth for to ſell, for the which all her falſe Prophets with all their jugglings and crafty gloſſes cannot bring one jot of Gods Word. Surely, ſurely, they be not onely all theſe abominations which are come into the Church of England already (whereof I have ſpoken ſomewhat before) but alſo an innumerable rablement of abominations and wicked abuſes, which now muſt needs follow; as Popiſh Pardons, Pilgrimages, Romiſh Purgatory, Romiſh Maſſes, Placebo and Dirige, with Trentals and Scala cœli, diſpenſations and immunities from all godly diſcipline, laws and good order, pluralities, unions, and tot quottes, with a thouſand moe. Now ſhall come in the flattering Friers and the falſe pardoners, and play their old pranks and knavery as they were wont to do. Now ſhall you have (but of the See of Rome onely, and that for money) canonizing of ſuch Saints as have ſtood ſtout in the Popes cauſe, ſhrining of reliques, and from any kinde of wickedneſſe (if you will pay well for it) cleer abſolution à pœna & culpa, for thouſands of yeers, yea, and at every poor Biſhops hand and Suffragan, ye ſhall have hallowing of Churches, Chappels, Altars, Superaltars, Chalices, and of all the whole houſholdſtuff and adornment which ſhall be uſed in the Church after the Romiſh guiſe, for all theſe things they muſt be eſteemed of ſuch high prize, that they may not be done but by a conſecrate Biſhop onely. O Lord, all theſe things are ſuch as thy Apoſtles never knew. As for conjuring (they call it hallowing, but it is conjuring indeed) of water and ſalt, of chriſtning of bels and ſuch like things, what need I to ſpeak? for every Prieſt that can but read, hath power (they ſay) not onely to do that, but alſo hath ſuch power over Chriſts Body, as to make both God and man once at the leaſt every day of a wafer cake.

The true word of God, and the office of the ſame declared.

After the rehearſal of the ſaid abominations, and remembrance of a number of many mo, which (the Lord knoweth) irketh me to think upon, and were too long to deſcribe; when I conſider on the other ſide the eternall Word of God that abideth for ever, and the undefiled Law of the Lord which turneth the ſoul from all wickedneſſe, and giveth wiſedome unto the innocent babes, I mean that milk that is without all guil, as Peter doth call it, that good Word of God, that Word of truth which muſt be graven within the heart, and then is able to ſave mens ſouls, that wholeſome ſeed, not mortall, but immortall, of the eternall and everlaſting God, whereby the man is born anew, and made the childe of God, that ſeed of God, whereby the man of God ſo being born, cannot ſin, as John ſaith (he meaneth ſo long as that ſeed doth abide in him) that holy Scripture which hath not been deviſed by the wit of man, but taught from Heaven by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, which is profitable to teach, to reprove, to correct, to inſtruct, and give order in all righteouſneſſe, that the man of God may be whole and ſound, ready to perform every good work: when (I ſay) I conſider this holy and wholſome true Word that teacheth us truely our bounden duty towards our Lord God in every point, what his bleſſed will and pleaſure is, what his infinite great goodneſſe and mercy is, what he hath done for us, how he hath given his own onely dearly beloved Son to death for our ſalvation, and by him hath ſent us the revelation of his bleſſed will and pleaſure, what his eternall Word willeth us both to believe, and alſo to do, and hath for the ſame purpoſe inſpired the holy Apoſtles with the holy Ghoſt, and ſent them abroad into all the world, and alſo made them and other diſciples of Chriſt inſpired by the ſame Spirit, to write and leave behinde them the ſame things that they taught (which as they did proceed of the Spirit of truth, ſo by the confeſſion of all them that ever were endued with the Spirit of God, were ſufficient to the obtaining of eternall ſalvation:) and likewiſe when I conſider that all that man doth profeſſe in his regeneration when he is received into the holy Catholike Church of Chriſt, and is now to be accounted for one of the lively members of Chriſts own Body, all that is grounded upon Gods holy Word, and ſtandeth in the profeſſion of that faith, and obedience of thoſe Commandements which are all contained and compriſed in Gods holy Word: And furthermore, when I conſider whom our Saviour Chriſt pronounceth in his Goſpel to be bleſſed, and to whom Moſes giveth his benedictions in the Law, what wayes the Law, the Prophets, the Pſalms, and all holy Scriptures both new and old do declare to be the wayes of the Lord, what is good for man to obtain and abide in Gods favour, which is that faith that juſtifieth before God, and what is that charity that doth paſſe and excell all, which be the properties of heavenly wiſedome, and which is that undefiled Religion which is allowed of God, which things Chriſt himſelf called the weighty matters of the Law, what thing is that which is onely available in Chriſt, and what knowledge is that that Paul eſteemed ſo much, that he counted himſelf onely to know, what ſhall be the manner of the extreme judgement of the latter day, who ſhall judge, and by what he ſhall judge, and what ſhall be required at our hands at that fearfull day, how all things muſt be tried by the fire, and that that onely ſhall ſtand for ever which Chriſts words ſhall allow, which ſhall be the Judge of all fleſh to give ſentence upon all fleſh and every living ſoul, either of eternall damnation or of everlaſting ſalvation vation, from which ſentence there ſhall be no place to appeal, no wit ſhall ſerve to delude, nor any power to withſtand or revoke: When (I ſay) I conſider all theſe things, and conferre to the ſame again and again all thoſe wayes wherein ſtandeth the ſubſtance of the Romiſh religion (whereof I ſpake before) it may be evident and eaſie to perceive, that theſe two wayes, theſe two religions, the one of Chriſt, the other of the Romiſh See, in theſe latter dayes be as farre diſtant the one from the other, as light and darkneſſe, good and evill, righteouſneſſe and unrighteouſneſſe, Chriſt and Belial. He that is hard of belief, let him note and weigh well with himſelf the places of holy Scriptures which be appointed in the Margent, whereupon this talk is grounded, and by Gods grace he may receive ſome light. And unto the contemner I have nothing now to ſay, but to rehearſe the ſaying of the Prophet Eſay, which Paul ſpake to the Jews in the end of the Acts of the Apoſtles. After he had expounded unto them the truth of Gods Word, and declared unto them Chriſt out of the Law of Moſes and the Prophets, from morning to night all the day long, he ſaid unto them that would not beleeve: Well (ſaid he) ſpake the holy Ghoſt unto our Fathers, ſaying; Go unto this people and tell them; ye ſhall hear vvith your ears, and not underſtand, and ſeeing you ſhall behold, and not ſee the thing: for the heart of this people is vvaxed groſſe and dull, and vvith their ears they are hard of hearing, and they have ſhut together their eyes, that they ſhould not ſee, nor hear vvith their ears, nor underſtand vvith their hearts, that they might return, and I ſhould heal them, ſaith the Lord God.

Note here that theſe Scriptures were written by M. Ridley in the Margent but were not in the copy which we followed.

Acts 28.

Alas, England, alas, that this heavy plague of God ſhould fall upon thee. Alas my dearly beloved Country, what thing is it now that may do thee good? Undoubtedly thy plague is ſo great, that it is utterly uncurable, but by the bottomleſſe mercy and infinite power of Almighty God. Alas my dear Country, what haſt thou done, that thou haſt provoked the wrath of God, and cauſed him to pour out his vengeance upon thee for thine own deſerts? Canſt thou be content to hear thy faults told thee? Alas, thou haſt heard oft, and wouldſt never amend. England, thy faults of all degrees and ſorts of men, of Magiſtrates, of the Miniſters, and of the common people, were never more plainly told ſince thou bareſt that name, than thou didſt hear them of late, even before the Magiſtrates in King Edwards dayes, but thou heardeſt them onely and didſt amend never a whit. For even of thy greateſt Magiſtrates, ſome (the Kings Highneſſe then, that innocent, that godly-hearted and peerleſſe young Chriſtian Prince excepted) evermore unkindely and ungently, againſt thoſe that went about moſt buſily, and moſt wholſomely to cure their ſore backs, ſpurned privily, and would not ſpare to ſpeak evill of them, even unto the Prince himſelf, and yet would they towards the ſame Preachers outwardly bear a jolly countenance and a fair face.

Cranmer and Ridley ſtanding in the Duke of Somerſets cauſe. Cranmer repugning againſt the ſpoil of the Church goods. Latimer, Bradford, Lever, Knoxe.

I have heard that Cranmer, and another whom I will not name, were both in high diſpleaſure, the one for ſhewing his conſcience ſecretly, but plainly and fully in the Duke of Somerſets cauſe, and both of late, but eſpecially Cranmer for repugning, as they might, againſt the late ſpoyl of the Church goods, taken away onely by commandement of the higher powers, without any Law or order of Juſtice, and without any requeſt or conſent of them to which they did belong. As for Latimer, Lever, Bradford, and Knoxe, their tongues were ſo ſharp, they ripped in ſo deep in their galled backs, to have purged them (no doubt) of that filthy matter that was feſtered in their hearts, of inſatiable covetouſneſſe, of filthy carnality and voluptuouſneſſe, of intolerable ambition and pride, of ungodly loathſomeneſſe to hear poor mens cauſes, and to hear Gods Word, that theſe men, of all other, theſe Magiſtrates then could never abide. Other there were very godly men, and well learned, that went about by the wholeſome plaiſters of Gods Word, howbeit after a more ſoft manner of handling the matter, but (alas) all ſped alike. For all that could be done of all hands, their diſeaſe did not miniſh, but daily did increaſe, which (no doubt) is no ſmall occaſion in that ſtate of the heavy plague of God that is poured upon England at this day. As for the common ſort of other inferiour Magiſtrates, as Judges of the Laws, Juſtices of peace, Sergeants, common Lawyers, it may be truely ſaid of them, as of the moſt part of the Clergy, of Curates, Vicars, Parſons, Prebendaries, Doctors of the Law, Archdeacons, Deans, yea, and I may ſay, of Biſhops alſo, I fear me, for the moſt part, although I doubt not but God had, and hath ever, whom he in every ſtate knew and knoweth to be his, but for the moſt part, I ſay, they were never perſwaded in their hearts, but from the teeth forward, and for the Kings ſake, in the truth of Gods Word, and yet all theſe did diſſemble, and bear a copy of a countenance, as if they had been ſound within.

The corrupt life of Goſpellers in K. Edwards time.

And this diſſimulation Sathan knew well enough, and therefore deſired, and hath ever gone about, that the high Magiſtrates by any manner of means might be deceived in matters of religion; for then he being of counſell with the diſſimulation in the worldly, knew well enough that he ſhould bring to paſſe, and rule all even after his own will.

Hypocriſie a double evill.

Hypocriſie and diſſimulation S. Hierome doth call well a double wickedneſſe; for neither it loveth the truth (which is one great evill) and alſo falſly it pretendeth to deceive the ſimple for another thing. This hypocriſie and diſſimulation with God, in matters of religion, no doubt, hath wholly alſo provoked the anger of God. And as for the common people, although there were many good, where they were well and diligently taught: yet (God knoweth) a great number received Gods true Word and high benefits with unthanfull hearts. For it was great pity, and a lamentable thing to have ſeen in many places the people ſo loathſomely and unreligiouſly to come to the holy Communion, and to receive it accordingly, and to the common Prayers, and other divine Service, which were according to the true vein of Gods holy Word, and in all points ſo godly and wholeſomely ſet forth, in compariſon of that blinde zeal, and undiſcreet devotion which they had aforetimes to thoſe things, whereof they underſtood never one whit, nor could be edified by them any thing at all.

The ſlackneſſe that was in that time to good works

And again, as for our almſdeeds, which are taught in Gods Word, whereby we are certain that God is pleaſed with them) and doth and will require ſuch at our hands, which are a part of true religion, as St James ſaith, and ſuch as he ſaith himſelf, he ſetteth more by than by ſacrifice, as to provide for the fatherleſſe, infants and orphanes, for the lame, aged and impotent poor needy folk, and to make publike proviſion that the poor that might labour, ſhould have wherewith to labour upon, and ſo be kept from ſhamefull beggery and ſtealing in theſe works, I ſay how way-ward were many, in compariſon (I mean) of that great prodigality whereby in times paſt they ſpared not to ſpend upon flattering Friers, falſe pardoners, painting and gilding of ſtocks and ſtones, to be ſet up, and honoured in Churches, plainly againſt Gods Word. And yet becauſe no place is to be defrauded of their juſt commendation, London, I muſt confeſſe, for ſuch godly works in ſir Richard Dobbes, Knight, then Lord Maior, his yeer began marvellous well: the Lord grant the ſame may ſo likewiſe perſevere, continue, yea and increaſe, to the comfort and relief of the needy and helpleſſe, that was ſo godly begun, Amen.

Gods plague upon England juſtly deſerved.

All theſe things do miniſter more matter of mourning and bewailing the miſerable ſtate that now is: for by this it may be perceived, how England hath deſerved this juſt plague of God. And alſo it is greatly to be feared that thoſe good things, whatſoever they were that had their beginning in the time when Gods word was ſo freely preached, now with the exile and baniſhment of the ſame, will depart again.

But to return again to the conſideration of this miſerable ſtate of Chriſts Church in England, and to leave farther and more exquiſite ſearching of the cauſes thereof unto Gods ſecret and unſearchable judgements, let us ſee what is beſt now to be done for Chriſts little flock. This is one maxime and principle in Chriſt Law; He that denieth Chriſt before men, him ſhall Chriſt deny afore his Father, and all his Angels in Heaven. And therefore every one that looketh to have by Chriſt our Saviour everlaſting life, let him prepare himſelf ſo, that he deny not his Maſter Chriſt, or elſe he is but a caſt-away, and a wretch, howſoever hee be counted or taken here in the world.

He exhorteth to conſtant confeſſion of Chriſt.

Now then ſeeing the doctrine of Antichriſt is returned again into this Realm, and the higher powers (alas) are ſo deceived and bewitched, that they are perſwaded it to be truth, and Chriſts true Doctrine to be errour and hereſie, and the old laws of Antichriſt are allowed to return with the power of their father again: what can be hereafter looked for by reaſon to the man of God, and true Chriſtian, abiding in this Realm, but extreme violence of death, or elſe to deny his Maſter? I grant the hearts of Princes are in Gods hands, and whitherſoever he will he can make them bow: and alſo that Chriſtian Princes in old time uſed a more gentle kinde of puniſhment, even to them which were Hereticks indeed, as degradation, and depoſition out of their rooms and offices, exile and baniſhment out of their Dominions and Countries, and alſo (as it is read) the true Biſhops of Chriſts Church were ſometime interceſſors for the Hereticks unto Princes, that they would not kill them, as is read of Saint Auguſtine. But as yet Antichriſts kingdome was not ſo erected at that time, nor is now accuſtomed ſo to order them that will not fall down and worſhip the Beaſt and his Image (but even as all the world knoweth) after the ſame manner that both John and Daniel hath propheſied before, that is, by violence of death; and Daniel declareth farther, that the kinde of death accuſtomably ſhould be by ſword, fire, and impriſonment.

Puniſhment of hereticks more gentle in the old time how it was uſed.

Therefore if thou, O man of God, doſt purpoſe to abide in this Realm, prepare and arm thy ſelf to die: for both by Antichriſts accuſtomable laws, and theſe propheſies, there is no appearance or likelihood of any other thing, except thou wilt deny thy Maſter Chriſt, which is the loſſe at the laſt both of body and ſoul unto everlaſting death. Therefore my good brother or ſiſter in Chriſt, whatſoever thou be, to thee that canſt and maiſt ſo do, that counſell that I think is the beſt ſafeguard for thee, both for thy body, and moſt ſurety for thy ſouls health, is that which I ſhall ſhew thee hereafter. But firſt I warn thee to underſtand me to ſpeak to him or her, which be not in captivity, or called already to confeſſe Chriſt, but are at liberty abroad.

Counſell given in theſe dayes of perſecution what to do.

My counſell, I ſay, therefore is this, to fly from the plague, and get thee hence. I conſider not onely the ſubtilties of Sathan, and how he is able to deceive by his falſe perſwaſions (if it were poſſible) even the choſen of God, and alſo the great frailty, which is oftentimes more in a man, than he doth know in himſelf, which in the time of temptation then will utter it ſelf: I do not onely conſider theſe things, I ſay, but that our Maſter Chriſt, whoſe life was and is a perfect rule of the Chriſtian mans life, that he himſelf avoided oftentimes the fury and madneſſe of the Jews, by departing from the country or place.

Paul likewiſe when he was ſought in Damaſco, and the gates of the City were laid in wait for him, was conveighed by night, being let down in a basket out at a window over the wall: and Helias the Prophet fled the perſecution of wicked Jeſabel: And Chriſt our Saviour ſaith in the Goſpel; When they perſecute you in one City, flye unto another: and ſo did many good, great, learned, and vertuous men of God, which were great and ſtout Champions nevertheleſſe, and ſtout confeſſors and maintainers of Chriſt and his truth, in due time and place. Of ſuch was the great Clerk Athanaſius. But this is ſo plain to be lawfull to Gods word, and examples of holy men, that I need not to ſtand in it.

Such as remained out of captivity counſelled to void the Realm.

Having this for my ground, I ſay to thee, O man of GOD, this ſeemeth to me to be the moſt ſure way for thy ſafeguard, to depart and flie farre from the plague, and that ſwiftly alſo: for truely before GOD, I think that the abomination that Daniel* propheſied of ſo long before, is now ſet up in the holy place. For all the doctrine of Antichriſt, his laws, rites, and religion contrary to Chriſt, and to the true ſerving and worſhipping of God, I underſtand to be that abomination: Therefore now is the time in England for thoſe words of Chriſt, Tunc inquit qui in Iudea ſunt, fugiant ad montes. Then (ſaith he) mark this Chriſts (then) for truely I am perſwaded, and I truſt by the Spirit of God, that this (then) is commanded; Then (ſaith Chriſt) they that be in Iewry, let them flie into the mountains, and he that is on the houſe top, let him not come down to take away any thing out of his houſe, and he that is abroad in the field, let him not return to take his clothes. Wo be to the great bellied women, and to them that give ſuck, but pray (ſaith Chriſt) that your flight be not in winter, or on the Sabbath day.

The abomination of deſolation ſet up in England.

Theſe words of Chriſt are myſticall, and therefore have need of interpretation. I underſtand all thoſe to be in Jewry ſpiritually, which truely confeſſe one true living God, and the whole truth of his Word, after the doctrine of the Goſpel of Chriſt. Such are they whom Chriſt here biddeth, in the time of the raigne of Antichriſts abominations to flye unto the mountains; which ſignifieth places of ſafeguard, and all ſuch things which are able to defend from the plague. That he biddeth him that is on the houſe top, not to come down, and him that is in the field, not to return to take with him his clothes, he meaneth that they ſhould ſpeed them to get them away betime, leſt in their tarrying and trifling about worldly proviſion, they be trapped in the ſnare ere ever they be aware, and caught by the back, and for gain of ſmall worldly things, endanger and caſt themſelves into great perils of more weighty matters. And where he ſaith, Wo be to the great bellied women, and to them that give ſucke; women great with childe and nigh to their lying down, and to be brought to bed, and not able to travell, and alſo thoſe women, which are brought to bed, and now give their babes ſucke: By theſe therefore Chriſt ſpiritually underſtandeth all ſuch to be in extreme danger, which this word (wo) ſignifieth: all ſuch, I ſay, as are ſo letted by any manner of means, that they no wayes be able to flie from the plague. And where Chriſt ſaith, Pray you that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the Sabbath day: In winter, the common courſe of the year teacheth us, that the waies be foule, and therefore it is a hard thing then to take a farre journey, for many incommodities, and dangers of the waies in that time of the yeare; and on the Sabbath day it was not lawfull to journey, but a little way. Now Chriſt therefore meaning that we ſhould have need, both to ſpeed our journey quickly, which cannot be done in winter, for the incommodities of the waies, and alſo to go farre, which cannot be done on the Sabbath day; he biddeth us therefore pray that our flight be not in the winter, nor on the Sabbath day; that is, to pray that we may flie in time and alſo far enough from the danger of the plague. Now, the cauſes why we ſhould flie, folleth in the ſame place of Saint Mathewes Goſpel, which I now paſſe over; thou maiſt reade them there.

Chriſt commandeth to flie to the mountains.

And in the eighteenth Chapter of the Revelation, the Angel is ſaid to have cried mightily with a lowd voyce, Fly my people out of Babylon, leſt you be infected with her faults, and ſo be made partners of her plagues: for her offences and ſins are grown ſo great, that they ſwell and are come unto the heavens: certainly the time doth approach, and the Lords day is at hand. Hear I beſeech you, alſo holy Paul, that bleſſed Apoſtle, he plainly forbiddeth us, Ducere jugum cum incredulis, that is, To joyn or couple our ſelves with the unfaithfull: for what fellowſhip can there be, ſaith he, of righteouſneſſe with unrighteouſneſſe, what company hath light with darkneſſe, or what agreement hath Chriſt with Belial? or what part can the faithfull have with the unfaithfull? or how doth the Temple of God agree with Images or Idols? for you are the Temple of the living God: as God hath ſayd, I will walk and dwell in them, I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people: wherefore depart from amongſt them, and get you from them, ſaith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing: and I will receive you, and be to you in the ſtead of your father, and you ſhall be unto me as my ſonnes and daughters, ſaith the Almightie God.

2 Cor. 6.

This counſell to depart the Realme, I do not marvell it do ſeem to divers (even of them I mean that bear favor to God-ward) diverſly. Many (I truſt) that be learned ſhall think the counſell good. Others there be peradventure, that will think it rather a thing to be more tolerable, and that it may be indeed by Gods word lawfully done, rather than to be counſelled to be done, for they will peradventure ſay, we ſhould counſell a man alwaies to do that, which is beſt of all, and of moſt perfection: but boldly in Chriſts cauſe to ſpend a mans life, is beſt of all, and of moſt perfection, and to flee it may ſeem to ſmell of cowardlineſſe. In many things, that which is beſt for one at ſometimes, is not beſt for all at all times, and it is not moſt perfection, nor meet for a childe to covet to run, before he can go. I will not make here a diſcourſe in this matter, what might here be objected, and what might be anſwered again; I leave that to the wittie and eloquent men of the world.

Counſell to depart the realm. Doubts whether to flie or to tarry, debated.

This is my minde, which I would thou ſhouldſt know, O man of God, as I would wiſh, and I do pray to Almighty GOD it may be, that every true Chriſtian, either brother or ſiſter (after they be called, and brought into the wreſtling place, to ſtrive in Chriſts cauſe for the beſt game, that is, to confeſſe the truth of the Goſpel, and of the Chriſtian faith, in hope of everlaſting life) ſhould not ſhrink, nor relent one inch, nor give back, whatſoever ſhall befall, but to ſtand to their tackle, and ſtick by it even unto death, as they will Chriſt ſhall ſtick by them at the latter day: ſo likewiſe I dare not wiſh nor counſell any, either brother or ſiſter, of their own ſwinge, to ſtart up into the ſtage, or to caſt themſelves either before, or farther in danger than time and need ſhall require: for undoubtedly when God ſeeth his time, and his pleaſure is, that his glory ſhall be ſet forth, and his Church edified by thy death and confeſſion, means ſhall be found by his fatherly univerſall providence, that thou without thine own preſumptuous provocation ſhalt be lawfully called, to do thy feat, and to play thy part. The miſerable end that one Quintus came unto, may be a warning, and a fearefull example for all men to beware of preſumption, and raſhneſſe in ſuch tings (as Euſebius writeth in Eccleſiaſt. hiſtoria) for evermore.

Preſumptuous provocation and raſh running in danger forbidden.

Euſeb. Eccle. hiſt. lib. 4. ca. 15

But a third ſort of men there be, which alſo will be counted favorers of Gods words, and are (I feare) in number farre moe, and worſe to be perſwaded to that which is the godly mean. I mean of ſuch as will peradventure ſay or think, that my former counſell, which was to flee the infection of the Antichriſtian doctrine by departing out of the Realm, is more than needeth, and other waies and means may be found, both to abide, and alſo to be cleere out of danger of the foreſaid plague. If that could be found both to abide, and alſo to be cleere out of danger of the foreſayd plague, truly agreeable to Gods word, I would be as glad to heare it, God is my witneſſe, as who is the other. Yes, peradventure will ſome ſay, thus it may be: Thou maiſt keep thy ſelf, thy faith, and thy religion cloſe to thy ſelfe, and inwardly and privately worſhip God in ſpirit and truth, and outwardly ſee thou be no open medler, nor talker, nor tranſgreſſor of common order: ſo maiſt thou be ſuffered in the common-wealth, and yet uſe thy religion without offence of thy conſcience. In other Countries ſomewhere this peradventure might be uſed, but in England what ſhall be, God wot: but it was never yet, ſo far as ever I have knowen or heard. And alſo how can it be, but either thou muſt tranſgreſſe the common order, and the Romiſh lawes and cuſtomes, which have beene uſed in England, in the times paſt of Poperie, and now (it is certain) they return again: I ſay, thou muſt either be a breaker of theſe rites, lawes, and cuſtomes, and ſo bewray thy ſelfe, or elſe if thou be indeed a man of GOD, thou ſhalt offend thy conſcience: for in obſerving of them, thou ſhalt be compelled to break Gods Law, which is the rule of conſcience to the man of God. For how canſt thou reſort every holy-day to the Church, and beare a face to worſhip the creature for the Creator, as thou muſt do, and peradventure confeſſe it too with thy mouth, and to ſprinkle thy ſelf with the conjured water.

Conſcience in religion would not be diſſembled.

Thou muſt be contributor alſo to the charges of all their Poperie, as of books of Antichriſts ſervice, of lights of the Roode loft, of the Sepulchre for ſetting up and painting of Images (nay indeed of Idols) and thou muſt beare a face to worſhip them alſo, or elſe thou muſt be had by the backe. Thou muſt ſerve the turne, to give the holy loaves as they call it, which is nothing elſe but a very mockerie of the Lords holy Table. Thou muſt be a contributor to the charges of all the diſguiſed apparell, that the Popiſh ſacrificing Prieſt, like unto Aaron muſt play his part in. Yea, when the pardoner goeth about, or the flattering Frier to beg for the mainteance of ſuperſtition, except thou do as thy neighbors do, look not long to live in reſt. If any of thy houſhold dye, if thou wilt not pay money for ringing, and ſinging, for Requiem, Maſſes, Dirige, and commendations, and ſuch like trumpery of the Antichriſtian Religion, thinkeſt thou that thou ſhalt be reckoned for a Catholike man, or for amicus Cæſaris? A hundred things mo may be reckoned, and many of more weight, and of more evident ſuperſtition and idolatrie, than ſome of theſe which I have now rehearſed, which God knoweth be ill enough: but theſe are enow to declare, and to ſet before thine eyes, the thing that I intend, that is, if thou abide and wilt dwell in England, thou muſt either do theſe, and many other mo contrary to Gods word, which forbiddeth not only the thing which is evill, but alſo ſaith, Ab omni ſpecie mali abſtinete vos, Abſtain from all things that have any appearance of evill; or elſe if thou wilt not do them, how thou canſt live in England in reſt ſafe from the ſtake, truly I cannot tell.

A hard dwelling in England for a good man, either without danger of conſcience, or perill of life.

But peradventure (as a man is ready to find, and invent ſome colour to cloake his conſcience, to do that thing that his heart deſireth) thou wilt ſay, though at any time I ſhall be forced to do any of theſe things and ſuch like, yet will I have no confidence in them, but outwardly with my body, I will keepe mine heart unto God, and will not to that of mine own mind willingly neither, but to avoid another inconvenience: I truſt therefore God will hold me excuſed, for he ſhall have my heart: what can I do more?

O my friend, beware for Gods ſake, and know that the ſubtilties of Sathan are deep. He that is not able by Gods word to perceive them, is heavily laden. Pray therefore with David; Lord let me not have a mind to invent excuſes to cloake my ſin: examine my dear friend, theſe thy wily waies with the word of GOD, and if they do agree, thou maiſt uſe them: if not, know, though they may ſeem never ſo fine and goodly, yet indeed they be of Sathans brood. Gods Word is certain, that forbiddeth to worſhip the creature for the Creator: for that is hainous idolatrie, and againſt the firſt commandement of God, and it is alſo againſt the ſecond Commandement of the firſt table to bow down, or to do worſhip unto any images of God, or of any other thing: And Gods word requireth not only the belief of the heart, but alſo the confeſsion of the mouth: and to bear part of the charges, to the maintenance of things ungodly, what is that, but in thy ſo doing, a conſent to the thing done? Now conſenters and the doers, Gods word accounteth to be guilty both. And it is not lawfull, by St. Pauls doctrine, which was inſpired him by the Spirit of GOD, to do ill, that thereof the thing which is good may come.

Invent not excuſes to cloak ſinne.

Confeſsion of mouth muſt go with belief of heart.

Thy heart, thou ſaiſt, God ſhall have, and yet wilt ſuffer thy bodie to do the thing that GOD doth abhorre. Beware O man, take heed what thou ſaiſt. Man may be deceived, but no man may deceive God, for he is called and is truly καρδιογνώστης, that is to ſay, the ſearcher of the heart. Now, to give God thy heart, is to give him thy whole heart, to love him, to dread him, and to truſt in him above all other things. He that hath my Commandements, ſaith Chriſt, and obſerveth and keepeth them, it is he that loveth me: and to dread God above all other, is rather willingly to incurre the danger and perill of all fearefull things, than wittingly to do that thing which is contrarie to his bleſſed will and Commandement; and to truſt in him above all things, is aſſuredly to truſt to his promiſe of his reward, and of his tuition, and of his goodneſſe and mercie, and to preferre that above all things in the world, ſeeme they never ſo ſtrong, ſo wiſe, or ſo good. Now, how canſt thou ſay truly, that GOD hath thy heart after this manner of ſort (which is to have thy heart indeed) when thy deeds do declare farre another thing? Thy bodie, O man, is Gods, and all the parts thereof, even as thy ſoule is: he made them both, and Chriſt with his blood redeemed them both, and is Lord of both, for he hath bought them both dearly, and dareſt thou ſuffer any part of either of them to do ſervice to Sathan? Surely in ſo doing, thou committeſt ſacriledge and doeſt rob God, thou defileſt the living Temple of the living God, if thou ſuffer thy bodie to do Sathan ſervice. Do you not know (ſaith St. Paul) that your body is a lively temple of God? And may a man then take and uſe any part thereof but in the ſervice of God? No ſurely, it is not lawfull ſo to do for the man of God, neither with hand, tongue, nor foot, nor any part of the whole body.

To truſt in God, what it is.

1 Cor.

1 Cor.6

Doth not Paul command that to the Romans, which pertaineth to every Chriſtian ſoule; As you have in times paſt, ſayth he, given your members to do ſervice unto uncleanneſſe and wickedneſſe, from one wickedneſſe to another; ſo now give your members to do ſervice unto righteouſneſſe, that you may be ſanctified. And I pray thee, good brother, what doeſt thou think is to bear the mark of the beaſt in the forhead, and in the hand that Saint John ſpeaketh of? I know we ought warily to ſpeak of Gods myſteries, which he ſhewed by the ſpirit of prophecying to his ſervant John, yet to reade them with reverence, and to pray for the ſame ſo much as God knoweth is neceſſarie for our time to know, I thinke it neceſſary and good. Wherefore what I ſuppoſe is to beare the beaſts mark, I will tell thee, and commit the judgement of mine interpretation, as in all other things, to the ſpirituall man. I ſuppoſe he beareth the beaſt of Babylons marks in his forehead, which is not aſhamed of the beaſts waies, but will profeſſe them openly to ſet forth his Maſter the beaſt Abaddon. And likewiſe he beareth his marke in his head, that will and doth practiſe the works of the beaſt with his power and hand. And likewiſe I will not let to tell thee, what I thinke to be ſigned in the forehead for the ſervant of God is, whereof John alſo ſpeaketh, reckoning up many thouſands ſo to have been ſigned of every Tribe. I ſuppoſe he is ſigned in the forehead for the ſervant of God, whom God hath appointed of his infinite goodneſſe, and hath given him grace and ſtrength ſtoutly to confeſſe him, and his truth before the world. And to have grace and ſtrength to confeſſe Chriſt, and the doctrine of the Croſſe, and to lament and mourn for the abominations of Antichriſt, I ſuppoſe is to be ſigned with Tau, whereof Ezechiel the Prophet doth ſpeak. Thus I ſuppoſe theſe prophecies are ſpiritually to be underſtood: and to look for other corporall marks, to be ſeen in mens foreheads, or in their hands, is nothing elſe but to look that there ſhould come ſome brute beaſt out of Babylon, or ſome Elephant, Leopard, Lyon, or Camel, or ſome other ſuch monſtrous beaſt with ten horns, that ſhould do all the wonderfull things ſpoken in John; and yet of a beaſt ſpeaketh John, but I underſtand him ſo to be called, not for that he ſhall be any ſuch brute beaſt, but for that he is, and ſhall be the childe of perdition, which for his cruelty and beaſtly manners, is well called a beaſt.

Rom.6.

To bear the beaſts mark, what it is.

Apoc. 13. 14. 20.

The carnall Jewes knew there was a promiſe made, that Helias ſhould come before Chriſt the Meſſias, the annointed of GOD, to prepare his his wayes; they knew alſo there was a promiſe of Meſſias, that he ſhould come, and be a King, and Reigne in the houſe of David for evermore: but they underſtood all ſo groſly, and ſo carnally, that they neither knew Helias, nor Meſſias when they came: for they looked for Helias to come down from heaven in his own perſon, and for Meſſias to come and reign in worldly pompe, power, riches, and glory, when as the propheſies of both were ſpiritually to have been underſtood of Helias, that he ſhould come not in perſon, but in ſpirit, that is, one that ſhould be indued with the ſpirit and gifts of grace of Aelias, which was indeed John Baptiſt, as Chriſt himſelf did declare to his Apoſtles. And of Meſſias reigne, all the Prophets were to be underſtood of the reign of his ſpirituall Kingdome over the houſe of Jacob, and the true Iſraelites for evermore. And ſo by that their groſſe and carnall underſtanding, they miſtooke both Helias, and the true Meſſias, and when they came, knew neither of them both. So likewiſe I fear me, nay it is certain, the world that wanteth the light of the Spirit of God (for the world is not able to receive him, ſaith John) neither doth, nor ſhall know the beaſt, nor his marks, though he rage cruelly and live never ſo beaſtly, and though his marked men be in number like the ſand of the ſea. The Lord therefore vouchſafe to open the eyes of the blinde with the light of grace, that they may ſee and perceive, and underſtand the words of God, after the minde of his Spirit. Amen.

The literall taking of the Scripture made the Jews Infidels.

The Popes marked men.

Here remain two objections, which may ſeem weighty, and the which may peradventure move many not to follow the former counſell. The former reaſon is, A man will ſay, O Sir, it is no ſmall matter ye ſpeak of, to depart from a mans owne native Country into a ſtrange Realme. Many men have ſo great lets, as how is it poſſible that they can, or may do ſo? Some have lands and poſſeſſions, which they cannot carrie with them: Some have Father, Mother, wife, children, and kinsfolke, from whom to depart is as hard a thing (and all one almoſt) as to ſuffer death, and to go to a ſtrange Country that thou knoweſt not, neither the manner of the people, nor how thou mayſt away either with the people or with the Country: or what a hard thing it is to live among a ſtrange people, whoſe tongue thou doſt not underſtand, &c.

Carnall objections anſwered.

I grant here thou mayſt heape a number of worldly incommodities, which are ſurely very like to enſue the departure out of a mans owne native Country, I mean out of the whole Realm into a ſtrange land: but what of all theſe, and a thouſand mo of the like ſort? I will ſet unto them one ſaying of our Saviour Chriſt, which unto the faithfull childe of God, and to the true Chriſtian, is able to countervaile all theſe, yea and to weigh them down. Chriſt our Saviour ſaith in Luke; If any come to me, and do not hate his Father and Mother (he meaneth, and will not in his cauſe forſake his Father and Mother) his wife, children, and brethren, yea and his life to, he cannot be my Diſciple: and whoſoever doth not beare my croſſe and come after me, he cannot be my Diſciple. And in the ſame place he declareth by the two parables, one of a builder, and the other of a King that is a warriour, that every man that will not in Chriſts cauſe forſake all that ever he hath, he cannot be his Diſciple. Look the places who will; the matter is ſo plainly ſet forth, that no gloſſes, nor cloaking of conſcience to the man of God, can ſerve to the contrary. Many places there be for the ſame purpoſe, for the imbracing of Chriſt Croſſe, when Chriſt and his cauſe layeth it upon our back, but this is ſo plain that I need here to rehearſe no more.

This later reaſon and objection, whereof I ſpake before, is of more force, and includeth a neceſſitie, which after the common ſaying, hath no law, and therefore it is more hard to ſhape for it a good anſwer. This may be objected of ſome, Alas Sir, I grant all theſe things do grieve me, and becauſe I underſtand they do not agree with Gods word, which is the rule of my conſcience, I loathe either to look on them, or to hear them. But Sir, alas I am an impotent man, an aged man, a ſicke man, a lame man, or I have ſo many ſmall infants, and a lame wife, which all live by my labour, and by my proviſion: if I leave them they ſhall ſtarve, and I am not able to carry them with me, ſuch is my ſtate. Alas Sir, what ſhall I do? And theſe cauſes may chance to ſome men of God, whereby either it ſhall be for them utterly impoſſible to depart the Country, or elſe in departing they ſhall be inforced to forſake ſuch in extreme neceſſities, of whom both God, and Nature hath committed unto them the care.

Another worldly objection anſwered.

Alas, what counſell is here to be given? O lamentable ſtate. O ſorrowfull heart, that neither can depart, and without extreme danger and perill is not able to tarry ſtill. And theſe are they whom our Saviour Chriſt ſaw before ſhould be, and called them in his propheſie of the later time, great bellied or travelling women, and women that give, after they be brought to bed, their ſmall babes ſuck. Of the ſtate of ſuch as are not able to flie the infection of the peſtiferous plague of Antichriſts abominations, Chriſt lamenting, and not curſing, ſaith, Wo be to the great bellied and travelling women, and women that give ſuck in thoſe dayes. For theſe alas, my heart mourneth the more, the leſſe I am able to give any comfortable counſell, but this: that alwaies, as they look for everlaſting life, they abide ſtill in the confeſſion of his truth, whatſoever ſhall befall, and for the reſt to put their truſt now wholly in God, which is able to ſave them againſt all appearance: and commonly in extremities, when all worldly comfort faileth, and the danger is at higheſt, then unto his he is wont, after his accuſtomed mercie, to be moſt readie to put his helping hand. Daniel, God ſuffered to be caſt into the Den of Lyons, and the three children into the hot burning furnace, and yet he ſaved them all. Paul was plucked out of the mouth of the Lyon (as he ſaith of himſelf) and in Aſia he was brought into ſuch trouble, that he looked for no other thing but for preſent death. and yet he that raiſed the dead to life again, did bring him out of all his troubles, and taught him and all other that be in troubles for Chriſts cauſe, not to truſt to themſelves, but in Almighty God.

A leſſon to truſt to the Lord, who is alwaies a help in extremity of need.

Of Gods gracious ayd in extreme perils toward them that put their truſt in him, all Scripture is full both of old and new. What dangers were the Patriarches oftentimes brought into, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, but of all other Joſeph, and how mercifully were they delivered again? In what perils was Moſes when he was fain to flie for the ſafegard of his life? And when was he ſent again to deliver the Iſraelites from the ſervile bondage? Not before they were brought into extreme miſery. And when did the Lord mightily deliver his people from Pharaoh his ſword? Not before they were brought into ſuch ſtraights, that they were ſo compaſſed on every ſide (the maine ſea on the one ſide, and the maine hoſt on the other) that they could look for none other (yea what did they indeed elſe look for?) but either to have been drowned in the ſea, or elſe to have fallen on the edge of Pharaoh his ſword. Thoſe Judges, which wrought moſt wonderfull things in the delivery of the people, were ever given when the people was brought to moſt miſery before, as Examples of Gods readie help in extreme perils.

Othoniel, Ehud, Samgar, Gedeon, Jephthe, Samſon. And ſo was Saul endued with ſtrength and boldneſſe from above, againſt the Ammonites, Philiſtines, and Amalechites, for the defence of the people of GOD. David likewiſe felt Gods help moſt ſenſibly ever in his extreme perſecutions. What ſhall I ſpeak of the Prophets of God, whom God ſuffered ſo oft to be brought into extreme perils, and ſo mightily delivered them again; as Helias, Jeremy, Daniel, Micheas, and Jonas, and many other, whom it were but too long to rehearſe and ſet out at large? And did the Lord uſe his ſervants otherwiſe in the new Law after Chriſts incarnation? Reade the Acts of the Apoſtles, and you ſhall ſee no. Were not the Apoſtles caſt into priſon, and brought out by the mightie hand of God? Did not the Angel deliver Peter out of the ſtrong priſon, and bring him out by the yron gates of the Citie, and ſet him free? And when, I pray you? Even the ſame night before Herod appointed to have brought him to judgement to have ſlain him, as he had a little before killed James the brother of John. Paul and Silas, when after they had been ſore ſcourged, and were put into the inner priſon, and there were laid faſt in the ſtocks, I pray you what appearance was there that the Magiſtrates ſhould be glad to come the next day themſelves to them, to deſire them to be content, and to depart in peace? Who provided for Paul, that he ſhould be ſafely conducted out of all danger, and brought to Felix the Emperors Deputy, when as both the high Prieſt, the Phariſees, and Rulers of the Jewes had conſpired to require judgement of death againſt him, he being faſt in Priſon, and alſo more than fortie men had ſworne each one to another, that they would neither eat nor drinke, untill they had ſlain Paul? A thing wonderfull, that no reaſon could have invented, or man could have looked for: God provided Paul his owne ſiſters Son a yong man, that diſappointed that conſpiracie, and all their former conjuration. The manner how the thing came to paſſe, thou mayſt read in the twentie three of the Acts. I will not be tedious unto thee with the rehearſall thereof.

Examples of Gods deliverance.

Now to deſcend from the Apoſtles to the Martyrs that followed next in Chriſts Church, and in them likewiſe to declare how gracious our good God ever hath been to work wonderfully with them which in his caſe have been in extreme perils, it were matter enough to write a long book. I will here name but one man and one woman, that is, Athanaſius the great Clerke and godly men ſtoutly ſtanding in Chriſts cauſe againſt the Arrians, and that holy woman Blandina, ſtanding ſo conſtantly in all extreme pains, in the ſimple confeſſion of Chriſt. If thou wilt have examples of mo, look and thou ſhalt have both theſe and an hundred mo in Eccle. hiſtoria of Euſebius, and in Tripartita hiſtoria.

But for all theſe examples both of holy Scripture, and of other Hiſtories, I fear me the weak man of God, incumbred with the frailty and infirmitie of the fleſh, will have now and then ſuch thoughts and quaumes (as they call them) to run over his heart, and to think thus: All theſe things which are rehearſed out of the Scripture I beleeve to be true, and of the reſt truly I do think well, and can beleeve them alſo to be true; but all theſe we muſt needs grant were ſpeciall miracles of God, which now in our dayes are ceaſed, we ſee; and to require them at Gods hands, were it not to tempt God?

Welbeloved brother, I grant ſuch were great wonderfull works of God, and we have not ſeen many of ſuch miracles in our time, either for that our ſight is not cleer (for truly God worketh with his, his part in all times) or elſe becauſe we have not the like faith of them for whoſe cauſe God wrought ſuch things, or becauſe, after that he had ſet forth the truth of his doctrine by ſuch miracles then ſufficiently, the time of ſo many miracles to be done was expired withall. Which of theſe is the moſt ſpeciall cauſe of all other, or whether there be any other, God knoweth; I leave that to God. But know thou this, my welbeloved in God, that Gods hand is as ſtrong as ever it was, he may do what his gracious pleaſure is, and he is as good and gracious as ever he was. Man changeth as the garment doth, But God our heavenly Father is even the ſame now that he was, and ſhall be for evermore.

God worketh great miracles in our time, although every man doth not ſee them.

The world without doubt (this I do beleeve, and therefore I ſay) draweth towards an end, and in all ages God hath had his own manner, after his ſecret and unſearchable wiſedome, to uſe his elect, ſometimes to deliver them and to keep them ſafe, and ſometimes to ſuffer them to drink of Chriſts cup, that is, to feele the ſmart, and to feel of the whip. And though the fleſh ſmarteth at the one, and feeleth eaſe in the other, is glad of the one, and ſore vexed in the other: yet the Lord is all one towards them in both, and loveth them no leſſe when he ſuffereth them to be beaten, yea, and to be put to bodily death, that when he worketh wonders for their marvellous delivery. Nay, rather he doth more for them, when in anguiſh of the torments he ſtandeth by them, and ſtrengthneth them in their faith, to ſuffer in the confeſſion of the truth and his faith, the bitter pangs of death, than when he openeth the priſon doore and letteth them go looſe: for here he doth but reſpite them to another time, and leaveth them in danger to fall in like perill again; and there he maketh them perfect, to be without danger, pain, or perill, after that for evermore. But this his love towards them, howſoever the world doth judge of it, is all one, both when he delivereth, and when he ſuffereth them to be put to death. He loved as well Peter, and Paul, when (after they had, according to his bleſſed will, pleaſure and providence, finiſhed their courſes, and done their ſervices appointed them by him here in preaching of his Goſpel) the one was beheaded, and the other was hanged or crucified of the cruell tyrant Nero, as the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory ſaith, as when he ſent the Angel to bring Peter out of priſon, and for Pauls delivery he made all the doores of the priſon to flie wide open, and the foundation of the ſame like an earthquake to tremble and ſhake.

The Lords favor no leſſe in adverſity, than in proſperity.

Thinkeſt thou, O thou man of God, that Chriſt our Saviour had leſſe affection to the firſt Martyr Stephen, becauſe he ſuffered his enemies even at the firſt conflict to ſtone him to death? No ſurely, nor James Johns brother, which was one of the three that Paul calleth Primates or Principalls amongſt the Apoſtles of Chriſt. He loved him never a whit the worſe than he did the other, although he ſuffered Herod the tyrants ſword to cut off his head. Nay, doth not Daniel ſay, ſpeaking of the cruelty of Antichriſts time, Et docti in populo docebunt plurimos, & ruent in gladio & in flamma, & in captivitate, & rapina dierum, &c. Et de eruditis ruent ut conflentur & eligantur, & dealbentur, &c. That is, and the learned (he meaneth truly learned in Gods law) ſhall teach many, and ſhall fall upon the ſword, and in the flame (that is, ſhall be burned in the flaming fire) and in captivity (that is, ſhall be in priſon, and be ſpoyled and robbed of their goods for a long ſeaſon.) and after a little in the ſame place of Daniel it followeth; and of the learned there be, which ſhall fall or be overthrowne, that they may be known, tried, choſen, and made white; he meaneth, be bourniſhed and ſcoured anew, picked and choſen, and made freſh and luſty. If that then was foreſeen to be doue to the godly learned, and for ſo gracious cauſes, let every one to whom any ſuch thing by the will of GOD doth chance, be merry in God, and rejoyce, for it is to Gods glorie, and to his own everlaſting wealth. Wherefore well is he that ever he was born, for whom thus graciouſly God hath provided, having grace of GOD, and ſtrength of the holy Ghoſt to ſtand ſtedfaſtly in the heigth of the ſtorm. Happy is he that ever he was born, whom God his heavenly Father hath vouchſafed to appoint to glorifie him, and to edifie his Church by the effuſion of his blood.

Martyrdom an high honour.

To dye in Chriſts cauſe is an high honor, to the which no man certainly ſhall or can aſpire, but to whom God vouchſafeth that dignity: for no man is allowed to preſume to take unto himſelf any office of honor, but he which is thereunto called of God. Therefore John ſaith well ſpeaking of them which have obtained the victory by the blood of the Lambe, and by the word of his teſtimonie, that they loved not their lives, even unto death.

Apoc. 12.

And our Saviour Chriſt ſayth; He that ſhall loſe his life for my cauſe ſhall finde it. And this manner of ſpeech pertaineth not to one kinde of Chriſtians (as the worldly doth wickedly dream) but to all that do truly pertain unto Chriſt. For when Chriſt had called unto him the multitude together with his Diſciples, he ſayd unto them (mark that he ſayd not this to the Diſciples and Apoſtles only, but he ſayd it to all) whoſoever will follow me, let him forſake or deny himſelfe, and take up his croſſe and follow me: for whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it) he meaneth whoſoever will, to ſave his life, forſake or leave him and his truth) and whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my cauſe and the Goſpels ſake, ſhall ſave it. For what ſhall it profit a man if he ſhall win the whole world, and loſe his owne ſoule, his own life? or what ſhall a man give to recompence that loſſe of his own life, and of his own ſoule? Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and my words (that is, to confeſſe me and my Goſpel) before this adulterous and ſinfull generation, of him ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he commeth in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels. Know thou, O man of God, that all things are ordained for thy behoofe, and to the furtherance of thee, towards thy ſalvation. All things, ſaith Paul, worketh with the good to goodneſſe, even the enemies of God, and ſuch kinde of puniſhments whereby they go about to deſtroy them, ſhall be forced by Gods power, might, and fatherly providence, to do them ſervice.

Mat. 16.

Mark. 8.

It is not as the wicked thinketh, that poverty adverſitie, ſickneſſe, tribulation, yea painfull death of the godly be tokens that God doth not love them; but even clean the contrary, as all the whole courſe of Scripture doth evidently declare: for then he would never have ſuffered his moſt dearly beloved the Patriarches to have had ſuch troubles, his Prophets, his Apoſtles, his Martyrs, and chiefe Champions and maintainers of his truth and Goſpel, ſo cruelly of the wicked to have been murdered and ſlain. Of the which ſome were racked (as the Apoſtle ſaith) and would not be delivered, that they might receive a better reſurrection. Some were tried by mockings and ſcourgings, yea moreover by bonds and impriſonment: they were ſtoned, they were hewen and cut aſunder, they were tempted, they were ſlain with the ſword, they wandred up and down in Sheepes skins and Goates skins, being forſaken, afflicted, and tormented, ſuch men as the world was not worthy to have, wandering in wilderneſſe, in mountains, in dens and caves of the earth. All theſe were approved by the teſtimonie of faith, and received not the promiſe, becauſe God did provide better for us, that without us they ſhould not be conſummated. They tarry for us now undoubtedly, longing for the day: but they are commanded to have patience yet (ſayth the Lord) a little while untill the number of their fellow ſervants be fulfilled, and of their brethren which are yet to be ſlain, as they were.

Heb. 11.

Now (thou O man of God) for our Lords ſake, let us not for the love of this life, tarry then too long, and be occaſion of delay of that glorious conſummation, in hope and expectation whereof they departed in the Lord, and the which alſo the living indued with Gods Spirit, ought ſo earneſtly to deſire and to groan for with all the creatures of God. Let us all, with John the ſervant of God, cry in our hearts unto our Saviour Chriſt, Veni Domine Ieſu, Come Lord Jeſus, come. For then when Chriſt, which is our life, ſhall be made manifeſt, and appear in glory, then ſhall the children of God appear what they be, even like unto Chriſt: for this our weak body ſhall be transfigured and made like unto Chriſts glorious body, and that by the power whereby he is able to ſubdue unto himſelfe all things. Then, that which is now corruptible, ſhall be made incorruptible: that which now is vile, ſhall then be made glorious; that which is now weak, ſhall riſe then mighty and ſtrong; that which is groſſe and carnall, ſhall be made fine and ſpirituall: for then we ſhall ſee and have the unſpeakable joy and fruition of the glorious Majeſty of our Lord even as he is.

Apoc. 22.

Who, or what then ſhall let us to jeopard, to jeopard? yea, to ſpend this life which we have here in Chriſts cauſe? in our Lord God his cauſe? O thou therefore man of God, thou that art loaden, and ſo letted like unto a great bellied woman, that thou canſt not flie the plague, yet if thou luſt after ſuch things as I have ſpoken of, ſtand faſt whatſoever ſhall befall, in thy Maſters cauſe: and take this thy letting to flie, for a calling of God to fight in thy Maſter Chriſt his cauſe. Of this be thou certain, they can do nothing unto thee, which thy Father is not aware of, or hath not foreſeen before: they can do no more than it ſhall pleaſe him to ſuffer them to do for the furtherance of his glory, edifying of his Church, and thine own ſalvation. Let them then do what they ſhall, ſeeing to thee (O man of God) all things ſhall be forced to ſerve, and to work with thee unto the beſt before God. O be not afraid, and remember the end.

Nothing happeneth without Gods foreſight.

All this which I have ſpoken for the comfort of the lamentable caſe of the man whom Chriſt called great bellied woman, I mean to be ſpoken likewiſe to the captive and priſoner in Gods cauſe: for ſuch I count to be as it were alreadie ſummoned and preſſed to fight under the banner of the Croſſe of Chriſt, and as it were ſouldiers allowed and taken up for the Lords wars, to do their Lord and Maſter good and honorable ſervice, and to ſtick to him, as men of truſty ſervice in his cauſe, even unto death, and to think their life loſt in his cauſe, is to winne it in eternall glory for evermore.

Therefore, now to conclude and to make an end of this treatiſe, I ſay unto all that love God our heavenly Father, that love Chriſt Jeſus our Redeemer and Saviour; that love to follow the waies of the holy Ghoſt which is our comforter and ſanctifier of all; unto all that love Chriſts ſpouſe and bodie, the true Catholike Church of Chriſt, yea, that love life and their own ſoules health; I ſay unto all theſe, hearken my dear brethren and ſiſters, all you that be of God, of all ſorts, ages, dignities, or degrees; hearken to the word of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt ſpoken to his Apoſtles, and meant to all his in St. Mathews Goſpel, Feare not them which kill the bodie, for they cannot kill the ſoule; but fear him more which may deſtroy and caſt both body and ſoule into hell fire. Are not two ſmall Sparrowes ſold for a mite, and one of them ſhall not fall or light upon the ground without your Father? All the hairs of your head be numbred. Fear them not, you are much more worth than are the little Sparrowes. Every one that confeſſeth me before men, him ſhall I likewiſe confeſſe before my Father which is in heaven. But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, I ſhall deny him likewiſe before my Father which is in heaven.

Math. 10.

The Lord grant us therefore of his heavenly grace and ſtrength, that here we may ſo confeſſe him in this world amongſt this adulterous and ſinfull generation, that he may confeſſe us again at the latter day before his Father which is in heaven, to our glory and everlaſting comfort, joy, and ſalvation.

To our heavenly Father, to our Saviour and Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, and to the holy Ghoſt, be all glory and honor now and for ever, Amen.

Thus with the death and Martyrdome of theſe two learned Paſtors and conſtant ſouldiers of Chriſt, Maſter Latimer and Biſhop Ridley, you have divers of their letters and other writings of theirs expreſſed, with the farewels alſo of Biſhop Ridley, wherein he took his leave of the world, taking his journey to the kingdome of heaven. Divers and ſundry other Treatiſes of his remain alſo in my hand both in Latine and Engliſh, to be remembred by the leave of the Lord in time and place convenient.

The death and end of Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter.

The death of Stephen Gardiner, enemy to Gods word.

The next moneth after the burning of Doctor Ridley, and Maſter Latimer, which was the moneth of November, Stephen Gardiner Biſhop and Chancellor, a man hated of God and all good men, ended his wretched life. Concerning the qualities, nature, and diſpoſition of which man, forſomuch as ſomewhat hath been declared before in the ſtory of King Edwards Reign, I ſhall need therefore the leſſe now to ſtand greatly upon the ſame. Firſt, this Vipers bird crept out of the Town of Bury in Suffolke, was brought up moſt part of his youth in Cambridge; his wit, capacity, memory, and other indowments of nature were not to be complained of, if he had well uſed and rightly applied the ſame; wherein there was no great want of Gods part in him, if he had not rather himſelf wanted to the goodneſſe of his gifts. Through this promptneſſe, activity, and towardneſſe of his, he profited not a little in ſuch ſtudies as he gave his head unto, as firſt in the Civill Law, then in languages and ſuch other like, eſpecially in thoſe Arts and faculties, which had any proſpect to dignity and preferment to be hoped for. Beſides other ornaments or helps of nature, memorie chiefly ſeemed in him very beneficiall, rather than diligence of ſtudy.

The vices of Wincheſter deſcribed.

To theſe gifts and qualities were joyned again his great or greater vices, which not ſo much followed him, as overtooke him, not ſo much burdened him, as made him burdenous to the whole Realm. He was of a proud ſtomack, and high minded, in his own opinion and conceit flattering himſelf too much; in wit, crafty, and ſubtile, toward his ſuperiours flattering and fair ſpoken, to his inferiors fierce, againſt his equall ſtout and envious, namely, if in judgement and ſentence he any thing withſtood him, as appeared between the good Lord Cromwell and him in the Reign of King Henry, being of like hautineſſe of ſtomack, as the Poets write of Pelides, Cedere neſcius. Who, although he would give no place to men, yet notwithſtanding I wiſh he would have given place to truth, according as he ſeemed not altogether ignorant of that truth. What his knowledge was therein, it is evident, partly to underſtand as well by his book De vera obedientia, as alſo by his Sermon before King Edward, alſo by his anſwers to the Counſell the ſame time, and moreover by his own words it may be gathered in ſundry places, as more plainly may appear by that which hereafter followeth.

Upon his eſtimation and fame he ſtood too too much, more than was meet for a man of his Coat and calling, whoſe profeſsion was to be crucified unto the world, which thing made him ſo ſtiffe in maintaining that he had once begun to take upon him. I will not here ſpeak of that which hath been conſtantly reported to me touching the monſtrous making and miſhaped faſhion of his feet and toes, the nayles whereof were ſayd not to be like to other mens, but to crook downward, and to be ſharp like the clawes of ravening beaſts. What his learning was in the Civill and Canon Law I have not to ſay. What it was in other liberall Sciences and Arts this I ſuppoſe, that neither his continuance in ſtudie, nor diligence of reading was ſuch (by reaſon of his too much intermedling in Princes matters) as could truly well merit unto him the title of a deep learned man. But what learning or cunning ſoever it was he had, ſo it fared in him, as it doth in Butchers, which uſe to blow up their fleſh: even ſo he with boldneſſe and ſtoutneſſe, and ſpecially with authority made thoſe gifts that he had to appear much greater than they were in very deed. Whereunto, uſe peradventure alſo and experience abroad brought no little helps, rather than either quickneſſe of wit, or happineſſe of education.

Wincheſter not worthy the title of a learned man.

And as touching Divinitie, he was ſo variable, wavering with time, that no conſtant cenſure can be given what to make of him. If his doings and writings were according to his conſcience, no man can rightly ſay whether he was a right Proteſtant or Papiſt. If he wrote otherwiſe than he thought, for fear, or to bear with time, then was he a double deep diſſembler before God and man, to ſay, and unſay, to write and unwrite, to ſweare and forſweare ſo as he did. For firſt in the beginning of Queen Annes time, who was ſo forward or ſo buſie in the matter of the Kings divorce as Stephen Gardiner, who was firſt ſent to Rome, and then to the Emperor with Edward Foxe, as chiefe agent in the behalfe of Ladie Anne? By whom alſo he was preferred to the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, and Edward Boner was preferred to the Biſhoprick of London. Againe, at the aboliſhing of the Pope, who ſo ready to ſweare, or ſo vehement to write againſt the Pope as he, as not only by his ſermons, but alſo by his booke de obedientia may appeare? In which booke de obedientia, leſt any ſhould thinke him drawne thereunto otherwiſe than by his own conſent, he plainly declareth, how not raſhly nor upon a ſudden, but upon a long deliberation and advertiſement in himſelf about the matter, he at length uttered his judgement: Whereof reade before. And moreover, ſo he uttered his judgement in writing againſt the uſurped ſupremacie of the Pope, that comming to Lovane, afterward he was there accounted for a perſon excommunicate and a Schiſmatick, inſomuch that he was not permitted in their Church to ſay Maſſe; and moreover in their publike Sermons they openly cried out againſt him. Whereof reade hereafter following.

The mutability of S. Gardiner in religion.

Touching the doings of Wincheſter at Lovane, reade the letter of Oſiander to Criſpine.

And thus long continued he firme and forward, ſo that who but Wincheſter during all the time

Another halfe-turn from popery to the Goſpel. Wincheſter turned to a full Papiſt.

and raign of Queen Anne? After her deceaſe that time by little and little carried him away, till at length the emulation of Cromwels eſtate, and eſpecially (as it ſeemeth) for his ſo much favouring of Boner (whom Wincheſter at that time in no caſe could abide) made him an utter enemy both againſt him, and alſo his religion: till again in King Edwards dayes, he began a little to rebate from certain points of Popery, and ſomewhat to ſmell of the Goſpel, as both by his Sermon before King Edward, as alſo by his ſubſcribing to certain articles, may appear: and this was an half turn of Stephen Gardiner from Popery again to the Goſpel, and (no doubt) he would have further turned, had not the unlucky decay of the Duke of Somerſet clean turned him away from true Divinity, to plain Popery; wherein he continued a cruell perſecutor to his dying day.

Wincheſter never conſtant in himſelf, nor agreeing with other Papiſts.

A great part of Wincheſters Divinity is to be found in Pereſeus.

And thus much concerning the trade and profeſſion of Stephen Gardiners Popiſh Divinity. In which his Popiſh trade, whether he followed more true judgement, or elſe time, or rather the ſpirit of ambition and vain-glory, it is doubtfull to ſay, and ſo much the more doubtfull, becauſe in his doings and writings a man may ſee him not onely contrary to himſelf, but alſo in ſome points contrary to other Papiſts. And furthermore, where he agreeth with them, he ſeemeth therein not ſo much to follow his own ſenſe, as the minde and meaning of Pereſeus; out of whoſe Book the greateſt part of Wincheſters Divinity ſeemeth to be borrowed.

Wincheſters ſtile unpleaſant.

And therefore as in the true knowledge of Gods holy Word and Scripture he appeareth no body; ſo in his pen and ſtyle of writing no leſſe farre is he from commendation, than he is from all plainneſſe and perſpicuity. In whoſe obſcure and perplex kinde of writing, although peradventure ſome ſenſe may be found with ſome ſearching, yet ſhall no reader finde any ſweetneſſe in his reading.

What moved him to be ſo ſturdy againſt M. Cheek, and Sir Thomas Smith, for the Greek pronunciation, others may think what they pleaſe: I ſpeak but what I think, that ſo he did, for that he ſaw it a thing rather newly begun, than truly impugned. Such was the diſpoſition of that man (as it ſeemeth) that of purpoſe he ever affected to ſeem to be a patron of all old cuſtomes, though they were never ſo rotten with age. Amongſt other matters, this one thing I cannot but marvell at in my minde, when I ſee how proudly he braggeth, and vainly vaunteth himſelf (as well in his letters to the Lord Protector, and others of King Edwards Councell, as alſo in his long matter articulated and exhibited by him unto the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and other the Kings Commiſſioners) of the high favour he had of the noble King of famous memory, King Henry the Eighth, when indeed nothing was leſſe true; neither did the King leſſe favour any of his Councell, than him, affirming very often, that he greatly ſuſpected the ſaid Biſhop to be a ſecret maintainer of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped authority, and a ſtout diſturber and hinderer of his proceedings in reformation of Religion And therefore he did ſo much diſlike him, that he did not onely minde (if the Lord had ſent his Highneſſe longer life) to have uſed the extremity of law againſt him, upon very ſore and juſt matter of old, committed by him (and yet not taken away by any pardon) commanding thereupon often the Lord Paget, then his Secretary, to keep ſafe certain writings which he had againſt him; but alſo commanded that he ſhould be put clean out of his laſt Will and Teſtament, not ſuffering him either to be any of his executors, or elſe in any caſe of his Sons counſell, no, although he were earneſtly entreated to the contrary by ſundry of the Lords, and others of his highneſſe Councell, ſaying, he was a wilfull, troubleſome, and head ſtrong man, and not meet to be about his Sonne, or to have any thing to do by his will. Now amongſt other cauſes that moved the King thus to ſuſpect his fidelity towards his godly proceedings in religion, I finde this to be one. It pleaſed his Majeſty after his aboliſhing of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped authority (amongſt other Embaſſages to forraign Princes) to ſend the ſaid Biſh. of Wincheſter, and ſir Henry Knevet, Knight, as joynt Ambaſſadours to the Emperour, being then at a Diet or Counſel at Ratisbone, appointing alſo Sir John Barkley, Sir William Blunt, Knights, and Maſter Andrew Bainton, Eſquire (his highneſſe ſervants) to give their attendance upon the ſaid Sir Henry Knevet, for the more honouring of his Embaſſage. It happened alſo at that time, that Sir Henry Knevet entertained into his ſervice (as Steward of his houſhold) one Will. Wolfe, who had in the ſame place and room before ſerved Sir Thomas Wyat, Knight, the Kings former Ambaſſadour there, and by that means had good acquaintance in thoſe parts, as well in the Emperours Court, as elſe where. This Wolfe, towards the later end of that Diet or Councell, happened to walk (as often he did) towards the Emperours Palace to hear ſome news, where he met with one Ludovico, an Italian Merchant of Banker, one of his old acquaintance. Who, ſuppoſing the ſaid Wolfe to have attended upon the Biſhop of Wincheſter (not knowing of any other joynt Ambaſſadour) required Wolfe for old acquaintance, to do him a pleaſure; whereunto he willingly granted. Whereupon Ludovico ſhewed him, that the Popes Legate, or Ambaſſadour to the Emperour (which was Cardinall Contarene) departing the day before towards Rome, and having no leiſure to end his buſineſſe himſelf, had put the ſaid Ludovico in truſt for the accompliſhing of them: and amongſt all other things he had eſpecially charged him that he ſhould repair to the Ambaſſadour of England, and require of him an anſwer of the Popes Letters, which the Legate did of late ſend unto him, addreſſed to him from Rome, and that upon the receipt thereof he ſhould ſend them after with all ſpeed; and therefore if his L. Ambaſſadour would write by that currour, he prayed Wolfe to tell him that it was time to write, for the currour went away within a day or two. At this tale Wolfe being abaſhed, and yet partly gheſſing which Ambaſſadour he meant, thought it not meet to tell him whoſe ſervant he was, but by other ſoothing talk perceived that he meant the Biſhop of Wincheſter. And to the end that Ludovico ſhould ſuſpect nothing, he anſwered him, that he being not the Ambaſſadours Secretary, could ſay little therein, howbeit he would not miſſe to put his Secretary in remembrance of it: which thing Ludovicke alſo deſired him to do, for that he had no other acquaintance with the Ambaſſador, and ſo for that time they departed. This matter ſeeming to Wolfe of ſome importance, did ſtraightwayes reveal it to Sir Henry Knevet his Maſter, Who weighing alſo the greatneſſe of the caſe, and what diſadvantage it were upon one mans ſo bare a report to attempt ought, in a place and time, whereby ſuch a perſon was to be touched, charged Wolfe well to adviſe himſelf, that no affect of hate, diſpleaſure, or other paſſion, did move him to diſcloſe this, but truth onely. Wolfe replied, that he weighed well the weightines of the cauſe, meet, as to his own reſpect, to be paſſed over in ſilence, for avoyding of his private diſpleaſure, if duty of allegiance bound him not otherwiſe. But Sir (quoth he) if you think not my hearing thereof, one to one, to be ſufficient, I warrant you to deviſe means, that ſome others of your ſervants ſhall hear the like words at Ludovickes own mouth as well as I. Upon which talk Sir Henry Knevet deviſed which of his ſervants he might uſe to that purpoſe, and at laſt reſted upon M. Tho. Chalenor his Secretary, becauſe he had the Italian tongue. Not yet making him privy of any matter, but willed Wolfe to take him abroad with him as of his own private motion, for they were very familiar friends. Whereupon the next morning being ſunday, Wolfe came to Chalenors chamber, and prayed him familiarly to go walk with him abroad to the Piazza, or market-ſtead, which he gladly granting, ſo did, not knowing of any ſpeciall cauſe why. When they came to the Piazza, over againſt the Emperors Palace, (neer whereunto alſo the Popes Legate had lodged) and had there walked a while together, there came thither the ſaid Ludovico, and eſpying Wolfe, ſaluted him very friendly, and entred into talk about the Exchange, and ſundry other matters, Chalenor being ſtill with them. At laſt upon occaſion, they entred into like talk about the former Letters that the Ambaſſadour of England had received from Rome by the Popes Legate, of which Ludovico had in charge to receive an anſwer, affirming, that the Poſte did depart the next day, and therefore prayed Wolfe to put the Ambaſſadours Secretary in remembrance of them. Whereunto Wolfe anſwered, that he would willingly do it; but he did not well know which Ambaſſadour he meant, for that there were two: one, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the other, a Gentleman of the Kings privy Chamber. To whom Ludovick replied, that he meant not the Gentleman of the privy chamber, but the Biſhop. By which talk and more ſuch like (as upon the former day) M. Chalenor being moved (and not knowing yet of his Maſters and Wolfes purpoſe) after the departure of Ludovico from them, ſaid unto Wolfe, that Ludovicke had had but homely talk with him, not to be paſſed over lightly, and therefore he would tell his Maſter of it. To whom Wolfe anſwered, do as you will, if you think any matter therein. And therefore at his return home, he told Sir Henry Knevet what ſpeech he had heard at Ludovicks mouth. Sir Henry Knevet, being thus further aſcertained of the matter, opened the whole to Sir John Barkley, Sir William Blunt, and to M. Bainton; who all agreed, yet to make a farther triall thereof. And therefore deviſed that Wolfe ſhould procure Ludovicke to bring certain Velvet, and other ſilks, unto Sir Henry Knevets lodging, as well for himſelf, as for the other Gentlemen; which that afternoon he did accompliſh, and brought Ludovicke unto Sir Henry, where alſo were the other Gentlemen: After they had a while viewed the ſilks, and had had ſome talk about the prices, Wolfe took occaſion again to aſke Ludovicke, if Sir Henry were the Ambaſſadour of whom he was to demand an anſwer of the Letters ſent by the Popes Legate? To whom the Merchant anſwered, No, it was not his ſeignory, but it was a Biſhop, tearming him Reverendiſſimo, whereby they eaſily perceived whom he meant. Sir Henry Knevet, hereupon ſomewhat diſſembling the matter, entred into further talk thereabouts, whereby Ludovicke opened as much in effect to them, as he had done before to Wolfe: but yet at laſt perceiving that as well Sir Henry, as alſo the other Gentlemen, did behold him ſomewhat fixedly, he brake of his talk. Wherewith Sir Henry Knevet, making as though he had noted nothing, did lovingly diſmiſſe him, praying him, that when he had received the Biſhops Letters, he would alſo repair to him for a packet to an Engliſh Gentleman of his acquaintance at Millan; which he promiſed to do, and ſo departed again. When Sir Henry had thus made ſufficient triall of this matter, he forthwith wrote his Letters unto the Kings Majeſty, ſignifying unto him the whole at large, as he had learned. In the mean while Ludovicke the next morning repaired unto the Biſhop of Wincheſters lodging, to demand an anſwer of thoſe Letters the Legate had ſent unto him: but how he uſed himſelf, or whether he uttered the talk he had with Sir Henry Knevet and with Wolfe, whom he ſuppoſed at the firſt to be the Biſhops man, it is not certainly known. But the Biſhop, perceiving that by miſtaking one for another (and in ſuppoſing Wolfe to be the Biſhops ſervant) Ludovicke had uttered all his meſſage from the Legate unto Wolfe, and that thereby his practiſes would come to light; in great haſty rage, cauſed Ludovicke to be ſtayed in his own houſe, while in the mean time himſelf went to Grabela, one of the Emperors Councell, and ſo practiſed with him, that Ludovicke was ſecretly committed unto priſon, in the cuſtody of one of the Emperors Marſhals, ſo as he could be no more talked withall, all the time of their abode there. And then ſending in great haſte to Sir Henry Knevet to come and ſpeak with him (which he did) he fell into very hot ſpeech with him, ſaying, that he had poyſon in his diſh, and that a knave was ſuborned to be his deſtruction; with many ſuch like words. Sir Henry told him again, how he underſtood it, and prayed him, that Ludovick might be brought face to face, to be examined in both their preſence. Which the Biſhop would in no caſe agree unto, affirming, that he had ſo declared the caſe to Grabela, being indifferent (as he thought) to them both, that he would not meddle with Ludovicke, nor ſpeak with him: but that the Emperors Councell ſhould examine him, and try what he was, for him. To whom Sir Henry Knevet again very earneſtly objected, that he marvelled that the Biſhop in matter touching the Kings Majeſty, their Maſter, would uſe the aid or means of Grabela, a forraign Princes Miniſter, to make him privy of their queſtion. But ſay and do what he could, he would never come to the ſpeech of Ludovicke any more ever after. Whereupon there roſe great and long controverſies between them (both writing Letters unto the King about that matter) untill at laſt the Kings Majeſty perceiving his affairs otherwiſe to ſlack thereby, wrote unto them both that they ſhould lay all thoſe things under foot, and joyn together in his ſervice as before; which they did accordingly. But howſoever this matter was afterward ſalved here with the Kings Majeſty, as either by the death of Sir Henry Knevet (which I think was not long after) or by other friends the Biſhop had here at home I know not: yet Wolfe, who within two moneths after died of a long cough of the Longues, upon his death-bed did again affirm the premiſſes to be moſt true; and therefore in the preſence of Sir Henry Knevet, and divers other of his ſervants, he proteſted, that he had not invented, ſought, or procured this at Ludovickes hands, for any malice or diſpleaſure born to them but only for diſcharge of his faith and duty unto the Kings Majeſty, deſiring that the ſame his proteſtation might be inſerted in the end of his laſt Will and Teſtament, which was then preſently done, and thereunto ſet his hand.

Now, whether this was the matter that the King moved ſo often M. Secretary Paget (being after Lord Keeper) to keep ſafe as ſore matter againſt the Biſhop, I know not; but yet it appears by ſome depoſitions of the Nobility, and others, in the proceſſe againſt him had in King Edwards dayes, that the Kings Maieſty, Henry the 8. had this matter ever in his mind: for in every generall pardon that he granted by Parliament after this practice, he did ſtill except all treaſons committed beyond the Seas; meaning thereby, as it was ſuppoſed, that the B. ſhould not take any benefit by any generall pardon, if at any time his Maieſty would call him to accompt: and therfore all things well weighed, he had ſmall cauſe to vaunt of his great favour he had with King Henry his Maſter. Howbeit, it ſeemeth he was brought into this fools paradiſe, by the Lord Paget: who (as he himſelf reporteth in his depoſitions) in his meſſages from the King to the ſaid Biſhop, deluded him, telling him much otherwiſe than the King had ſpoken, and concealing alwayes the Kings hard ſpeeches againſt him which thing puffed up this vain-glorious Thraſo not a little. All which premiſſes appear more at large by the depoſitions of the nobles and others, examined in the long proceſſe againſt him in King Edwards raigne, as appears in our firſt edition of Acts and Monuments, from the 804. page, unto the end of that proceſſe, in that book at large mentioned.

But whoſoever he was, ſeeing he is now gone, I referre him to his judge, to whom he ſhall ſtand or fall. As concerning his death, and manner thereof, I would they which were preſent thereat would teſtifie to us what they ſaw. This we have all to think, that his death happened ſo opportunely, that England hath a mighty cauſe to give thanks to the Lord therefore: not ſo much for the great hurt he had done in times paſt in perverting his Princes, in bringing in the 6 Articles, in murdering Gods Saints, in defacing Chriſts ſincere religion, &c. but alſo and eſpecially for that he had thought to have brought to paſſe in murdering alſo our Noble Queen that now is. For whatſoever danger it was of death, that ſhe was in, it did (no doubt) proceed from that bloody Biſhop, who was the cauſe thereof. And if it be certain which we have heard, that her Highneſſe being in the Tower, a Writ came down from certain of the Councell, for her execution, it is out of controverſie, that wily Wincheſter was the onely Dædalus and framer of that engine. who (no doubt) in that one day had brought this whole Realme into wofull ruine, had not the Lords moſt gracious Councell, through M. Bridges, then the Lievtenant, coming in haſte to the Queen, certified her of the matter, and prevented Achitophels bloody deviſes. For the which, thanks be to the ſame our Lord and Saviour, in the congregation of all Engliſh Churches, Amen.

Of things uncertain, I muſt ſpeak uncertainly, for lack of fuller information, or elſe pe adventure they be in the Realm that can ſay more than here I have expreſſed. For as Boner, Story, Thornton, Harpsfield, Dunning, with other, were occupied in putting the poor branches of Gods Saints to death: ſo this Biſhop for his part bent all his deviſes, and had ſpent all his powder in aſſayling the root, and in caſting ſuch a plat-form (as he himſelf in words at his death is ſaid to confeſſe) to build his Popery upon, as he thought ſhould have ſtood for ever and a day. But (as I ſaid before) of things uncertain I can ſpeak but uncertainly. Wherefore as touching the manner and order of his death, how rich he dyed, what words he ſpake, what little repentance he ſhewed, whether he died with his tongue ſwoln and out of his mouth, as did Thomas Arundell, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or whether he ſtunk before he died, as Cardinall Wolſey did, or whether he died in deſpair, as Latomus and other did, &c. All this I refer either to their reports of whom I heard it, or leave it to the knowledge of them which know it better.

Tho. Arundell Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Notwithſtanding, here by the way, touching the death of this foreſaid Biſhop, I thought not to overpaſſe a certain hear-ſay, which not long ſince came to me by information of a certain worthy and credible Gentlewoman, and another Gentleman of the ſame name and kindred, which Miſtreſſe Munday, being the wife of one Maſter Munday, Secretary ſometime to the old L. Thomas, D. of Northfolk, a preſent witneſſe of this that is teſtified, thus openly reported in the houſe of a worſhipfull Citizen, bearing yet office in this City, in words and effect as followeth. The ſame day, when as Biſhop Ridley and M. Latimer ſuffered at Oxford, being about the 19 day of October, there came to the houſe of Stephen Gardiner, the old D. of Northfolk with the foreſaid M. Munday his Secretary above named, reporter hereof. The old aged Duke there waiting and tarrying for his dinner, the Biſh. being not yet diſpoſed to dine, deferred the time to 3 or 4 of the clock at afternoon. At length, about 4 of the clock cometh his ſervant poſting in all poſſible ſpeed from Oxford, bringing intelligence to the B. what he had heard and ſeen: of whom the ſaid B. diligently inquiring the truth of the matter, and hearing by his man, that fire moſt certainly was ſet unto them, cometh out rejoycing to the Duke; Now ſaith he, let us go to dinner. Whereupon, they being ſet down, meat immediately was brought, and the Biſhop began merrily to eat. But what followed? The bloody Tyrant had not eaten a few bits, but the ſudden ſtroke of God his terrible hand fell upon him in ſuch ſort, as immediately he was taken from the table, and ſo brought to his bed, where he continued the ſpace of 15 dayes in ſuch intolerable anguiſh and torments, that all that mean while, during the 15 dayes, he could not avoid by order of urine, or otherwiſe, any thing that he received: wherby his body being miſerably inflamed within (who had inflamed ſo many good Martyrs before) was brought to a wretched end. And thereof, no doubt, as moſt like it is, came the thruſting out of his tongue from his mouth ſo ſwolne and black, with the inflamation of his body, A ſpectacle worthy to be noted and beholden of all ſuch bloody burning perſecutors.

But to proceed farther in the ſequele of our ſtory: I could name the man (but I abſtain from names) who being then preſent, and a great doer about the ſaid Wincheſter, reported to us concerning the ſaid Biſhop, that when Doctor Day, Biſhop of Chicheſter came to him, and began to comfort him with words of Gods promiſe, and with the free juſtification in the blood of Chriſt our Saviour, repeating the Scriptures to him, Wincheſter hearing that, What my Lord (quoth he) will you open that gap now? then farewell all together. To me and ſuch other in my caſe you may ſpeak it, but open this window to the people, then farewell altogether.

Moreover, what D. Boner then ſaw in him, or what he heard of him, and what words paſſed between them about the time of this extremity, betwixt him and him be it. If Boner did there behold any thing which might turn to his good example, I exhort him to take it, and to beware in time, as I pray God he may. Here I could bring in the frivolons Epitaph which was made of his death, deviſed of a Papiſt for a Popiſh Biſhop: but I pretermit it, and inſtead thereof I have here inferred certain gatherings out of his Sermons, words, and writings, wherein may appear firſt, what an earneſt and vehement enemy he was to the Pope, if he would have been conſtant in himſelf; then how inconſtantly he varied from himſelf; and thirdly how he ſtanding upon a ſingularity of his own wit, varied alſo from other Papiſts in certain points. In the gathering whereof albeit there be ſome pains, and tediouſneſſe alſo in reading; yet I thought not to pretermit the ſame, upon certain conſiderations, namely, for that ſo many yet to this day there be, which ſtick ſo much to Gardiners wit, learning, and religion, taking him for ſuch a doughty pillar of the Popes Church. To the intent therefore, that ſuch as hitherto have been deceived by him, may not longer be abuſed therein, if they will either credit his own works, words, ſermons, writings, diſputations; or elſe will be judged by his own witneſſes of his own party produced, we have here collected ſuch manifeſt probations, which may notoriouſly declare how effectuouſly firſt he withſtood the Popes ſupremacy: and likewiſe afterward may declare manifeſt contrariety and repugnancie of the ſaid Gardiner, firſt with other writers, and laſtly with himſelf: firſt beginning with his Sermon preached before King Edward. The ſumme and effect of which Sermon briefly collected by M. Udal, hereunder followeth to be ſeen.

The ſumme and effect of the Sermon which Gardiner, B. of Wincheſter preached before King Edward, An. 1550.

The effect of Ste. Gardnier B of Wincheſters ſermon.

MOſt honorable audience, I purpoſe, by the grace of God, to declare ſome part of the Goſpel that is accuſtomably uſed to be read in the Church at this day. And becauſe that without the ſpeciall grace of God, neither can I ſpeak any thing to your edifying, nor ye receive the ſame accordingly, I ſhall deſire you all, that we may joyntly pray all together for the aſſiſtance of his grace. In which prayer I commend to Almighty God, your moſt excellent Majeſty, our Soveraign Lord, King of England, France and Ireland, and of the Church of England and Ireland, next and immediatly under God here on earth, the ſupreme Head, Queen Katharine Dowager, my Lady Maries Grace, my Lady Elizabeths Grace, your Majeſties moſt dear ſiſters, my Lord Protectors Grace, with all others of your moſt honourable Councell, the ſpiritualty and temporalty, and I ſhall deſire you to commend unto God with your prayer, the ſouls departed unto God in Chriſts faith, and amongſt theſe, moſt eſpecially our late Soveraign Lord, King Henry the Eighth, your Majeſties moſt Noble Father. For theſe and for grace neceſſary, I ſhall deſire you to ſay a Pater noſter, and ſo forth.

Supreme Head.

Matth. 16.

Divers judgements of Chriſt

The Goſpel beginneth, Cum veniſſet Ieſus in partes Cæſareæ Philippi, &c. When Jeſus was come into the parts of Ceſarea, a City that Philippus builded, he asked his Diſciples, and ſaid; Whom do men ſay that the Sonne of man is? They ſaid, Some ſay that thou art John the Baptiſt, ſome that thou art Ely, ſome that thou art Jeremy, or ſome one of the Prophets. He ſaid to them, But whom ſay ye that I am? Then anſwered Simon Peter, and ſaid, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God, &c. I cannot have time, I think, to ſpeak of the Goſpel thorowly, for other matters that I have here now to ſay, but I ſhall note unto you ſuch things as I may, and firſt of the diverſity of opinions concerning Chriſt, which were among the people variable: but among this, that is, the diſciple of Chriſts ſchool, there was no variety, they agreed all together in one truth, and among them there was no variety. For when Peter had for all the reſt, and in the name of all the reſt made his anſwer, that Chriſt was the Sonne of God, they all confeſſed with one conſent, that he had ſpoken the truth Yet theſe opinions of Chriſt that the people had of him, though they were ſundry, yet were they honorable and not ſlanderous: for to ſay that Chriſt was Ely, and John the Baptiſt, was honorable. For ſome thought him ſo to be, becauſe he did frankly, ſharply, and openly rebuke vice. They that called him Jeremy, had alſo an honorable opinion of him, and thought him ſo to be, becauſe of his great learning which they perceived in him, and marvelled where he had it. And they that ſaid he was ſome of the Prophets, had an honorable opinion of him, and favoured him, and thought well of him.

Man can do nothing of himſelf.

But there was another ſort of people that ſpake evill of him, and ſlandered him, and railed on him, ſaying that he was a glutton, and a drinker of wine, that he had a devill in him, that he was a deceiver of the people, that he was a Carpenters ſonne, as though he were the worſe for his fathers craft. But of theſe he asked no queſtion: for among theſe none agreed with the other. Wherein ye ſhall note that man of his own power and ſtrength can nothing do: no, nothing that good is he can do of his own invention or device, but erreth and faileth; when he is left to his own invention, he erreth in his imagination. So proud is man, and ſo ſtout of his own courage, that he deviſeth nothing well, whenſoever he is left to himſelf without God; and then never do any ſuch agree in any truth, but wander and erre in all that they do. As men of law if they be asked their opinion in any point touching the law, ye ſhall not have two of them agree in opinion: in any point touching the law, ye ſhall not have two of them agree in opinion, one with the other. If there be two or three of them asked their opinion in any matter, if they ſhould anſwer all one thing, they fear leſt they ſhould be ſuppoſed and thought to have no learning. Therefore be they never ſo many of them, they will not agree in their anſwers, but deviſe each man a ſundry anſwer in any thing that they are asked.

Diſagreement amongſt men of law.

Diſagreement among Philoſophers.

The Philoſophers that were not of Chriſts ſchool erred every one in their vain opinions, and no one of them agreeth with the other.

Diſagreement among ſimple people.

Yea, men of ſimplicity, though they mean well, yet being out of Chriſts ſchool, they agree not, but vary in their opinions. As theſe ſimple people here ſpoken of, becauſe they were not perfect Diſciples of Chriſts ſchool, they varied and agreed not in their opinions of Chriſt, though they thought well of him. Some ſaid he was John, ſome Ely, ſome Jeremy, but none made the right anſwer. He that anſwered here, was Simon the ſon of Jonas, and he ſaid; Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God.

Simon ſignifieth obedience. Jonas ſignifieth a Dove.

Obedience.

Simplicity.

Where ye ſhall note the properties that were in Peter. He was called Simon, which is obedience, and Jonas is a Dove; ſo that in him that is of Chriſts ſchool, muſt be theſe two properties, obedience and ſimplicity. He muſt be humble and innocent as a Dove, that will be of Chriſts ſchool. Pride is a let of Chriſts ſchool: for as the wiſeman ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble and meek. And according to the ſame doth Chriſt in the Goſpel ſay, Oh Father, I confeſſe unto thee, that is, I laud and magnifie thee, for that thou haſt hidden theſe things from the wiſe, and haſt opened them unto the little ones. Whereupon ſaith Saint Auguſtine, that the gifts of learning and knowledge of Sciences are no let to Chriſts ſchool, but a furtherance thereunto, if they be well applied and uſed as they ought to be: but he that is proud, and feedeth himſelf with his own conceit and opinion of himſelf, and abuſeth the gifts of God, applying his learning and knowledge to the ſatisfying and following of his own fantaſie, is no right Diſciple of Chriſt, but falleth into errour. Dicentes ſe ſapientes eſſe, ſtulti facti ſunt: When they ſaid and affirmed themſelves to be wiſe, they were made fools.

Learning wit out humility never hindereth Chriſts ſcho

Humility the Porter of Chriſts ſchool.

The Philoſophers had every one a ſect of his own, and had many gay ſentences for the commendation of their opinions, and every man thought his own opinion to be beſt: but becauſe they applied all to their own pride and glory, and not to the honour of God, nor humbled themſelves as they ought to have done, but followed their own fantaſie, they erred, and fell out of the way, and were not of Chriſts School: and all that have gone out of Chriſts School, pride hath brought them out of it; and ſuch as have not entred, have kept themſelves out of it with pride likewiſe: therefore all ſuch as will be Schollers of Chriſts School and diſcipline, muſt be humble and meek; otherwiſe, Dicentes ſe ſapientes eſſe, ſtulti facti ſunt.

Hee that cannot learn this leſſon of Peter, and humbly confeſſe with Peter, that Chriſt is the Sonne of the living God, is no Scholler of Chriſts School, be hee otherwiſe never ſo well learned, never ſo well ſeen in other ſciences. But now concerning the anſwer of Peter, Matthew here in this place ſaith he anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus filius Dei vivi. Saint Luke ſaith he anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus Dei. And Saint Mark ſaith he anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus. But in all that is no variety: for to ſay Chriſtus filius Dei vivi, and to ſay Chriſtus Dei, and to ſay Chriſtus, is in effect all one, and no diverſity in it, for Chriſtus alone is the whole, and he that confeſſeth thorowly Chriſt, is thorowly a Chriſtian man, and doth therein confeſſe him to be the Lord and Saviour of the world. But now we muſt conſider what Chriſt is. Chriſt was ſent to be our Meſſias, our Saviour: he was ſent to be our Biſhop and alſo our ſacrifice: he was ſent from the Trinity to be our Mediator between God and us, and to reconcile us to the favour of God the Father, he was the Biſhop that offered for our ſins, and the ſacrifice that was offered: and as he is our Biſhop, ſo is he our mean to pacifie God for us, for that was the office of a Biſhop, to ſacrifice for the ſins of the people, and to make interceſſion for the people; and as he was our ſacrifice, ſo was he our reconcilitation to God again.

The office of Chriſt declared.

But we muſt confeſſe and beleeve him thorowly I ſay: for as he was our Biſhop then, ſo is it he that ſtill keepeth us in favour with God, and like as his ſacrifice then made was ſufficient as to deliver us from our ſinnes, and to bring us in favour with God, ſo to continue us in the ſame favour of God, he ordained a perpetuall remembrance of himſelf, he ordained himſelf for a memory of himſelf at his laſt Supper, when he inſtituted the Sacrament of the Altar, not for another redemption, as though the world needed a new redemption from ſinne, but that we might thorowly remember his moſt holy paſſion, he inſtituted the Sacrament by his moſt holy Word, ſaying: This is my Body, which word is ſufficient to prove the ſacrament, and maketh ſufficiently for the ſubſtance thereof. And this dayly ſacrifice he inſtituted to be continued among Chriſtian men, not for need of another redemption or ſatisfaction for the ſinnes of the world, for that was ſufficiently performed by the ſacrifice of his Body and Blood done upon the Croſſe; neither that he is now our Biſhop for need of any further ſacrifice to be made for ſinne, but to (a) continue us in the remembrance of his paſſion ſuffered for us, to make us ſtrong in beleeving the fruit of his paſſion, to make us diligent in thankſ-giving for the benefit of his paſſion, to eſtabliſh our faith, and to make it ſtrong in acknowledging the efficacy of his death and paſſion ſuffered for us. And this is the true underſtanding of the Maſſe, not for another redemption, but that wee may be ſtrong in beleeving the benefits of Chriſts death and blood-ſhedding for us upon the Croſſe. And this it is that we muſt beleeve of Chriſt, and beleeve it thorowly: and therefore by your patience, as Peter made his confeſſion, ſo will I make confeſſion, wherein by your Majeſties leave and ſufferance, I will plainly declare what I think of the ſtate of the Church of England at this day, how I like it, and what I think of it.

To beleeve Chriſt thorowly.

Note here Wincheſter: The ſacrament was ordained to keep us in the perpetuall favour of God.

Wincheſters daily ſacrifice.

(a) Note here Wincheſter contrary to himſelf: for before he ſaid the ſacrament was ordained to keep us in the favour of God, and now he ſaith it is to keep us in remembrance of his paſſion.

What Wincheſter thinketh of the Church of England.

Where I ſaid of the Maſſe, that it was a ſacrifice ordained to make us the more ſtrong in the faith and remembrance of Chriſts paſſion, and for commending unto God the ſouls of ſuch as be dead in Chriſt (for theſe two things are the ſpeciall cauſes why the Maſſe was inſtituted) the Parliament very well ordained Maſſe to be kept; and becauſe we ſhould be the more ſtrong in the faith and devotion towards God, it was well done of the Parliament, for moving the people more and more to devotion, to ordain that the Sacrament ſhould be received in both kindes. Therefore I ſay that the Act of Parliament for receiving of the ſacrament of the Altar in both kindes, was well made.

What Wincheſter thinketh of the Maſſe.

Wincheſter alloweth the ſacrament in both kindes.

I ſay alſo, that the Proclamation which was made, That no man ſhould unreverently ſpeak of the Sacrament, or otherwiſe ſpeak of it than Scripture teacheth them, was well made. For this Proclamation ſtoppeth the mouthes of all ſuch as will unreverently ſpeak of the ſacrament: for in Scripture there is nothing to be found that maketh any thing againſt the ſacrament, but all maketh with it. Wherefore if they were the children of obedience, they would not uſe any unreverent talk againſt the ſacrament, nor blaſpheme the holy ſacrament. For no word of the Scripture maketh any thing againſt it.

But here it may be ſaid unto me, Why ſir, is this your opinion? It is good you ſpeak plainly in this matter, and halt nothing, but declare your minde plainly, without any colouring or covert ſpeaking. The Act for the diſſolving and ſuppreſſing of the Chaunteries ſeemeth to make againſt the Maſſe, how like you that Act? What ſay you of it? or what would you ſay of it, if you were alone? I will ſpeak what I think of it, I will uſe no colourable or covert words, I will not uſe a deviſed ſpeech for a time, and afterward (b) go from it again. If Chaunteries were abuſed by applying the Maſſe for the ſatisfaction of ſinne, or to bring men to heaven, or to take away ſinne, or to make men of wicked juſt, I like the Act well, and they might well be diſſolved, for the Maſſe was not inſtituted for any ſuch purpoſe: yet neverthеleſſe for them that were in them (I ſpeak now, as in the cauſe of the poor) it were well done that they were provided of livings. The Act doth graciouſly provide for them during their lives, and I doubt not but that your Majeſty, and the Lords of your moſt honorable Councell have willed and taken order, that they ſhould be well looked unto, but yet how they ſhall be uſed at the hands of under officers, God knoweth; full hardly, I fear. But as for the Chaunteries themſelves, if there were any ſuch (c) abuſe in them concerning the Maſſe, it is no matter if they be taken away.

The opinion of Wincheſter of Chaunterey Maſſes.

(b) Whether ye did [illegible] not, let D. Maries time judge. Note Wincheſter doth not allow Maſſe for ſatisfaction to bring men to heaven, to take away ſin, or to make men juſt, &c.

King Henry the Eigth, a noble and wiſe Prince, not without great pain maintained the Maſſe, and yet in his doctrine it was confeſſed that Maſſes of Scala Cœli were not to be uſed, ne allowed, becauſe they did pervert the right uſe and inſtitution of the Maſſe. For when men adde unto the Maſſe an opinion of ſatisfaction, or of a new redemption, then do they put it to another uſe than it was ordained for. I that allow Maſſe ſo well, and I that allow praying for the dead (as indeed the dead are of Chriſtian charity to be prayed for) yet can agree with the Realm in that matter of putting down Chaunteries.

(c) As there was indeed Maſſes of Scala Cœli. Wincheſter craftily ſpeaketh againſt the abuſe of the Maſſe not againſt the Maſſe.

Wincheſter againſt chaunteries.

But yet ye would ſay unto me, There be fewer Maſſes by putting away the Chaunteries. So were there when Abbeyes were diſſolved: ſo be there when ye unite many Churches in one. But this is no injury nor prejudice to the Maſſe; it conſiſteth not in the number nor in the multitude, but in the thing it ſelf: ſo that the decay of the Maſſe by taking away the Chaunteries, is anſwered by the Abbeyes. But yet I would have it conſidered for the perſons that are in them. I ſpeak of the poor mens livings.

Wincheſter alloweth the Proclamation ſet forth for receiving in both kindes.

I have now declared what I think of the Act of Parliament made for the receiving of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Savour Ieſus Chriſt in both kindes. Ye have my minde and opinion concerning a Proclamation that came forth for the ſame Act, and I have ſhewed my minde therein even plainly as I think, and I have ever been agreeable to this point, I have oftentimes reaſoned in it, I have ſpoken and alſo written in it, both beyond the Seas, and on this ſide the Seas; my books be abroad, which I cannot unwrite again. I was ever of this opinion, that it might be received in both kindes, and it was a conſtitution Provinciall, ſcarce two hundred yeers agone, made by Peckam, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that it ſhould be received in both kindes, or at leaſtwiſe in Eccleſiis majoribus, that is, in the greater Churches, for in the ſmaller Churches it was not thought to be ſo expedient. Thus have I ever thought of this matter, I have never been of other minde, nor have I changed my conſcience, but I have obeyed and followed the order of the Realm, and I pray you to obey orders as I have obeyed, that we may all be the children of obedience.

It was a conſtitution provinciall of Peckam to receive in both kindes, in Eccleſiis majoribus: in ſmaller Churches it was thought not ſo expedient.

Matth. 16.

Now I will return to the Text. When Simon had anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus, filius Dei vivi, Thou art Chriſt, the Sonne of the living God: Then Chriſt ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon Barjona, for fleſh and blood have not opened that unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven; and I ſay unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Bleſſed art thou (ſaith he) for fleſh and blood have not opened that unto thee. For otherwiſe in Iohn, Andrew told of Chriſt, and ſaid, I have found the Meſſias, which is Chriſt. But that is not enough. He that ſhall confeſſe Chriſt, muſt have an inward teaching, and muſt be ſpiritually taught by the Father of Heaven, for Andrews confeſſion was nothing but a carnall confeſſion, and ſuch a one as any other might have made by naturall reaſon: but the confeſſion of Peter was above reaſon of man: for Chriſt was there a very man, and Peters eyes told him that he was a man, and nothing elſe; but he was inwardly taught by the Father of Heaven, and had a ſecret knowledge given him from Heaven, not by fleſh and blood, that is to ſay, by mans reaſon, but inwardly by the Father of Heaven: and ſeeing this was above reaſon, it is a marvellous thing that reaſon ſhould be uſed to impugne faith, which is not within the precinct of carnall men, and ſuch as uſe groſſe reaſon.

Iohn 1.

Outward confeſſing without inward teaching is not enough.

Petrus, what it ſignifieth.

Note what Wincheſter here ſaith: That upon the confeſſion of Peter the Church is builded.

But Peter had another reaſon inwardly taught him, and becauſe he could his leſſon, Chriſt gave him a new name: for Petra is a ſtone, a new name of a Chriſtian man, for upon this confeſſion of thy faith, here I will build my Church, that is, I will ſtabliſh all thoſe which I intend to gather unto thee; Et Dæmones non prævalebunt adverſus eam, that is, and the devills ſhall not prevail againſt it: for he that with a good heart, and ſure faith confeſſeth this, he is ſure from all evill: this world nor Sathan can do him no harm.

S. Gardiner againſt the popes ſupremacy.

Peter called Sathan.

Peters name no foundation for ſupremacy.

How Peter might be called the head of the church as is the head of a river.

But now for a farther declaration, it is a marvellous thing, that upon theſe words the Biſhop of Rome ſhould found his ſupremacy: for whether it be ſuper Petram, or Petrum, all is one matter, it maketh nothing at all for the purpoſe to make a foundation of any ſuch ſupremacy. For otherwiſe when Peter ſpake carnally to Chriſt (as in the ſame Chapter a little following) Sathan was his name, where Chriſt ſaid, Go after me Sathan: ſo that the name of Peter is no foundation for the ſupremacy, but as it is ſaid in Scripture, Fundati eſtis ſuper fundamentum Apoſtolorum & Prophetarum, that is, by participation (for godly participation giveth names of things) he might be called the head of the Church, as the head of the river is called the head, becauſe he was the firſt that made this confeſſion of Chriſt, which is not an argument for dignity, but for the quality that was in the man. For the firſt man is not evermore the beſt. The Head-man of a Queſt is not alwayes the beſt man in the Queſt, but is choſen to be the Head-man for ſome other quality that is in him. Vertue may allure men, ſo that the inferiour perſon in dignity may be the better in place, as the King ſometime chooſeth a mean man to be of his Counſell, of whom he hath a good opinion, yet is the King the King ſtill. And in ſome caſe the King of England might ſend to Rome, and if the Biſhop of Rome were a man of ſuch wiſedome, vertue, and learning, that he were able in matters of controverſie concerning Religion, to ſet a unity in the Church of England, the King might well enough ſend to him for his counſell and help, and yet ſhould not in ſo doing give the Biſhop of Rome any ſuperiority over the King. For if a King be ſick, he will have the beſt Phyſitian; if he have war, he will have the beſt Captain, and yet are not theſe the ſuperiours, but the inferiors.

A headman is not alwayes of dignity, but rather of quality.

Tu es Petrus maketh nothing for the B. of Rome.

A Schoolmaſter is a ſubject, a Phyſitian is a ſubject, a Captain is a ſubject, Counſellors are ſubjects, yet do theſe order and direct the King. Wherefore leaving the Biſhop of Rome, this I ſay to declare of what opinion I am of. I do not now ſpeak what I could ſay. I have ſpoken beyond the ſeas, I have written, my books be abroad. But this is not the place here, I ſay that this place maketh nothing for the Biſhop of Rome, but for Chriſt onely, for none can put Aliud fundamentum niſi id quod poſitum eſt, qui eſt Chriſtus Ieſus.

Wincheſter againſt the pope, againſt abbeyes and images.

Maſter of Ceremonies.

Wincheſters opinion of Ceremonies.

But now to go forth declaring my minde, in my time have come many alterations. Firſt a great alteration it was to renounce the Biſh. of Romes authority, and I was one that ſtood in it. A great alteration it was that Abbeyes were diſſolved. A great alteration it was that Images were pulled down: and to all theſe I condeſcended, and yet have I been counted a maintainer of ſuperſtition, and have been called a Maſter of Ceremonies and of outward things, and I have bin noted to take that religion which conſiſteth in outward things, as though he were a right Chriſtian that fulfilled the outward ceremonies, whereof I promiſed to declare my conſcience, and ſo will I, and how I have eſteemed ceremonies, and that I have never been of other opinion than I am concerning ceremonies, and mine opinion I have gathered of Auguſtine, and Ierome, ancient fathers and Doctors of the Church.

Ceremonies ſerve to move men to ſerve God, and as long as they be uſed for that purpoſe, they may be well uſed in the Church: but when man maketh himſelf ſervant to them,

Ceremonies, how, and when they are abuſed.

Ceremonies ſervants to men, not men to Ceremonies.

them, and not them to ſerve him, then be our ceremonies brought to an abuſe. If by over much familiarity of them men abuſe them, they do evill. For we muſt not ſerve creatures, but Deo. We had Monkery, Nunnery, Friery, of a wonderous number, much variety of garments, variety of devices in dwelling, many ſundry orders and faſhions in moving of the body. Theſe things were firſt ordained to admoniſh them of their duty to God, to labour for the neceſſity of the poor, and to ſpare from their own bellies to the poor; and therefore was their fare ordained and prepared. And becauſe they abuſed theſe things, and ſet them in an higher place than they ought to do, not taking monition thereby the better to ſerve God, but eſteeming perfection to conſiſt in them, they were diſſolved, their houſes and garments were taken away.

Vow of chaſtity.

But one thing King Henry would not take away, that was the vow of chaſtity. The vow of obedience he converted to himſelf; the vow of chaſtity he willeth ſtill to remain with them.

Wincheſter never againſt the taking down of Images, being abuſed with Idolatry.

We had many Images whereto Pilgrimages were done, and many Tombes that men uſed to viſite, by reaſon whereof they fell in a fancy of idolatry and ſuperſtition, above the things that they might have been taken for; and becauſe they had not the uſe that they were ordained for, they were left. When men put the Images in a higher place than they ſerved for, then were they taken clean away: as give a childe a gay book to learn upon, and then if he gaze upon the gorgeouſneſſe of his book, and learn not his leſſon, according to the intent that that book was given for, the book is taken away from him again: So the Images, when men deviſed and fell to have them in higher place and eſtimation than they were firſt ſet up in the Church for, then they might be taken away: and I was never of other minde, nor ever had other opinion of them. Divers things there be in the Church which be in the liberty of the Ruler to order as he ſeeth cauſe; and he that is Ruler, may either let them ſtand, or elſe may cauſe them to be taken away.

Two manner of reformations: one where the things cannot be taken away, but the abuſe: the other where both the things and the abuſe may be taken away.

To take away all Images lyeth in the liberty of the rulers.

If abuſing of images be idolatry becauſe ſufficient to take away Images, why did Wincheſter hold with them before? if it be not cauſe ſufficient, why doth he now grant to the taking of them away, being no more wantonly abuſed, than they were before time?

There be two manner of reformations. We have had of both ſorts. There be things in the Church, the which if they be abuſed, may not be taken away. As for Baptiſm, if it be abuſed, there may not another thing be put in the place of it, but the thing muſt be reformed, and brought to the right uſe again. Alſo preaching, if it be abuſed, may not be taken away, but muſt be reformed, and brought to the right uſe: but there be other things uſed in the Church, in which the Rulers have liberty either to reform them or to take them away. And becauſe it was an eaſier way to take them away, than to bring them to the right uſe that they were ordained for, they were all clean taken away, and ſo they might be. Yea ſir, will ye ſay, but ye have maintained and defended them, and have preached againſt ſuch perſons as deſpiſed them. It is truth I have preached againſt the deſpiſers of them, and have ſaid, that Images might be ſuffered and uſed in the Church as Lay-mens books, yet I never otherwiſe defended them, but to be uſed for ſuch purpoſe as they were firſt ſet up in the Church for, but now that men be waxed wanton, they are clean taken away, wherein our religion is no more touched, than when books were taken away for abuſing of them.

There was an order taken for books not to be uſed, wherein ſome might have ſaid, the books are good, and I know how to uſe them, I may therefore uſe them well enough. I will therefore uſe them though they be forbidden: But if thou have any charity, thou oughteſt to be contented rather to have them clean taken away, than to declare thy ſelf to have another opinion then thou oughteſt to have.

As touching Ceremonies, I eſteem them all as Paul eſteemeth them, things indifferent, where he ſaith, Regnum Dei non eſca & potus. So of Ceremonies. Nevertheleſſe we have time, place, and number, as a certain number of Pſalms to be ſaid at times, which may be done without ſuperſtition; but theſe things muſt ſerve us, and not we ſerve them. Yet if an order be ſet in them by ſuch as have power, we muſt follow it, and we muſt obey the rulers that appoint ſuch time, place, and number to be kept. Ye may not ſay, if the time will ſerve me, then I will come an hour after. No ſir, ye muſt keep this time, and this hour, becauſe it is ſo appointed by the Rulers, not for the things, but for the order that is ſet. I have been ever of this opinion.

Taking away of Palms and Candles.

We had Palms and Candles taken away, which things may indifferently have either of the two reformations above ſaid. When they were in place, they ſhould have put men in remembrance of their duty and devotion towards God, but becauſe they were abuſed, they were and might be taken away. But the religion of Chriſt is not in thoſe exerciſes, and therefore in taking away of them the religion of Chriſt is nothing touched nor hindered. But men muſt in ſuch things be conformable, not for the Ceremony, but for obedience ſake. Saint Paul ſaith, that we ſhould rebuke every brother that walketh inordinately. I have told you mine opinion, and my conſcience telleth me that I have ſpoken plainly, that ye may know what I am, and that ye may not be deceived in me, nor be ſlandered in me, nor make any further ſearch to know my heart.

B. Gardiner ſpeaketh according to his unconſtant conſcience.

Wincheſter liketh well the Communion.

B. Gardiner liketh well King Edwards proceedings.

I like well the Communion, becauſe it provoketh men more and more to devotion. I like well the Proclamation, becauſe it ſtoppeth the mouthes of all ſuch as unreverently ſpeak or rail againſt the Sacrament. I like well the reſt of the Kings Majeſties proceedings concerning the ſacrament. I have now told you what I like. But ſhall I ſpeak nothing of that I miſlike? ye will then ſay I ſpeak not plainly. I will therefore ſhew you my conſcience plainly.

B. Gardiner miſliketh the Preachers in K. Edwards time, and why?

B. Gardiner compareth preachers to Poſts, carrying truth in their Letters, and lies in their mouthes.

I miſlike thoſe Preachers which preach by the Kings licence, and thoſe Readers which by the Kings permiſſion and ſufferance do reade open Lectures, do openly and blaſphemouſly talk againſt the Maſſe, and againſt the Sacrament. And to whom may I liken ſuch readers and Preachers? I may liken them unto Poſtes, for the Proverb ſaith, that Poſtes do bear truth in their letters, and lies in their mouthes: and ſo do they, and to ſpeak ſo againſt the Sacrament, it is the moſt marvellous matter that ever I ſaw or heard of. I would wiſh therefore that there were a ſtay and an order in this behalf, and that there might be but one order or rule; for as the Poet ſaith (I may uſe the Verſe of a Poet well enough, for ſo doth Paul of the great Poet) οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη, εἷς κοίρανος ἔστω. And let no man of his own head begin matters, nor go before the King. They call it going before the King, and ſuch make themſelves Kings. Well, what miſliketh me elſe?

B. Gardiner miſliketh the breaking of a vow of chaſtity.

It miſliketh me that Prieſts, and men that vowed chaſtity, ſhould openly marry, and avow it openly: which is a thing that ſince the beginning of the Church hath not been ſeen at any time, that men that have been admitted to any Eccleſiaſticall adminiſtration ſhould marry. We reade of married Prieſts, that is to ſay, of married men choſen to be Prieſts and Miniſters in the Church. And in Epiphanius we reade, that ſome ſuch for neceſſity were winked at. But that men being Prieſts already ſhould marry, was never yet ſeen in Chriſts Church from the beginning of the Apoſtles time. I have written in it, and ſtudied for it; and the very ſame places that are therein alledged to maintain the maraiage of Prieſts being diligently read, ſhall plainly confound them that maintain your Prieſts to marry, or at the fartheſt within two lines after.

B. Gardiner againſt mariage of Prieſts.

Thus have I ſhewed my opinion in order, proceeding from the inferiours, and in order proceeding from the higher powers. And thus I have (as I truſt) plainly declared my ſelf, without any covering or counterfeiting. And I beſeech your moſt excellent Majeſty to eſteem and take me as I am, and not to be ſlandered in me; for I have told you the plain truth as it is, and I have opened my conſcience unto you. I have not played the Poſte with you, to carry truth in my letters, and lyes in my mouth: for I would not for all the world make a lye in this place; but I have diſcloſed the plain truth as it lieth in my minde. And thus I commit your moſt excellent Majeſty and all your moſt honorable Counſellors, with the reſt of the devout audience here preſent, unto God. To whom be all honour, laud, and glory, world without end.

B. Gardiner agreeing to reformation of religion, how far, and wherein.

Thus having compriſed the ſumme and chief purpoſe of his Sermon, with other ſuch matter above ſtoried, wherein may appear the double faced doings of this Biſhop in matters of religion: now for the more fortification of that which hath been ſaid, if any ſhall deny this foreſaid Sermon, or any part thereof to be true, to confirm therefore the ſame, we will here adjoyn certain brief notes and ſpecialities in manner of a ſummary table, collected as well out of the teſtimonies and depoſitions of his own friends and ſervants, and other which were ſworn truely to declare their knowlege in this behalf, as alſo out of his own writings and works agreeing with the ſame. In all which foreſaid allegations it may remain notorious and famous to all men, how in what points, and how far the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter agreed with the reformation of religion received, not onely in King Henries, but alſo in King Edwards dayes.

And becauſe it would be long, and a double labour to repeat all the words and teſtimoniall ſayings of every witneſſe particularly, the ſame being expreſſed ſufficiently in our firſt impreſſion before; it ſhall therefore ſuffice by quotations briefly to aſſigne the place to the Reader, where he may finde all thoſe points of reformation, whereunto the ſaid Biſhop Gardiner fully agreed with the Doctrine now received, and firſt in withſtanding the Popes ſupremacy, as is hereunder noted.

Winch. ſworn and forſworn.

Now (gentle Reader) lay theſe writings, preachings, and doings of this Biſhop in the dayes of King Henry and King Edward, with his doings in Queen Maries time, and thou ſhalt ſee how variable he was, how inconſtant and contrary to himſelf, how perjured and falſe, and farre differing from that which he was reported to be in a certain Engliſh book ſet out in Queen Maries time, which ſaith that there were three onely in England, whoſe conſcience had been never diſtained in religion: of whom he falſly ſaith, the foreſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter was one.

The book of Jo. Elder, ſent into Scotland.

Although Biſhop Gardiner in granting to theſe points of religion (as ye have heord) and other ſome again denying, could not therefore deſerve the name and fame of a perfect Chriſtian: yet notwithſtanding, if he had continued in his judgment ſtill, and been conſtant in himſelf, he might have won more commendation both with God & man. But as ſoon as the time began to alter, he likewiſe altering with the time, was ſo farre changed from that he ſeemed, that neither he agreed with other Papiſts, nor yet with himſelf, as Doctor Ridley in certain Treatiſes hath noted well of him: wherein as in a glaſſe may be ſeen the manifeſt contrariety and repugnance in him, not only from the truth of Gods bleſſed Word, but alſo how the ſaid Biſhop ſtanding ſo much in ſingularity by himſelf, neither agreeth with other his fellow writers of his own faction, nor yet fully accordeth with himſelf in certain caſes of the Sacrament, as the foreſaid Doctor Ridley in examining his words and works hath well ſet out in this table hereunder enſuing.

Wincheſter neither agreeth with the Proteſtants in the Goſpel, neither in Popery with the Papiſts, neither with himſelf.

Certain matters wherein St. Gardiner, Biſhop of Wint. varieth from other of the Papiſts, touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Other Catholikes ſay, that the body of Chriſt is made of bread. Thomas vult ex pane, non de pane, parte tertia, q.75, art.4. Wincheſt. ſaith that the body of Chriſt is not made of the matter of bread, nor ever was ſo taught, but is made preſent of bread, page 89.lin 8.p.228.l.44.

11 Winch. ſaith, that an unrepentant ſinner receiving the Sacrament, hath not Chriſts body nor ſpirit within him, p.256 l.18,25,26. Smith ſaith, that he hath Chriſts body and ſpirit within him, fol.136.

But he anſwereth ſo confuſedly, that the Reader cannot underſtand him, be he never ſo attentive. Smith ſaith; Thus I ſay, that the conſecrated wine turneth not into vinegar, nor the conſecrated bread mouldeth, nor ingendereth worms, nor is burned, nor receiveth into it any poyſon, as long as Chriſts body and blood are under the forms of them, which do abide there ſo long as the naturall qualities and properties of bread and wine tarry there in their naturall diſpoſition and condition, and the bread and wine might be naturally there, if they had not been changed into Chriſts body and blood, and alſo as long as the hoſte and conſecrated wine are apt to be received of man, and no longer, but go and depart thence by Gods power as it pleaſeth him; and then a new ſubſtance is made of God, which turneth into vinegar, ingendereth Worms, mouldeth, is burned, feedeth Rats and Mice, receiveth poyſon, &c. fol. 64. and fol.105.

16 Wincheſter ſaith, every yea containeth a nay in it naturally: So as whoſoever ſaith, this is bread, ſaith it is no wine. For in the rule of common reaſon, the grant of one ſubſtance is the deniall of another. And therefore reaſon hath theſe concluſions thorowly; whatſoever is bread, is no wine; whatſoever is wine, is no milk, and ſo forth So Chriſt ſaying; This is my body, ſaith it is no bread, p.291.lin.22. and page.300. lin. 17. Smith ſaith, that a boy which hath onely learned Sophiſtry, will not diſpute ſo fondly, fol.77.

18 Winch. ſaith, that the onely immolation of Chriſt in himſelf upon the altar of the Croſſe, is the very ſatisfactory ſacrifice for the reconciliation of mankinde unto the favour of God, p.437. l.31. Smith ſaith, what is it to offer Chriſts body and blood at Maſſe, to purchaſe thereby everlaſting life, if the Maſſe be not a ſacrifice to pacifie Gods wrath from ſin, and to obtain his mercy? fol.24, 148. 164. where he ſaith further, Prieſts do offer for our ſalvation, to get heaven, and to avoid hell.

To theſe notes and places of Doctor Ridley, let us alſo adjoyn other twelve places or articles of the like affinity, taken out of his book called the examination of the proud Hunter, noted in the later end of Doctor Turners ſecond courſe. By theſe Articles it may appear how this Biſhop ſwerveth no leſſe from the ſound truth of Chriſts Goſpel, than he did in the other, both from himſelf, and alſo from other his fellow-brethren of his own Catholike mother Church of Rome. The Articles in ſumme are theſe;

The B. of Wincheſter maker of ceremonies.

12 He that would take away the Popes ceremonies out of the Church, ſhould drive away all godlineſſe and ſeemlineſſe, all religious and devout behaviour out of the Church, fol.94.

Here haſt thou (good Reader) this ſtout Prelate of Wincheſter, with all his proſperities, doings, and qualities, as in a certain Anatomy proportioned out unto thee, whereby thou maiſt boldly judge (and nothing erre in thy judgement) what is to be eſteemed of him by his fruits, as who neither was true Proteſtant, nor right Papiſt; neither conſtant in his errour, nor yet ſtedfaſt in the truth; neither friend to the Pope, and yet a perfect enemy to Chriſt: falſe in King Henries time, a diſſembler in King Edwards time, double perjured, and a murtherer in Queen Maries time, mutable and inconſtant in all times. And finally, where in his letters to the Lord Protector and others, uſually he vaunteth ſo much of his late Soveraigne Lord King Henry the Eighth, and of the great reputation that he was in with him, reade, I beſeech thee, and behold in the depoſitions of the Lord Paget, in the old book, pag. 806. fol. 1. and alſo in the depoſitions of the Earl of Bedford, page 824. and there you ſhall ſee the King before his death, both excepting him out of his Pardons, and quite ſtriking him out of his laſt will and teſtament, ſo deteſted and abhorred him, as he did no Engliſh man more. And whereas the Lord Paget being ſent in meſſage from the King to the Biſhop, by other words than the Kings minde and will was, of his own dexterity gave to him good and gracious words, which indeed the King neither knew, nor yet were ſent by him: the Biſhop perſwading himſelf otherwiſe of the Kings favour towards him, than it was indeed, was therein far deceived, and brought into a fools paradiſe; whereof reade both in the old book before, and alſo in this preſent volume.

The Biſhop of Winch. falſly pretendeth the favour of King Henry towards him.

Wincheſter unſtable in religion.

To deſcribe and paint out the unſtable mutability of this Biſhop aforeſaid, albeit here need no more to be added beſides that which is already declared: yet notwithſtanding, ſeeing the matter is not long, it ſhall not be out of the way to annex withall unto the premiſſes, a piece of Drianders Letter, written to one Criſpine Phyſitian in Oxford, ſent from Antwerp, concerning the doings and behaviour of this Biſhop of Wincheſter, whoſe ſtory we have now in hand. The copy of which Drianders Letter, written to the ſaid Criſpine his friend, beginneth thus.

Reade in the firſt edition, pag. 802.

Doctiſſimo viro Edmundo Criſpino, amico integerrimo Oxoniæ.

ANte meam ex Leutetia profectionem, dedi literas ad te per Anglum illum communem amicum noſtrum, &c.

The Engliſh whereof, as much as to the preſent purpoſe pertaineth, here followeth tranſlated.

A letter of Driander to one Criſpine, concerning the doings of the Biſhop of Wincheſter at Lovane.

BEfore my departure from the City of Paris, I wrote unto you by our friend the Engliſhman, &c.

Now you ſhall be contented onely with the narration of your Biſhop of Wincheſter, who (as appertained to the Ambaſſadour of ſo noble a Prince) came to Lovane with a great bravery, and was there received at one Jeremies houſe, and moſt honourably entertained, where the faculty of Divines, for honours ſake, preſented him wine in the name of the whole Univerſity. But our famous Doctors, and learned Maſters, for that they would more deeply ſearch and underſtand the learning and excellency of the Prelate, peruſed and ſcanned a certain Oration, made by him, and now extant, intituled de vera Obedientia, in the which his Oration he did impugne the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, and preferred his Lords and Kings authority before the holy Apoſtolike See (as they term it) which being read and conſidered by them, they did not onely repent them for giving him ſuch honour, but alſo recanted that which they had done: and did not ſo much honour him afore, but now they were as earneſt and as ſpitefull againſt him. Richard Lathomus, Interpreter of tearms, with the favourers of that fraternity, and other Champions of the falling Church, diſputed with him concerning the Popes ſupremacy. This Biſhop ſtoutly defended his ſaid Oration. The Divines contrary ſtiffely maintained their opinion, and divers times openly with exclamations, called the ſaid Biſhop an excommunicate perſon, and a ſchiſmatike, to no little reproach and infamy of the Engliſh Nation. The Biſhop not long after minding to ſay Maſſe in Saint Peters Church, they did deny unto him, as to an excommunicate perſon, the Ornaments and Veſtiments meet for the ſame; wherewith he being highly offended, ſuddenly haſted his journey from thence. The Dean the next day after made an eloquent Oration, wherein he openly diſgraced and defamed him. You have heard now a true ſtory, for our Doctor was a beholder of the whole Tragedy, &c.

B. Gardiner defendeth his book de vera obedientia at Lovane. Wincheſter counted for excommunicate perſon, and a ſchiſmatick at Lovane.

ſtory, to leave him to his Judge, and to let him go, we ſhall returne and proceede (by the grace and leave of the Lord) as the courſe of theſe dolefull daies ſhall lead us, to proſecute the reſidue of Chriſts martyrs, as now in order followeth.

The burning of Iohn Webbe Gentleman, George Roper, and Gregory Parke at Canturbury, as followeth.

November 30 M. Webbe, George Roper, Gregory Park, Martyrs.

NExt after the death and conſtant martyrdome of the two moſt worthy champions and ſtanderd-bearers of Chriſts army, Doctour Nicholas Ridley, and Maſter Hugh Latimer, (of whom yee have heard at large) followed three other ſtout and bold ſouldiers, that is to ſay, John Webbe Gentleman, George Roper, and Gregory Parke.

The appearance of Maſter Webbe before the biſh. of Dover.

This John Webbe was brought before the Biſhop of Dover, and Nicholas Harpsfield, or ſome other deputed in their roome, long before the other two, videlicet, the 16 day of September, and there had propounded unto him ſuch ordinary Articles as (it ſeemeth were commonly miniſtred by Boner to thoſe of his juriſdiction: and being willed for that preſent to depart, and to deliberate with himſelfe upon the matter, againſt the next time of his appearance, he made anſwer that he would no otherwiſe ſay (by Gods grace) than he had already ſaid, which was this: As touching the Sacrament of Chriſts body, I doe beleeve (quoth he) it to be left unto his Church (with thankſgiving) in commemoration of his death and paſſion, untill his comming againe. So that it is left in remembrance of his body, and not by the words of conſecration to be made his body, really, ſubſtantially, and the ſame body that was borne of the Virgin Mary: I utterly deny that.

Anſwer of M. Webbe to the Biſhops articles.

After this (beſides ſundry other times) the third day of October, the ſaid John Webbe, and George Roper, and Gregory Parke, were brought all three together before the ſaid Judges: who there and then agreeing,* and ſtedfaſtly allowing the former anſwer made before by Maſter Webbe, were by the bloody Prelates adjudged Hereticks, and therefore about the end of the ſame moneth of October, or elſe as I otherwiſe finde, in the latter end of November, they together were taken and brought out of priſon to the place of martyrdome. Who by the way going towards the ſtake, ſaid certaine Pſalmes mournfully.

George Roper leapeth at the ſtake.

George Roper ſtood in the fire like a Roode.

Roper was a yonger man of a freſh colour, courage, and complexion, the other two were ſomewhat more elderly, all going in white linnen, with their gownes upon. Roper, at his comming to the ſtake putting off his gowne, fet a great leape. So ſoone as the flame was about him, the ſaid Roper put out both his armes from his body like a Rood, and ſo ſtood ſtedfaſt, continuing in that manner, not plucking his armes in, till the fire had conſumed them, and burnt them off.

The martyrdome of Web, Roper, & Park, at Canterbury.

And thus theſe foreſaid Martyrs of Chriſt, being brought (as I ſaid) to the ſtake, and there compaſſed about with a chaine, were burnt and conſumed all three together in one fire at Canterbury, abiding moſt patiently their torments, and counting themſelves happy and bleſſed of the Lord, that they were made worthy to ſuffer for Chriſts Goſpell ſake.

William Wiſeman.

the Goſpell and Word of God. How, and whereupon he deceaſed, it is not fully certaine. Some thought that either through famine, or ill handling of ſome murthering Papiſts, he was made away. By reaſon whereof the Crowner, named Iohn Gibbes, Gentleman, with an Inqueſt of twelue men, were faine to ſit upon him, who although to the outward appearance were ſaid to find nothing in him elſe but onely GODS viſitation, yet what other priuie cauſes there might be of his death, the Lord knoweth, I haue not to ſay.

Wil. Wiſeman dead in Loll. Tower, and caſt into the fields.

After the ſaid William was departed (as is ſaid) in the Tower, the holy Catholique Church men caſt him out into the fields, commanding that no man ſhould bury him, according as their deuout manner is to doe with all ſuch as die in like ſort, whom they account as prophane, and worthy of no buriall, but to be caſt to Dogges and Birds, ἑλώρια κύνεσσι, as the Pope ſaith. And yet all this their mercileſſe commandement notwithſtanding, ſome good Tobies there were, which buried him in the euening, as commonly they did all the reſt, throwne out in like ſort, whom they were wont priuily by night to couer, and many times the Archers in the Fields ſtanding by, and ſinging together Pſalmes at their buriall.

Iames Gore.

The Hiſtory of M. I. Philpot, martyr.

John Philpot a Knights ſon, ſtudent of law in New Colledge in Oxford.

NExt followeth the conſtant martyrdome of Maſter Iohn Philpot, of whom partly yee heard before in the beginning of Queene Maries time, in proſecuting the diſputation of the Conuocation houſe. He was of a worſhipfull houſe, a Knights ſonne, borne in Hampſhire, brought up in the new Colledge in Oxford, where he ſtudied the Ciuill law the ſpace of 6 or 7 yeeres, beſides the ſtudy of other liberall arts, eſpecially of the tongues, wherein very forwardly hee profited, namely, in the knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, &c. In wit he was pregnant and happy, of a ſingular courage, in ſpirit feruent, in religion zealous, and alſo well practiſed and exerciſed in the ſame (which is no ſmall matter in a true Diuine) of nature and condition plaine and apert, farre from all flattery, farther from all hypocriſie and deceitfull diſſimulation. What his learning was, his owne examinations penned of his owne hand can declare.

John Philpot went over to Italy.

J. Philpot in danger by an Italian Frier.

The returne of John Philpot into England.

From Oxford, deſirous to ſee other Countries as occaſion ſerued thereunto, hee went ouer into Italy, and places thereabouts, where hee comming upon a time from Venice to Padua, was in danger through a certaine Franciſcan Frier, accompanying him in his journey, who comming to Padua, ſought to accuſe him of hereſie. At length returning into England his Countrey againe, as the time miniſtred more boldneſſe to him in the daies of King Edward, he had diuers conflicts with Gardiner the Biſhop in the City of Wincheſter, as appeareth by diuers of Wincheſters letters, and his examinations. Whereof read before.

Anno. 1555.

John Philpot Archdeacon of Wincheſter. This Doctour Poinet, Biſhop of Wincheſter, fled afterward into Germany, & there deceaſed, An. 155[illegible].

After that, hauing an aduouſon by the ſaid Biſhop, he was made there Archdeacon of Wincheſter, under Doctour Poinet, who then ſucceeded Gardiner in that Biſhopricke. Thus during the time of K. Edward, he continued to no ſmall profit of thoſe parts thereabout. When that bleſſed King was taken away, and Mary his ſiſter came in place, whoſe ſtudie was wholy bent to alter the ſtate of religion in the woefull Realme of England, firſt ſhe cauſed a Conuocation of the Prelats and learned men to be congregate to the accompliſhment of her deſire.

In the which Conuocation, Maſter Philpot being preſent according to his roome and degree, with a few other ſuſtained the cauſe of the Goſpel manfully againſt the aduerſary part (as is aboue recited) for the which cauſe notwithſtanding the liberty of the houſe promiſed before, hee was called to account before Biſhop Gardiner the Chancellor, then being his Ordinary, by whom he was firſt examined, although that examination came not yet to our hands. From thence againe he was remoued to Boner and other Commiſſioners, with whom he had diuers and ſundry conflicts, as in his examinations here following may appeare.

J. Philpot ſent from Gardiner to Boner.

The firſt examination of Maſter Iohn Philpot before the Queenes Commiſſioners, Maſter Cholmley, M. Roper, and D. Story, and one of the Scribes of the Arches, at Newgate Seſſions hall, Octob. 2. 1555.

The firſt examination of M. Philpot before the Commiſſioners.

Doct. Stories words to M. Philpot.

DOctour Story, before I was called into an inner Parlour where they ſate, came out into the Hall where I was, to view me among other that there were, and paſſing by me ſayd; Ha, M. Philpot, and in returning immediately againe, ſtared againſt me, beholding me, and ſaying that I was well fed indeed.

Phil. If I be fat, and in good liking (M. Doctor) it is no maruell, ſince I haue been ſtalled up in priſon this twelue moneths and a halfe, in a cloſe corner. I am come to know your pleaſure wherefore you haue ſent for me.

Story. We heare that thou art a ſuſpect perſon, and of hereticall opinions, and therefore wee haue ſent for thee.

John Philpot impriſoned for the diſputation in the Conuocation houſe.

Phil. I haue beene in priſon thus long, onely upon the occaſion of diſputation made in the Conuocation houſe, and upon ſuſpition of ſetting forth the report thereof.

Story. If thou wilt reuoke the ſame, and become an honeſt man, thou ſhalt be ſet at liberty, and doe right well; or elſe thou ſhalt be committed to the Biſhop of London. How ſayſt thou, wilt thou reuoke it or no?

Phil. I haue already anſwered in this behalfe to mine Ordinary.

Story. If thou anſwereſt thus when thou commeſt before us anon, thou ſhalt heare more of our minds, and with that hee went into the Parlour, and I within a little while after was called in.

The Scribe. Sir, what is your name?

Phil. My name is Iohn Philpot. And ſo he intituled my name.

Story. This man was Archdeacon of Wincheſter, of Doctor Poinets preſentment.

Philpot. I was Arch-deacon indeed, but none of his preſentment, but by vertue of a former aduouſon, given by my Lord Chancellour that now is.

Story. Ye may be ſure that my Lord Chancellor would not make any ſuch as he is Archdeacon.

Roper. Come hither to mee Maſter Philpot.

We

Wee heare ſay that you are out of the Catholique Church, and haue beene a diſturber of the ſame; out of the which whoſo is, he cannot be the childe of ſaluation. Wherefore, if you will come into the ſame, you ſhall be receiued, and finde fauour.

Phil. I am come before your worſhipfull Maſterſhips at your appointment, underſtanding that you are Magiſtrates authoriſed by the Queenes Maieſtie, to whom I owe and will doe my due obedience to the uttermoſt. Wherefore I deſire to know what cauſe I haue offended in, wherefore I am now called before you. And if I cannot be charged with any particular matter done contrary to the lawes of this Realme, I deſire your Maſterſhips that I may haue the benefit of a ſubiect, and be deliuered out of my long wrongfull impriſonment, where I haue lyen this twelue month and this halfe, without any calling to anſwer before now, and my liuing taken from mee without all law.

John Philpot lying in priſon a yeere and a halfe before he was called to his anſwer.

Roper. Though we haue no particular matter to charge you withall, yet wee may by our Commiſſion and by the Law driue you to anſwer to the ſuſpition of a ſlander going on you: and beſides this, we haue Statutes to charge you herein withall.

No particular matter againſt M. Philpot but onely ſuſpition.

Phil. If I haue offended any Statute, charge me therewithall, and if I haue incurred the penalty thereof, puniſh me accordingly. And becauſe you are Magiſtrates and Executors of the Queenes Maieſties lawes, by force whereof you do now ſit, I deſire that if I be found no notorious tranſgreſſor of any of them, I may not be burdened with more than I haue done.

Cholmley. If the Juſtice doe ſuſpect a felon, he may examine him upon ſuſpition thereof, and commit him to priſon though there be no fault done.

Story. I perceiue whereabout this man goeth. He is plaine in Cardmakers caſe, for he made the ſelfe ſame allegations. But they will not ſerue thee; for thou art an hereticke, and holdeſt againſt the bleſſed Maſſe: how ſaieſt thou to that?

Phil. I am no Hereticke.

Story. I will proue thee an Hereticke. Whoſoeuer hath holden againſt the bleſſed Maſſe, is an Hereticke: but thou haſt holden againſt the ſame, therefore thou art an Heretick.

The Maior is not univerſally true, for in the time of King Edward they that ſpake againſt the Maſſe as M. Philpot did, by thoſe lawes, was no Hereticke, but a perfect Chriſtian.

Phil That which I ſpake, and which you are able to charge me withall, was in the Conuocation, where by the Queenes Maieſties will and her whole Councell, liberty was giuen to euery man of the houſe to utter his conſcience, and to ſay his minde freely of ſuch queſtions in religion, as there were propounded by the Prolocutor, for the which now I thought not to be moleſted and impriſoned as I haue been, neither now be compelled of you to anſwer to the ſame.

Story. Thou ſhalt goe to the Lollards Tower, and be handled there like an Hereticke as thou art, and anſwer to the ſame that thou there didſt ſpeake, and be judged by the Biſhop of London.

Phil. I haue already beene conuented of this matter before my Lord Chancellour mine Ordinary, who this long time hath kept me in priſon: therefore if his Lordſhip will take my life away, as hee hath done my liberty and liuing, hee may; the which I think he cannot doe of his conſcience, and therefore hath let mee lie thus long in priſon: wherefore I am content to abide the end of him herein that is mine Ordinary, and doe refuſe the auditory of the Biſhop of London, becauſe hee is an uncompetent Judge for mee, and not mine Ordinary.

John Philpot appealeth to his Ordinary.

Story. But ſir, thou ſpakeſt words in the Conuocation houſe, which is of the biſhop of Londons Dioceſſe, and therefore thou ſhalt be carried to the Lollards Tower to be judged by him for the words thou ſpakeſt in his Dioceſſe againſt the bleſſed Maſſe.

M. Philpot, hauing publike leaue, ſpake in the Conuocation. Ergo, he muſt be committed to Lollards Tower by D. Stories Logicke.

Phil. Sir, you know by the Law, that I may haue Exceptionem fori: and it is againſt all equity, that I ſhould be twice vexed for one cauſe, and that by ſuch as by the law haue nothing to doe with me.

Roper. You cannot deny, but that you ſpake againſt the Maſſe in the Conuocation houſe.

Story. Doſt thou denie that which thou ſpakeſt there, or no?

Phil. I cannot deny that I haue ſpoken there, and if by the law you may put me to death therefore, I am here ready to ſuffer whatſoeuer I ſhall be adjudged unto.

The Scribe. This man is fed of vain-glory.

Cholm. Play the wiſe Gentleman and be conformable, and be not ſtubborne in your opinions, neither caſt your ſelfe away. I would be glad to do you good.

Philpot. I deſire you ſir with the reſt here, that I be not charged further at your hands, than the Law chargeth mee, for that I haue done, ſince there was no Law directly againſt that wherewith I am now charged. And you Maſter Doctour (of old acquaintance in Oxford) I truſt will ſhew me ſome friendſhip, and not extremity.

John Philpot charged further by the commiſſioners than the Law would beare.

Story. I tell thee, if thou wouldeſt be a good Catholique man, I would be thy friend, and ſpend my Gowne to doe thee good; but I will be no friend to an Hereticke, as thou art, but will ſpend both my Gowne and my Coate, but I will burne thee. How ſaieſt thou to the Sacrament of the Altar?

Now commeth in the butchers axe.

Phil. Sir, I am not come now to diſpute with your Maſterſhip, and the time now ſerueth not thereto, but to anſwere to that I may be lawfully charged withall.

Story. Well, ſince thou wilt not reuoke that thou haſt done, thou ſhalt be had into the Lollards Tower.

Phil. Sir, ſince you will needs ſhew me this extremity, and charge me with my conſcience, I doe deſire to ſee your Commiſſion, whether you haue this authority ſo to doe, and after the view thereof I ſhall (according to my dutie) make you further anſwer, if you may by the vertue thereof burthen me with my conſcience.

M. Philpot requireth to ſee their Commiſſion.

Roper. Let him ſee the Commiſſion: is it here?

Story. Shall wee let euery vile perſon ſee our Commiſſion?

Cholm. Let him goe from whence he came, and on Thurſday he ſhall ſee our Commiſſion.

Story. No, let him lie in the meane while in the Lollards Tower; for I will ſweepe the Kings Bench and all other Priſons alſo of theſe Hereticks, they ſhall not haue that reſort as they haue had, to ſcatter their hereſies.

Philpot. You haue power to transferre my body from place to place at your pleaſure; but you haue no power ouer my ſoule. And I paſſe not whither you commit mee, for I cannot be worſe intreated than I am; kept all day in a cloſe Chamber: wherefore it is no maruell that my fleſh is puft up, wherewithall Maſter Doctor is offended.

Story. Marſhall, take him home with you again, and ſee that you bring him againe on Thurſday, and then we ſhal rid your fingers of him, and afterward of your other Heretickes.

Phil. God hath appointed a day ſhortly to come, in the which he wil judge us with righteouſneſſe, howſoeuer you judge of us now.

Roper. Be content to be ruled by M. Doctor, and ſhew your ſelfe a Catholike man.

Philpot will not diſſemble againſt his conſcience.

Phil. Sir, if I ſhould ſpeake otherwiſe than my conſcience is, I ſhould but diſſemble with you: and why be you ſo earneſt to have mee ſhew my ſelfe a diſſembler both to God and you, which I cannot doe?

Roper. We do not require you to diſſemble with us, but to be a Catholike man.

Phil. If I doe ſtand in any thing, againſt that, wherein any man is able to burthen me with one jot of the Scripture, I ſhall be content to be counted no Catholique man, or an Heretique, as you pleaſe.

Story. Have we Scripture, Scripture? and with that hee roſe up, ſaying; Who ſhall bee Iudge, I pray you? This man is like his fellow Woodman, which the other day would have nothing elſe but Scripture. And this is the beginning of this Tragedie.

The ſecond examination of Maſter Philpot before the Queenes Commiſſioners, M. Cholmley, Roper, D. Story, Doct. Cooke, and the Scribe, the 24. day of October, 1555. at Newgate Seſſions Hall.

The ſecond examination of M. Philpot before the commiſſioners.

AT my comming, a man of Algate of mine acquaintance ſaid unto me, God have mercy on you, for you are already condemned in this world; for D. Story ſaid, that my Lord Chancellor had commanded to doe you away. After a little conſultation had betweene them, M. Cholmley called me unto him, ſaying:

Cholm. Maſter Philpot ſhew your ſelfe a wiſe man, and be not ſtubborne in your owne opinion, but be conformable to the Queenes proceedings, and live, and you ſhall be well aſſured of great favour and reputation.

Phil. I ſhall doe as it becommeth a Chriſtian man to doe.

Story. This man is the rankeſt Heretike that hath beene in all my Lord Chancellors Dioceſſe, and hath done more hurt then any man elſe there: and therefore his pleaſure is, that he ſhould have the Law to proceede againſt him, and I have ſpoken with my Lord herein, and hee willeth him to be committed to the Biſhop of London, and there to recant or elſe burne. He howled and wept in the Convocation houſe, and made ſuch adoe as never man did, as all the Heretikes doe when they lacke learning to anſwer. He ſhall goe after his fellowes. How ſayeſt thou, wilt thou recant?

Phil. I know nothing I have done, that I ought to recant.

Story. Well, then I pray you let us commit him to the Lollards Tower, there to remaine untill hee be further examined before the Biſhop of London; for hee is too fine fedde in the Kings bench, and he hath too much favour there. For his Keeper ſaid at the doore yeſterday, that hee was the fineſt fellow and one of the beſt learned in England; and with this hee roſe up and went his way.

Cook. This man hath moſt ſtoutly maintained hereſies ſince the Queens comming in, above any that I have heard of; therefore it is moſt meete he ſhould be adjudged by the Biſhop of London, for the hereſies he hath maintained.

Phil. I have maintained no hereſies.

Cooke. No have? Did yee not openly ſpeake againſt the Sacrament of the Altar in the Convocation houſe? Call you that no hereſie? wilt thou recant that, or not?

Phil. It was the Queenes Majeſties pleaſure that we ſhould reaſon thereof, not by my ſeeking, but by other mens procuring, in the hearing of the Councell.

Cooke. Did the Queene give you leave to be an hereticke? you may be ſure her Grace will not ſo doe. Well, we will not diſpute the matter with you; my Lord of London ſhall proceed by inquiſition upon thee, and if thou wilt not recant, thou ſhalt be burned.

Phil. My Lord of London is not mine Ordinary in this behalfe, and I have already anſwered unto mine Ordinary in this matter: and therefore (as I have ſaid before) you ſhall doe me great wrong, to vex me twice for one matter, ſince I have ſuſtained this long impriſonment, beſides the loſſe of my living.

Roper. You were a very unmeete man to be an Archdeacon.

Phil. I know I was as meete a man as he that hath it now.

Cooke. A meet man, quoth he? He troubled M. Roper and the whole Countrey.

Phil. There was never poore Archdeacon ſo handled at your hands as I am, and that without any juſt cauſe ye be able to lay unto me.

Cooke. Thou art no Archdeacon.

John Philpot deprived of his Archdeaconry without any law.

Phil. I am Archdeacon ſtill, although another be in poſſeſſion of my living; for I was never deprived by any Law.

Cooke. No ſir, that needeth not: for a notorious Hereticke ſhould have no ordinary proceeding about his deprivation; but the Biſhop may upon knowledge thereof proceede to deprivation.

Whether an hereticke ſuſpected may without ordinary proceſſe be deprived of his living by his Ordinary before his death and by what law.

Phil. Maſter Doctour, you know that the common law is otherwiſe: and beſides this, the Statutes of this Realme be otherwiſe, which give this benefit to every perſon, though he be an hereticke, to enjoy his living untill hee be put to death for the ſame.

Cholm. No, there thou art deceived.

Philpot. Upon the living I paſſe not. But the unjuſt dealing grieveth me, that I ſhould be thus troubled for my conſcience, contrary to all Law.

Cholmley. Why, will not you agree that the Queenes Majeſty may cauſe you to be examined of your faith?

Phil. Aſke you Maſter D. Cooke, and he will tel you that the temporall Magiſtrates have nothing to doe with matters of faith, for determination thereof. And S. Ambroſe ſaith Divina Imperatoriæ majeſtati non ſunt ſubjecta; That the things of God are not ſubject to the power and authority of Princes.

Cooke. No? may not the temporall power commit you to be examined of your faith to the Biſhop?

Phil. Yea ſir, I deny not that; but you will not grant that the ſame may examine any of their owne authority.

Cooke. Let him be had away.

John Philpot again requireth to ſee their commiſſion, and yet it could not be ſeene, and that alſo againſt the law.

Phil. Your Maſterſhip promiſed mee the laſt time I was before you, I ſhould ſee your Commiſſion by what authority you doe call me, and whether I by the ſame be bound to anſwer to ſo much as you demand.

Roper. Let him ſee the Commiſſion.

The Scribe. Then he exhibited it to M. Roper, and was about to open the ſame.

Cooke. No, what will ye doe? he ſhall not ſee it.

Phil. Then do you me wrong, to call me and vex me, not ſhewing your authority in this behalfe.

Cooke. If we doe you wrong, complaine on us; and in the meane while thou ſhalt lie in the Lollards Tower.

Phil.

Anno 1555.

Phil. Sir, I am a poore Gentleman; therefore I truſt of your gentleneſſe you will not commit me to ſo vile and ſtraight a place, being found no haynous treſpaſſer.

Cooke. Thou art no Gentleman.

Phil. Yes, that I am.

Cooke. An hereticke is no Gentleman; for he is a Gentleman that hath gentle conditions.

Phil. The offence cannot take away the ſtate of a Gentleman as long as he liveth, although he were a traytor: but I meane not to boaſt of my Gentlemanſhip, but will put it under my foote, ſince you doe no more eſteeme it.

Story. What, will you ſuffer this heretike to prate with you all this day?

Cooke. He ſaith he is a Gentleman.

Story. A Gentleman, quoth he? he is a vile heretike knave: for an heretike is no Gentleman. Let the keeper of the Lollards Tower come in, and have him away.

The keeper. Here ſir.

John Philpot commanded to Lollards tower by D. Story.

Story. Take this man with you to the Lollards Tower, or elſe to the Biſhops Colehouſe.

Phil. Sir, if I were a Dogge you could not appoint me a worſe and more vile place: but I muſt be content with whatſoever injury you doe offer me. God give you a more mercifull heart; you are very cruell upon one that hath never offended you. I pray you Maſter Cholmley, ſhew me ſome friendſhip, that I be not carried to ſo vile a place. And hee called me aſide, and ſayd:

Cholmley talketh with M. Philpot apart.

Cholm. I am not ſkilfull of their doings, neither of their lawes; I cannot tell what they meane. I would I could doe you good.

Phil. I am content to goe whither you will have me. There was never man more cruelly handled than I am at your hands, that without juſt cauſe knowne ſhould thus be entreated.

Story. Shall we ſuffer this hereticke thus to reprove us? have him hence.

Phil. God forgive you, and give you more mercifull hearts, and ſhew you more mercy in the time of need; Et quod facis, fac citius, Do quickly that you have in hand.

Story. Doe you not heare how he maketh us Judaſſes?

Phil. That is after your owne underſtanding.

After this, I with foure other moe were brought to the Keepers Houſe in Paternoſter-Row, where we ſupped, and after ſupper I was called up to a chamber by the Archdeacon of Londons ſervant, and that in his maſters name, who offered me a bed for that night. To whom I gave thankes, ſaying; that it ſhould be a griefe to me to lie well one night, and the next worſe: wherefore I will begin (ſaid I) as I am like to continue, to take ſuch part as my fellowes doe. And with that we were brought through Paternoſter-Rowe to my Lord of Londons Colehouſe; unto the which is joyned a little blinde houſe, with a great paire of Stockes appointed both for hand and foote: but thankes be to God we have not played of thoſe Organs yet, although ſome before us have tried them, and there wee found a Miniſter of Eſſex, a married Prieſt, a man of godly zeale, with one other poore man. And this Miniſter (at my comming) deſired to ſpeake with me, and did greatly lament his owne infirmity, for that through extremity of impriſonment he was conſtrained by writing to yeeld to the Biſhop of London: whereupon wee was once ſet at liberty, and afterward felt ſuch a Hell in his conſcience, that he could ſcarce refraine

M. Philpot laid in B. Boners Colehouſe.

This godly man was Thomas Whittle whoſe ſtory followeth.

Maſter Philpots being in the Cole-houſe, where he found Thomas Whittle Prieſt, ſitting in the Stockes.

Examples what an unquiet conſcience doth. Thomas Whittle after his recantation repenteth, and tare his ſubſcription. B. Boner pluckt away a great part of Whittles beard, & made his face blacke and blew.

from deſtroying himſelfe, and never could be at quiet untill he had gone unto the Biſhops Regiſter, deſiring to ſee his bill againe, the which as ſoone as he had received, he tare it in peeces; and after he was as joyfull as any man might be. Of the which when my Lord of London had underſtanding, he ſent for him, and fell upon him like a Lyon, and like a manly Biſhop buffeted him wel, ſo that he made his face blacke and blew, & pluckt away a great peece of his beard: but now thankes be to God, he is as joyfull under the croſſe as any of us, and very ſorry of his former infirmity. I write this, becauſe I would all men to take heed how they doe contrary to their conſcience; which is, to fall into the paines of Hell. And here an end.

The manner of my calling firſt before the Biſhop of London, the ſecond night of mine impriſonment in his Cole-houſe.

The firſt appearing of M. Philpot before B. Boner. B. Boners charity ſent to M. Philpot.

THe Biſhop ſent unto me Maſter Johnſon his Regiſter, with a meſſe of meat and a good pot of drinke, and bread, ſaying, that my Lord had no knowledge erſt of my being here, for which he was ſory: therefore he had ſent me and my fellowes that meat, knowing whether I would receive the ſame.

I thanked God for my Lords charity, that it pleaſed him to remember poore priſoners, deſiring Almighty God to increaſe the ſame in him and in all others; and therefore I would not refuſe his beneficence, and therewith tooke the ſame unto my brethren, praying GOD for his providence towards his afflicted flocke, that he ſtirred our adverſaries up to helpe the ſame in their neceſſity.

Iohnſon. My Lord would know the cauſe of your ſending hither (for hee knoweth nothing thereof) and wondereth that he ſhould be troubled with priſoners of other Dioceſſe than his owne.

Philpot. I declared unto him the whole cauſe. After the which he ſayd, my Lords will was that I ſhould have any friendſhip I would deſire, and ſo departed.

Within a while after, one of my Lords Gentlemen commeth for me, and I was brought into his preſence, where he ſate at a table alone, with three or foure of his Chaplaines waiting upon him, and his Regiſter.

B. Boner entertaining M. Philpot.

Boner. Maſter Philpot, you are welcome, give me your hand.

Phil. With that, becauſe he ſo gently put forth his hand, I to render curteſie for curteſie, kiſſed my hand, and gave him the ſame.

Boner. I am right ſorry for your trouble, and I promiſe you before it was within theſe two houres, I knew not of your being here. I pray you tell me what was the cauſe of your ſending hither; for I promiſe you I know nothing thereof as yet, neither would I you ſhould thinke, that I was the cauſe thereof: and I marvell that other men will trouble me with their matters, but I muſt be obedient to my betters, and I wis, men ſpeake otherwiſe of me than I deſerve.

B. Boner made the common Inquiſitor againſt his will.

Phil. I ſhewed him the ſumme of the matter; that it was for the diſputation in the Convocation houſe, for the which I was againſt all right moleſted.

Boner. I marvell that you ſhould be troubled therefore, if there was none other cauſe but this. But peradventure you have maintained the ſame ſince, and ſome of your friends of late have asked whether you doe ſtand to the ſame, and you have ſaid, Yea; and for this you might be committed to priſon.

Phil. If it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am burdened none otherwiſe than I have told you, by the Commiſſioners, who ſent me hither, becauſe I would not recant the ſame.

Boner. A man may ſpeake in the Parliament houſe, though it be a place of free ſpeech, ſo as he may be impriſoned for it, as in caſe he ſpeak words of high treaſon againſt the King or Queene; and ſo it might be that you ſpake otherwiſe than it became you of the Church of Chriſt.

Phil. I ſpake nothing which was out of the articles which were called in queſtion, and agreed upon to be diſputed by the whole houſe, and by the Queenes permiſſion and the Councell.

Boner. Why, may we diſpute of our faith?

Phil. Yea that we may.

Boner. Nay, I trow not, by the law.

Or elſe why were the queſtions there propounded?

Phil. Indeed by the Civill law I know it is not lawfull, but by Gods law we may reaſon thereof. For S. Peter ſaith, Be ye ready to render account unto all men of that hope which is in you, that demand you of the ſame.

1 Pet. 3.

Bon. Indeed S. Peter ſaith ſo. Why, then I aske of you what your judgement is of the ſacrament of the altar?

No man is bound to render account of his faith privately, unleſſe it be to edifie.

Phil. My Lord, S. Ambroſe ſaith, that the diſputation of faith ought to be in the congregation, in the hearing of the people, and that I am not bound to render account thereof to every man privately, unleſſe it be to edifie. But now I cannot ſhew you my mind, but I muſt runne upon the pikes in danger of my life therefore. Wherefore as the ſaid Doctour ſaid unto Valentinian the Emperor, ſo ſay I to your Lordſhip; Tolle legem, & fiet certamen; Take away the Law, and I ſhall reaſon with you. And yet if I come in open judgement, where I am bound by the law to anſwer, I truſt I ſhall utter my conſcience as freely as any that hath come before you.

Ambroſ. ad Valentinianum.

Bon. I perceive you are learned, I would have ſuch as you be about me. But you muſt come and be of the Church; for there is but one Church.

One Church.

Phil. God forbid I ſhould be out of the Church, I am ſure I am within the ſame: for I know as I am taught by the Scriptures, that there is but one Catholique Church, Vna Columba, una Sponſa, una Dilecta; one Dove, one Spouſe, one beloved Congregation, out of the which there is no ſalvation.

Bon. How chanceth it then, that you goe out of the ſame, and walke not with us?

Phil. My Lord, I am ſure I am within the bounds of the Church whereupon ſhe is builded, which is the word of God.

Bon. What age are ye of?

Phil. I am foure and forty.

The faith promiſed by his Godfathers was the faith of Chriſt, after his Creed onely.

Bon. You are not now of the ſame faith your Godfathers and Godmothers promiſed for you, in the which you were baptiſed.

Phil. Yes, that I thanke God I am: for I was baptiſed into the faith of Chriſt wch I now hold.

Bon. How can that be? there is but one faith.

Phil. I am aſſured of that by S. Paul, ſaying; That there is but one God, one Faith, and one Baptiſme, of the which I am.

Bon. You were twenty yeeres agoe of another faith than you be now.

Phil. Indeed my Lord, to tell you plaine, I was then nullius fidei, of no faith, a neuter, a wicked liver, neither hot nor cold.

Bon. Why, doe you not thinke that we have now the true faith?

Phil. I deſire your Lordſhip to hold me excuſed for anſwering at this time. I am ſure that Gods word throughly with the Primitive Church, and all the ancient Writers doe agrée with this faith I am of.

Boner. Well, I promiſe you I meane you no more hurt, than to mine owne perſon: I will not therefore burthen you with your conſcience as now, I marvell that you are ſo merry in priſon as you be, ſinging and reioycing, as the Prophet ſaith, Exultantes in rebus peſſimis, Reioycing in your naughtineſſe. Me thinketh you do not well herein; you ſhould rather lament and be ſorry.

And why then began you ſo haſtily with him in the Sacrament of your altar? B. Boner offended with Iohn Philpots ſinging in priſon.

Phil. My Lord, the mirth that we make is but in ſinging certaine Pſalmes, according as we are commanded by S. Paul, willing us to be merry in the Lord, ſinging together, in Hymnes and Pſalmes: And I truſt your Lordſhip cannot be diſpleaſed with that.

Boner. Wée may ſay unto you as Chriſt ſaid in the Goſpell, Tibiis cecinimus vobis, & non planxiſtis.

Phil. Here my Lord ſtumbled, and could not bring forth the Text, and required his Chaplaines to helpe, and to put him in remembrance of the Text better; but they were mumme: and I recited out the Text unto him, which made nothing to his purpoſe, unleſſe he would have us to mourne, becauſe they, if they laugh, ſing ſtill ſorrowfull things unto us, threatning fagots and fire.

We are my Lord, in a darke comfortleſſe place, and therefore it behooveth us to be merry, leſt, as Salomon ſaith, ſorrowfulneſſe eate up our heart. Therefore I truſt your Lordſhip will not be angry for our ſinging of Pſalmes, ſince S. Paul ſaith; If any man be of an upright mind, let him ſing. And we therefore, to teſtifie that we are of an upright mind to God (though we be in miſery) doe ſing.

Bon. I will trouble you no further as now. If I can doe you any good, I will be glad to doe it for you. God be with you, good M. Philpot, and give you good night. Have him to the Cellar and let him drinke a cup of wine.

The end of his firſt talke with B. Boner.

Thus I departed, and by my Lords Regiſter I was brought to his cellar doore, where I dranke a good cup of wine. And my Lords Chaplaine M. Couſin followed me, taking acquaintance, ſaying, that I was welcome, and wiſhed that I would not be ſingular.

Phil. I am well taught the contrary by Salomon, ſaying, Væ ſoli, Woe be to him that is alone. After that I was carried to my Lords Cole-houſe againe, where I with my ſix fellowes doe rouſe together in the ſtraw as chéerefully (we thanke God) as others doe in their beds of downe.

Thus for the third fit.

The fourth examination of Maſter Philpot in the Archdeacons houſe of London, the ſaid moneth of October, before the Biſhops of London, Bathe, Worceſter, and Glouceſter.

Another examination of I. Philpot, before the Biſhops.

BOner. Maſt. Philpot, it hath pleaſed my Lords to take paines here to day, to dine with my poore Archdeacon, and in the dinner time it chanced us to have communication of you, and you were pitied here of many that knew you in the new Colledge in Oxford: and I alſo do pitie your caſe, becauſe you ſéeme unto me by the talke I had with you the other night, to be learned: and therefore now I have ſent for you to come before them, that it might not be ſaid hereafter, that I had ſo many learned Biſhops at my houſe, and yet would not vouchſafe them to talke with you, and at my requeſt (I thanke them) they are content ſo to doe. Now therefore utter your mind fréely, and you ſhall with all favour be ſatisfied. I am ſorry to ſée you lie in ſo evill a caſe as you doe, and would faine you ſhould doe better, as you may if you liſt.

Bathe. My Lords here have not ſent for you to fawne upon you, but for charities ſake to exhort you to come into the right Catholike way of the Church.

Worc. Before he beginneth to ſpeake, it is beſt that he call to God for grace, and to pray that it might pleaſe God to open his heart, that he may conceive the truth.

And why doe not your Biſhops your ſelves pray alſo for them that are out of the way?

Phil. With that I fell downe upon my knées before them, and made my prayer on this manner:

The prayer of I. Philpot before the biſhops.

Almighty God, which art the giver of all wiſdome and underſtanding, I beſeech thee of thine infinite goodneſſe and mercy in Ieſus Chriſt, to give mee (moſt vile ſinner) in thy ſight, the ſpirit of wiſdome to ſpeake and make anſwer in thy cauſe, that it may be to the contentation of the hearers, before whom I ſtand, and alſo to my better underſtanding, if I be deceived in any thing.

Biſhop Boner againſt prayer. B. Boner here ſeemeth more skilfull in his law, than in Church ſtories.

Bon. Nay, my Lord of Worceſter, you did not well to exhort him to make any prayer. For this is the thing they have a ſingular pride in, that they can often make their vaine prayers, in the which they glory much. For in this point they are much like to certaine arrant heretiques, of whom Pliny maketh mention, that did daily ſing Antelucanos Hymnos, Praiſe unto God before the dawning of the day.

Phil. My Lord, God make me and all you here preſent ſuch heretiques as thoſe were that ſung thoſe morning hymnes: for they were right Chriſtians, with whom the tyrants of the world were offended for their well doing.

Bathe. Procéed to that he hath to ſay. He hath prayed I cannot tell for what.

Bon Say on M. Philpot; my Lords will gladly heare you.

M. Philpot complaineth of his wrongfull impriſonment.

Phil. I have, my Lords, béen this twelve moneth and a halfe in priſon without any juſt cauſe that I know, and my living taken from me without any lawfull order, and now I am brought (contrary to right) from mine owne Territory and Ordinary, into another mans juriſdiction, I know not why. Wherefore, if your Lordſhips can burden me with any evill done, I ſtand here before you to purge me of the ſame. And if no ſuch thing may be juſtly laid to my charge, I deſire to be releaſed of this wrongfull trouble.

Boner. There is none here goeth about to trouble you, but to doe you good, if we can. For I promiſe you, yée were ſent hither to me without my knowledge. Therefore ſpeake your conſcience without any feare.

M. Philpot called in no ſufficient aſſembly, and therefore not bound to anſwer, whereby to put himſelfe in danger.

Phil. My Lord, I have learned to anſwer in matters of Religion, In Eccleſia legitime vocatus, in the Congregation being thereto lawfully called: but now I am not lawfully called, neither is here a juſt Congregation where I ought to anſwer.

Boner. Indéed this man told me the laſt time I ſpake with him, that he was a Lawyer, and would not utter his conſcience in matters of faith, unleſſe it were in the hearing of the people, where he might ſpeake to vaine-glory.

Phil. My Lord, I ſaid not I was a Lawyer, neither doe I arrogate to my ſelfe that name, although I was once a novice in the ſame, where I learned ſomething for mine owne defence, when I am called in judgement to anſwer to any cauſe, and whereby I have been taught, not to put my ſelfe further in danger than I need, and ſo farre am I Lawyer, and no further.

“ Wilfull, becauſe he wil not put himſelfe wilfully into the Wolves mouth.

Bathe. If you will not anſwer to my Lords requeſt, you ſeeme to be a “ wilfull man in your opinion.

Phil. My Lord of London is not mine Ordinary before whom I am bound to anſwer in this behalfe, as Maſter D. Cole (which is a Lawyer) can well tell you by the Law. And I have not offended my Lord of London wherefore he ſhould call me.

This offence was for ſpeaking in the convocation houſe with publike liberty in the Parliament.

Bon. Yes, I have to lay to your charge, that you have offended in my Dioceſſe by ſpeaking againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar: and therefore I may call you, and proceed againſt you to puniſh you by the law.

Phil. I have not offended in your Dioceſſe. For that which I ſpake of the Sacrament was in Pauls Church in the Convocation houſe, which (as I underſtand) is a peculiar juriſdiction belonging to the Deane of Pauls, and therefore is counted of your Lordſhips Dioceſſe, but not in your Dioceſſe.

Boner. Is not Pauls Church in my Dioceſſe? Well I wot, it coſteth me a good deale of money by the yeere, the leading thereof.

Phil. That may be, and yet be exempted from your Lordſhips juriſdiction. And albeit I had ſo offended in your Dioces, yet I ought by the law to be ſent to my Ordinary, if I require it, and not to be puniſhed by you that are not mine Ordinary. And already (as I have told you) I have beene convented of mine Ordinary for this cauſe, which you goe about to enquire of me.

B. Boner not lawfull Ordinary to I. Philpot.

Boner. How ſay you Maſter D. Cole, may not I proceed againſt him by the law, for that he hath done in my Dioces?

Cole. Me thinketh M. Philpot needeth not to ſtand ſo much with your Lordſhip in that point as he doth, ſithence you ſeek not to hinder him, but to further him: therefore I think it beſt that he go to the matter that is laid againſt him of the convocation, and make no longer delay.

Phil. I would willingly ſhew my mind of the matter, but I am ſure it will be laid againſt me to my prejudice when I come to judgement.

Cole. Why then you may ſpeake by proteſtation.

Note how theſe men hunt for innocent blood.

Phil. But what ſhall my proteſtation availe in a cauſe of hereſie (as you call it) if I ſpeake otherwiſe than you will have me, ſince that which I ſpake in the convocation houſe, being a place privileged, cannot now helpe me?

Boner. But Maſter D. Cole, may not I proceed againſt him for that offence he hath done in my Dioces?

Cole. You may call him before you, my Lord, if he be found in your Dioces.

M. Philpot againe appealeth from B. Boner to his ordinary.

Phil. But I have by force beene brought out of mine owne Dioceſſe to my Lords, and required to be judged of mine owne Ordinary: and therefore I know Maſter Doctour will not ſay of his knowledge, that your Lordſhip ought to proceed againſt me. And here Maſter Doctour would ſay nothing.

Worc. Does you not thinke to finde before my Lord here as good equity in your cauſe, as before your own Ordinary?

Phil. I cannot blame my Lord of Londons equity, with whom (I thanke his Lordſhip) I have found more gentleneſſe ſince I came, than of mine owne Ordinary (I ſpeake it for no flattery) this twelve moneth and this halfe before, who never would call me to anſwer, as his Lordſhip hath done now twice. Sed nemo prohibetur uti jure ſuo. No man is forbid to uſe his owne right due unto him; but I ought not to be foreſtalled of my right, and therefore I challenge the ſame for divers other conſiderations.

Bon. Now you cannot ſay hereafter but that you have beene gently commmned withall of my Lords here, and yet you will be wilfull and obſtinate in your errour, and in your owne opinions, and will not ſhew any cauſe why you will not come into the unity of the Church with us.

Phil. My Lords, in that I doe not declare my mind according to your expectation, is (as I have ſaid) becauſe I cannot ſpeake without preſent danger of my life. But rather than you ſhould report me, by this, either obſtinate or ſelfe-willed without any juſt ground, whereupon I ſtand; I will open unto you ſomewhat of my minde, or rather the whole, deſiring your Lordſhips which ſeeme to be pillars of the Church of England, to ſatisfie me in the ſame: and I will refer all other cauſes in the which I diſſent from you, unto one or two articles, or rather to one, which includeth them both, in the which if I can by the Scriptures be ſatisfied at your mouthes, I ſhall as willingly agree to you as any other in all points.

Nay rather theſe catholike prelates will be ſatiſfied with no reaſonable offer.

Bon. Theſe heretikes come alwaies with their ifs, as this man doth now, ſaying, If he can be ſatisfied by the Scriptures: ſo that he will alwaies have this exception, I am not ſatisfied, although the matter be never ſo plainely proved againſt him. But will you promiſe to be ſatisfied, if my Lords take ſome paines about you?

Phil. I ſay (my Lord) I will be ſatisfied by the Scriptures in that wherein I ſtand. And I proteſt here before God and his eternall Sonne Jeſus Chriſt my Saviour, and the holy Ghoſt, and his Angels, and you here preſent that be judges of that I ſpeake, that I do not ſtand in any opinion, of wilfulneſſe, or ſingularity, but onely upon my conſcience, certainely informed by Gods Word, from the which I dare not goe for feare of damnation: and this is the cauſe of mine earneſtneſſe in this behalfe.

Bon. I will trouble my Lords no longer, ſeeing that you will not declare your mind.

Phil, I am about ſo to do, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip to heare me ſpeake.

Bathe. Give him leave (my Lord) to ſpeake that he hath to ſay.

The chiefeſt controverſie in the Church of Chriſt now, is to know which is the true Church of Chriſt.

Phil. My Lords, it is not unknowne to you, that the chiefe cauſe why you doe count me, and ſuch as I am, for Heretiques; is, becauſe we be not at unity with your Church. You ſay you are of the true Church: and wee ſay, wee are of the true Church. You ſay, that whoſoever is out of your Church, is damned; and we thinke verily on the other ſide, that if we depart from the true Church, whereon we are grafted in Gods word, we ſhould ſtand in the ſtate of damnation. Wherefore if your Lordſhip can bring any better authorities for your Church, than we can doe for ours, and prove by the Scriptures that the Church of Rome now (of the which you are) is the true Catholike Church, as in all your ſermons, writings, and arguments you doe uphold, and that all Chriſtian perſons ought to be ruled by the ſame under paine of damnation (as you ſay) and that the ſame Church (as you pretend) hath authority to interpret the Scriptures, as it ſeemeth her good, and that all men are bound to follow ſuch interpretations onely; I ſhall be as conformable to the ſame Church as you may deſire me, the which otherwiſe I dare not: therefore I require you for Gods ſake to ſatisfie me in this.

Cole. If you ſtand upon this point onely, you may ſoone be ſatiſfied if you liſt.

Phil. It is the thing that I require, and to this

I

Anno 1555.

S. Paul 20. yeeres before his converſion, & S. Peter before his calling, was of another faith than they were afterward and yet it followeth not that they would have every yeere a new faith.

I have ſaid, I will ſtand, and referre all other controverſies wherein I ſtand now againſt you, and will put my hand thereto, if you miſtruſt my word.

Boner. I pray you M. Philpot, what faith were you of twenty yeeres ago? This man will have every yeere a new faith.

Phil. My Lord, to tell you plaine, I thinke I was of no faith: for I was then a wicked liver, and knew not God then, as I ought to doe, God forgive me.

Boner. No were? that is not ſo. I am ſure you were of ſome faith.

Phil. My Lord, I have declared to you on my conſcience what I then was, and judge of my ſelfe. And what is that to the purpoſe of the thing I deſire to be ſatisfied of you?

Boner. Maſter D. Cole, I pray you ſay your mind to him.

The determination of the Primitive Church, and of the Church of Rome as it is now, is not all one. Athanaſius miſalledged.

Cole. What will you ſay, if I can prove that it was decreed by an univerſall Councell in Athanaſius his time, that all the Chriſtian Church ſhould follow the determination of the Church of Rome? but I doe not now remember where.

Phil. If you Maſter Doctour can ſhew me the ſame granted to the See of Rome by the authority of the Scripture, I will gladly hearken thereto. But I thinke you be not able to ſhew any ſuch thing: for Athanaſius was Preſident of Nicene Councell, and there was no ſuch thing decreed I am ſure.

Cole. Though it were not then, it might be at another time.

Phil. I deſire to ſee the proofe thereof. And upon this M. Harpsfield, Chancellor to the Biſhop of London, brought in a booke of Ireneus, with certaine leaves turned in, and laid it before the Biſhops to helpe them in their perplexity, if it might be: the which after the Biſhops of Bathe and Gloceſter had read together, the Biſhop of Gloceſter gave me the booke.

Gloceſt. Take the Booke Maſter Philpot, and looke upon that place, and there may you ſee how the Church of Rome is to be followed of all men.

A place of Ireneus alledged.

Phil. I tooke the Booke, and read the place, the which after I had read, I ſaid it made nothing againſt me, but againſt the Arrians and other Heretikes, againſt whom Ireneus wrote, proving that they were not to be credited, becauſe they did teach and follow after ſtrange doctrine in Europa, and that the chiefe Church of the ſame was founded by Peter and Paul, and had to this time continued by faithfull ſucceſſion of the faithfull Biſhops in preaching the true Goſpel, as they had received of the Apoſtles, and nothing like to the late ſprung Heretikes, &c. Whereby he concludeth againſt them, that they were not to be heard, neither to be credited, the which thing if you my Lords be able to prove now of the Church of Rome, then had you as good authority againſt me in my cauſe now, as Ireneus had againſt thoſe Heretikes. But the Church of Rome hath ſwerved from the truth and ſimplicity of the Goſpell, which it maintained in Ireneus time, and was uncorrupted from that which it is now; wherefore your Lordſhip cannot juſtly apply the authority of Ireneus to the Church of Rome now, which is ſo manifeſtly corrupted from the Primitive Church.

The Church of Rome not now as it was then.

Boner. So will you ſay ſtill, it maketh nothing for the purpoſe, whatſoever authority we bring, and will never be ſatiſfied.

Phil. My Lord, when I doe by juſt reaſon prove that the authorities which be brought againſt mee doe not make to the purpoſe (as I have already proved) I truſt you will receive mine anſwer.

The Church of Rome never deceived.

Worc. It is to be proved moſt manifeſtly by all ancient Writers, that the See of Rome hath alwaies followed the truth, and never was deceived, untill of late certaine Heretikes had defaced the ſame.

Phil. Let that be proved, and I have done.

Worc. Nay, you are of ſuch arrogancy, ſingularity, and vaine-glory, that you will not ſee it, be it never ſo well proved.

Phil. Ya, my Lords, is it now time (thinke you) for me to follow ſingularity or vaine-glory, ſince it is now upon danger of my life and death, not onely preſently, but alſo before God to come? and I know, if I die not in the true faith, I ſhall die everlaſtingly: and againe I know, if I doe not as you would have me, you will kill me and many thouſands moe: yet had I leaver periſh at your hands, than to periſh eternally. And at this time I have loſt all my commodities of this world, and now lie in a cole-houſe, where a man would not lay a Dogge, with the which I am well contented.

I finde not in Euſebius that Peter ſhould be B. of Rome 25 yeeres, but this is in Linus Hierom. lib. de viris illuſt. and in Abdias. lib. 1. de vita Petri.

Cole. Where are you able to prove, that the Church of Rome hath erred at any time? and by what Hiſtorie? certaine it is by Euſebius, that the Church was eſtabliſhed at Rome by Peter and Paul, and that Peter was Biſhop 25 yeeres at Rome.

Phil. I know well that Euſebius ſo writeth: but if we compare that which Saint Paul writeth to the Galathians, chap. 1. the contrary will manifeſtly appeare, that he was not halfe ſo long there. He lived not paſt 35 yeeres after he was called to be an Apoſtle: and Paul maketh mention of his abiding at Ieruſalem after Chriſt death more than 18 yeeres.

Cole. What, did Peter write to the Galathians?

Phil. No, I ſay Paul maketh mention of Peter, writing to the Galathians, and of his abiding at Ieruſalem. And further, I am able to prove, both by Euſebius and other Hiſtoriographers, that the Church of Rome hath manifeſtly erred, and at this preſent doth erre, becauſe ſhe agreeth not with that which they wrote. The primitive Church did uſe according to the Goſpel, and there needeth none other proofe but compare the one with the other.

Marke my Lords wiſe parable.

Boner. I may compare this man to a certaine man I read of which fell into a deſperation, and went into a wood to hang himſelfe, and when he came there, he went viewing of every tree, and could finde none on the which he might vouchſafe to hang himſelfe. But I will not apply it as I might. I pray you (Maſter Doctor) goe forth with him.

Neither you nor they are able in this caſe.

Cole. My Lord, there be on every ſide on mee that be better able to anſwer him, and I love not to fall into diſputation: for that now adaies a man ſhall but ſuſtaine ſhame and obloquie thereby of the people. I had leaver ſhew my mind in writing.

Reaſon why it is not like that in Athanaſius time all men were bound to abide the determination of Rome.

Phil. And I had lever that you ſhould do ſo than otherwiſe, for then a man may better judge of your words, than by argument, and I beſeech you ſo to doe. But if I were a rich man, I durſt wager an hundred pounds, that you ſhall not be able to ſhew that you have ſaid, to be decreed by a generall Councell in Athanaſius time. For this I am ſure of, that it was concluded by a generall Councell in Africa many yeeres after, that none of Africa (under pain of excommunication) ſhould appeale to Rome: the which decree I am ſure they would not have made, if by the Scriptures and by an univerſall Councell it had been decreed, that all men ſhould abide and follow the determination of the Church of Rome.

Cole. But I can ſhew that they revoked that error againe.

Phil. So you ſay, Maſter Doctor, but I pray you ſhew me where. I have hitherto heard nothing of you for my contentation, but bare words without any authority.

Bon. What I pray you ought we to diſpute with you of our faith? Iuſtinian in the law hath a title, De fide Catholica, to the contrary.

Not the Law, but the Goſpel gathered the Church together.

Phil. I am certaine the Civill law hath ſuch a conſtitution: but our faith muſt not depend upon the Civill law. For as Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Non lex, ſed fides congregavit Eccleſiam, Not the law, but the Goſpell (ſaith he) hath gathered the Church together.

Worc. M. Philpot, you have the ſpirit of pride wherwith ye be led, which will not let you to yeeld to the truth: leave it for ſhame.

Phil. Sir, I am ſure I have the ſpirit of faith, by the which I ſpeake at this preſent; neither am I aſhamed to ſtand in my faith.

Glocest. What: doe you thinke your ſelfe better learned than ſo many notable learned men as be here?

400 Prieſts againſt one Helias.

Phil. Elias alone had the truth, when there were foure hundred Prieſts againſt him.

Worceſt. Oh, you would be counted now for Elias. And yet I tell thee he was deceived: for he thought there had been none good but himſelfe, and yet he was deceived, for there were ſeven thouſand beſide him.

Phil. Yea, but he was not deceived in doctrine, as the other foure hundred were.

Worc. By my faith you are greatly to blame, that you cannot be content to be of the Church which ever hath been of that faithfull antiquity.

Phil. My Lord, I know Rome, and have beene there, where I ſaw your Lordſhip.

A good commendation for Rome by a Romaniſt.

Worc. Indeed I did flee from hence thither, and I remember not that I ſaw you there. But I am ſorry that you have been there: for the wickednes which you have ſeene there, peradventure cauſeth you to doe as you doe.

Phil. No, my Lord, I doe not as I doe for that cauſe: for I am taught otherwiſe by the Goſpell, not altogether to refuſe the Miniſter for his evill living, ſo that he bring ſound doctrine out of Gods booke.

Whether the univerſall Church may be deceived?

Worc. Do you think that the univerſall Church may be deceived?

2 Theſ. 2.
A defection propheſied of in the Church.
ἀποστασία.

Phil. S. Paul to the Theſſalonians propheſieth that there ſhould come an univerſall departing from the faith in the later daies before the comming of Chriſt, ſaying, Non veniet Chriſtus, niſi venerit defectio prius, that is, Chriſt ſhall not come, till there come a departing firſt.

ἀποστάτης.

Cole. Yea I pray you, how take you the departing there in S. Paul? it is not meant of faith, but of the departing from the Empire: for it is in Greeke, ἀποστασία.

Phil. Marry indeed you, M. Doctour, put me in good remembrance of the meaning of S. Paul in that place, for Apoſtaſia is properly a departing from the faith, and thereof commeth Apoſtata, which properly ſignifieth one that departeth from his faith: and S. Paul in the ſame place after ſpeaketh of the decay of the Empire.

Cole. Apoſtaſia doth not only ſignifie a departing from the faith, but alſo from the Empire, as I am able to ſhew.

Phil. I never read it ſo taken, and when you ſhall be able to ſhew it (as you ſay in words) I will beleeve it, and not before.

Worc. I am ſorry that you ſhould be againſt the Chriſtian world.

Anno 1555.

Phil. The world commonly, and ſuch as be called Chriſtians (for the multitude) hath hated the truth, and beene enemies to the ſame.

Gloc. Why, M. Philpot, doe you thinke that the univerſall Church hath erred, and you onely to be in the truth?

The Popes Church which now is was never univerſall.

Phil. The Church that you are of was never univerſall, for two parts of the world, which is Aſia and Africa, never conſented to the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, as at this day they doe not, neither doe follow his decrees.

Of this Florentine Councell which was about the yeere 1432, read before.

Glocest. Yes in the Florentine councell they did agree.

Phil. It was ſaid ſo by falſe report, after they of Aſia and Africa were gone home: but it was not ſo indeed, as the ſequele of them all hitherto doth prove the contrary.

The word or the Church judge in controverſies.

Gloc. I pray you by whom will you be judged in matters of controverſie which happen daily?

Phil. By the word of God. For Chriſt ſaith in S. Iohn, The word that he ſpake, ſhall be judge in the latter day.

Glo. What if you take the word one way, and I another way: who ſhall be judge then?

Phil. The Primitive Church.

Gloc. I know you meane the Doctours that wrote thereof.

Phil I meane verily ſo.

Gloc. What if you take the Doctors in one ſenſe, and I in another: who ſhall be judge then?

Phil. Then let that be taken which is moſt agreeable to Gods word.

Cole. My Lords, why do you trouble your ſelves to anſwer him in this matter? It is not the thing which is laid to his charge, but his error of the ſacrament, and he to ſhift himſelfe of that, brought in another matter.

Phil. This is the matter M. Cole, to the which I have referred all other queſtions, and deſire to be ſatiſfied.

Worc. It is wonder to ſee how he ſtandeth with a few againſt a great multitude.

John Philpots propheſie of the increaſe of the Goſpel.

Phil. We have almoſt as many as you. For we have Aſia, Africa, Germany, Denmarke, and a great part of France, and daily the number of the Goſpel doth increaſe: ſo that I am credibly informed, that for this religion in the which I ſtand, and for the which I am like to die, a great multitude doth daily come out of France through perſecution, that the Cities of Germany be ſcarce able to receive them: and therefore your Lordſhip may be ſure, the word of God will one day take place, doe what you can to the contrary.

Worc. They were well occupied to bring you ſuch newes, and you have beene well kept to have ſuch reſort unto you. Thou art the arroganteſt fellow, and ſtouteſt fond fellow that ever I knew.

Phil. I pray your Lordſhip to beare with my haſty ſpeech: for it is part of my corrupt nature to ſpeake ſomwhat haſtily: but for all that, I meane with humility to doe my duety to your Lordſhip.

John Philpot put off to another day.

Bon. M. Philpot, my Lords will trouble you no further at this time, but you ſhall go from whence you came, and have ſuch favour as in the meane while I can ſhew you: and upon Wedneſday next you ſhal be called againe to be heard what you can ſay for maintenance of your error.

Phil. My Lord, my deſire is to be ſatisfied of you in that I have required; and your Lordſhip ſhall find me, as I have ſaid.

Worc. We wiſh you as well as our ſelves.

Phil. I thinke the ſame (my Lords) but I feare you are deceived, and have a zeale of your ſelves, not according to knowledge.

Worc. God ſend you more grace.

Phil. And alſo God increaſe the ſame in you, and open your eyes that you may ſée to maintaine his truth, and his true Church.

Then the Biſhops roſe up and conſulted together, and cauſed a writing to be made, in the which I thinke my blood by them was bought and ſold, and thereto they put their hands, and after this I was carried to my Cole-houſe againe.

Thus endeth the fourth part of this tragedy. God haſten the end thereof to his glory, Amen.

John Philpot to certaine that required him to write his examinations. The inordinate and unlearned proceedings of theſe catholikes againſt the poore flocke of Chriſt.

Becauſe I have begun to write unto you of mine examinations before the Biſhop and other, more to ſatisfie your deſire than that it is any thing worthy to be written; I have thought it good to write unto you alſo that which hath béene done of late, that the ſame might come to light which they doe in darkeneſſe and in privie corners, and that the world now and the poſterity hereafter might know how unorderly, unjuſtly, and unlearnedly theſe ravening Wolves doe procéed againſt the ſilly and faithfull flock of Chriſt, and condemn and perſecute the ſincere doctrine of Chriſt in us, which they are not able by honeſt meanes to reſiſt, but onely by tyranny and violence.

The fifth examination of Iohn Philpot, had before the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, Coventry, S. Aſſes (I trow) and one other, whoſe Sees I know not, Doctour Story, Curtop, Doctor Saverſon, Doctor Pendleton, with divers other Chaplaines and Gentlemen of the Queenes Chamber, and divers other Gentlemen, in the Gallery of my Lord of Londons palace.

The fift examination of M. Philpot.

Boner. M. Philpot come you hither, I have deſired my Lords here, and other learned men to take ſome pains once againe, and to doe you good: and becauſe I doe minde to ſit in judgement on you to morrow (as I am commanded) yet I would you ſhould have as much favour as I can ſhew you, if you will be any thing conformeable. Therefore play the wiſe man, and be not ſingular in your owne opinion, but be ruled by theſe learned men.

John Philpot ready to yeeld his life in Chriſts cauſe.

Phil. My Lord, in that you ſay you will ſit on me in judgement to morrow, I am glad thereof; For I was promiſed by them which ſent mée unto you, that I ſhould have béene judged the next day after: but promiſe hath not béene kept with me, to my farther griefe. I looke for none other but death at your hands, and I am as ready to yéeld my life in Chriſts cauſe, as you be to require it.

Bon. Loe what a wilfull man is this? By my faith it is but folly to reaſon with him, neither with any of theſe heretikes. I am ſorry that you will be no more tractable, and that I am compelled to ſhew extremity againſt you.

Phil. My Lord, you néed not to ſhew extremity againſt me unleſſe you liſt: neither by the law (as I have ſaid) have you any thing to doe with me, for that you are not mine Ordinary, albeit I am (contrary to all right) in your priſon.

Bon. Why the Quéenes Commiſſioners ſent you hither unto mée upon your examination had before them. I know not well the cauſe; but I am ſure they would not have ſent you hither to me, unleſſe you had made ſome talke to them, otherwiſe than it becommeth a Chriſtian man.

Phil. My Lord, indéed they ſent me hither without any occaſion then miniſtred by me. Only they laid unto me the diſputation I made in the Convocation houſe, requiring me to anſwer the ſame, and to recant it. The which becauſe I would not doe, they ſent me hither to your Lordſhip.

Bon. Why did you not anſwer them thereto?

Phil. For that they were temporall men, and ought not to be judges in ſpirituall cauſes whereof they demanded me, without ſhewing any authority whereby I was bound to anſwer them, and hereupon they committed me to your priſon.

Biſhop Boner ſeeketh cauſe againſt him and yet pretendeth to be ſorry of his trouble.

Bon. Indéed I remember now, you maintained open hereſie in my Dioceſſe: wherefore the Commiſſioners ſent you unto mée that I ſhould procéed againſt you, for that you have ſpoken in my Dioceſſe.

M. Philpots juſt defence for ſpeaking in the Parliament.

Phil. My Lord, I ſtand ſtill upon my lawfull plea in this behalfe; that though it were a great hereſie as you ſuppoſe it, yet I ought not to be troubled therefore, in reſpect of the privilege of the Parliament houſe, whereof the Convocation houſe is a member, where all men in matters propounded may frankly ſpeake their minds, and here is preſent a Gentleman of the Quéenes Majeſties that was preſent at the diſputation, and can teſtifie the queſtions which were then in controverſie, were not ſet forth by me, but by the Prolocutor, who required in the Quéenes Majeſties name, all men to diſpute their minds fréely in the ſame, that were of the houſe.

The Queenes Gentleman. Though the Parliament houſe be a place of privilege for men of the houſe to ſpeake, yet may none ſpeake any treaſon againſt the Quéene, or maintaine treaſon againſt the Crowne.

It were the part of a charitable Biſhop to make a matter better and not worſe.

Phil. But if there be any matter which otherwiſe it were treaſon to ſpeake of, were it treaſon for any perſon to ſpeak therein, ſpecially the thing being propoſed by the ſpeaker? I thinke not.

The Queenes Gentleman. You may make the matter eaſie enough to you yet, as I perceive, if you will revoke the ſame which you did there ſo ſtubbornly maintaine.

S. Aſſe. This man did not ſpeake under reformation as many there did, but ἀγωνιστικῶς and κατηγορικῶς which is, earneſtly and perſwaſibly, as ever I heard any.

I. Philpot appealeth to the whole Parliament houſe.

Phil. My Lords, ſince you will not ceaſe to trouble me for that I have lawfully done, neither will admit my juſt defence for that was ſpoken in the convocation houſe by me, contrary to the laws and cuſtome of the Realme; I appeale to the whole Parliament houſe, to be judged by the ſame, whether I ought thus to be moleſted for that I have there ſpoken.

Rocheſter. But have you ſpoken and maintained the ſame ſince that time, or no?

Phil. If any man can charge mée juſtly therewith, here I ſtand to make anſwer.

Rocheſter. How ſay you to it now: will you ſtand to that you have ſpoken in the Convocation houſe, and doe you thinke you ſaid then well, or no?

Phil. My Lord, you are not mine Ordinary to procéed Ex officio againſt me, and therefore I am not bound to tell you my conſcience of your demands.

This B. belike would faine have blood.

S. Aſſe. What ſay you now? Is there not in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar (and with that they put off all their Caps for reverence of the Idoll) the preſence of our Saviour Chriſt, really and ſubſtantially after the words of conſecration?

Phil. I do beléeve in the Sacrament of Chriſts body duely miniſtred to be ſuch manner of preſence, as the word teacheth me to beléeve.

S. Aſſe. I pray you how is that?

Phil. As for that I will declare another time, when I ſhal be lawfully called to diſpute my mind of this matter, but I am not yet driven to that point. And the Scripture ſaith, All things ought to be done after an order.

Another Biſh. This is a froward and vain-glorious man.

Boner. It is not lawfull for a man by the Civill lawes to diſpute of his faith openly, as it appeareth in the title, De ſumma trinitate & fide catholica.

Phil. My Lord, I have anſwered you to this queſtion before.

Boner. Why, I never aſked thee of this before now.

Amb. l. 5, Epiſt: 30, Eodem cont, maxentium:

Phil. Yes, that you did at my laſt examination, by that token I anſwered your Lordſhip by Saint Ambroſe, that the Church is congregated by the word, and not by mans Law. Wherefore I adde now further of this ſaying, Quod ſi fidem repudiat, & legem objicit, injuſtus eſt, quia juſtus ex fide vivet. i. That he which refuſeth the word, and objecteth the Law, is an unjuſt man, becauſe the juſt ſhall live by faith. And moreover (my Lord) the title which your Lordſhip alledgeth out of the Law, maketh it not unlawfull to diſpute of all the articles of the faith, but of the Trinity.

Boner. Thou lieſt, it is not ſo: and I will ſhew you by the Booke how ignorant he is. And with that hee went with all haſte to his ſtudy, and fet his booke and openly read the Text, and the title of the Law, and charged me with ſuch words as ſeemed to make for his purpoſe, ſaying; How ſayeſt thou to this?

Philpot. My Lord, I ſay as I ſaid before, that the Law meaneth of the Catholike Faith, determined in the Councell of Chalcedonia, where the articles of the Creed were only concluded upon.

Bon. Thou art the verieſt beaſt that ever I heard, I muſt needs ſpeake it, thou compelleſt me thereunto.

Our faith not grounded upon the civill law.

Phil. Your Lordſhip may ſpeake your pleaſure of me. But what is this to the purpoſe, which your Lordſhip is ſo earneſt in? You know that our faith is not grounded upon the Civill law: therefore it is not materiall to me whatſoever the law ſaith.

Bon. By what law wilt thou be judged? Wilt thou be judged by the Common law?

Phil. No my Lord, our faith dependeth not upon the lawes of man.

S. Aſſe. He will be judged by no law, but as hee liſt himſelfe.

Worc. The common lawes are but abſtracts of the Scriptures and Doctors.

Phil. Whatſoever you doe make them, they are no ground of my faith, by the which I ought to be judged.

I. Philpot ſtill ſtandeth to his defence of the law, in refuſing the judge not to be competent. De officio ordinarii, is a title in the firſt book of the Decretals. De foro competente, is a title in the 2 book of the Decretals.

Bon. I muſt needs proceede againſt thee to morrow.

Phil. If your Lordſhip ſo doe, I will have Exceptionem fori: for you are not my competent judge.

Bon. By what law canſt thou refuſe mee to be thy judge?

Philpot. By the Civill law, De competente judice.

Boner. There is no ſuch title in the Law. In what Booke is it, as cunning a Lawyer as you bee?

Phil. My Lord, I take upon me no great cunning in the law: but you drive mee to my ſhifts for my defence, and I am ſure, if I had the Bookes of the Law, I were able to ſhew what I ſay.

Boner. What? De competente judice? I will goe fet thee my bookes. There is a title indeed, De officiis judicis ordinarii.

Phil. Verily that is the ſame De competente judice, which I have alledged. With that hee ran to his ſtudy, and brought the whole courſe of the law betweene his hands, which (as it might appeare) he had well occupied, by the duſt they were imbrued withall.

Boner. There be the books: finde it now (if thou canſt) and I will promiſe thee to releaſe thee out of priſon.

Phil. My Lord, I ſtand not here to reaſon matters of the Civill Law, although I am not altogether ignorant of the ſame; for that I have beene a Student in the Law ſixe or ſeven yeeres: but to anſwer to the Articles of Faith, with the which you may lawfully burden me. And whereas you go about unlawfully to proceed, I challenge, according to my knowledge, the benefit of the law in my defence.

Boner. Why, thou wilt anſwer directly to nothing thou art charged withall: therefore ſay not hereafter but you might have beene ſatisfied here by learned men, if you would have declared your mind.

M. Philpot returneth againe to his queſtion of the Church.

Philpot. My Lord, I have declared my mind unto you and to other of the Biſhops at my laſt being with you, deſiring you to be ſatisfied but of one thing, whereunto I have referred all other controverſies: the which if your Lordſhips now, or other learned men can ſimplie reſolve mee of, I am as contented to be reformable in all things, as you ſhall require; the which is to prove that the Church of Rome (whereof you are) is the Catholique Church.

Coven. Why; doe you not beleeve your Creed, Credo Eccleſiam Catholicam?

Phil. Yes that I doe: but I cannot underſtand Rome (wherewithall you burden us) to be the ſame, neither like to it.

That Peter did build the Church of Rome it is falſe, for both the Scripture ſaith, that Peter was ſet over the circumciſed, and not over the Gentiles, and alſo it is to be proved by Oroſius, Suetonius, Tertullianus, & other ſtories, that the faith of Chriſt was in Rome in Tyberius time before Peter ever ſaw Rome.

S. Aſſe. It is moſt evident that Saint Peter did build the Catholike Church at Rome. And Chriſt ſaid, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam.

Moreover, the ſucceſſion of Biſhops in the See of Rome can be proved from time to time, as it can be of none other place ſo well, which is a manifeſt probation of the catholik Church, as divers Doctors doe write.

Phil. That you would have to be undoubted, is moſt uncertaine, and that by the authority which you alledge of Chriſt, ſaying unto Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rocke I will build my Church, unleſſe you can prove the rocke to ſignifie Rome, as you would make me falſely beleeve. And although you can prove the ſucceſſion of Biſhops from Peter, yet this is not ſufficient to prove Rome the Catholik Church unleſſe you can prove the profeſſion of Peters faith, whereupon the Catholike Church is builded, to have continued in his ſucceſſors at Rome, and at this preſent to remaine.

Bon. Is there any mo Churches than one Catholike Church? And I pray tell me into what faith were you baptiſed?

Phil. I acknowledge one holy Catholike and Apoſtolike Church whereof I am a member (I praiſe God) and am of that Catholike faith of Chriſt, whereinto I was baptiſed.

Coven. I pray you, can you tell what this word Catholike doth ſignifie? ſhew if you can.

Phil, Yes that I can, I thanke God. The Catholike faith, or the Catholike Church, is not as now adayes the people be taught, to be that which is moſt univerſall, or of moſt part of men received, whereby you doe infer our faith to hang upon the multitude, which is not ſo: but I eſteeme the Catholike Church to be as S. Auſten defineth the ſame. Aeſtimamus fidem Catholicam à rebus præteritis, præſentibus & futuris. i. We judge ſaith he, the Catholike faith, of that which hath beene, is, and ſhall be. So that if you can be able to prove that your faith and Church hath beene from the beginning taught, and is, and ſhall be: then may you count your ſelves Catholike, otherwiſe not. And Catholike

The Popes faith hangeth upon the multitude.
Fides Catholica ſecundum Aug.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1555. December.

tholike is a Greeke word compounded of [illegible] which ſignifieth after or according, and ὅλον, a ſumme, or principle, or whole. So that Catholike Church, or Catholike faith, is as much to ſay, as the firſt, whole, ſound, or chiefeſt faith.

Bon. Doth ſaint Auſtin ſay ſo as he alledgeth it? or doth he meane as he taketh the ſame? how ſay ſay you Maſter Curtop.

Curtop. Indeed my Lord, Saint Auguſtine hath ſuch a ſaying, ſpeaking againſt the Donatiſts, that the Catholike faith ought to be eſteemed of things in times paſt, and as they are practiſed according to the ſame, and ought to be through all ages, and not after a new manner, as the Donatiſts beganne to profeſſe.

Philpot. You have ſaid well Maſter Curtop, and after the meaning of Saint Auſtine, and to confirme that which I have ſaid for the ſignification of Catholike.

Coven. Let the booke be ſeen my Lord.

Bon. I pray you my Lord be content, or in good faith I will breake even off and let all alone. Doe you thinke the catholike Church (untill it was within theſe few yeers, in the which a few upon ſingularity have ſwarved from the ſame) have erred?

Phil. I do not think that the catholike Church can erre in doctrine; but I require you to prove this church of Rome to be the catholike church.

Curtop. I can prove that Irenens (which was within an hundred yeers after Chriſt came to Victor then Biſhop of Rome, to aske his adviſe about the excommunication of certaine heretikes, the which he would not have done (by all likelyhood) if he had not taken him to be ſupreme head.

Where maſter Curtop findes this I cannot ſay: but this I finde that Euſebius doth report that Ireneus did reprove Victor Biſhop of Rome for his raſh ſentence in excommunicating the churches of Greece concerning the obſervation of the feaſt of Eaſter. Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 16.

Covent. Marke well this argument. How are you able to anſwer to the ſame? Anſwer if you can?
